

3 1761 08820000 1

HANDBOUND
AT THE

UNIVERSITY OF
TORONTO PRESS

Digitized by the Internet Archive in 2011 with funding from University of Toronto

<http://www.archive.org/details/p1athenaeum1905lond>

9

32-1

775

THE ATHENÆUM

JOURNAL

OF

LITERATURE, SCIENCE, THE FINE ARTS, MUSIC, AND THE DRAMA.

JANUARY TO JUNE,

1905.

80748
17/10/06

LONDON:

PRINTED BY JOHN EDWARD FRANCIS, ATHENÆUM PRESS, BREAM'S BUILDINGS, CHANCERY LANE, PUBLISHED AT THE OFFICE, BREAM'S BUILDINGS, CHANCERY LANE, E.C.,

BY JOHN C. FRANCIS.

SOLD BY ALL BOOKSELLERS AND NEWSMEN IN TOWN AND COUNTRY.

AGENTS FOR SCOTLAND, MESSRS. BELL & BRADFUTE AND MR. JOHN MENZIES, EDINBURGH.

MDCCCV.

INDEX OF CONTENTS.

JANUARY TO JUNE, 1905.

LITERATURE.

Reviews.

- Abraham's (W. H.) Church and State in England, 590
 Adcock's (A. St. J.) London Etchings, 557
 Adventures of a Post-Captain, by a Naval Officer, 110
 Aitken's (R.) The Redding Straik, 651
 Albanesi's (E. M.) Marian Sax, 777
 Alden's (P.) The Unemployed, 109
 Alderson's (J. P.) Mr. Asquith, 559
 Aldis's (H. G.) A List of Books printed in Scotland before 1700, &c., 304
 Alston's (L.) Modern Constitutions in Outline, 270
 Altsheler's (J. A.) Guthrie of the 'Times,' 555
 American Familiar Verse, ed. Matthews, 47
 Amicis's (Signor de) L'Idioma Gentile, 430
 Appleton's (G. W.) The Mysterious Miss Cass, 106
 Aristotle: The Politics, tr. Jowett, 463
 Ascham, Roger, The English Works of, ed. Wright, 144
 Askew's (A. and C.) Eve and the Law, 269
 Asquith, Mr., by Alderson, 559
 Aston's (W. G.) Grammar of the Japanese Written Language, 238
 Atherton's (G.) The Bell in the Fog, 238
 Atkinson's (C. M.) Jeremy Bentham, 528
 Auction Prices of Books, ed. Livingston, Vol. I., 775
 Bain's (R. N.) Scandinavia, 773
 Baker's (W. M.) Elementary Algebra, 687
 Balfour's (M. C.) Examples of Printed Folk-lore concerning Northumberland, ed. Thomas, 206
 Balkan Question, The, ed. Villari, 239
 Balzac, Honoré de: Maximes, tr. Humphreys, 432; His Life and Writings, by Sandars—L'Homme et l'Œuvre, by Le Breton—Aspects of, by Helm—Contes Choisis, ed. O'Connor, 493
 Banks's (A.) Chirp and Chatter, 48
 Baptismal Service, printed by Eyre & Spottiswoode, 432
 Baring's (M.) With the Russians in Manchuria, 687
 Baring-Gould's (S.) In Dewisland, 11
 Barlow's (J.) By Beach and Bogland, 589
 Barnett's (Mrs. E.) A Garden of Eden, 719
 Barr's (A. E.) A Song of a Single Note, 106
 Barr's (R.) The Tempestuous Petticoat, 269
 Barrett's (F.) The Night of Reckoning, 140; The Error of her Ways, 651
 Bashford's (H. H.) The Manitoban, 588
 Bateson's (M.) Borough Customs, Vol. I., 462; Medieval England, 1066-1350, 527
 Battine's (Capt. C.) The Crisis of the Confederacy, 299
 Beard's (D. C.) The Outdoor Handybook, 528
 Belle of the Fifties, A, ed. Sterling, 393
 Bennett's (A.) Tales of the Five Towns, 174
 Benson's (E. F.) An Act in a Backwater, 203
 Bentham, Jeremy: his Life and Work, by Atkinson, 528
 Bérard's (V.) L'Empire Russe et le Tsarisme, 781
 Berg's (F.) Swedish Fairy Tales, tr. Engdahl and Rew, 48
 Betham-Edwards's (Miss) Home Life in France, 656
 Bevan's (E.) Jerusalem under the High Priests, 522
 Birmingham's (G. A.) The Seething Pot, 460
 Bleackley's (H.) Some Distinguished Victims of the Scaffold, 617
 Blissett's (N. K.) The Silver Key, 685
 Bonnefons's (A.) Marie Caroline, Reine des Deux-Siciles, 776
 Book of the Simple Way of Laotzë, tr. by Old, 13
 Booksellers' Catalogues, 208
 Booksellers' Provident Institution, Auditors' Report, 307
 Bosanquet's (B. H.) Outlines of Synoptic Record, 460
 Bourget's Divorce, tr. Charlwood, 175
 Bourne's (A. A.) Elementary Algebra, 687
 Bovet's (M. A. de) Contre l'Impossible, 333
 Braddon's (M. E.) The Rose of Life, 651
 Brady's (C. T.) The Two Captains, 460
 Brækstad's (H. L.) The Constitution of Norway, 652
 Bramah's (E.) The Mirror of Kong Ho, 272
 Bremner's (R. L.) The Modern Pilgrimage from Theology to Religion, 45
 Bremond's (H.) Sir Thomas More (the Blessed Thomas More), tr. Child, 109
 Bretherton's (R. H.) His Young Importance, 47
 Brindle's (E.) With Russian, Japanese, and Chunchuse, 622
 Broche's (G. E.) Une Epoque, 460
 Broome's (Lady) Colonial Memories, 14
 Brown's (K. H.) Diane, 237
 Brown's (V.) The Disciple's Wife, 554
 Brown's (Dr. W. H.) Carthusian Memories, 749
 Browne, General Sir James, Life of, by Innes, 361
 Browne's (B.) South Africa, 305
 Browne's (G. W.) Japan: the Placo and People, 138
 Browning, Elizabeth Barrett: Les Sonnets Portugais, tr. Henry, 457; La Vie et l'Œuvre, by Merlette, 585
 Browning's (O.) Napoleon: the First Phase, 774
 Brownlie's (Rev. J.) Hymns from the Greek Office Books, 398, 465
 Bryden's (H. A.) Nature and Sport in Britain, 307
 Bunyan, John, 368
 Burden of Armaments, The, 208
 Burgin's (G. B.) The Marble City, 304
 Burke's Peerage for 1905, 49
 Burleigh's (B.) Empire of the East, 715
 Burroughs's (J.) Far and Near, 271
 Byles's (C. E.) Life and Letters of R. S. Hawker, sometime Vicar of Morwenstow, 363
 Caetani's (L.) Annali dell' Islam, Vol. I., 205
 Cahan's (A.) The White Terror and the Red, 588
 Calvert's (A. F.) Life of Cervantes, 366
 Cambridge Historical Series: Europe and the Far East, by Sir R. K. Douglas, 168
 Cambridge Modern History: Vol. VIII. The French Revolution, 265, 310; Vol. III. Wars of Religion, 583
 Campbell's (A. G.) Fleur-de-Camp, 173
 Canfield's (H. S.) Fergy the Guide, 364
 Canning, George, by Temperley, 615, 692, 722
 Cantonese Love-Songs, tr. Clementi, 749
 Capart's (J.) Primitive Art in Egypt, tr. Griffith, 557
 Carpenter's (J. E.) James Martineau, 623
 Cartwright's French by the Direct Method, 686
 Castaigne's (A.) Fata Morgana, 303
 Castle's (A. and E.) Rose of the World, 713
 Catalogues: The Western Manuscripts in Emmanuel College, by James, 305; in Trinity College, 780
 Cervantes, Life of, by Calvert, 366; in England, by Fitzmaurice-Kelly, 144
 Chambers's (R. W.) In Search of the Unknown, 555
 Champney's (E. W.) Romance of Feudal Chateaux, 109
 Change for a Halfpenny, 496
 Charles I.: the Martyr King, by Fea, 39
 Chastean's (L.) Ames d'autrefois, 47
 Chatham, by Harrison, 394
 Chaucer, by the Rev. W. Tuckwell, 82
 Chaucer's (G.) The Prioress's Tale, and other Tales, Englished by Skeat, 143
 Chesson's (Mrs. W. H.) The Bell and the Arrow, 459
 Chesterton's (C.) Gladstonian Ghosts, 462
 Christian's (G. A.) A Modern Geometry, 687
 Churchill, Winston Spencer, by Scott, 174
 Claretie's Brichanteau Célèbre, 560, 755
 Clergy Directory, The, 81
 Clergy List for 1905, 240
 Clyde's (C.) A Pagan's Love, 459
 Cock's (Mrs. A.) A Country Diary, 589
 Coke's (Hon. H. J.) Tracks of a Rolling Stone, 655
 College Histories: Emmanuel College, by Shuckburgh, 138
 Collins's (F. H.) Author and Printer, 560, 595
 Colvill's (H. H.) The Stepping-Stone, 459
 Connor's (R.) The Prospector, 43
 Constantine the Great, by Firth, 649
 Conway's (Sir W. M.) Early Dutch and English Voyagers to Spitzbergen, 522
 Cooks's (G.) Egyptian and other Verses, 270
 Cooper's (E. H.) The Twentieth-Century Child, 461
 Cooper's (T. P.) York: its Walls and Castles, 173
 Copinger's (W. A.) Law of Copyright, ed. Easton, 48
 Coquelle's (P.) Napoleon and England, 1803-13, tr. Knox, 524
 Cornelius's (Peter) Literarische Werke, Vol. I., ed. C. M. Cornelius, 367
 Cotterell's (C.) The Virgin and the Scales, 204
 Courlander's (A.) Seth of the Cross, 588
 Courtney's (L. H.) The Working Constitution, 559
 Courtney's (W. P.) A Register of National Bibliography, 553
 Coutts's (F.) Musa Verticordia, 270
 Crawshaw's (A.) My Turkish Bride, 428
 Crespigny's (Mrs. P. C. de) The Rose Brocade, 685
 Crockett's (S. R.) Maid Margaret, 714
 Crockford's Clerical Directory for 1905, 369
 Croiset's (A. and M.) An Abridged History of Greek Literature, tr. Hefelbower, 687
 Croker's (B. M.) The Old Cantonment, 493
 Cross's (V.) The Religion of Evelyn Hastings, 237
 Cruppi's (L.) Avant l'Heure, 747
 Cullimore's (H.) The Garden of Francesca, 620
 Cullum's (R.) The Brooding Wild, 619
 Cumming's (C. F. G.) Memories, 140
 Cummings's (D. C.) A Historical Survey of the Boiler Makers', &c., Society, 369
 Cunningham's (J. F.) Uganda and its Peoples, 239
 Cunyngame's (H.) Geometrical Political Economy, 207
 Dagenham, The History of, by Shawcross, 10
 Dale's (A.) Wanted a Cook, 493
 Dante: The Commedia, Prose Version, by the Rev. H. F. Tozer—Tr. into Blank Verse by Dr. E. C. Lowe—The Early Lives of, tr. Wicksteed, 142; Vocabolario Concordanza, by Fiammazzo, Part I., 526; Dante's Ten Heavens, by Gardner—Un Decennio di Bibliografia Dantesca, by Passerini and Mazzi—Commedia, ed. Prof. Fornaciari, 527; Da Dante a Leopardi, 589, 695
 Darien's (G.) L'Epaulette: Souvenirs d'un Officier, 778
 Davidson's (J.) The Testament of a Prime Minister, 12; Selected Poems, 328
 Dawson's (A. J.) The Fortunes of Farthings, 364
 Debrett's Peerage, Baronetage, and Knightage for 1905, 81; House of Commons and the Judicial Bench, 240
 De la Pasture's (Mrs. H.) Peter's Mother, 303
 Diary of a Churchgoer, 82
 Dickens, C.: The Dickens Country, by Kitton—Dickens, by Shore—Synopsis of his Novels, by McSpadden, 240
 Dickensian, The, edited by Matz, 176, 240, 787
 Dickinson's (Miss) Poems, ed. Higginson, 269
 Dictionaries: A Dictionary of Quotations in Prose, by Ward, 48; A New English, ed. Murray, Bradley, and Craigie, 200, 586; Slang and Colloquial English, by Farmer and Henley, 201; An Italian and English, by Edgren, 430; Dizionario Moderno, by Panzini, 431; An Irish-English, by Rev. P. S. Dineen—English-Irish, by O'Neill, 621, 786
 Dilke's (Lady) The Book of the Spiritual Life, with Memoir by Sir C. W. Dilke, 679
 Dill's (S.) Roman Society, 362
 Dixon (T.) jun.'s The Clansman, 303
 Dobschütz's (E. von) Christian Life in the Primitive Church, tr. Bremner and Morrison, 45
 Dod's Peerage, Baronetage, and Knightage for 1905, 81; Parliamentary Companion, 207
 Dodd's (C. I.) A Vagrant Englishwoman, 588
 Doncieux's (G.) Le Romancero Populaire de la France, 460
 Donne, W. Bodham, and his Friends, ed. Johnson, 431
 Douglas's (J.) The Man in the Pulpit, 560
 Douglas's (Sir R. K.) Europe and the Far East, 168
 Do We Believe? 590, 627
 Downey's (E.) Twenty Years Ago, 367; Dorothy Tuke, 685
 Doyle's (A. C.) The Return of Sherlock Holmes, 397
 Drage's (G.) Trade Unions, 462
 Dream of the Rood, The, ed. Cook, 686
 Dream-Garden, The, for 1905, ed. Syrett, 48
 Driscoll's (C.) The Girl of La Gloria, 556
 Drury's (Major W. P.) The Peradventures of Private Paget, 494
 Dudeney's (Mrs. H.) The Wise Woods, 651
 Duff's (Right Hon. Sir M. E. G.) Notes from a Diary, 1896, to January 23rd, 1901, 456, 500
 Duffin and Ava, Marquis of, by Sir A. Lyall, 201
 Duncan's (N.) Dr. Grenfell's Parish, 591
 Durham's (Miss) The Burden of the Balkans, 305
 Duruy's (V.) General History of the World, tr. Grosvenor, 307
 Dutt's (W. A.) The King's Homeland, 173
 Dyer's (H.) Dai Nippon, the Britain of the East, 8
 Dyer's (L.) Machiavelli and the Modern State, 462
 E. G. O.'s Egomet, 79
 Eastman's (C. A.) Red Hunters and the Animal People, 238
 Edgren's (H.) An Italian and English Dictionary, 430
 Elgin, The Earl of, by Prof. Wrong, 688
 Elgood's (G. S.) Some English Gardens, Notes by Miss Jekyll, 14
 Eliot's (Sir C.) The East Africa Protectorate, 363
 Elton's (J.) Some Feudal Mills, 656
 England a Nation: Papers of the Patriots' Club, ed. Oldershaw, 175
 England under the Stuarts, by Trevelyan, 135, 330, 400
 English Catalogue of Books for 1904, 398
 English Men of Letters: Sydney Smith, by Russell, 234
 English Theologian's Model Library of Foreign Theological Literature, 461
 Erman's (A.) Die Aegyptische Religion, 557
 Escott's (W. J.) Fortune's Castaway, 44
 Evans's (H. R.) The Napoleon Myth, 526
 Everett's (Dr. W.) The Italian Poets since Dante, 719
 Facsimiles of Rare Fifteenth-Century Printed Books, 780
 Fahlbeck's (Prof. P.) La Constitution Suédoise et le Parlementarisme Moderne, 652
 Fairless's (M.) The Grey Brethren, 560
 Farjeon's (B. L.) The Clairvoyante, 428
 Fellows's (C.) Mr. Chippendale of Port Welcome, 685
 Ferguson's (D.) The King's Friend, 747
 Fergusson, Robert, The Poetical Works of, ed. Ford, 240
 Ferry's (Commandant E.) La France en Afrique, 750
 Field-Service Pocket-Book, 720
 Figgis's (Rev. J. N.) Christianity and History, 83
 Firth's (J. B.) Highways and Byways in Derbyshire, 551; Constantine the Great, 649
 Fitzgerald's (P.) The Garrick Club, 103; Lady Jean, 779
 Fitzmaurice-Kelly's Cervantes in England, 144
 Fitzpatrick's (K.) The Weans at Rowallan, 204
 Fletcher, Phineas: The Spenser of his Age, 432
 Flint's (R.) Philosophy as Scientia Scientiarum, 77
 Florenz's (Dr. K.) Geschichte der Japanischen Literatur, 712
 Forbes's (A. C.) English Estate Forestry, 79
 Forbes's (Lady H.) The Provincials, 141
 Fortescue's (Hon. J. W.) British Army, 1783-1802, 749
 Fossey's (C.) Manuel d'Assyriologie, Tome I., 141
 Fox's (J.) Crittenden, 459
 Fox (J.) jun.'s Following the Sun Flag, 781
 Fox's (M.) A Child of the Shore, 651

LITERATURE.

Reviews—continued.

France's (A.) Sur la Pierre Blanche, 202
 Francis's (M. E.) Dorset Dear, 716
 Franklin, Benjamin, The Autobiography of, 240
 Fraser's (D.) A Modern Campaign, 206
 Fraser's (J. F.) Canada as It Is, 528
 Freeman's (A.) The Golden Pool, 459
 Freeman's (E. A.) Western Europe in the Fifth Century
 — Western Europe in the Eighth Century, 43 Fremantle's (Admiral the Hon. Sir E. R.) The Navy as I have Known It, 1849-1899, 263
 Frenssen's (G.) Jörn Uhl, tr. Delmer, 588
 Frere's (W. H.) A History of the English Church in the Reigns of Elizabeth and James I., 391
 Freycinet's (M. de) La Question d'Égypte, 688
 Froude, Hurrell, by Guiney, 656
 Fuchs's (Prof.) Trade Policy of Great Britain and her
Colonies since 1860, tr. Miss Archibald, 748
 Fuller's (R. H.) The Golden Hope, 746
 Fullerton's (G. S.) A System of Metaphysics, 302
 Furniss's (H.) Poverty Bay, 778
 Gallican's (W. M.) Fishing in Derbyshire, 717
 Gallon's (Tom) Aunt Phipps, 556
 Galloway's (G.) Studies in Philosophy of Religion, 170
 Ganz's (H.) The Downfall of Russia, 81
 Gardenhire's (S. M.) The Silence of Mrs. Harrold, 746
 Gardner's (E.) Dante's Ten Heavens, 527
 Garland's (H.) The Tyranny of the Dark, 685
 Garrett-Pegge's (J. W.) A Transcript of the Parish
Register of Chesham, 1538-1636, 654
 Garrick Club, The, by Fitzgerald, 103
 Gaskell's (Lady C. M.) Spring in a Shropshire Abbey, 749
 Gaye's (R. K.) Platonic Conception of Immortality, 429
 Geddes's (P.) City Development, 774
 Geil's (W. E.) A Yankee on the Yangtze, 13
 Gerard's (D.) The Three Essentials, 620
 Gerard's (M.) The Adventures of an Equerry, 746 Giffard, Walter, Archbishop of York, The Register of,
 ed. Brown, 490
 Gifford's (E. H.) The Euthydemus of Plato, 430
 Gissing's (A.) Baliol Garth, 777
 Glanville's (E.) A Rough Reformer, 714
 Glover's (T. R.) Studies in Virgil, 264
 Glyn's (E.) The Vicissitudes of Evangeline, 395
 Goethe in meinem Leben, by Abeken, ed. Heuermann, 366
 Gomperz's (T.) Greek Thinkers, Vols. I.-III., 520
 Gordon's (L. D.) The Story of Assisi, 14
 Gorky's (M.) Creatures that Once were Men, tr. Shirazi, 335
 Gospel of St. Matthew—Gospel of St. John, ed. Bright, 529
 Gospels in the Oxford Bijou Edition, 398
 Gosse's (E.) French Profiles, 136, 179, 211; Coventry
Patmore, 389
 Govone, Général, Mémoires de, tr. Weil, 175
 Gowans's (A. L.) Hundred Best Poems (Lyrical), 240
 Gower's (Hon. F. Leveson) Bygone Years, 710
 Gowing's (Mrs. A.) Lord of Himself, 173
 Graham, John, of Claverhouse, by Terry, 456
 Graham's (R. B. C.) Progress, 238
 Gray's (C.) A Fit of Happiness, and other Essays, 79
 Gray's (J. W.) Shakespeare's Marriage, &c., 648
 Great Englishmen of the Seventeenth Century, by Lee, 73
 Greek Studies, A Companion to, ed. Whibley, 616
 Green's (A. K.) The Millionaire Baby, 714
 Greener's (W.) A Secret Agent in Port Arthur, 108 Greville, Henry, Leaves from the Diary of, ed. Countess of Strafford, 8
 Guide-Books: Italy and Sicily, Fifth Edition, 110
 Guildford in the Olden Time, by Williamson, 173
 Guiney's (L. I.) Hurrell Froude, 656
 Gulick's (Dr. S. L.) White Peril in the Far East, 559
 Gyp's Cloco, tr. Statham, 748
 Hakluyt's English Voyages, ed. Speight, 686
 Halévy's (E.) L'Angleterre et son Empire, 335
 Haliburton's (Lord) Army Organization: the Arnold
Forster Scheme, 271
 Hall's (E.) The Triumphant Reign of King Henry
the VIII., 9
 Ham House, by Mrs. Roundell, 331
 Hamilton's (C.) Duke's Son, 523
 Hamilton's (M.) Cut Laurels, 268
 Hannay's (D.) English Seamen, 144
 Hannay's (Dr. J.) How Canada was Held for the Empire, 688
 Hannay's (J. O.) The Wisdom of the Desert, 306
 Harbottle's (T. B.) Dictionary of Battles, 82
 Harmsworth Encyclopædia, 369
 Harper's (R. F.) The Code of Hammurabi, 141
 Harrison's (F.) Chatham, 394
 Harrod's (E.) The Taming of the Brute, 555
 Harvey's (C.) The Biology of British Politics, 109
 Hawker, R. S., Life and Letters of, by Byles, 363
 Hayes's (F. W.) A Prima Donna's Romance, 685
 Hayllar's (F.) The Legend of Saint Frideswide, 12
 Hazell's Annual for 1905, ed. Palmer, 144
 Hazlitt, William, The Collected Works of, ed. Waller and Glover, 391, 425
 Headlam's (C.) Oxford and its Story, 199
 Healy's (C.) Heirs of Reuben, 365
 Heifer of the Dawn, A, tr. by Bain, 204
 Heilborn's (E.) Ring und Stab: zwei Erzählungen, 652
 Heine, Heinrich, Works of, tr. Armour, Vol. XI., 748
 Henderson's (Col.) The Science of War, ed. Malcolm, 687

Henderson's (T. F.) James I. and VI., 7
 Henry VIII., by Hall, 9
 Henry's (A.) The Unwritten Law, 778
 Herbertson's (J. L.) The Stigma, 714
 Herrick's (R.) The Common Lot, 11
 Hewlett's (M.) Fond Adventures, 716
 Hibbert Journal, The, 16
 Hill's (H.) The One who Saw, 395; Millions of Mis- chief, 714
 Hobbes's (J. O.) The Flute of Pan, 746
 Hobhouse's (L. T.) Democracy and Reaction, 14
 Hollis's (A. C.) The Masai, 742
 Holyoake's (G. J.) Bygones Worth Remembering, 232
 Home's (A. J.) Helen Murdoch, 751
 Hopkins's (L.) On the Hop, 689
 Hornung's (E. W.) Stingaree, 716
 Houmas's (Mount) A Dreamer's Harvest, 524
 Houssaye's (H.) 1815—La Seconde Abdication—La
Terreur Blanche, 711, 754
 Houville's (G. d') Esclave, 304
 How's (F. D.) Six Great Schoolmasters, 102
 Howes, John, his MS., 1582, ed. Lempriere, 750
 Hueffer's (F. M.) The Soul of London, 618
 Hughes's (R.) The Real New York, 398
 Hume's (F.) The Scarlet Bat, 778
 Hume's (M.) Spanish Influence on English Literature,
 365
 Humières's (Vicomte R. d') Through Isle and Empire,
 tr. by De Mattos, 306
 Hungry Forties, Introduction by Mrs. C. Unwin, 102
 Hunter's (P. H.) Bible and Sword, 44
 Huntington's (D. W.) Big Game, 107
 Hyne's (C.) Atoms of Empire, 46
 In the Great God's Hair, tr. by Bain, 204 Innes's (General J. J. McLeod) Life and Times of
General Sir James Browne, 361
 Iota's Patricia: a Mother, 492
 Ireland's (A.) The Far Eastern Tropics, 718
 J. G. P.'s Tales from Spain, 494
 Jackson's (W. S.) Helen of Troy, N.Y., 237
 James I. and VI., by Henderson, 7
 James II., King, Adventures of, 171
 James's (H.) The Golden Bowl, 332
 James's (M. R.) The Western Manuscripts in the Library of Emmanuel College, 305
 Japp's (A. H.) Robert Louis Stevenson, 143
 Jebb's (R.) Studies in Colonial Nationalism, 494
 Jewish Encyclopædia, The, Vol. VIII., 143
 Johns's (C. H. W.) Babylonian and Assyrian Laws,
Contracts, and Letters, 142
 Johnson, Admiral George, ed. by his Widow, 750
 Johnson's (C.) Highways and Byways of the South, 622
 Johnson's (O.) Nicole, 365
 Jones's (F.) A Second Latin Course, 751
 Jones's (W. H. S.) The Teaching of Latin, 686
 Joubert's (Carl) The Truth about Russia, Vol. II., 174;
The Fall of Tsardom, 747
 Juliana, ed. Strunk, 529
 Kakuzo's (O.) The Awakening of Japan, 396
 Kann's (R.) Journal d'un Correspondant de Guerre, 398
 Keary's (C. F.) Bloomsbury, 523
 Keats, John, The Poems of—Hyperion, ed. E. de Selin-court—Recently Discovered Keats MSS., 297, 336
 Keats's (H. A. M.) He that Eateth Bread with Me,
106; It was a Boy, 365
 Kennedy's (B.) Slavery, 495
 Kent's (A. T.) Otia, ed. Hodge and Baumann, 108
 Kernahan's (C.) The Jackal, 619
 Kernahan's (Mrs. C.) The Fate of Felix, 269
 King's (L. W.) Records of Reign of Tnkulti-Ninib I., 141
 Kitton's (F. G.) The Dickens Country, 240
 Klado's (Capt.) The Russian Navy in the Russo-
Japanese War, tr. Dickinson, 559
 Knight-Adkin's (J. H.) The Woman-Stealers, 174
 Knoop's (D.) Industrial Conciliation and Arbitration, 398
 Knox, John: a Biography, by Rev. D. Macmillan—by Rev. J. Stalker, 526
 Knox's History of the Reformation, ed. Lennox, 526
 Knox's (G. W.) Imperial Japan, 552
 Laborie's (L. de L. de) Paris sous Napoléon, 525
 Lamb, Charles and Mary, The Works of, Vols. VI.,
 VII., ed. Lucas, 680, 721
 Lamb's (R.) Saints and Savages, 718
 Lamprecht's (Dr.) What is History? tr. Andrews, 529
 Landon's (P.) Lhasa, 231
 Landon's (A. H. S.) Tibet and Nepal, 334
 Lane's (E. M.) Nancy Stair, 428
 Lang's (A.) Adventures among Books, 368
 Lange's (Prof. Dr. R.) Uebungs- und Lesebuch zum
Studium der Japanischen Schrift, 238
 Langland's (W.) The Vision of Piers the Plowman, done into Modern English by Rev. Prof. Skeat, 527 Law, Thomas Graves, Collected Essays and Reviews of,
 ed. with Memoir by Prof. Brown, 104 Leaves from the Diary of Henry Greville, ed. Countess of Strafford, 8
 Leaves from the Past, 719
 Le Breton's (A.) Balzac: l'Homme et l'Œuvre, 493
 Lee's (S.) Great Englishmen of the Seventeenth Cen- tury, 73, 146
 Lee's (Vernon) The Enchanted Woods, 207
 Legge, James, Missionary and Scholar, by his Daughter, 656
 Lembeck's (R.) Die besten Gedichte der deutschen
Sprache, Erstes Hundert, 366
 Leopardi, Giacomo, Poems by, tr. Sir T. Martin, 431
 Leopold II.: his Rule in Belgium and the Congo, by MacDonnell, 584, 659
 Le Poer's (J. P.) A Modern Legionary, 782

Le Queux's (W.) Sins of the City, 685
 Letters of Horace Walpole, Vols. IX.-XII., ed. Mrs. P.
 Toynbee, 40
 Leudet's (M.) L'Almanach des Sports, 109
 Levetus's (A. S.) Imperial Vienna, 207
 Levi's (E.) Lirica Italiana Antica, 588
 Library, The, 780
 Lichtenberger's (A.) Les Centaures, 46
 Lightfoot's (J. B.) Notes on the Epistles of St. Paul from Unpublished Commentaries, 461
 Lilly's (W. S.) Studies in Religion and Literature, 78
 Literary Year-Book for 1905, 48
 Livingstone's (M.) A Guide to the Public Records of Scotland, 779
 Locke's (W. J.) The Morals of Marcus Ordeyne, 587
 Logan, Hannah, her Courtship, ed. Myers, 393
 Lorimer's (G. H.) Old Gorgon Graham, 207
 Lorimer's (N.) More Queer Things about Japan, 397
 Loring's (A.) The Rhymer's Lexicon, 623
 Loti's (Pierre) La Troisième Jeunesse de Madame
Prune, 528
 Low's (S.) The Governance of England, 79
 Lowrie's (W.) The Church and its Organization in the Primitive Age, 432
 Lucas's (St. John) Aubrey Ellison, 106
 Lucy's (H. W.) Later Peeps at Parliament, 655
 Lützow's (Count) Lectures on the Historians of Bohemia, 710
 Lyall's (Sir A.) Life of the Marquis of Dufferin and Ava, 201
 Mabie's (H. W.) Parables of Life, 558
 McCarthy's (J. H.) The Dryad, 395
 McCarthy's (M.) The Coming Power, 622
 McChesney's (D. G.) Yesterday's To-morrow, 204
 McClellan's (E.) Historic Dress in America, 649
 McCutcheon's (G. B.) Beverly of Graustark, 524 McDonnell's (J. de C.) King Leopold II.: his Rule in Belgium and the Congo, 584, 659
 McDougall's (E. H.) Landmarks of European History, 686
 McKechnie's (W. S.) Magna Carta, 458
 McKenzie's (F. A.) From Tokyo to Tiflis, 715, 752, 787
 Macknight's (T.) Political Progress of the Nineteenth Century, 688
 MacLehose's (S. H.) From the Monarchy to the Re- public in France, 1788-1792, 101
 Macmillan's (Rev. D.) John Knox: a Biography, 526
 Macnaghten's (H.) Ave Regina, 12
 Macnamara's (Dr.) School-Room Humour, 432
 McSpadden's (J. W.) Synopses of Dickens's Novels, 240
 Maddock's (A.) An Autumn Romance, Poems, 621
 Magnay's (Sir W.) A Prince of Lovers, 746
 Malot's (Madame H.) Cœurs d'Amoureuses, 652
 Marie Caroline, Reine des Deux-Siciles, by Bonnefons, 776
 Markham, Admiral John, Selections from the Corre- spondence of, ed. Sir C. Markham, 41
 Marlborough Newspaper Cuttings Book, 369
 Marsh's (R.) The Confessions of a Young Lady, 174;
A Spoiler of Men, 492
 Marshall's (A.) The House of Merrilees, 555
 Marshall's (E.) The Middle Wall, 747
 Martin's (G. M.) The House of Fulfilment, 11
 Martineau, James, Theologian and Teacher, by Carpenter, 623
 Martyr King, Memoirs of the, ed. Fea, 39
 Mason's (A. J.) The Historic Martyrs of the Primitive
Church, 653
 Maugham's (W. S.) The Land of the Blessed Virgin, 366
 Maxwell's (Mrs. M.) Children's Wild Flowers, 48
 Meade's (L. T.) Mrs. Pritchard's School, 15; Little
Wife Hester, 269
 Mediæval Lore from Bartholomew Anglicus, ed. Steele, 527
 Medici, Catherine de', and the French Reformation, by Sichel, 521
 Melville's (L.) The Thackeray Country, 240
 Memoirs of a Royal Chaplain, 1729-1763, annotated and edited by Hartshorne, 743
 Meredith's (E.) Heart of my Heart, 140
 Merki's (C.) La Reine Margot et la Fin des Valois
(1553-1615) d'après les Mémoires et les Documents, 553
 Merlette's (G. M.) La Vie et l'Œuvre de Elizabeth
Barrett Browning, 585
 Merriman's (C. E.) A Self-made Man's Wife, 591
 Methuen's England's Ruin, discussed in Sixteen Letters to the Right Hon. J. Chamberlain, M.P., 271 Meyrick's (Rev. F.) Memoirs of Life at Oxford and Elsewhere, 741
 Middle Temple Records, tr. and ed. Martin, 783
 Millington's (P.) to Lhasa at Last, 174
 Miln's (L. J.) A Woman and her Talent, 746
 Mitzschke's (E. and P.) Sagenschatz der Stadt Weimar
und ihrer Umgegend, 367
 Moberly's (Rev. R. C.) Problems and Principles, 45
 Moffat's (J.) The Golden Book of John Owen, 46 Money (Capt. A. W.) and others' Guns, Ammunition, and Tackle, 107
 Montet's (Baroness de) Souvenirs, 1785-1866, 525
 Moore, Thomas, by Gwynn, 327
 Moore's (F.) The White Causeway, 492
 Moore's (F. F.) Sir Roger's Heir, 11; The Other World, 46
 Moore's (G.) Confessions of a Young Man, 240
 Moore's (I.) Talks in a Library with Laurence Hutton, 783
 Moore's (T. S.) To Leda, and other Odes, 12; Poems, 620
 More, Sir Thomas, by Bremond, tr. Child, 109
 Morning Prayer, Collects, and Psalms—Evening Prayer, ditto, in the Oxford Bijou Edition, 496

Mosaic, The, 751
 Moscow Expedition, The, ed. George, 82
 Mother Goose's Melody, Facsimile Reproduction, Notes, &c., by Col. Prideaux, 48, 85
 Mott's (F. B.) Before the Crisis, 269
 Moulin's (R.) Une Année de Politique Extérieure, 559
 Muddock's (J. E.) From the Clutch of the Sea, 269
 Mukasa's (Ham) Uganda's Katikiro in England, tr. Millar, 82
 Murai's (G.) Hana: a Daughter of Japan, 138
 Mustard's (Prof. W. P.) Classical Echoes in Tennyson, 110
 Napoleon: and England, by Coquelle, 524; The Napoleon Myth, 526; The First Phase, by Browning, 774
 Nevinston's (H. W.) Books and Personalities, 557
 New Editions, Reprints, &c., 48, 49, 83, 144, 175, 240, 272, 307, 336, 368, 369, 398, 432, 463, 496, 529, 561, 591, 623, 657, 689, 720, 751, 783
 Newspaper Press Directory, Diamond Jubilee Issue, 268
 Nijhoff's (W.) L'Art Typographique dans les Pays-Bas (1500-40), Part V., 781
 Nivedita's (Sister) The Web of Indian Life, 204
 Noble's (E.) Waves of Fate, 619
 Norris's (F.) Elementary Schools, 368
 Norris's (W. E.) Bartram of Beltana, 524
 Noussanne's (H. de) The Kaiser as He Is, tr. Littlefield, 398
 Nouum Testamentum Domini Nostri Iesu Christi, ed. Wordsworth and White, Part II., 461
 Noyes's (E.) The Story of Ferrara, 462
 O's The Yellow War, 207
 O'Brien's (B.) Irish Memories, 15
 Okey's (T.) The Story of Venice, 306
 Omar al-Khayyâmî, Rubâiyât, tr. FitzGerald, 205; Life of, by Shirazi, 205, 244
 Ommanney's (E. C.) True to the Flag, 783
 Oppenheim's (E. P.) The Master Mummer, 492
 Orcutt's (W. D.) Robert Cavalier, 393
 Owen, John, The Golden Book of, by Moffat, 46
 Owen's (M. A.) Folk-lore of the Musquakie Indians of North America, 206
 Oxenham's (J.) The Gate of the Desert, 237
 Oxford University, Ancient Kalendar, ed. Wordsworth, 169; Oxford and its Story, by Headlam, 199
 Pain's (B.) The Memoirs of Constantine Dix, 689
 Panzini's (Signor A.) Dizionario Moderno, 431
 Parrish's (R.) My Lady of the North, 365
 Partridge's (C.) Cross River Natives, 235
 Paterson's (W. R.) Life's Questionings, 782
 Patmore, Coventry, by Gosse, 389
 Patriarchs of the Coptic Church of Alexandria, History of the, Vol. I., ed. Evetts, 15
 Paul et Virginie, Preface by Vogüé, 686, 724
 Payne's (E. J.) Colonies and Colonial Federations, 80
 Payne's (P.) Duchess of Few Clothes, 11
 Peel's (G.) The Friends of England, 335
 Pemberton's (Max) 'Mid the Thick Arrows, 492
 Pendlebury's (C.) New School Arithmetic, 687
 Pennell's (E. R.) My Cookery Books, 47, 86
 Penny's (Rev. F.) The Church in Madras, 233
 Pepys's Diary, by Wheatley, Vols. III. and IV., 83
 Perris's (G. H.) Russia in Revolution, 590
 Perry's (B.) The Amateur Spirit, 558
 Peters's (Dr. C.) England and the English, 14
 Petherbridge's (M.) The Technique of Indexing, 110
 Petrarch at Vaucluse, by Wulff, 463
 Petrie's (W. M. F.) Ehnasya, 1904, 556
 Phillpotts's (E.) The Secret Woman, 105
 Plato: The Myths of, by Stewart, 429; The Euthydemus of, by Gifford, 430
 Platt's (H. E. P.) Byways in the Classics, including 'Alia,' 744
 Poems of 1848 and Earlier Days, tr. Robinson, 48
 Pollock's (W. H. and G. C.) Hay Fever, 620
 Post Office London Directory for 1905, 49
 Powell-Cotton's (Major P. H. G.) In Unknown Africa, 489
 Præd's (Mrs. Campbell) Some Loves and a Life, 106
 Pratt's (A.) A Modern Geometry, 687
 Pratt's (E. A.) Railways and their Rates, 689
 Printers' Pie, ed. W. H. Spottiswoode, 720
 Public Schools Year-Book, 81
 Punshon's (E. R.) Constance West, 524
 Putnam's (R.) A Mediæval Princess, 527
 Q.'s Shining Ferry, 394
 Radford's (Dollie) The Young Gardener's Kalendar, pictured by Wright, 110
 Raine's (A.) Hearts of Wales, 587
 Ramsay's (W. M.) The Letters to the Seven Churches of Asia, 267
 Rannie's (D. W.) A Student's History of Scotland, 779
 Rashdall's (H.) Christus in Ecclesia, 652
 Rathbone, William: a Memoir, by E. F. Rathbone, 718
 Rawson's (M. S.) Tales of Rye Town, 716
 Records of the Sheriff Court of Aberdeenshire, ed. Littlejohn, Vol. I., 654
 Red-Letter Shakespeare, The, ed. Chambers, 240
 Régnier's (H. de) Le Passé Vivant, 556
 Report of Investigation into Social Conditions in Dundee, Part I., 271
 Repplier's (Miss) Compromises, 78, 113
 Review of Historical Publications relating to Canada, ed. Wrong and Langton, 528
 Revue Germanique, 432
 Ricci's (Prof.) Italian Grammar for English Students, 430
 Rice's (A. H.) Sandy, 684
 Ridge's (W. Pett) Mr. Galer's Business, 714
 Roberts's (C. G. D.) The Watchers of the Trail, 46; The Book of the Rose, 270

Roberts's (J.) The Inventors' Guide to Patent Law and the New Practice, 591
 Roberts's (M.) Lady Penelope, 237; Captain Balaam of the Cormorant, 494
 Robins's (E.) A Dark Lantern, 651
 Robinson's (E. K.) The Country Day by Day, 367
 Rochefoucauld's (G. de la) L'Amant et le Médecin, 107
 Rodocanachi's (E.) Tolla the Courtesan, tr. Lawton, 686
 Rosadi's (G.) The Trial of Jesus, ed. Dr. Reich, 623
 Rose's (M.) The Women of Shakespeare's Family, 657
 Rossetti's (D. G.) Poems, Vol. II., 15; Early Italian Poets, 142
 Roundell's (Mrs. C.) Ham House, 331
 Rowland's (H. C.) To Windward, 428
 Russell's (G. W. E.) Sydney Smith, 234
 Russell's (W. C.) His Island Princess, 236
 Russo-Japanese War: A Secret Agent in Port Arthur, by Greener, 108; Port Arthur, by Villiers, 174; The Yellow War, by O., 207; Journal d'un Correspondant de Guerre, by Kann, 398; The Russian Navy in the Russo-Japanese War, by Klado, 559; With Russian, Japanese, and Chunchuse, by Brindle, 622; With the Russians in Manchuria, by Baring, 687; Empire of the East, by Burleigh, 715; From Tokyo to Tiflis, by McKenzie, 715, 752, 787; Following the Sun Flag, by Fox, 781; En Mandchourie, by De la Salle, 782
 Ryle (H. E.) On Holy Scripture and Criticism, 44; On the Church of England, 653
 Sainte-Beuve's (C. A.) Portraits of the Seventeenth Century, tr. Miss Wormeley, 78
 St. Bonaventura's The Life of St. Francis, tr. Miss Salyer, 143, 178
 St. Boniface, The Life and Times of, by Williamson, 307
 St. Ealdhelm, First Bishop of Sherborne, Life of, by Wildman, 650
 St. Francis, The Life of, by St. Bonaventura, tr. Miss Salyer, 143, 178; The Words of, tr. Macdonell, 143
 St. John's (Sir S.) The Adventures of a Naval Officer, by Capt. Charles Hunter, 175
 Saintsbury's (G.) A History of Criticism, Vol. III., 167
 Salisbury, Marquis of, Essays by the late, 334
 Salle's (De la) En Mandchourie, 782
 Sandars's (M. F.) Honoré de Balzac, his Life and Writings, 493
 Sands's (E.) Sportsman "Joe," 107
 Schelling's (F. E.) The Queen's Progress, and other Elizabethan Sketches, 78
 Schlumberger's (G.) L'Épopée Byzantine à la fin du Dixième Siècle, Part III., 301
 Schneider's (R.) L'Ombrie, l'Ame des Cités et des Paysages, 175
 Schoolmaster's Year-Book and Directory, 1905, 81
 Schwappach's (Dr. A.) Forestry, tr. Story, 79
 Scots Peerage, The, ed. Sir J. B. Paul, Vol. II., 779
 Scott's (E. H.) A Second Latin Course, 751
 Scott's (Miss M.) A Robin's Song, 270
 Scott's (McC.) Winston Spencer Churchill, 174
 Sergeant's (A.) Nellie Maturin's Victim, 140; The Mystery of the Moat, 172
 Seton's (E. T.) Monarch: the Big Bear of Tallac, 492
 Shakspeare, The Red-Letter, ed. Chambers, 240; his Marriage, &c., by Gray, 648; Women of his Family, by Rose, 657
 Shawcross's (J. P.) The History of Dagenham, 10
 Sheehan's (Canon) A Spoiled Priest, and other Stories, 46
 Shelley, Complete Poetical Works, ed. Hutchinson, 368
 Sheppard's (A. T.) The Red Cravat, 684
 Sherard's (R.) The Child-Slaves of Britain, 335
 Sheringham's (H. T.) An Angler's Hours, 716
 Sherman's (E. B.) Taper-Lights, 558
 Shirazi's (J. K. M.) Life of Omar al-Khayyâmî, 205, 244
 Shore's (Teignmouth) Dickens, 240
 Short Notices, 16, 110, 176, 208, 307, 398, 463, 529, 623, 689, 720, 751, 783
 Shorter's (D. S.) The Country-House Party, 782
 Shorthouse, J. H., Life and Letters of, edited by his Wife, 683
 Shuckburgh's (E. S.) Emmanuel College, 138
 Siebel's (E.) Catherine de' Medici and the French Reformation, 521
 Sidgwick's (Mrs. A.) Scenes of Jewish Life, 46
 Sidgwick's (F.) Popular Ballads of the Olden Time, Second Series, 335
 Sidgwick's (H.) Miscellaneous Essays, 75
 Silberrad's (U. L.) The Wedding of the Lady of Lovell, 494
 Sladen's (D.) More Queer Things about Japan, 397; Playing the Game, 555
 Smith, Sydney, by Russell, 234
 Smith's (B.) Bird Life and Bird Lore, 495
 Sociological Papers, 1904, 239
 Southey, Sir Richard, Life and Times, by Wilmot, 424
 Speculative Society, 1764-1904, History of, 779
 Spencer's (Herbert) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical, 719
 Stalker's (Rev. J.) John Knox, 526
 Statesman's Year-Book, ed. Keltie and Renwick, 527
 Statistical Account of Australia and New Zealand, 1903-4, ed. Coghlan, 462
 Steuart's (J. A.) The Rebel Wooing, 428
 Stevenson, Robert Louis, by Japp, 143
 Stevenson's (B. E.) The Marathon Mystery, 204
 Stevenson's (P. L.) A Gendarme of the King, 685
 Stevenson's (R. L.) Essays of Travel, 781
 Stewart's (J. A.) The Myths of Plato, 429
 Stories of King Arthur and his Knights, retold by Cutler, 720
 Strannik's (I.) Les Nuages, 686
 Stratton-Porter's (G.) Freckles, 428

Street's (G. S.) Books and Things, 143
 Sullivan's (T. D.) Recollections of Troubled Times in Irish Politics, 270
 Sweden, its People and its Industry, ed. Sundbärg, 333
 Sveven's (G.) Limanora: the Island of Progress, 44
 Swift's (B.) Gossip, 365
 Sykes's (J. A. C.) The Macdonnells, 555
 Symons's (A.) Studies in Prose and Verse, 487
 T. B.'s The Upton Letters, 742
 Tarkington's (B.) The Arena, 589
 Taylor, Jeremy, his Life and Times, by Worley, 271
 Taylor's (Miss I. A.) Revolutionary Types, 109
 Taylor's (M. I.) The Rebellion of the Princess, 172
 Temperley's (H. W. V.) George Canning, 615, 692, 722
 Tennyson: Classical Echoes in Tennyson, by Mustard, 110; Princess, ed. Fry, 686
 Thackeray, W. M.: The Thackeray Country, by Melville, 240
 Thirlmere's (R.) Letters from Catalonia, 560
 Thomas's (O.) Agricultural and Pastoral Prospects of South Africa, 424
 Thompson's (F.) Health and Holiness, 656
 Thurston's (E. T.) The Apple of Eden, 172
 Tilley's (A.) Literature of the French Renaissance, 647
 Times History of the War in South Africa, ed. Amery, Vol. III., 717
 Townley's (Lady S.) My Chinese Note-Book, 12
 Travancore Almanac and Directory for 1905, 271
 Trench's (R. C.) English Past and Present, ed. Smythe Palmer, 622
 Trevelyan's (G. M.) England under the Stuarts, 135, 330, 400
 Trevelyan's (R. C.) The Birth of Parsival, 620
 Treves's (Sir F.) The Other Side of the Lantern, 143
 Trotter's (W. F.) Government of Greater Britain, 527
 Trow's (C. E.) The Old Shipmasters of Salem, 750
 Tuckwell's (Rev. W.) Chaucer, 82; Reminiscences of a Radical Parson, 455
 Turley's (C.) Godfrey Marten, Undergraduate, 140
 Tweedale's (V.) Lord Eversleigh's Sins, 396
 Tynan's (K.) A Daughter of Kings, 587
 Upper Norwood Athenæum, Record for 1904, 110
 Upward's (A.) The Phantom Torpedo-Boats, 559
 Urban VIII., by Weech, 720
 Vachell's (H. A.) The Hill, 619, 660, 692
 Vagabond Songs and Ballads, ed. Ford, 15
 Vaughan's (General Sir J. L.) My Service in the Indian Army—and After, 42
 Verney's (Lady) Memoirs of the Verney Family, 175
 Vickers's (Messrs.) Newspaper Gazetteer for 1905, 272
 Victoria History of Surrey, ed. Malden, Vol. II., 709
 Villari's (L.) Russia under the Great Shadow, 747
 Villiers's (F.) Port Arthur: Three Months with the Besiegers, 174
 Virgil: The Georgics, tr. into English Verse by Lord Bughclere, 74; Studies in, by Glover, 264
 Vitelleschi's (Marchesa) Romance of Savoy, 488, 531
 Voirol's (S.) L'Eden, 495
 Vontade's (J.) La Lueur sur la Cime, 396
 Vorst's (M. van) Amanda of the Mill, 395
 Waddell's (L. A.) Lhasa and its Mysteries, 423
 Waddington's (Mrs. W.) Italian Letters of a Diplomat's Wife, 494
 Walpole, Horace, Letters of, Vols. IX.-XII., ed. Mrs. P. Toynbee, 40
 Ward's (A. L.) A Dictionary of Quotations in Prose, 48
 Ward's (Mrs. H.) The Marriage of William Ashe, 332
 Ward's (J.) Our Sudan, its Pyramids and Progress, 557
 Warden's (F.) The Face in the Flashlight, 107
 Warren's (R. S.) Jim Mortimer, Surgeon, 620
 Watson, William, Poems of, ed. Spender, 328
 Watts's (W. H.) The Commission of H.M.S. Retribution 1902-4, 750
 Way's (A. S.) David the Captain, 44
 Wayne's (C. S.) A Prince to Order, 778
 Weech's (W. W.) Urban VIII., 720
 Wellesley's (Col. the Hon. F. A.) With the Russians in Peace and War, 298
 Wells's (H. G.) A Modern Utopia, 519
 Welschinger's (H.) Le Pape et l'Empereur, 426
 Wenham's (R. A.) Outlines of the Synoptic Record, 460
 Wenlock's (A.) The Countermine, 714
 Weston's (M.) Pamela's Choice, 44
 Whibley's (C.) Literary Portraits, 78
 Whishaw's (F.) The Informer, 172; A Grand Duke of Russia, 778
 Whitaker's Almanack—Whitaker's Peerage, 49
 White, Andrew D., The Autobiography of, 589
 White's (E.) Bray of Buckholt, 43
 White's (P.) The System, 204
 White's (S. E.) The Mountains, 334
 Whiting's (M. B.) The Torch-Bearers, 204
 Wilcox's (D.) Verses from Maoriland, 621
 Wilde's (O.) Intentions, tr. Joseph Renaud, 306; De Profundis, 397
 Wildman's (W. B.) Life of St. Ealdhelm, 650
 Wilkinson's (K.) The Personal Story of the Upper House, 335
 Wilcocks's (M. P.) Widdicombe, 428
 William II. of Germany: The Kaiser as He Is, by Noussanne, 398
 Williamson's (Dr. G. C.) Guildford in the Olden Time, 173
 Willobie His Avisa, with an Essay by Hughes, 491
 Wills in the Prerogative Court of Canterbury, 1620, ed. Lea, 653
 Wilmot's (Hon. A.) The Life and Times of Sir Richard Southey, 424
 Wilson's (H. L.) The Seeker, 459
 Wilson's (M. J.) The Knight of the Needle Rock, 524

LITERATURE.

Reviews—continued.

Wilson's (T. W.) Langbarrow Hall, 460
 Winnington-Ingram's (Right Rev. A. F.) The Faith of Church and Nation, 271
 Winter's (J. S.) Love and Twenty, 173
 Wintles (G.) Strange Partners, 492
 Wisdom of the East, tr. from the Chinese by Giles, 13
 Workman's (Dr. W. H. and Mrs. F. B.) Through Town and Jungle, 334
 Worley's (G.) Jeremy Taylor, 271
 Wrong's (Prof. G.) The Earl of Elgin, 688
 Wulf's (Prof. F. A.) Petrarch at Vacluse, 463
 Yorke's (C.) Olive Kinsella, 140
 Young's (F. E.) The War of the Sexes, 238
 Ystridde's (G.) Three Dukes, 172
 Zimmermann's (Dr.) Kolonialpolitik, 307

Poetry.

Winter Sunset, A, by R. M. Watson, 49

Original Papers.

Adams, Capt. William, 434
 Advanced Historical Teaching Fund, 209, 242
 Alcuin's Liturgical Libellus, Sources of, 20
 Alfred's 'Orosius,' On a Passage in, 784
 Arabic and Syriac Type in England, First Use of, 497
 Belcephon and Asmenoth, 530
 Bibliographical Definitions, 177
 Book Sales of 1904, 18
 Booksellers' Provident Institution: Annual Meeting, 337
 British Museum Reading-Room, 19, 111, 145
 Cambridge, Notes from, 399
 Cambridge University Library, 176
 Canning, 692, 722
 Catullus, The Discoverer of the Poems of, 336
 Caxton, A Fragment of, 242
 Charles II. and the Treaty of Dover, 400
 Chaucer and Boccaccio, 210
 Classical Association of England and Wales, 49
 Coleridge's "Imitation" of Akenside, 177
 Copyright, English and American, 369
 Cox, Mr., and The Examiner, 145
 Cricket in India, The First Mention of, 657
 Cromwell and Irish Prisoners, 530, 592, 624, 657, 721, 785
 Cromwell on Sir John Palgrave, 145, 210
 'Dictionary of Indian Biography,' 625, 658, 691, 722, 784
 Drummond and Giambattista Marino, 177, 210
 Egypt, The Arab Conquest of, 434
 'Fair Jilt, The,' 690
 'Fire and Fleet,' 400, 433, 464, 690
 'From Tokyo to Tiflis,' 752, 787
 Gray's Letters, Two Identifications in, 624, 690
 Greek, Compulsory, and Schoolmasters, 242, 273, 310
 Harvard Memorial Window at St. Saviour's, 690
 Historical Manuscripts Commission: Recent Reports, 496
 History and the Science of Archives, 16
 'History of Wexford, The,' 50, 85
 Hotham and Napoleon, 754
 'Hymns from the Greek Office Books,' 465
 'Hypnerotomachia Poliphili,' 85
 Incorporated Association of Assistant Masters, 50
 Incorporated Association of Head Masters, 83
 International Congress of Orientalists, 593
 International Congress of the Press in London, The Committee of the, 592
 Irish Dictionaries, Two, 786
 Irish Learning, School of, Dublin, 146
 Keats Literature, Recent, 336
 Knox, John, When was he Born? 50
 Lamb's Letters, 561, 592, 624, 721, 754, 786
 'Leopold II.: his Rule in Belgium and the Congo,' 659
 Lyke-Wake Dirge, A, 400, 433, 464, 690
 'Mother Goose's Melody,' 85
 'Mulciber's Workhouse,' 786
 Newnham College, Research Fellowships at, 433
 News-vendors' Benevolent Institution: Annual Meeting, 273
 New York Library, A, 626
 Octavo: What is an Octavo? 273
 Omar Khayyam, Some New Verses by, 784
 Oxford Notes, 370
 'Palio and Ponte,' 84, 112
 Peerages, Mistakes in, 308, 337, 371
 Pope's 'Essay on Man,' 112
 Prayer-Book, Second, of Edward VI., 177
 Publishing Season, 210, 242, 273, 309, 337, 371
 'St. Albans Chronicon Angliæ, 1328-88,' The Trustworthiness of the, 112
 Sales, 146, 210, 274, 338, 339, 371, 401, 434, 435, 465, 466, 500, 531, 562, 626, 659, 692, 723, 724
 Scott Sale, 434, 465, 531
 Scott's Bonnets of Bonnie Dundee, 498
 Shakespeare, The Original Bodleian Copy of the First Folio of, 241
 Shelley's Romances, The Sources of, 561
 Shelley's Stanza-Numbering in the 'Ode to Naples,' 497
 Sherborne Pageant, The, 754
 Silchester, 85, 114
 Somerset House, The Literary Department at, 497, 561
 Spenserian Stanza, The, 146
 Stendhal Memorial, 784

Stevens's (B. F.) Catalogue-Index of Manuscripts relating to America, 1763-83, 464
 Stevenson's Occasional Papers, 724, 752
 Theophrastus, An Unknown Edition of, 562, 626
 Tilsit, The Mystery of, 752
 Veteran Scholar, A, 145
 Viceroy's Postbag, The, 16
 Women's Degrees at Dublin, 563, 592
 Wordsworth Sources: Bowles and Keate, 498
 Wordsworthiana, 112

Obituaries.

Arnoldt, Dr. E., 755. Bonnières, R. de, 466. Boothby, Guy, 274. Borthwick, Hon. O., 402. Brackel, F. von, 52. Bray, Mrs. C., 244. Brown, J. R., 531. Cadell, M. A., 178. Causse, C. (Pierre Maël), 21. Clay, C. J., 86. Collingridge, W. H., 435. Cox, H. F., 113, 145. Daldy, F. R., 244. Denifle, H., 787. De Soyres, Rev. J., 178. Enoch, F., 113. Ferguson, Lady, 308. Gerard, Miss E. (Madame de Laszowski), 86. Germain, H., 179. Gifford, E. H., 594. Glover, A., 113, 244. Hansen, Prof. P., 532. Hartleben, O. E., 244. Hook, Sergeant H., 372. Hüffer, H., 372. Huitfeldt-Kaas, H. J., 660. Kuun, Count G. de, 532. Leigh, Rev. A. A., 146, 399. Livingstone, E., 692. Lock, J. H., 16. Lovett, Rev. R., 19. Marles, Comtesse B. de, 402. Mason, J., 113. Möllhausen, B., 724. Mussaffia, Prof. A., 787. Nitschmann, H., 627. Paton, A. P., 465. Pingard, J., 787. Poidatz, H., 693. Rae, W. Fraser, 111. Rebell, H., 372. Reid, Sir Wemyss, 272. Richards, F. T., 500, 530. Schwob, M., 273. Skram, Mrs. A., 372. Tavan, A., 660. Valera, J., 530. Verne, Jules, 400. Wallace, General L., 211. Wellmann, F., 86. West, Dr. E. W., 243. Ziegler, J., 595.

Gossip.

Summary of Books published in 1904, 52. Parliamentary Papers, 114, 147, 179, 211, 244, 275, 310, 339, 372, 402, 436, 466, 501, 563, 595, 627, 660, 693, 724, 787. Booksellers' Provident Institution, 243, 402, 532, 693, 787. The London Library and Mr. H. Y. Thompson, 243. Matriculated Students at the German Universities, 275. Leading Library for the Blind at Hamburg, 402. Library for the Blind at Oxford, 466. Annual Meeting of the Trustees of Shakespeare's Birthplace, 594. Distribution of the Janin and Saintour Prizes, 595. Correctors of the Press, Dinner, 627. List of Prizes in the Gift of the Académie Française, 693, 787. Associated Booksellers of Great Britain and Ireland, 723. Award of the Prix Drouyn de Lhuys to M. R. Waddington, 724. Printers' Pension Corporation, Dinner, 737.

SCIENCE.

Reviews.

Aflalo's (F. G.) British Salt-Water Fishes—The Sea-Fishing Industry of England and Wales, 23
 Allbutt's (T. C.) The Historical Relations of Medicine and Surgery, 788
 American Ephemeris and Nautical Almanac for 1908, 376
 Andersson's (Dr. J. G.) Antarctica, 466
 Annuaire du Bureau des Longitudes for 1905, 55
 Anthropological Institute Journal, 757
 Astronomische Nachrichten, 312, 376, 505, 663, 790
 Astrophysical Journal, The, 535
 Ball's (Sir R. S.) A Popular Guide to the Heavens, 565
 Barrett's (C. R. B.) The History of the Society of Apothecaries of London, 532
 Bartholomew's (J. G.) The Survey Atlas of England and Wales, 181
 Beccari's (O.) Wanderings in the Great Forests of Borneo, tr. Prof. Giglioli, 180
 Berliner Astronomisches Jahrbuch for 1907, 758
 Blondlot's (R.) N Rays, tr. Garcin, 275, 311, 341, 374, 405
 Booth's (W. H.) Steam Pipes, 564
 Brachet's (A.) Pathologie Mentale des Rois de France, 310
 British Association: Report of the Anthropometric Committee, 114
 Buchanan's (R.) Mathematical Theory of Eclipses, 149
 Bureau of American Ethnology, Publications of the, 627
 Butterfield's (W. J. A.) Acetylene, 437
 Cambrian Natural Observer for 1904, 535
 Cambridge Natural History, The, Vol. VII., 114
 Candler's (E.) The Unveiling of Lhasa, 147
 Cape Observatory, Annals, Vol. XI. Part II., 535
 Chamberlin's (T. C.) Geology: Processes and their Results, 504
 Columbus, Christopher, by Thacher, Vol. III., 23
 Country-Side, The, 631
 Davison's (C.) A Study of Recent Earthquakes, 404
 Doubleday's (H. A.) A History of Warwick, Vol. I., 211
 Duckworth's (W. L. H.) Morphology and Anthropology—Studies from the Anthropological Laboratory, the Anatomy School, Cambridge, 533
 Duncan's (R. K.) The New Knowledge, 787
 Dutton's (C. E.) Earthquakes in the Light of the New Seismology, 404
 Edinburgh Stereoscopic Atlas of Anatomy, ed. Waterston, Section I., 310
 Elbs's (Dr. K.) Electrolytic Preparations, tr. Hutton, 436
 Findlay's (A.) The Phase Rule and its Applications, 436
 Folk-Lore, 405
 Foster-Melliar's (Rev. A.) The Book of the Rose, 404, 439
 Fox's (F.) River, Road, and Rail, 628
 Geikie's (Sir A.) Landscape in History, 504

Gennep's (A. van) Tabou et Totemisme à Madagascar, 86
 Geographical Society of Paris, Journal, 758
 Geological Survey of India for 1905, Records, 439
 Goodrich's (W. F.) Small Destructors for Institutional and Trade Waste, 404
 Greenwich Observations for the Year 1902, 535
 Haggard's (H. R.) A Gardener's Year, 503
 Haldane's (J. W. C.) Life as an Engineer, 629
 Hall's (R. N.) Great Zimbabwe, Mashonaland, Rhodesia, 501
 Hamy's (A.) Au Mississipi, la première Exploration, 22
 Harvard College Observatory, Circulars, 213, 598; Fifty-Ninth Annual Report, 535
 Harvie-Brown's (J. A.) A Vertebrate Fauna of the North-West Highlands and Skye, 503
 Heath's (T. E.) Our Stellar Heavens, 469
 Hewett's (G. M. A.) Animal Autobiographies: The Rat, 404
 Holdich's (Col. Sir T. H.) India, ed. Mackinder, 402
 Howorth's (Sir H. H.) Ice or Water, 595
 Huxley's (T. H.) Physiography, revised by Gregory, 22
 Jeans's (J. H.) The Dynamical Theory of Gases, 244
 Knox's (A.) Glossary of Geographical and Topographical Terms, &c., 181
 Kodaikanal and Madras Observatories, Bulletin, 407; Report for 1904, 505
 L'Anthropologie, 245, 533
 Leeds's (F. H.) Acetylene, 437
 Leihfeldt's (R. A.) Electro-Chemistry, Part I., 436
 Lick Observatory, Bulletins, 695
 Macpherson's (Rev. H. A.) A Vertebrate Fauna of the North-West Highlands and Skye, 503
 Man, 246, 405, 468, 533
 Maxwell's (J.) Metapsychical Phenomena, tr. Finch, 693
 Meldola's (R.) The Chemical Synthesis of Vital Products, Vol. I., 436
 Memorie della Società degli Spettroscopisti Italiani, 151, 247, 312, 439, 535, 664
 Mill's (H. R.) An Elementary Class-Book of General Geography, 181
 Miremont's (Comte de) Popular Star-Maps, 565
 Moncrieff's (A. R. H.) The World of To-day, Vol. I., 789
 Murray's Small Classical Atlas, ed. Grundy, 181
 National Physical Training, ed. Atkins, 788
 Nautical Almanac for 1908, 278
 Nautical Almanac Circular, 343
 New Editions and Reprints, 404
 Nordenskjöld's (Dr. N. O. G.) Antarctica, 466
 Ogg's (F. A.) The Opening of the Mississippi, 23
 Olufsen's (O.) Through the Unknown Pamirs, 52
 Oppel's (Prof. Dr. A.) Natur und Arbeit, Vol. I., 404
 Ostwald's (W.) The Principles of Inorganic Chemistry, tr. Findlay, 436
 Oxford University Observatory, Annual Report, 695
 Page's (W.) A History of Warwick, Vol. I., 211
 Philippine Islands, The, 1493-1898, 148, 311
 Philosophical Magazine, The, 724
 Pickering's (W. H.) The Moon, 564
 Poynting's (J. H.) Text-Book of Physics, Vol. III., 755
 Ramsay's (Sir W.) Introduction to the Study of Physical Chemistry, 436
 Reinach's (S.) Cultes, Mythes, et Religions, Vol. I., 501, 533, 565, 597
 Renshaw's (Dr. G.) Natural History Essays, 22
 Reynolds's (J. B.) Regional Geography: the British Isles, 181
 Righi's (A.) Modern Theory of Physical Phenomena, tr. Trowbridge, 756
 Rogers's (A. W.) An Introduction to the Geology of Cape Colony, 504
 Russell's (A.) A Treatise on the Theory of Alternating Currents, Vol. I., 756
 Salisbury's (R. D.) Geology: Processes and their Results, 504
 Schuster's (A.) Introduction to the Theory of Optics, 53
 Scientific Results of the Norwegian North Polar Expedition of 1893-6, Vol. VI., 663
 Sedgwick's (A.) A Student's Text-Book of Zoology, Vol. II., 564
 Society of Apothecaries of London, The History of the, by Barrett, 532
 Spearman's (F. H.) Strategy of Great Railroads, 629
 Stanford's Geological Atlas of Great Britain, by Woodward, 181
 Story's (A. T.) The Story of Wireless Telegraphy, 179
 Strutt's (Hon. R. J.) The Becquerel Rays and the Properties of Radium, 54
 Thacher's (J. B.) Christopher Columbus: his Life, his Work, and his Remains, Vol. II., 23
 Thomson's (J. J.) Elements of the Mathematical Theory of Electricity and Magnetism, 54; A Text-Book of Physics, Vol. III., 755
 Turner's (H. H.) Astronomical Discovery, 148
 United States Naval Observatory, Report by Admiral C. M. Chester, 24
 Victoria Observatory, Annual Reports, 343
 Vierteljahrsschrift für körperliche Erziehung, Part I., 533
 Walker's (J.) The Analytical Theory of Light, 54
 Ward's (J. J.) Peeps into Nature's Ways, 789
 Ward's (H. M.) Trees: Vol. II. Leaves, 22
 Warwick: a History of the County of, by Doubleday and Page, Vol. I., 211
 Waterfield's (Miss) Garden Colour, 564
 Weiser's Tour to the Ohio in 1748, ed. Thwaites, 148

West Hendon House Observatory, Sunderland, Publications of the, 631

Wislicenus's (W. F.) Astronomischer Jahresbericht for 1904, 566

Young, John, Essays and Addresses by the late, 404

Original Papers.

Anthropological Notes, 114, 245, 405, 468, 533, 630, 757
Atom, The Structure of the, 373, 405, 437, 469
Electrical Constitution of Matter, 660, 694
N Rays, The, 311, 341, 374, 405
National Physical Laboratory, 374
Petrarch's Geography, 695
Philippine Islands, The, 311
Raffles, Sir Stamford, and the Founding of the Zoological Society, 276, 340
Research Notes, 149, 339, 438, 469, 596, 661, 724
Royal Observatory, Greenwich, 725
Royal Society Conversazione, 662
Totemism and Domestication of Animals, 533, 565, 597

Societies.

Anthropological Institute—Mr. N. W. Thomas on Group Marriage, 278. Also 213, 375, 468, 631
Archæological Institute—182
Aristotelian—Elections, 183, 439; Prof. W. R. B. Gibson on Self-Introspection, 183; Mr. A. T. Shearman on Controverted Points in Symbolic Logic, 439. Also 727
Astronomical—Annual Meeting, 212. Also 115, 341, 534, 757
Bibliographical—Mr. H. B. Wheatley on Dr. Johnson as a Bibliographer, 375
British Academy—'Don Quixote' Centenary, 150. Prof. Rhys on Celtæ and Galli, 725; Prof. Stout on the Material World and Sensible Appearance, 726
British Archæological Association—Rev. H. Cart on Norman Art and Architecture in Sicily, 115; Mr. A. Oliver on London Monastic and Ecclesiastical, 246; Mr. C. Dack on Folk and Weather Lore of Peterborough and District, 505. Also 375, 662
British Numismatic—Elections, 116, 246, 375, 566, 695
Challenger—Elections, 150, 631; Sir J. Murray on the Relation of Oceanography to other Sciences, 150
Entomological—Annual Meeting, 87; Elections, 342, 406, 663, 789. Also 213, 468
Geological—Elections, 23, 87, 212, 311, 374, 438, 505, 662, 789; Annual Meeting, 246. Also 150, 597, 726
Hellenic—Mr. W. W. Tarn on the Greek Warship, 312. Also 631
Historical—Elections, 116, 375, 505, 663, 790; Annual Meeting, 278
Institution of Civil Engineers—Elections, 54, 183, 312, 439, 468; Annual Meeting, 534. Also 88, 116, 150, 213, 278, 342, 406
Linnean—Elections, 150, 182, 246, 341, 406, 505, 597, 757
Mathematical—Elections, 88, 213, 342, 758. Also 505, 631
Meteorological—Annual Meeting, 87; Mr. E. Mawley's Report on the Phenological Observations for 1904, 213; Mr. R. Strachan on the Measurement of Evaporation, 630. Also 342, 534, 790
Microscopical—Annual Meeting, 150; Mr. J. E. Stead on Practical Micro-Metallography, 277; Elections, 406. Also 23, 566, 695
Numismatic—Elections, 115, 375, 565, 663. Also 246
Philological—Prof. I. Gollancz on Mediæval Latin and Anglo-Saxon Glossaries, 87; Dr. H. Oelsner on Early French Manuals for English Use, 182; Dr. H. Bradley's Report on M-Words 468; Annual Meeting—Prof. Skeat's Notes on English Etymology, 597; Prof. Napier on Old English Words, 758
Physical—Annual Meeting, 213. Also 150, 278, 342, 406, 534, 631, 695
Royal Institution—Elections, 312
Society of Antiquaries—Elections, 87, 277, 341, 789; Mr. A. J. Evans on the Tombs of Minoan Cnossus, 115; Mr. R. Smith on the Iron Currency of the Ancient Britons, 150; Mr. R. G. Rice on Palæolithic Implements from the Terrace Gravels of the River Arun and the Western Rother, 181; Mr. H. Sandars on the Linares Bas-relief and Roman Mining Operations in Bætica, 374; Mr. L. Weaver on Lead Rainwater Heads, 534; Annual Meeting, 597; Mr. E. A. Webb on the Augustinian Priory of St. Bartholomew, West Smithfield, 726. Also 212, 438, 630
Society of Biblical Archæology—Dr. Pinches on Nina and Nineveh, 54; Mr. F. Legge on some Egyptian Magic Ivories, 312; Mr. H. R. Hall on the Eleventh-Dynasty Temple at Dêr el Bahari, 597; Prof. A. H. Sayce on the Hittite Inscriptions, 758
Society of Engineers—Award of Premiums, 183. Also 312, 439, 566, 727
Statistical—375, 630
Zoological—115, 246, 311, 342, 439, 566, 630, 695, 789

Obituaries.

Abbé, Prof. E., 116, 213. Acy, E. d', 245. Arselin, A., 245. Basch, Dr. S. R. von, 598. Bastian, Prof. A., 278. Crossley, E., 116. Folie, Dr. F. J. P., 312. Foster-Melliar, Rev. A., 439. Garnier, Dr. P., 376. Henry, P. P., 116. Landois, H., 183. Lefèvre, A., 245. Medlicott, H. B., 469. Mikulicz, Prof. J. von, 790. Reinach, A. von, 88. Rialle, G. de, 245. Roujou, A., 245. Scriba, Prof. J., 247. Shore, T. W., 468. Struve, Prof. O., 566. Tacchini, Prof. P., 407

Gossip.

Award of the Lalande Prize of the French Academy to Prof. S. W. Burnham, 24. Award of Medals and Prizes of the Geological Society, 55. Geographical Results of the West Tibet Expedition, 151, 183. Grants by the Trustees of the Percy Sladen Fund—Award of the Gold Medal of the Royal Astronomical Society to Prof. L. Boss, 183. Award of the Prix Lacaze to Dr. A. Jousset, 213. Annual Report of the Council of the Zoological Society, 534. Second Report of the Commission for the Investigation of Mediterranean Fever, 593. Parliamentary Papers, 663.

FINE ARTS.

Reviews.

Adams's (C. L.) The Ancient Castles of Ireland, 470
Aeschylus, The Oresteia of, ed. Proctor, 151
Ancestor, The, 185
Antiquary, The, 27
Baddeley's (St. C.) Recent Discoveries in the Forum (1898-1904), 598
Baldry's (A. L.) The Wallace Collection, 57
Barrington's (Mrs. R.) G. F. Watts: Reminiscences, 790
Batsford's Old Cottages and Farmhouses in the Cotswold District, 185
Binstead's (H. E.) The Furniture Styles, 88
Bridgewater Gallery, The, Photogravures by Bourke, Text by Cust, 376
Burchardt's (Dr. R.) Cima da Conegliano, 312
Burlington Magazine, The, 26, 121, 250, 378, 538, 665
Burne-Jones, Edward, Memorials of, by G. B.-J., 24
Butler's (H. C.) Architecture and other Arts, 441
Capart's Revue de l'Histoire des Religions, 761
Cima da Conegliano, by Burchardt, 312
Cruftwell's (M.) Verrocchio, 116
Dawe's (G.) The Life of George Morland, 470
Dillon's (E.) Porcelain, 55
Dürer, Albert, by Moore, 247; Drawings of—Dresdener Altar, by Justi, 248
Eaton's (F. A.) The Royal Academy and its Members, 1768-1830, 696
Edinburgh, pictured by Fulleylove, described by Masson, 119
Fabriczy's (C. von) Italian Medals, tr. Mrs. Hamilton, 508
Fletcher's (Prof. D.) A History of Architecture, 440
Foster's (J. J.) The True Portraiture of Mary Stuart, Queen of Scots, 278, 313, 377, 409
Geisberg's (Dr.) Der Meister der Berliner Passion und Israhel van Meckenem—Verzeichnis der Kupferstiche Israhels van Meckenem, 760
Goudie's (G.) The Celtic and Scandinavian Antiquities of Shetland, 214
Guardi, Francesco, by Simonson, 56, 90
Hatton's (R. G.) Figure Composition—Figure Drawing, 343
Hayden's (A.) Chats on Old Furniture, 377
Hirth's Formenschatz, 760
Hodgson's (J. E.) The Royal Academy and its Members, 1768-1830, 696
Huish's (M. B.) British Water-Colour Art, &c., 631
Jackson's (F. H.) Mural Painting, 759
Jungman's (N.) Norway, Text by B. Jungman, 791
Justi's (L.) Dürer's Dresdener Altar, 248
Kendrick's (A. F.) English Embroidery, 760
Keyser's (C. E.) A List of Norman Tympana and Lintels, 440
Lethaby's (W. R.) Mediæval Art, from the Peace of the Church to the Eve of the Renaissance, 758
Liibke's (Dr. W.) Outlines of the History of Art, ed. Sturgis, 343
Macquoid's (P.) A History of English Furniture, Part II., 88; Vol. I., 631
Mary Stuart, Queen of Scots, True Portraiture of, by Foster, 278, 313, 377, 409
Maclair's (C.) Auguste Rodin, 407
Milton, John, Poetical Works, illustrated by Hyde, 185; Paradise Lost, Photogravures by Strang, 759
Moore's (T. S.) Albert Dürer, 247
Morland, George, by Williamson—The Life of, by Dawe, 470
Museum of Fine Arts Bulletin, 730
Northampton's (Marquis of) Compton Wynnyates, 632
Old Testament, The: 396 Compositions illustrating the Old Testament, by Tissot, 535
Pedrick's (G.) Borough Seals of the Gothic Period, 152
Peters's (J. P.) Painted Tombs in the Necropolis of Marissa, 727
Platner's (S. B.) Topography and Monuments of Ancient Rome, 599
Potter's (M. K.) The Art of the Louvre, 536
Redfern's (W. B.) Royal and Historic Gloves and Shoes, 507

Reinach's (S.) Apollo: Histoire Générale des Arts Plastiques—The Story of Art throughout the Ages, tr. Simmonds, 343, 377
Revue Archéologique, 344, 760
Rhead's (G. W.) The Treatment of Drapery in Art, 343
Rhodes, John N., by Thorp, 56
Richter's (J. P.) The Golden Age of Classic Christian Art, 183
Rodin, Auguste, by Maclair, 407
Rondot's (N.) Les Médailleurs et les Graveurs de Monnaies, Jetons, et Médailles en France, 508
Royal Academy, 1768-1830, by Eaton and Hodgson, 696
Ruskin, John, The Complete Works of, ed. Cook and Wedderburn, Vols. III.-XV., 506
Scotland, Bonnie, painted by Palmer, described by Moncrieff, 118
Scottish Life and Character, painted by Dobson, described by Sanderson, 118
Selected Drawings from the Old Masters at Christchurch, Oxford, described by Colvin, Part III., 506
Simon's (C.) English Furniture Designers of the Eighteenth Century, 88
Simonson's (G. A.) Francesco Guardi, 56, 90
Spiers's (R. P.) Architecture, East and West, 439
Taylor's (A. C.) The Golden Age of Classic Christian Art, 183
Thédénat's (H.) Le Forum Romain et les Forums Impériaux, 598
Thiersch's (H.) Painted Tombs in the Necropolis of Marissa, 727
Thorp's (W.) John N. Rhodes, 56
Tissot's (J. J.) 396 Compositions illustrating the Old Testament, 535
Turbayne's (A. A.) Alphabets and Numerals, 760
Twopeny's (W.) English Metal Work, 441
Verrocchio, by Cruftwell, 116
Wall's (J. C.) Shrines of British Saints, 507
Wallace Collection at Hertford House, by Baldry, 57
Watts, G. F.: Reminiscences, by Mrs. Barrington, 790
Williamson's (G. C.) George Morland, 470
Wood's (L. L.) Scottish Pewter-Ware and Pewterers, 117
Year's Art for 1905, compiled by Carter, 343
Zorn, Anders, Das radierte Werk des, by Schubert-Soldern, 760

Original Papers.

Aberdeen Sculpture Gallery, 472
'Apollo: the Story of Art throughout the Ages,' 377
Archæological Notes, 120, 215, 344, 508, 633, 760
Arundel Club, The, 344
Athens, International Congress at, 537
'Autumn Leaves' and Ford Madox Brown, 472
British School at Rome, 281
Bryan's 'Dictionary of Painters,' 473
Gardner, Daniel, 377
Guardi, Francesco, 90
Huth's (Louis) Pictures, 665, 697
Mary, Queen of Scots, Portraits of, 313, 377, 409
National Art Collections Fund, 471
National Gallery: The 'Ariosto' in the, 89, 121; The Retirement of Sir E. Poynter, 214
Northamptonshire Church Chest, A, 600, 698
Peak, The, Archæology in, 792
Roman Britain in 1904, 249
Rome, Notes from, 216
Sales, 90, 121, 153, 186, 217, 218, 250, 281, 313, 345, 377, 378, 409, 442, 473, 509, 569, 600, 634, 665, 666, 697, 698, 729, 761, 793
Tweedmouth Sale, 729
Vasari Society, The, 536

Exhibitions.

Agnew's (Messrs.) Gallery, 217, 280, 569, 664
Alpine Club's Annual Exhibition, 600
Baillie Gallery, 634
Burlington Fine-Arts Club, English Embroidery at the, 632, 665
Carfax's (Messrs.) Gallery, 153, 408, 600, 633, 791
Colnaghi's (Messrs.) Gallery, 250, 665, 697
Dickinson's (Messrs.) Gallery, 442, 569
Doré Gallery, 314, 509
Dowdeswell's (Messrs.) Gallery, 153, 314, 698
Dudley Gallery, Panel Exhibition, 261
Duveen's (Messrs.) Gallery, 249
Fine-Art Society's Gallery, 26, 154, 250, 378, 600, 729
Goupil Gallery, 186, 442, 470, 634
Grafton Gallery, French Impressionists, 153, 185, 664
Graves's (Messrs. H.) Galleries, 313, 600, 698, 729
Gutekunst's (Mr.) Gallery, 154, 569
Landscape Exhibition, 25
Lefèvre Gallery, 665
Leicester Galleries, 26, 154, 186, 313, 473, 634, 761
McLean's (Mr.) Gallery, 217, 600
Modern Gallery, 186, 217, 600, 665
New Gallery: International Society of Painters, Sculptors, and Gravers, 88; Whistler Exhibition, 280
Summer Exhibition, 599
Obach's (Messrs.) Gallery, 249, 728
Oxford Exhibition of Historical Portraits, 568
Paterson's (Mr.) Gallery, 215, 471, 665
Process Engraving at the Victoria and Albert Museum, 536
Rich's (Mr.) Water-Colours at the Alpine Club, 344
Royal Academy, Watts Exhibition, 57, 119, 345; Summer Exhibition, 567
Royal Society of British Artists, 378
Royal Society of Painters in Water Colour, 471
Rowley Gallery, 697, 761
Ryder Gallery, 26, 665

FINE ARTS.

Exhibitions—continued.

Salons, The, 727
 Shepherd's (Messrs.) Gallery, 442
 Spink & Son's (Messrs.) Gallery, 250
 Tempera Society, 791
 Watts at Burlington House, 57, 119, 345
 Whistler at the New Gallery, 280
 Whitechapel Art Gallery, 408, 472
 Wisselingsh's (Mr. van) Gallery, 409

Obituaries.

Achenbach, O., 218. Aikman, G., 58. Alt, R., 378.
 Anderson, G. A., 345. Anderton-Debarbieri, Mrs.
 I. B., 121. Barrias, L. E., 187. Bastet, V. A., 345.
 Bernard, E., 26. Boughton, G. H., 121. Brough, R.,
 121. Cesnola, General di, 509. Cordier, C., 601.
 Corrodi, H., 186. Curtis, C. B., 409. Dalziel, E., 409.
 Dillens, J., 58. Dubois, P., 698. Galbrunner, P. C., 345. Grimthorpe, Lord, 569. Gugel, Prof., 698.
 Guillaume, E., 281. Guimberteau, R., 58. Gurlett,
 Prof. W., 250. Iselin, H. F., 473. Kann, R., 217.
 Kohnert, H., 442. Koller, R., 90, 187. Levillain, F., 121.
 Lévy, H. L., 58. Ludwig, G., 121. Menzel, A., 215.
 Metzener, A., 121. Meunier, C., 442. Mniszech,
 Count A., 666. Nickol, Prof. A., 698. Pape, E., 569.
 Proust, A., 409. Rubach, W., 698. Ruths, V., 121.
 Siemerling, Prof., 186. Southesk, Lord, 345. Tabacchi,
 O., 442. Thomas, G. J., 345. Tondeur, Prof. A., 569.
 Vanni, P., 218. Vimont, A., 90. Wachsmuth, Prof.
 K., 794. Willett, H., 282.

Gossip.

Royal Society of Painter-Etchers and Engravers: Elections,
 90. The British School at Rome, 90, 281, 473. Royal Academy: Elections, 121, 378. Louvre: Acquisitions, 121, 345. Award of the L'heureux Prize to M. A. Mercie, 121.
 Royal Scottish Academy: Elections, 217. Royal Society of British Artists: Elections, 345. Society of Antiquaries of Scotland, 346, 473. Society of Women Artists: Elections, 378. Parliamentary Paper, 409. Annual Report of the Whitechapel Art Gallery, 538. Award of Medals of the Société des Artistes Français, 698. Award of Prizes by the Académie des Beaux-Arts and the Prix du Salon, 794.

MUSIC.

Reviews.

Altmann's (Dr. W.) Richard Wagner's Briefe nach Zeit-folge und Inhalt, 666
 Beethoven, L. van: Sonaten für Pianoforte, ed. E. d'Albert, Vols. I.-III., 538
 British Music, 58
 Dent's (E. J.) Alessandro Scarlatti: his Life and Works, 538, 601
 Herd, David, Songs from his Manuscripts, ed. Hecht, 762
 New Pianoforte Music, 27
 New Songs, 27
 Old French and English Ballads, ed. Steele, 666
 Oxford History of Music, The: Vol. V. The Viennese
 Period, by Hadow, 121
 Scarlatti, Alessandro: his Life and Works, by Dent, 538, 601
 Shogaru Shoka: Japanese Folk-Songs, ed. Shuji, 666 Wagner's (Richard) Briefe nach Zeitfolge und Inhalt, by Altmann, 666

Original Papers.

"Cabinet" du St. Sébastien de Brossard, 282
 Garcia Centenary, 378
 Sales, 154, 283, 795

Operas, Concerts, &amp;c.

Albani Concert, 154
 Antonietti's (Mr.) Violin Recital, 314
 Bach Choir, Concert, 122; Dr. Davies's 'Everyman,' 474
 Bauer's (Mr. H.) Pianoforte Recital, 122
 Berlioz's 'Childhood of Christ,' 154
 Broadwood (Messrs.) Concerts, 91, 314, 410
 Carreño's (Madame) Pianoforte Recital, 251
 Chartres's (Miss V.) Violin Recital, 634
 Clench, Nora, Quartet Concert, 187
 Coleridge-Taylor's (Mr.) Choral Ballads at the Crystal Palace, 443
 Concert Club Concert, 122
 Concerts for Children, 346
 Curtius Club Concerts, 91, 122
 Daly's Theatre: Hamilton's 'The Little Michus,' Music by Messenger, 570
 Davies's (Miss F.) Orchestral Concert, 314
 Dohnányi's (Herr von) Pianoforte Recital, 251
 Elman's (Master M.) Violin Recitals, 635, 794
 Garcia's (Mr. M.) Vocal Recital, 443
 Grainger (Mr. P.) and Sandby's (Mr. H.) Pianoforte and Violoncello Recital, 218
 Hall's (Miss M.) Violin Recitals, 251, 634
 Hambourg's (Mr. B.) Violoncello Recital, 122
 Hambourg's (Mr. M.) Pianoforte Recital, 667
 Haymarket Theatre: Performances by Madame Y.
 Guilbert, 730
 Hearne's (Miss I.) Concert, 667
 Hillier Festival, 699, 730, 761
 Huberman's (Herr B.) Concert, 601
 Joachim Quartet Concerts, 601, 635
 Kreisler's (Herr F.) Violin Recital, 699
 Kubelik's (Herr) Concert, 601, 794

Lamond's (Mr. F.) Beethoven Recital, 187; Pianoforte
 Recital, 570
 Landi's (Mlle. C.) Song Recital, 474
 Landowska's (Madame W.) Pianoforte and Harpsichord
 Recitals, 474, 509
 London Choral Society: Sir E. Elgar's 'Caractacus,'
 'The Dream of Gerontius,' 474
 London Symphony Concerts, 154, 314, 730
 London Symphony Orchestra, 474
 MacCarthy's (Miss M.) Orchestral Concert, 187; Violin
 Recital, 346
 Mackenzie's (Sir A.) 'Witch's Daughter,' 154
 Massenet's 'Le Jongleur de Notre-Dame,' 218
 Maurel's (M. V.) Vocal Recitals, 283, 699
 Monday Subscription Concerts, 122, 218, 282, 346, 379
 New Trio Concert, 509
 Palace Theatre: 'The Knights of the Road,' Libretto
 by Sir A. Mackenzie, Music by H. A. Lytton, 283
 Patti's (Madame) Concert, 731
 Philharmonic Concerts, 346, 410, 509, 634, 761
 Richter's (Dr.) Concert, 410
 Royal Academy of Music: Lomax's 'The House of Shadows,' Corder's 'Dross,' 601
 Royal Choral Society: Berlioz's 'Childhood of Christ,' 122
 Royal College of Music: Patron's Fund Orchestral
 Concert, 346
 Royal Opera, Covent Garden: 'Ring des Nibelungen,' 570, 601; 'Il Barbiere,' 570; 'Don Pasquale,' 601;
 'La Traviata,' 635; 'Tristan,' 666, 698; 'Tann-häuser,' 666, 698; 'La Bohème,' 'Carmen,' 666;
 'Rigoletto,' 'Die Meistersinger,' 698; 'Les Huguenots,' 'Faust,' 'Lohengrin,' 730; 'Aida,' 762;
 'Roméo et Juliette,' 'Ballo in Maschera,' 794

Special Orchestral Concert, 730
 Strauss's 'Symphonia Domestica' at Queen's Hall, 251
 Sunderland (Miss G.) and Thistleton's (Mr. F.) Concerts, 123, 154, 282, 410
 Symphony Concerts, 282, 346, 443
 Thibaut's (M. J.) Concert, 443
 Vecsey's (M.) Concert, 794
 Waldorf Theatre: Paër's 'Maestro di Cappella,'
 'I Pagliacci,' 666; Mascagni's 'L'Amico Fritz,' 699;
 'Don Pasquale,' 'Norma,' 'Fiorella,' 730; 'Adriana
 Lecouvreur,' 794

Williams's (Mr. C.) Concerts, 379, 474
 Wood's (Mr. H. J.) New Year's Concert, 27
 Zimmermann (Miss) and Zur-Muehlen's (Herr) Piano and Song Recital, 635

Obituaries.

Berthold zu Sonnenburg, Baroness, 59. Calkin, J. B.,
 539. Cole, Madame Belle, 27. Collard, W. S., 123.
 Dannreuther, E. G., 219. Dommer, A. von, 314.
 Dörffel, A., 251. Eitner, Dr. R., 251. Erdmanns-dörfer, Max von, 283. Genast, E. M., 410. Grange, Madame A. de la, 570. Hill, W. E., 571. Jonas, E.,
 699. Mascheroni, Signor A., 539. Pauer, E., 601.
 Steggall, Dr. C., 762. Strauss, F., 762. Taphouse,
 T. W., 59. Thomas, Dr. T., 27. Vert, N., 731

Gossip.

Congress of the Incorporated Society of Musicians, 59.
 Herr Weingartner on Brahms—Mr. E. H. Thorne's Bach
 Organ Recitals at St. Anne's Church, Soho, 91. First Prize in the Paris Opéra Competition awarded to M. E.
 Malherbe, 251.

DRAMA.

Reviews.

Bradley's (A. C.) Shakespearean Tragedy, 602
 Euripides, The Trojan Women of, tr. into English
 Rhyming Verse by G. Murray, 410
 Phillips's (S.) The Sin of David, 155
 Rolfe's (W. J.) A Life of William Shakespeare, 475
 Shakespeare, W. The Works of, Stratford Town Edition,
 Vol. I., 59; Vol. II., 763; The Arden Shakespeare,
 The Taming of the Shrew, ed. Bond, 124; A Life of,
 by Rolfe—The Sonnets of, ed. Beeching, 475;
 Shakespeare's Town and Times, by Ward, 476;
 Comedies, Histories, and Tragedies, 1664, 763
 Ward's (H. S. and C. W.) Shakespeare's Town and Times, 476

Original Papers.

'Clouds,' The, at Oxford, 315
 Shakspeare: A Unique Copy of the First Edition of 'Titus Andronicus,' 91, 156; The Droeshout Portrait, 380; Two Quartos, 796
 Shakspeareana, 347

Theatres.

Adelphi—'Hamlet,' 443; Fagan's 'Under which King?' 731
 Avenue—Tschirikoff's 'The Chosen People,' 92, 123; Carton's 'Mr. Hopkinson,' 251; Sturgess's 'Jasper
 Bright,' 603; Ganthony's 'A Message from Mars,' 796
 Bijou—Wilde's 'Salomé,' 604
 Comedy—'Our Flat,' 220; Bancroft's 'Lady Ben,' 412; Davis's 'The Dictator,' Williams's 'The Philosopher
 in the Apple Orchard,' 572
 Coronet—Miss Burgh and Mr. Grant's 'Heart of Gold,' 220; 'Macbeth,' 'Hamlet,' 252; 'King Lear,' 252,
 348; 'The School for Scandal,' 252; 'As You Like
 It,' 284; 'The Comedy of Errors,' 284, 348; 'Macbeth,'
 'She Stoops to Conquer,' 284; 'The Orestean Trilogy' of Æschylus, 315; Phillips's 'Lord Danby's Love Affair,' 700; Madame Bernhardt's Season, 795

Court—'Prunella,' 60; Shaw's 'John Bull's Other Island,' 188, 572; Yeats's 'The Pot of Broth,' Schnitz-ler's 'In the Hospital,' tr. Horne, Shaw's 'How He Lied to her Husband,' 283; Mrs. H. de la Pasture's
 'The Lonely Millionaire,' 284; 'The Thieves'
 Comedy,' tr. from Hauptmann by Horne, Hardinge's
 'The Little More,' 'The Dancer,' 380; 'The Trojan
 Women,' tr. from Euripides by Murray, 475; Shaw's
 'You Never Can Tell,' 571, 764; Miss Filippi's
 'Belinda,' 636; Shaw's 'Man and Superman,' 667;
 Shaw's 'Candida,' 668; Filippi's 'Beatrice,' Filippi and Playfair's 'Alice,' 700. Incorporated Stage Society: Street's 'Great Friends,' 155

Criterion—Gréac and Véber's 'What Pamela Wanted,' adapted by Brookfield, 539, 700; Dabbs's 'That Eastern Anomaly,' 604; Gilbert's 'Comedy and Tragedy,' 700;
 Doone and Coales's 'Brooke of Brazenose,' 764;
 Madame Maeterlinck's Musical and Dramatic Recital,
 796

Drury Lane—'Becket,' 571; 'The Merchant of Venice,' 668; 'Waterloo,' 'Louis XI.,' 732
 Duke of York's—Barrie's 'Alice Sit by the Fire,'
 'Pantaloone,' 474

Elizabethan Stage Society—Francis of Assisi, Saint and Mystic, 476; 'Romeo and Juliet,' 604

Garrick—Revival of Trevor's 'Brother Officers,' 604

Great Queen Street—German Performances: 'Alt
 Heidelberg,' Hauptmann's 'Die Weber,' 28; Beyerlein's 'Die Zapfenstreich,' 60; Schönthan and Kadel-burg's 'Zwei Glückliche Tage,' 155; Hauptmann's
 'Rose Bernd,' 187; Fulda's 'Maskerade,' 252;
 Halbe's 'Der Strom,' 283; Ibsen's 'Die Wildente'
 ('The Wild Duck'), 315; 'Es Lebe das Leben,' 316; Showronnek's 'Eine Palast-Revolution,' 348.
 Mermaid Repertory Theatre: Sheridan's 'Critic,' 540; Ben Jonson's 'Epicæne,' 603; Vanbrugh's 'The Confederacy,' 636; Beaumont and Fletcher's 'The Knight of the Burning Pestle,' 636, 700; Gilbert's
 'Palace of Truth,' 668

Haymarket—'Beauty and the Barge,' 'That Brute
 Simmons,' 28; Jacobs and Parker's 'The Monkey's
 Paw,' 284, 316; Marshall and Parker's 'Everybody's Secret,' 347, 604; Parker's 'The Creole,' 603; Fagan's
 'Shakespeare v. Shaw,' Miss Hughes's 'His First Love,' 668; Revival of Pinero's 'The Cabinet Minister,' 731

His Majesty's—'Much Ado about Nothing,' 123, 188, 220; Mrs. Ward and Parker's 'Agatha,' 315; Revival of 'A Man's Shadow,' 411; 'Hamlet,' 412, 539, 604;
 'Richard II.,' 'Merry Wives of Windsor,' 'Twelfth Night,' 'Much Ado about Nothing,' 539; 'Julius Caesar,' 539, 572; Grundy's 'Business is Business,'
 604, 635; 'The Ballad-Monger,' 668

Imperial—'King Henry V.,' 92, 123; 'Monsieur
 Beaucaire,' 444, 764; 'Romeo and Juliet,' 539;
 Fagan's 'Hawthorne, U.S.A.,' 699

Kennington—'Human Hearts,' 732

King's Hall, Covent Garden—Incorporated Stage Society: Brieux's 'The Three Daughters of M.
 Dupont,' adapted by Hankin, 347

Lyric—Fitch's 'Her Own Way,' 540; 'Hamlet,' 667
 'The Only Way,' 668; Rutherford's 'The Breed of the Treshams,' 700, 731

New—Orczy-Barstow's 'The Scarlet Pimpernel,' 60;
 McLellan's 'Leah Kleschna,' 571

Royalty—Grundy's 'The Diplomats,' Heyermans
 'A Case of Arson,' tr. Peacey, 219

St. James's—Sutro's 'A Maker of Men,' 'Lady Windmere's Fan,' 156; Sutro's 'Mollentrave on Women,' 219; Shaw's 'How He Lied to her Husband,' 380;
 'A Scrupulous Man,' 412; Thurston's 'John Chilcote, M.P.,' 571; 'The Man of the Moment,' from the French of Capus and Arène, by Melvill, 763

Savoy—'Du Barri,' tr. from Richepin by C. St. John,
 379; 'Her Own Way,' 668

Shaftesbury—'Othello,' 475; 'Everyman,' 509; Schön-than and Ellfeld's 'Renaissance,' tr. Miss Greeven, Peile's 'Mrs. L'Estrange,' 668; Performances of MM.
 Coquelin, 732

Strand—Stern's 'Off the Rank,' 347
 Terry's—Fendall's 'Mrs. Dering's Divorce,' 123;
 Madame Réjane's Performances, 731, 763

Waldorf—Signora Duse's Performances, 668, 700, 732
 762, 796

Walsingham Club Theatre—'A Man's Love,' tr. from Jan C. de Vos by Grein and Jarvis, 412

Wyndham's—Marshall's 'The Lady of Leeds,' 219;
 'Mr. Hopkinson,' 348

Obituaries.

Arnold, C., 604. Ball, L., 252. Barrymore, M., 412.
 Craven, H. T., 510. Jefferson, J. ('Joe'), 540.
 Motte, A. J. de la, 700. Neilson, Miss A., 156.
 Rose, E., 28

Gossip.

Award of the Grillparzer Prize to G. Hauptmann, 124. Mr.
 Tree's Dramatic Academy Students at His Majesty's Theatre, 284. Mr. Watson's 'Two Men and a Maid' at the Northampton Opera-House, 318.

MISCELLANEA.

Bruces, The Pedigree of the, 764
 Coleridge's Poems: New Information, 156, 220
 'Inwara' and 'Utwara,' 796
 'Lairs of Fife, The,' 124
 Statues in 'Erewhon,' 510

THE ATHENÆUM

Journal of English and Foreign Literature, Science, the Fine Arts, Music and the Drama.

No. 4028.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 7, 1905.

PRICE
THREEPENCE
REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER

GOVERNMENT GRANT to DEFRAY the EXPENSES OF SCIENTIFIC INVESTIGATIONS.—Applications for the Year 1905 must be received at the Office of the Royal Society not later than JANUARY 31 next, and must be made upon Printed Forms to be obtained from the CLERK TO THE GOVERNMENT GRANT COMMITTEE, Royal Society, Burlington House, London, W.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, LONDON.
(University of London.)

A COURSE OF LECTURES on ENGLISH ART from CONSTABLE to the PRESENT TIME will be given by Mr. D. S. MACCOLL, M.A. Lond. B.A. Oxon, in the SECOND TERM, on the following FRIDAYS, at 4.30 P.M.: January 13, 27 February 10, 21 March 10, 21.

The Opening Lecture on January 13, at 4.30 P.M., will deal with Constable and the Water-Colour Sketchers. Application for Tickets, accompanied by drafts drawn in favour of Mr. Arthur J. Smart, should be addressed to the undersigned. Fee One Guinea.

WALTER W. SETON, M.A., Acting Secretary.

RECENT DISCOVERIES in ROME.

A COURSE OF THREE LECTURES will be given in the LECTURE HALL, 20, HANOVER SQUARE, on WEDNESDAYS, January 19 and 25, February 1 at 5 P.M., by Mrs. BURTON BROWN, Author of 'Recent Excavations in the Roman Forum' (Murray 1904, 1905) illustrated by a large Collection of Slides, &c., specially prepared, shown by the Epidiascope. Tickets for the Course 12s. 6d. (for Three Persons 30s.), beforehand, from Mrs. BURTON BROWN, 3, Westwood Park, Forest Hill, S.E. Single Lecture 5s., at the door.

The Lectures will be of great interest and assistance to those visiting Rome this season.

LIBRARY ASSOCIATION.

The NEXT EXAMINATION of the LIBRARY ASSOCIATION will be held in the FIRST WEEK in MAY 1905. Classes preparatory for the Examination in 'Library Administration' and 'Bibliography' will commence at the London School of Economics on JANUARY 18. A Correspondence Class in 'Library Administration' will commence on the same date.—Full particulars may be obtained from the undersigned.

HENRY D. ROBERTS,

Hon. Secretary of the Education Committee.

114, Southwark Bridge Road, S.E.

KING'S COLLEGE SCHOOL.—OLD BOYS'

DINNER at the HOTEL CECIL on WEDNESDAY, January 11, 1905, at 6.45 for 7 P.M., Mr. SIDNEY LOW, M.A. L.C.C., in the Chair. Tickets 7s. 6d., not including Wine.—Apply to GEORGE HEYER, King's College School, Wimbledon Common.

THE BOOKSELLERS' PROVIDENT INSTITUTION.

Founded 1837.

Patron—HER MAJESTY QUEEN ALEXANDRA.

Invested Capital 30,000l.

A UNIQUE INVESTMENT

Offered to London Booksellers and their Assistants.

A young man or woman of twenty-five can invest the sum of Twenty Guineas (or its equivalent by instalments), and obtain the right to participate in the following advantages:—

FIRST. Freedom from want in time of Adversity as long as need exists.

SECOND. Permanent Relief in Old Age.

THIRD. Medical advice by eminent Physicians and Surgeons.

FOURTH. A Cottage in the Country (Abbots Langley, Hertfordshire) for aged Members, with garden produce, coal, and medical attendance free, in addition to an annuity.

FIFTH. A furnished house in the same Retreat at Abbots Langley for the free use of Members and their families for holidays or during convalescence.

SIXTH. A contribution towards Funeral expenses when it is needed.

SEVENTH. All these are available not for Members only, but also for their wives or widows and young children.

EIGHTH. The payment of the subscriptions confers an absolute right to these benefits in all cases of need.

For further information apply to the Secretary, Mr. GEORGE LARNER, 23, Paternoster Row, E.C.

THE DOWNS SCHOOL, REAFORD, SUSSEX.

Head Mistress—Miss LUCY ROBINSON, M.A. (late Second Mistress St. Felix School, Southwold). References: The Principal of Bedford College, London; The Master of Peterhouse, Cambridge.

TUDOR HALL SCHOOL,
FOREST HILL, LONDON S.E.

(Founded in 1850 by the Rev. J. W. TODD, D.D., and Mrs. TODD.)

For the DAUGHTERS of GENTLEMEN (Boarders only).

Principal—Miss MARGARET WOUTERS.

First-rate Modern Education. Prof. H. G. SEELEY, F.R.S., J. CHURTON COLLINS, M.A., H. E. MILDEN, M.A., J. STEPPAT, Ph.D., G. GARCIA, R.C.M., G. PRADENAU (Paris Conservatoire), P. STOEYING (Leipzig), A. P. HUGUENET, TERRICK WILLIAMS (R.L.), C. JERRAM, M.A., &c. Large Resident Staff of highly qualified English and Foreign Mistresses. Cricket, Hockey, Tennis, Riding, Swimming, Bicycling. Grounds over Four Acres. Large Gymnasium. Special attention to health. Matron, Trained Nurse.—Prospectus, with views on application.

FRANCES MARY BUSS SCHOOLS for GIRLS.

NORTH LONDON COLLEGIATE SCHOOL, Sandall Road, N.W.

Head Mistress—Mrs. BRYANT, D.Sc. Litt.D.

School Fees per Term: 5l. 19s. 6d. 6s., or 7l. 7s., according to age.

Scholarships are awarded annually to the value of about 300l.

There are Three Boarding Houses approved by the Governors, at Fees from 5l. to 70 Guineas per annum.

The SPRING TERM COMMENCES on JANUARY 17, 1905.

For all particulars apply to the Secretary.

EDUCATION.—There are TWO VACANCIES in a high-class modern HOME SCHOOL for GIRLS, for an Older Pupil to prepare for College (exceptional opportunities) and a Girl of about 12. Every educational advantage combined with healthy conditions of outdoor life in a beautiful Surrey district. Would suit delicate girls. Excellent Music and Foreign Languages. Terms moderate.—H. M. Box 957, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

NEWSVENDORS' BENEVOLENT and PROVIDENT INSTITUTION.

Founded 1839.

Funds exceed 4,000l.

Office: Memorial Hall Buildings, 16, Farringdon Street, London, E.C.

Patron:

The Right Hon. the EARL of ROSEBURY, K.G.

President:

The LORD GLENESK.

Treasurer:

The LONDON and WESTMINSTER BANK, LIMITED.

A Donation of Ten Guineas constitutes a Vice-President and gives three votes for life at all elections. Each Donation of Three Guineas gives a vote at all elections for life. Every Annual Subscriber is entitled to one vote at all elections in respect of each Five Shillings so paid.

MEMBERSHIP.—Every Man and Woman throughout the United Kingdom, whether Publisher, Wholesaler, Retailer, Employer, or Employed, is entitled to become a Member of this Institution, and enjoy its benefits upon payment of Five Shillings annually, or Three Guineas for life, provided that he or she is engaged in the sale of Newspapers, and such members who thus contribute secure priority of consideration in the event of their needing aid from the Institution.

PENSIONS.—The Annuity now number Thirty-six, the men receiving 25l. and the Women 20l. per annum each, and they include:—The 'Royal Victoria Pension Fund,' which was established in 1887 and enlarged in 1897, 1901, and 1902, perpetually commemorates the great advantages the News Trade enjoyed under the rule of Her late Majesty Queen Victoria, provides Pensions of 20l. a year each for Six Widows of News-vendors.

The 'Francis Fund' provides Pensions for One Man, 25l., and One Woman, 20l., and was specially subscribed in memory of the late John Francis, who died on April 6, 1882, and was for more than fifty years Publisher of the Athenæum. He took an active and leading part throughout the whole period of the agitation for the repeal of the various then existing 'Taxes on Knowledge,' and was for very many years a staunch supporter of this Institution.

The 'Herbert Lloyd Pension Fund' provides 25l. per annum for one man; and was established in 1903 in perpetual and grateful memory of Mr. Herbert Lloyd, who was a generous benefactor of this Institution, and who died May 12, 1899.

The 'Hospital Pensions' consist of an annual contribution of 35l., whereby Sir Henry Charles Burdett and his co-directors generously enable the Committee to grant 20l. for One Year to a Man and 15l. for One Year to a Woman, under conditions laid down in Rule 8c.

W. WILKIE JONES, Secretary.

EDUCATION.

Parents or Guardians desiring accurate information relative to the CHOICE of SCHOOLS for BOYS or GIRLS or

TUTORS in England or Abroad

are invited to call upon or send fully detailed particulars to

MESSRS. GARBITAS, THRING & CO.,

who for more than thirty years have been closely in touch with the leading Educational Establishments.

Advice, free of charge, is given by Mr. Thring, Nephew of the late Head Master of Uppingham, 36, Sackville Street, London, W.

COUNTY of LONDON.

EDUCATION ACTS, 1870-1903.

The LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL invites applications for the post of a PRINCIPAL ASSISTANT in the EXECUTIVE OFFICER'S BRANCH of the EDUCATION DEPARTMENT. The duties of the Office will include general assistance to the Executive Officer in connexion with the administration of the Education Acts, 1870 to 1903. Candidates must have had a University or other equivalent training, and also some experience in educational administration. The salary attached to the position is 400l. per annum, rising by annual increments of 25l. to 600l. per annum.

The person appointed will be required to give his whole time to the duties of the Office, and will in other respects be subject to the usual conditions attaching to the Council's service, particulars of which are contained in the Form of Application.

Applications should be made on the Official Form, to be obtained from the Clerk of the Council at the County Hall, Spring Gardens, S.W.; or at the Education Offices, Victoria Embankment, W.C. The applications must be sent in not later than 10 A.M. on SATURDAY, January 14, 1905, addressed to the Education Offices as above, and accompanied by copies of not more than three recent Testimonials.

Canvassing, either directly or indirectly, will be held to be a disqualification for appointment.

G. L. GOMME, Clerk of the London County Council.

The County Hall, Spring Gardens, S.W.,

December 20, 1904.

UNIVERSITY of GLASGOW.

EXAMINERSHIP IN CLASSICS.

The UNIVERSITY COURT of the UNIVERSITY of GLASGOW will shortly proceed to appoint a SECOND ADDITIONAL EXAMINER in CLASSICS for Degrees in Arts, to assist with the Marking of the Papers.

The appointment will be for Three Years from JANUARY 1, 1905, at an annual salary of 200l., with hotel and travelling expenses in addition.

Candidates should lodge twenty copies of their Application and Testimonials with the undersigned on or before JANUARY 21, 1905.

ALAN E. CLAFFERTON,

Secretary, Glasgow University Court.

91, West Regent Street, Glasgow.

OLDBURY SECONDARY SCHOOL and PUPIL-TEACHERS' CENTRE.

The GOVERNORS REQUIRE in JANUARY NEXT an ASSISTANT TEACHER, Male or Female, to teach ordinary Form Subjects and Science or Mathematics. Salary 100l. per annum, non-resident.

Applications should be forwarded to the undersigned on or before JANUARY 16, 1905.

Secondary School, Oldbury.

CITY of SHEFFIELD EDUCATION COMMITTEE.

MUNICIPAL TECHNICAL SCHOOL OF ART.

HEAD MASTER REQUIRED. The Managers of the above School invite applications for the position of HEAD MASTER. Commencing salary 500l. per annum.

Forms of Application which should be returned not later than JANUARY 18, 1905, may be had on application to the undersigned.

Personal canvassing will disqualify Candidates.

JNO. F. MOSS, Secretary.

Education Office, Sheffield, December 21, 1904.

Yearly Subscription, free by post, inland, 15s. 3d.; Foreign, 18s. Entered at the New York Post Office as Second Class matter.

FRANCE.—The ATHENÆUM can be obtained at the following Railway Stations in France:—

AMIENS, ANTIBES, BEAULIEU-SUR-MER, BIARRITZ, BORDEAUX, BOULOGNE-SUR-MER, CALAIS, CANNES, DIJON, DUNKIRK, HAVRE, LILLE, LYONS, MARSEILLES, MENTONE, MONACO, NANTES, NICE, PARIS, PAU, SAINT RAPHAEL, TOURS, TOULON.

PARIS: W. H. SMITH & SON, 248, Rue de Rivoli; and at the GALIGNANI LIBRARY, 224, Rue de Rivoli.

THE NOBEL PRIZE for LITERATURE.

This Prize, one of the Five Nobel Prizes, is annually awarded by the Swedish Academy (Svenska Akademien) in Stockholm "to the person who, during the year immediately preceding, shall have produced in the field of Literature the most distinguished work of an idealistic tendency."

The Statutes of the Nobel Foundation, which is based upon the last Will of Dr. Alfred Bernhard Nobel, contain the following stipulations about the Prize Competition in general:—

§ 2. The term "Literature," used in the Will, shall be understood to embrace not only works falling under the category of Poetic Literature, but also other Writings which may claim to possess literary value by reason of their form or their mode of exposition.

The proviso in the Will to the effect that for the Prize Competition only such works or inventions shall be eligible as have appeared "during the preceding year" is to be so understood, that a work or an invention for which a reward under the terms of the Will is contemplated shall set forth the most modern results of work being done in that of the departments, as defined in the Will, to which it belongs. Works or inventions of older standing to be taken into consideration only in case their importance have not previously been demonstrated.

§ 3. Every written work, to qualify for a Prize, shall have appeared in print.

§ 4. The amount allotted to one Prize may be divided equally between two works submitted, should each of such works be deemed to merit a Prize.

§ 7. It is essential that every Candidate for a Prize under the terms of the Will be proposed as such in writing by some duly qualified person. A direct application for a Prize will not be taken into consideration.

§ 8. The grounds upon which the proposal of any Candidate's name is made must be stated in writing and handed in along with such papers and other documents as may be therein referred to.

The special regulations concerning the Prize for Literature define in the following manner the conditions valid for proposing Candidates for the aforesaid Prize:—

The right of proposing Competitors for the Prize belongs to Members of the Swedish Academy; Members of the French and Spanish Academies which are similar in aim and organization to the Swedish Academy; Members in the Literary Classes of other Academies; Members of such Literary Institutions and Societies that are analogous to Academies; as also persons teaching Aesthetics, Literature, or History at Universities.

Duly sealed propositions for the Nobel Prize for Literature should be forwarded to the NOBEL COMMITTEE OF THE SWEDISH ACADEMY, in Stockholm, prior to February 1 of each year.

The amount of the Prize is about 140,000 Swedish crowns (7,700l.).

WANTED for JANUARY 11, 1905, a YOUNG

CHRISTIAN GENTLEMAN as RESIDENT MASTER in a first-class PRIVATE COLLEGE in HOLLAND. Limited number of Pupils (20-30). Duties: English Lessons and Conversation, Supervision, and Sport. Comfortable Home. Salary 500l. per annum, including Laundry. Good references exchanged.—Please address Foreign Stamp No. 18, Kooykers Library, Leiden, Holland.

EDITOR, with proved capacity as Writer of Books for Boys, and in touch with the best Writers for Boys and Girls. Firm of Publishers (London and Edinburgh) will be glad to have applications from Gentlemen with ability and initiative.—Apply Editor, care of Hart's Advertising Offices, Maltravers House, Arundel Street, Strand, W.C.

LEADERETTE and LONDON NOTE WRITER

REQUIRED for WEEKLY WORK.—Apply, with Specimens, A.O. Box 955, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

PUBLISHERS' TRAVELLER—WANTED, a

FIRM of PUBLISHERS to SHARE the SERVICES and EXPENSES of a high-class COUNTRY REPRESENTATIVE.—Letters only, R. B. J., care of J. E. Myers, Chartered Accountant, Trafalgar Buildings, Northumberland Avenue, London, W.C.

ASSISTANT EDITORSHIP WANTED by a

GENTLEMAN. Has had great experience and was four years Editor of a Colonial Daily. Special knowledge of Far East.—Address Box 953, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

ADVERTISER desires post as LITERARY

ADVISER to PUBLISHING FIRM. University Classical Honours Man.—Address A. H. S., Box 362, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

PUBLISHING.—GENTLEMAN, with small capital and many years' experience as ADVERTISEMENT MANAGER of several PUBLISHING HOUSES desires similar position, with or without a view to ultimately take an interest in the concern.—Write Q. R. D. 41 Chancery Lane, W.C.

GENTLEMAN, with five years' experience in Publishing, desires post as ASSISTANT on Manufacturing Side. Reply H. R. J., Box 958, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

OWNER of established LITERARY BUSINESS in PROVINCES is open to receive PARTNER Applicants (who should state previous business experience) will be furnished with particulars. Only Principals treated with.—Apply Box 965, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

LADY PROOF READER, of some experience,
wants SITUATION. In London preferred.—Apply, personally or by letter, J. E. F., Athenæum Press, Bream's Buildings, E.C.

TRANSLATION, REVISION, RESEARCH,
REVIEWING, INDEXING, and other LITERARY WORK, or non-resident Secretaryship. Classics, French, German, Italian. Special Subjects, Mythology and Literature. Varied experience.—Miss SELBY, 53, Talbot Road, W.

LITERARY RESEARCH undertaken at the British Museum and elsewhere on moderate terms. Excellent Testimonials.—A. B., Box 910, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

AUTHORS' MSS., SERMONS, PLAYS, ENVELOPES, CIRCULARS, and all kinds, TYPED at home (Remington), 9d. per 1,000. Good paper. Orders promptly executed.—M. L., 7, Vernon Road, Clapham.

TYPE-WRITING.—SERMONS, AUTHORS' MSS., &c., carefully and promptly executed. 8d. per 1,000 words, paper included.—Miss A. MASSE, Strathairn, New Barn, Longfield, Kent.

AUTHORS' MSS., NOVELS, SERMONS, PLAYS, REVIEWS TYPE-WRITTEN accurately and promptly, 9d. per 1,000 words. References to well-known Writers.—M. STUART, Thirlbank, Roxborough Road, Harrow.

TYPE-WRITING undertaken by highly educated
Women (Classical Tripos; Cambridge Higher Local; Modern Languages). Research, Revision, Translation.—THE CAMBRIDGE TYPE-WRITING AGENCY, 10, Duke Street, Adelphi, W.C.

PRESS CUTTING S.
Special Departments for ART, SCIENCE, LITERATURE, COMMERCE, and EDUCATION.
Terms from 5s. per 100.
Send requirements and obtain quotation from the PRESS CUTTING AGENCY, Keston, Kent.

THE AUTHOR'S AGENCY.—Established 1879.
The interests of Authors capably represented. Agreements for Publishing arranged. MSS. placed with Publishers.—Terms and Testimonials on application to Mr. A. M. BURGESS, 34, Paternoster Row.

MR. GEORGE LARNER, Accountant and
Licensed Valuer to the Bookselling, Publishing, Newspaper, Printing, and Stationery Trades. Partnerships Arranged. Balance Sheets and Trading Accounts Prepared and Audited. All Business carried out under Mr. Larner's personal supervision.—28, 29, and 30, Paternoster Row, E.C., Secretary to the Booksellers' Provident Institution.

NEWSPAPER PROPERTIES
BOUGHT, SOLD, VALUED; and supplied with every requisite. Write for The COMPLETE JOURNALIST, sent post free.
The Imperial News Agency,
London: 2 and 4, Tudor Street, E.C.
America: 700-706, Fourteenth Street, N.W., Washington, D.C.

C MITCHELL & CO., Agents for the Sale and Purchase of Newspaper Properties, undertake Valuations for Probate or Purchase, Investigations, and Audit of Accounts, &c. Card of Terms on application.
Mitchell House, 1 and 2, Snow Hill, Holborn Viaduct, E.C.

ATHENÆUM PRESS.—JOHN EDWARD FRANCIS, Printer of the Athenæum, Notes and Queries, &c., is prepared to SUBMIT ESTIMATES for all kinds of BOOK, NEWS, and PERIODICAL PRINTING.—13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

Catalogues.

FIRST EDITIONS of MODERN AUTHORS, including Dickens, Thackeray, Lever, Ainsworth; Books illustrated by G. and R. Cruikshank, Philz, Rowlandson, Leech, &c. The largest and choicest Collection offered for Sale in the World. Catalogues issued and sent post free on application. Books Bought.—WALTER T. SPENCER, 27, New Oxford Street, London, W.C.

CATALOGUE No. 42.—Drawings—Engravings—
Turner's Liber Studiorum—Lucas's Mezzotints after Constable—Engravings, Hogarth, Girtin—Etchings, Palmer, Whistler—Japanese Colour-Prints—Illustrated Books—Works by Ruskin. Post free, Sixpence. Wm. WARD, 2, Church Terrace, Richmond, Surrey.

THE INTERNATIONAL BOOK CIRCULAR,
No. 139, containing a Special Article, entitled 'SOME CONTEMPORARY FOREIGN CHEMISTS,' by Dr M. O. FORSTER, together with an exact Bibliography of their Publications, and a Double Plate of their Portraits. Specimen Copies gratis.—WILLIAMS & NORGATE, Book Importers, 11, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, W.C.

MESSRS HENRY YOUNG & SONS possess
one of the LARGEST STOCKS of OLD and NEW BOOKS in GREAT BRITAIN, and they will be glad to hear from any one in search of Books out of print, as they can in many cases supply them at once.

ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE MONTHLY. Price 6d.
12, South Castle Street, Liverpool.

TO BOOKBUYERS and LIBRAIRIANS of FREE
LIBRARIES.—The JANUARY CATALOGUE of valuable SECOND-HAND WORKS and NEW REMAINERS, offered at prices greatly reduced, is now ready, and will be sent post free upon application to W. H. SMITH & SONS, Library Department, 186, Strand, London, W.C.

LEIGHTON'S

CATALOGUE of EARLY PRINTED and other
INTERESTING BOOKS, MANUSCRIPTS, and BINDINGS
Part VII. R—SHAKESPEARE, 160 Illustrations, price 2s. NEARLY READY.

Parts I.-VI., containing A—Q, with 890 Illustrations in Facsimile.

Price 15s. the 6 Parts.

J. & J. LEIGHTON, 40, Brewer Street, Golden Square, W.

H. H. PEACH, Antiquarian Bookseller, 37, Belvoir Street, Leicester, issues CATALOGUES of MSS. and OLD BOOKS post free to Book Collectors. No 8 contains Donne's Poems, 1683—Early Music—a number of Seventeenth Century Tracts, &c.

PORTRAIT of GEORGE MEREDITH, after the celebrated Painting by G. F. WATTS, R.A., Engraved by W. BISCOMBE GARDNER. Limited to 600 Artist's Proofs at One Guinea each. Size, 12 in. by 8½ in.—Address W. BISCOMBE GARDNER, Hoathly, Hind Head, Surrey.

GEORGE CRUIKSHANK.

Collectors, Dealers, and Owners having Coloured
or Plain Caricatures, Etchings, Engravings,
Woodcuts (or Books containing same)

Done by GEORGE CRUIKSHANK

Which they wish to dispose of

Are requested to send Title, Publisher, Date,
Condition, and Price asked to

EDWIN H. WENDELL, Esq.,
500 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

MARLBOROUGH.—TO BE SOLD, WITH
POSSESSION.—AN HOLME, on the London and Bath Road, within a mile of Marlborough College, with fine Views of the magnificently timbered Slopes of Savernake Forest, a DETACHED FREEHOLD RESIDENCE, with Six Bedrooms, Dressing Room, Three good Reception Rooms, and Domestic Offices. Stabling, Lodge, Gardener's Cottage, and other Out-buildings. Well-timbered Grounds, nearly Four Acres, bounded and intersected by the River Kennet.—Solicitors, Messrs KAYS & JONES, 37, Norfolk Street, W.C. Particulars of Mr. MARK JEANS, Marlborough.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS.—WINTER APART-
MENTS—Comfortably Furnished Sitting-Room and One Bedroom. Pleasant and central. No others taken.—R. H., 66, Grove Hill Road, Tunbridge Wells.

Sales by Auction.

Curiosities.

MR. J. C. STEVENS'S NEXT SALE of
CURIOS will take place on TUESDAY, the 10th inst., at half-past 12 o'clock, and will include a CONSIGNMENT of CHINESE and JAPANESE PORCELAIN—Lacquer Ware, Bronzes, &c.; also Old English China—Wood Carvings—Native Weapons—and the usual Miscellaneous Assortment.

Catalogues may be had on application to Mr. J. C. STEVENS, 38, King Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C.

Microscopes—Microscopic Slides—Scientific Instruments—Cameras, &c.

FRIDAY, January 13, at half-past 12 o'clock.

MR. J. C. STEVENS will OFFER, at his Rooms, 38, King Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C. CAMERAS, Hand and Studio, by best Makers; also Lenses, and Accessories of all kinds—fine Microscope and Microscopic Slides—Objectives—Scientific Instruments and Apparatus—Lanterns—Lantern Slides—Cinematograph Films—and a large quantity of Miscellaneous Property.

On view day prior 2 to 5 and morning of Sale. Catalogues on application.

General Natural History and Entomological Specimens—fine Collection of Minerals and Fossils.

JANUARY 17, at half-past 12 o'clock.

MR. J. C. STEVENS will OFFER, at his Rooms, 38, King Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C. COLLECTION of LEPIDOPTERA, including some rare Specimens, in fine condition—Eggs, and Cabinets of various sizes—Horns and Horns of Big Game; a COLLECTION of MINERALS and FOSSILS in CABINET; Skins and Mounted Specimens of Birds and Animals.

On view day prior 10 to 4 and morning of Sale. Catalogues on application.

MESSRS. CHRISTIE, MANSON & WOODS
respectfully give Notice that they will hold the Following SALES by AUCTION at their Great Rooms, King Street, St. James's Square, the Sales commencing at 1 o'clock precisely:—

On THURSDAY, January 12, and FRIDAY,
January 13, OLD ENGLISH FURNITURE and PORCELAIN from BEAU-DESERT, the Property of the Most Hon. the MARQUESS of ANGLESEY.

On SATURDAY, January 14, PICTURES of the DUTCH, FLEMISH, FRENCH, ITALIAN, and EARLY ENGLISH SCHOOLS.

By order of the Executors of the late Dr. ISAAC
ROBERTS, F.R.S.

STARFIELD, CROWBOROUGH, SUSSEX.

On TUESDAY and WEDNESDAY, January 17 and 18, commencing each day at 11 o'clock.

THOMAS WHITEHEAD & SONS are instructed to SELL by AUCTION the superior MODERN HOUSEHOLD FURNITURE—Silver and Silver-Plated Articles—Glass and China—Wines and Spirits—Garden Tools—Greenhouse Plants—and the Books, including Punch, from 1842 to 1902 inclusive, 61 vols.—Ruskin's The Seven Lamps of Architecture—Sowerby's English Botany, 12 vols.—Morris's British Birds, 7 vols. Coloured Plates, and British Moths, 4 vols. Coloured Plates, &c.

On view on MONDAY, January 16, from 10 to 5, and on the mornings of Sale. Catalogues may be had at Starfield; at Thomas WHITEHEAD & SONS' Auction Sale Rooms and Office, 67, Hanover Street, Liverpool.

The Detached Residence, with Observatory and Fittings, Lodge, Cottage, Stable, Coachhouse, and about 4½ acres of beautifully laid-out Grounds, will shortly be offered for Sale by Auction if not previously sold by private treaty.—Apply to Messrs. ALISON, STEVENS, HARVEY & CROOKS, Solicitors, 14, Castle Street, Liverpool.

Valuable Books, including a Library removed from Yorkshire.

MESSRS. PUTTICK & SIMPSON will SELL by AUCTION at their Galleries, 47, Leicester Square, W.C., on WEDNESDAY, January 11, and Following Day, at ten minutes past 1 o'clock precisely, valuable BOOKS, including Lamb's Rosamund Gray, First Edition, uncut—Chaucer's Works, Kelmscott Press—Chaucer's Works, 1532—Geneste's Account of the English Stage, 10 vols.—The Satirist, 4 vols. Coloured Plates—Annals of Gallantry, 3 vols. Coloured Plates—Gibbon's Roman Empire, 8 vols.—Tennyson's Poems, 1830-33, privately printed—Surtees's Works, 5 vols.—Humphreys and Westwood's British Moths, 2 vols. morocco gilt—Catalogue of the Rothschild Collection, 2 vols.—Lamb's Poetical Recreations of the Champion—Shakespeare's Works, by Dyce, 10 vols.—Grote's Greece, 10 vols.—Burns's Poems, 1787—Meredith's Farina, 1857—Parkinson's Paradise in Sole, 1904—Institute of Civil Engineers, Proceedings—First Editions of R. Jeffries—Three Engravings after Turner, retouched by the Artist—Historical MSS. Commission, Reports—Bree's Birds of Europe, 5 vols.—Early Printed Books—Autograph Letters, &c.

Collection of Engravings.

MESSRS. PUTTICK & SIMPSON will SELL by AUCTION, at their Galleries, 47, Leicester Square, W.C., on FRIDAY, January 13, at ten minutes past 1 o'clock precisely, a valuable COLLECTION of ENGRAVINGS, including Fancy Subjects of the Bartolozzi School—an Interesting Series of Portraits relating to Shakespeare, Goldsmith, and other Literary Personages—Topographical Prints—Sporting Subjects—Early English Portraits in Mezzotint—Etchings and Woodcuts by Old Masters, &c., together with a few Water-Colour Drawings and Oil Paintings.

Miscellaneous Books.

MESSRS. HODGSON & CO. will SELL by
AUCTION, at their Rooms, 115, Chancery Lane, W.C., on TUESDAY, January 10, and Two Following Days, at 1 o'clock, MISCELLANEOUS BOOKS, comprising Topographical and Antiquarian Works—Aesop's Fables, Bibliotheca Orientalis (Clementine Vaticana), 4 vols.—Hakluyt's Voyages and Traffiques, 3 vols. 1598-1600—Quaker Tracts relating to America—Black-Letter Books, and others in Early English Literature—Grimm's Popular Stories, uncut, 1823, and other First Editions—Hamerton's Etching and Engraving, First Edition, and other Fine-Art Books—Florio's Montaigne, Japanese Vellum Copy, 3 vols. (Tudor Translations)—Fielding's Works, 16 vols.—The Border Edition of Scott, 48 vols.—Lang's Fairy Books, &c., 6 vols. Large Paper—Duruy's History of Rome, 6 vols.—Standard Works in History and Travel—a Selection of Recent Publications in various Departments of Literature—Encyclopaedia Britannica, 36 vols.—Prints, Engravings, &c.

To be viewed, and Catalogues had.

Rare and Valuable Books.

MESSRS. HODGSON & CO. will SELL by AUCTION, at their Rooms, 115, Chancery Lane, W.C., DURING JANUARY, RARE and VALUABLE BOOKS, comprising Graves and Cronin's History of the Works of Sir Joshua Reynolds, 4 vols.—Engravings from the Works of Sir Thomas Lawrence—a Collection of Incunabula and Early Printed Books—an Illuminated Horn on Vellum—Books relating to America, including a Copy of Smith's Virginia, &c.

Catalogues are preparing.

THE SALE by AUCTION

OF THE

MANUSCRIPTS, BOOKS, AND ENGRAVINGS

of the Bibliographer and Bibliophile

J. F. BERESIN-SCHIRJAJEW

HAS BEEN

POSTPONED UNTIL THE MONTH OF JANUARY,

AND WILL

BEGIN ON JANUARY 24-11, 1905,

AND BE

ON VIEW ON JANUARY 17, 18, 20, 21, 23 (New Style),

From 11 o'clock A.M. until 3 o'clock P.M., in Kamennoostrowsky Prosp. 10-12, opposite the Aquarium,

St. Petersburg, Russia.

THE JANUARY

INDEPENDENT REVIEW.

Price 2s. 6d. net.

Contents.

NOTES ON CURRENT EVENTS.

The ARMY and the PEOPLE. Major Seely, M.P.

The STRUGGLE in FRANCE. H. W. Massingham.

ONE VIEW of CHRISTIAN FAITH. C. R. Buxton.

FINANCE and the DRINK TRADE. Thomas Shaw, K.C. M.P.

The REAL SLAV TEMPERAMENT. H. M. Consacher.

The PROBLEM of the UNEMPLOYED. C. F. G. Nasterman.

The IDEAS of ANATOLE FRANCE. A'gar Thorold.

The PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION. F. C. Howe.

The STOWAWAY. G. Warre Cornish.

BISHOPS and HISTORIANS. Herbert Paul.

REVIEWS of BOOKS.

T. Fisher Unwin, London.

NOW READY, post free, 4½d.

'THE BUILDER' NEW YEAR'S NUMBER,

JANUARY 7, 1905.

Contents.

Illustrations of Liverpool Cathedral as proposed, drawn by W. Curtis Green; 'The Maker of the Song' (Coloured Print), by J. Staines Babb; Interior, 'The Palace of Art,' by the Editor; Kingston Bridge, drawn by W. Monk; 'Decorations,' 'Peace,' and 'Cartoon of Figure from ditto,' by G. H. Short; Loggia de Lanzi, Florence drawn by A. C. Conrade; Belem Church Tower and Belem Church Interior, by A. C. Conrade; Luton Church Tower and some Old London Heraldry, drawn by R. W. Paul; Scheme for the 'Treatment of King's Cross Station Façade,' by A. C. Conrade; Old London Sites in the Neighbourhood of Whitehall; 'Two Plates (from Drawings in the Grace Collection); Sculpture from the Paris Salon. Also the commencement of a Series of Articles (Student's Column) on 'Typical Structures in Concrete-Steel,' with other interesting matter, both Literary and Artistic.

London: The Publisher of the Builder, Catherine Street, W.C.

THE GEOGRAPHICAL JOURNAL. Price 2s.
Contents.—JANUARY.

The PRESENT PROBLEMS of GEOGRAPHY. By Hugh Robert Mill, D.Sc. LL.D.

GEOGRAPHY and EDUCATION.

The MOUNTAINS of TURKESSTAN. By Ellsworth Huntington. With 6 Illustrations and Sketch Map.

The PHYSICAL HISTORY of the VICTORIA FALLS. By A. J. C. Molyneux, F.O.S. F.R.G.S. With 9 Plates and Plan.

The EIGHTH INTERNATIONAL GEOGRAPHICAL CONGRESS. By Hugh Robert Mill, D.Sc.

MR. R. L. REID'S JOURNEYS in PORTUGUESE EAST AFRICA. With Map.

HYDROGRAPHY of the ANDES. By Dr. J. W. Evans. With 2 Sketch Maps.

HYDROGRAPHY of the NILE. By A. S. W.

The FRENCH CONQUEST of the CANARIES in 1402-6, and the AUTHORITY for the SAME. By C. Raymond Beazley, M.A.

REVIEWS.

OBITUARY: Lord Northbrook, Dr. Emil Schlagintweit

MEETINGS of the ROYAL GEOGRAPHICAL SOCIETY, SESSION 1904-1905.

GEOGRAPHICAL LITERATURE of the MONTH.

NEW MAPS.

MAPS.

SKETCH-MAP SHOWING ELLSWORTH HUNTINGTON'S ROUTES in CENTRAL ASIA.

PLAN of VICTORIA FALLS.

SKETCH-MAPS of the RIVER SYSTEM of the ANDES.

SKETCH-MAP of PARTS of the GORONGOZA and SHERINGOMA TERRITORIES.

Edward Stanford, Long Acre, W.C., London.

JANUARY NUMBER NOW READY.

THE HIBBERT JOURNAL.
A Quarterly Review of Religion, Theology, and Philosophy.

Price 2s. 6d. net; Annual Subscriptions, which may commence with any Number, 10s. post free.

Principal Contents of the JANUARY Number:—

The CREED CRISIS in SCOTLAND. A. Taylor Innes.

The CHURCH CRISIS in SCOTLAND. The Rev. John Watson, D.D.

The CHRIST of DOGMA and of EXPERIENCE. W. A. Pickard-Cambridge, Fellow of Magdalen College, Oxford.

A PLEA for MYSTICISM. The Rev. G. W. Allen, Vicar of St James's, Bradford.

The WARP of the WORLD. Newman Howard.

The UNIVERSE and BEYOND: the Existence of the Hypercosmic. Prof. C. J. Keyser, A.M. Ph.D., Adrain Professor of Mathematics, Columbia University, New York.

MIND and MATTER: a Criticism of Prof. Haeckel. Sir Oliver Lodge, LL.D. D.Sc. F.R.S., Principal of the University of Birmingham.

The NEW SAYINGS of JESUS and the SYNOPSIS PROBLEM. Prof. Kirsopp Lake, University of Leiden.

ON the INNER MEANING of LIBERAL THEOLOGY. The Rev. C. J. Shebbeare, B.A., Rector of Swerford, Oxon.

The JOHANINE PROBLEM. III. Indirect Internal Evidence. B. W. Bacon, D.D., Professor of New Testament Criticism and Exegesis in Yale University.

Discussions and a number of signed Reviews, and also a Bibliography of Recent Literature.

Williams &amp; Norgate, 14, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C.

NOW READY, price 6s. 6d. net.

OLIVER & BOYD'S EDINBURGH ALMANAC for 1905.

The nature of its contents is too well known to need description. All information has been carefully revised, and, as formerly, will be found comprehensive and reliable.

Oliver &amp; Boyd, Edinburgh. Simpkin, Marshall &amp; Co. London.

THE TECHNIQUE of INDEXING. By MARY PETHERBRIDGE, Nat. Sci. Tripos, Indexer of the East India Company's Records, the Drapers' Company's Records, the Warrington Corporation Records, &c. Price 5s. net.—Published by the Secretariat Bureau, 52A, Conduit Street, London, W.

NOW READY, with Illustrations, 2s. 6d. net; by post, 2s. 9d.

X RAYS: their Employment in Cancer and other Diseases.

By RICHARD J. COWEN, L.R.C.S.I. L.R.C.P.I., &amp;c.

London: H. J. Glaisher, 57, Wigmore Street, W.

In 2 vols. crown 8vo, with 2 Portraits, 24s.

JOHN FRANCIS and the 'ATHENÆUM.'
A Literary Chronicle of Half a Century.

By JOHN C. FRANCIS.

Macmillan &amp; Co., Limited, London.

W. C. BENNETT'S POEMS.

The GOLDEN LIBRARY.—Square 16mo, cloth, 2s.

SONGS FOR SAILORS.

Morning Post.—"Spirited, melodious, and vigorously graphic."

Daily News.—"Very spirited."

Pall Mall Gazette.—"Really admirable."

Morning Advertiser.—"Sure of a wide popularity."

John Bull.—"Very successful."

Metropolitan.—"Instinct with patriotic fire."

Illustrated London News.—"Right well done."

News of the World.—"There is real poetry in these songs."

Mirror.—"With admirable felicity he embodies national sentiments and emotions which stir the hearts of the people."

Echo.—"These songs are literally written for sailors, and they are precisely the kind of songs that sailors must enjoy."

Nonconformist.—"These songs bear a true literary mark, and give out the genuine ring."

Leeds Mercury.—"There is no one nowadays who can compete with Dr. Bennett as a popular song-writer. In his volume of sea songs we find the qualities which must secure its success."

Liverpool Mail.—"Dr. Bennett has devoted his lyrical powers to a noble object in this comprehensive yet inexpensive work. This gem deserves to be patronized not only by our entire Royal Navy, but by all our Sailors' Homes and all our Mercantile Marine Associations."

Examiner.—"Full of incident and strongly expressed sentiment, and having a simple, dashing, musical roll and movement that reminds us of some songs that are favourable with all sailors, and the touches of humour he introduces are precisely of the kind that they will relish."

Scotsman.—"Dr. Bennett's heart is thoroughly in his work... All spirited and vigorous. There is a healthy, manly, fresh-air dash about them which ought to make them popular with the class for whose use and pleasure they are designed."

Chatto &amp; Windus, 111, St. Martin's Lane, W.C.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS.

THE CAMBRIDGE MODERN HISTORY.

Planned by the late LORD ACTON.

Edited by Dr. A. W. WARD, Dr. G. W. PROTHERO, and STANLEY LEATHES, M.A.

To be completed in 12 vols. royal 8vo, buckram, gilt top, 16s. net each.

TIMES on Vol. I.—"The opening volume of what promises to be one of the most important books of our time."

DAILY TELEGRAPH.—"This promises to be the standard modern history for long years to come."

READY THIS MONTH.

Vol. III. THE WARS OF RELIGION.

THE FOLLOWING VOLUMES ARE ALREADY PUBLISHED:—

Vol. I. The RENAISSANCE. Third Impression, 16s. net.

Vol. II. The REFORMATION. Second Impression, 16s. net.

Vol. VII. The UNITED STATES. Second Impression, 16s. net.

Vol. VIII. The FRENCH REVOLUTION. 16s. net.

TERMS TO SUBSCRIBERS.—Subscriptions will be received for the Complete Work at £7 10s. net, which may be either paid in advance or by payments of 12s. 6d. net for each Volume on application.

A PROSPECTUS WILL BE SENT ON APPLICATION.

A COMPANION to GREEK STUDIES. Edited for the Syndics of the University Press by LEONARD WHIBLEY, M.A., Fellow of Pembroke College, University Lecturer in Ancient History. Demy 8vo, with Maps and Illustrations. 18s. net. [Immediately.]NICETA of REMESIANA: his Life and Works. By A. E. Burn, D.D., Trinity College, Cambridge, Rector of Handsworth and Prebendary of Lichfield, Examining Chaplain to the Lord Bishop of Lichfield. Crown 8vo, 9s. net. [Immediately.]The SPEECHES of ISAEUS. With Critical and Explanatory Notes. By WILLIAM WYSE, M.A., late Fellow and Lecturer of Trinity College, Cambridge, sometime Professor of Greek in University College, London. Demy 8vo, 18s. net. [Immediately.]EVANGELION DA-MEPHARRESHE: the Curetonian Version of the Four Gospels, with the Readings of the Sinai Palimpsest and the Early Syriac Patristic Evidence. Edited, Collected, and Arranged by F. CRAWFORD BURKITT, M.A., University Lecturer in Palaeography. Crown 4to, 2 vols. 42s. net (Vol. I. Text; Vol. II. Introduction and Notes). [Immediately.]STUDIES in ANGLO-SAXON INSTITUTIONS. By H. Munro CHADWICK, Fellow of Clare College, Cambridge. Crown 8vo, 8s. net. [Immediately.]

CAMBRIDGE ENGLISH CLASSICS.—New Volumes.

A Series of Classical English Writers, based upon a Uniform Plan, and giving faithful Reproductions of the Original Texts.

Prospectus, with Specimen Pages, will be sent on application.

ROGER ASCHAM.—ENGLISH WORKS. Toxophilus; Report of the Affaires and State of Germany; The Scholemaster. The Text Edited by W. ALDIS WRIGHT, M.A., Vice-Master of Trinity College, Cambridge. Large crown 8vo, 4s. 6d. net. [Now ready.]SAMUEL BUTLER.—HUDIBRAS: Written in the Time of the Late Wars. The Text Edited by A. R. WALLER. Large crown 8vo, 4s. 6d. net. [Nearly ready.]

CAMBRIDGE GREEK TESTAMENT FOR SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.—New Volume.

General Editor—F. H. CHASE, D.D., Norrisian Professor of Divinity.

The EPISTLES to the THESSALONIANS. Edited by the Rev. GEORGE G. FINDLAY, D.D., Professor of New Testament Language and Literature at the Wesleyan College, Headingley. With Map, Introduction, and Notes. 3s.

THE CAMBRIDGE BIOLOGICAL SERIES.—New Volume.

General Editor—ARTHUR E. SHIPLEY, M.A. F.R.S., Fellow and Tutor of Christ's College, Cambridge.

TREES: a Handbook of Forest Botany for the Woodlands and the Laboratory. By H. MARSHALL WARD, Sc.D. F.R.S., Fellow of Sidney Sussex College and Honorary Fellow of Christ's College, Cambridge, and Professor of Botany in the University. Vol. II. LEAVES. With Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d. net. (To be completed in Six Volumes.)

THE CAMBRIDGE PHYSICAL SERIES.—New Volumes.

General Editors—F. H. NEVILLE, M.A. F.R.S., and W. C. D. WHETHAM, M.A. F.R.S.

A TREATISE on the THEORY of ALTERNATING CURRENTS. By ALEXANDER RUSSELL, M.A. M.I.E.E., Lecturer in Applied Mathematics, and Superintendent of the Testing Department, Faraday House, London. Vol. I. Demy 8vo, 12s. net.The STUDY of CHEMICAL COMPOSITION. An Account of its Method and Historical Development, with Illustrative Quotations. By IDA FREUND, Staff Lecturer and Associate of Newnham College. Demy 8vo, 18s. net.

London: Cambridge University Press Warehouse, Ave Maria Lane. C. F. CLAY, Manager.

ROUTLEDGE'S NEW UNIVERSAL LIBRARY.

In pott 8vo (6½ by 3¼ in.), the size of "THE WORLD'S CLASSICS," which has proved so attractive to the Public all over the World.

Green cloth extra, full gilt back, gilt lettered, 1s. net.

As already announced the First Two Volumes of this New Series are :—

ON REPRESENTATIVE GOVERNMENT. By John Stuart Mill.

ON LIBERTY. By John Stuart Mill.

EACH WITH AN INDEX, NOW FIRST ADDED.

These will be immediately followed at very short intervals by the following Volumes :—

TOM BROWN'S SCHOOL DAYS. By Thomas Hughes.

TOM BROWN at OXFORD. By the Same.

ON TRANSLATING HOMER. By Matthew Arnold.

With F. W. NEWMAN'S 'HOMERIC TRANSLATION in THEORY and PRACTICE.'

The GOLDEN TREASURY of SONGS and LYRICS.

By F. T. PALGRAVE.

GRIMM'S FAIRY TALES.

ANDERSEN'S FAIRY TALES.

AIDS to REFLECTION. By S. T. Coleridge. Edited by THOMAS FENBY.

UNCLE REMUS. By J. C. Harris.

NIGHTS with UNCLE REMUS. By the Same.

ESSAYS from the EDINBURGH REVIEW. By Francis

JEFFREY. 1. ENGLISH POETS.

MACAULAY'S ESSAYS. Vol. I.

HORAE SUBSECIVAE. By Dr. John Brown. Vol. I.

JOHN HALIFAX, GENTLEMAN. By Mrs. Craik.

DIALOGUES. By Leopardi. Translated by the late

JAMES THOMSON and Edited by BERTRAM DOBELL.

LETTERS and JOURNAL to STELLA. By Dean Swift.

SARTOR RESARTUS. By T. Carlyle.

SHORT STUDIES in GREAT SUBJECTS. By J. A.

FROUDE. Series I.

ESSAYS. By George Brimley.

GUESSES at TRUTH. By A. J. and J. C. Hare.

POEMS. Authorized Selection. By Sir Lewis Morris.

PEACOCK'S NOVELS. In 2 vols. Vol. I.

The CHANNINGS. By Mrs. Henry Wood.

BREAKFAST TABLE SERIES. By O. W. Holmes.

3 vols.

LAOCOON. By Lessing. Translated.

ESSAYS of ELIA. By Charles Lamb.

ESSAYS. By Montaigne. Translated by Florio. 3 vols.

CRANFORD. By Mrs. Gaskell.

The CITIZEN of the WORLD. By Oliver Goldsmith.

ESSAYS. By David Hume.

LIFE of SHAKSPERE. By Victor Hugo. Translated.

ADAM GRAEME. By Mrs. Oliphant.

HEROES and HERO WORSHIP. By T. Carlyle.

The WARDEN. By A. Trollope.

THE MUSES' LIBRARY.

Under the Editorship of A. H. BULLEN. Pott 8vo, blue cloth extra, full gilt back, 1s. net, cloth; lambskin gilt, 2s. net.

KEATS. Introduction by Robert Bridges. Notes by G.

THORN DRURY. 2 vols.

DONNE. Introduction by Prof. Saintsbury. Notes by

E. K. CHAMBERS. 2 vols.

COLERIDGE. Edited by Richard Garnett, C.B. 1 vol.

MARVELL. Poems, 1 vol. Satires, 1 vol. Edited by

G. A. AITKEN.

WALLER. Edited by G. Thorn Drury. 2 vols.

DRUMMOND of HAWTHORNDEN. Edited by W. C.

WARD. 2 vols.

HERRICK. Introduction by A. C. Swinburne. Notes by

A. POLLARD. 2 vols.

GAY. Edited by J. Underhill. 2 vols.

VAUGHAN. Introduction by Canon Beeching. Notes by

E. K. CHAMBERS. 2 vols.

CAREW. Edited by A. Vincent. 1 vol.

BROWNE of TAVISTOCK. Edited by Gordon Goodwin.

2 vols.

IN PREPARATION.

EARLY ITALIAN POETS. By D. G. Rossetti.

POETICAL WORKS of COVENTRY PATMORE. With an Introduction by ALICE MEYNELL.

LEGENDS and LYRICS. By Adelaide Ann Procter.

BLAKE'S POETICAL WORKS. Edited by W. B. Yeats.

THE FIRST THREE VOLUMES ARE NOW READY OF

POETS AND POETRY OF THE NINETEENTH CENTURY.

Edited by A. H. MILES. 12 vols. pott 8vo, red cloth extra, full gilt back, 1s. 6d. net; lambskin gilt, 2s. 6d. net.

A unique and very comprehensive series of specimens of the representative verse of the century, with elaborate and judicious notices of each poet. The Editor has been unusually fortunate in having obtained permission to include in his Work a large number of copyright pieces, the absence of which would have destroyed its representative character, and in having in many instances enjoyed the personal counsel and assistance of the poets.

CRABBE to COLERIDGE (including also Blake, Rogers, Bloomfield, Hogg, Wordsworth, Scott). 576 pages.

SOUTHEY to SHELLEY (including also Tannahill, Landor, Lamb, Campbell, Moore, Elliott, Knowles, Tennant, Hunt, Peacock, Procter, Byron, De Vere, &c.). 612 pages.

KEATS to LYTTON (including also Clare, Talfourd, Carlyle, H. Coleridge, Darley, Motherwell, Hood, Thom, Macaulay, Taylor, Wells, Barnes, Praed, Horne, Beddoes, Whitehead, Hawker, &c.). 656 pages.

The remaining 9 vols. to follow rapidly.

GEORGE ROUTLEDGE & SONS, LIMITED, Broadway House, Ludgate Hill, London.

SWAN SONNENSCHN & CO.

NOW READY.

THE SCHOOLMASTER'S YEAR-BOOK.

THIRD YEAR OF ISSUE. Greatly Enlarged, 1,118 pp. 5s. net.

JUST OUT.

VOL. I. OF

THE PRINCIPLES OF PHYSIOLOGICAL PSYCHOLOGY.

By Prof. W. WUNDT.

A Translation of the Fifth and wholly Re-written (1902-3) German Edition by Prof. E. B. TITCHENER, M.A.

In 3 vols. Vol. I. with 156 Illustrations, demy 8vo, 12s.

A PHILOSOPHICAL INTRODUCTION TO ETHICS.

By W. R. BOYCE GIBSON.

Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. net.

"An admirable book."—Education.
"Mr. Gibson's book ought to be read, weighed and considered by all who are interested in the latest philosophical controversy."—Guardian.

READY IN JANUARY.

THE GROWTH OF THE ENGLISH MANOR.

By Prof. P. VINOGRADOFF.

VOL. II. OF

STUDENT'S TEXT-BOOK OF ZOOLOGY.

By ADAM SEDGWICK, M.A.,

Fellow and Lecturer of Trinity College, Cambridge.

ARITHMETICAL EXAMPLES. WITH ANSWERS.

By I. LOGAN, F.R.G.S., Head Master of Ormond School for Boys, Dublin.

SONNENSCHN'S QUOTATION SERIES.

Small crown 8vo, 7s. 6d. each.

DICTIONARY of QUOTATIONS. English. Third Edition. P. H. DALBIAC.

DICTIONARY of QUOTATIONS. Classical. Second Edition. T. B. HARBOTTLE.

DICTIONARY of QUOTATIONS. French and Italian. Second Edition. HARBOTTLE and DALBIAC.

DICTIONARY of QUOTATIONS. German. Lilian Dalbiac. [In press.]

DICTIONARY of CONTEMPORARY QUOTATIONS. English. H. SWAN.

DICTIONARY of HISTORICAL ALLUSIONS. Second Edition. T. B. HARBOTTLE.

DICTIONARY of BATTLES. T. B. Harbottle.

FAMOUS SAYINGS of GREAT MEN. E. Latham.

DICTIONARY of QUOTATIONS. Spanish. T. B. HARBOTTLE. [In press.]

NEW COOKERY BOOK BY COL. KENNEY HERBERT ("Wyvern").

VEGETARIAN and SIMPLE DIET. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

"Full of good things in the way of vegetarian recipes."—Daily Graphic.
"The book may serve to introduce people to many tasty dishes, which have the merit of giving a wider range of plain but pleasant fare."—Glasgow Herald.

NEW LIGHT ON THE SHAKESPEARE-BACON CONTROVERSY.

The SHAKESPEARE STORY. By George Pitt-Lewis, K.C., ex-M.P., Author of 'Taylor on Evidence,' &c. 1s. 6d. net.

TWO NEW VOLUMES OF THE SOCIAL SCIENCE SERIES.

THE HISTORY OF THE ENGLISH CORN LAWS.

By J. S. NICHOLSON, M.A. D.Sc.

Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

THE PHILOSOPHERS AND THE FRENCH REVOLUTION.

By P. A. WADIA,

Professor of History and Political Economy, Gujarat College, Ahmedabad.

Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

CONTEMPORARY PSYCHOLOGY.

By Prof. GUIDO VILLA.

Forming the New Volume of "Library of Philosophy." Large 8vo. 10s. 6d. net.

"Students of philosophy will welcome the appearance of Prof. Villa's treatise. The book takes a broad general survey of the new psychology, which it furthers not so much by any fresh contributions of its own as by giving a comprehensive view of the doctrines of its founders and of the processes of evolution in the history of ideas by which they have arrived at them. A book well worthy of its place in the valuable series it now enriches." Scotsman.

PSYCHOLOGY NORMAL AND MORBID.

By CHARLES A. MERCIER, M.B. M.R.C.P. F.R.C.S.

Crown 8vo, 15s.

LECTURES ON HUMAN AND ANIMAL PSYCHOLOGY.

By Prof. W. WUNDT.

Translated by Professors J. E. CREIGHTON and E. B. TITCHENER.

Third and cheaper Edition. Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

ARISTOTLE'S PSYCHOLOGY.

A Treatise on the Principle of Life (De Anima Parva Naturalia).

Translated by W. A. HAMMOND, M.A. Ph.D., Assistant Professor in Cornell University. Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

OUTLINES OF PSYCHOLOGY.

By Prof. OSWALD KULPE.

Translated by Prof. E. B. TITCHENER. Second Edition. 10s. 6d.

NINTH EDITION, ENTIRELY REWRITTEN.

SCHOOL HYGIENE.

By A. NEWSHOLME, M.D. F.R.C.P., and W. C. C. PAKES, D.P.H.

With a Chapter on 'Eyesight,' by JAMES KERR, M.D. 311 pages, with 13 Illustrations, 3s.

AN INTRODUCTION TO THE REPUBLIC OF PLATO.

By WILLIAM BOYD, M.A. B.Sc.

Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. net.

MACMILLAN &amp; CO.'S

LIST.

VOL. II. NOW READY.

DIARY & LETTERS
OF MADAME D'ARBLAY

(1778-1840). As Edited by her Niece, CHARLOTTE BARRETT. With Preface and Notes by AUSTIN DOBSON. With Photogravure Portraits and other Sketches. In 6 vols. Vol. I., 1778 to June, 1781. Vol. II., 1781-86. 8vo, 10s. 6d. net each.

TIMES.—"We have nothing but the warmest welcome to offer to Mr. Austin Dobson's admirable edition."

MEMORIALS OF
EDWARD BURNE-JONES.

By G. B. J. With 41 Photogravures and other Illustrations. In 2 vols. 8vo, printed on Hand-made Paper, 30s. net.

FIFTY YEARS OF FLEET STREET.

Being the Life and Recollections of Sir JOHN R. ROBINSON. Compiled and Edited by FREDERICK MOY THOMAS. With Portrait. 8vo, 14s. net.

With Photogravure Portraits, 8vo, 8s. 6d. net.

SIR WILLIAM HENRY FLOWER,

K.C.B. F.R.S. LL.D. D.C.L., late Director of the Natural History Museum, and President of the Royal Zoological Society. A Personal Memoir. By CHARLES J. CORNISH, M.A. F.Z.S.

PALL MALL GAZETTE.—"The late President of the Zoological Society was a man of so many interests that his biography should be welcome everywhere.....The portraits are a capital addition."

SPECTATOR.—"Flower's youngest son has contributed two chapters on his father's early life, and his widow some personal details of his last years.....An address which Sir William gave at the Church Congress at Reading admirably expounds the bearings of science on religion and the reasons for modifying some of our theology.....The Sunday opening of museums, which Flower always urged, became an accomplished fact, and the long-fought question was silently settled by a resolution of the House of Commons in 1896."

ACADEMY.—"Verily a life worth living, and worthy of remembrance."

NEW VOLUME OF ESSAYS BY HENRY SIDGWICK.

MISCELLANEOUS ESSAYS AND ADDRESSES. 8vo, 10s. net.

SHAKESPEAREAN TRAGEDY.

Lectures on HAMLET, OTHELLO, KING LEAR, and MACBETH. By A. C. BRADLEY, LL.D. Litt.D., Professor of Poetry in the University of Oxford. 8vo, 10s. net.

Mr. G. K. CHESTERTON in the DAILY NEWS.—"Prof. Bradley realizes to the full the depth and the delicacy and the darkness of his subject; and, realizing this, he contrives to say some very admirable things about it."

NEW WORK BY SAMUEL DILL, M.A.
ROMAN SOCIETY FROM NERO TO MARCUS AURELIUS.

8vo, 15s. net.

GOLDEN TREASURY SERIES.—New Vols.

Pott 8vo, 2s. 6d. net; limp leather, gilt back and gilt edges, 3s. 6d. net.

LONDON LYRICS.

By FREDERICK LOCKER LAMPSON. With Introduction and Notes by AUSTIN DOBSON, and a Portrait.

POEMS OF CHRISTINA ROSSETTI.

Chosen and Edited by WILLIAM M. ROSSETTI. With Portrait.

NEW EDITION NOW READY.

THEORETICAL CHEMISTRY from the STANDPOINT of AVOGADRO'S RULE and THERMODYNAMICS.

By Prof. WALTER NERNST, Ph.D., of the University of Göttingen. Revised in accordance with the Fourth German Edition. 8vo, gilt top, 15s. net.

VOLUME V. NOW READY.

HISTORY of the UNITED STATES from the COMPROMISE of 1850.

By JAMES FORD RHODES, LL.D. Litt.D.
Vol. V., 1864-1868. With Maps. 8vo, gilt top, 12s.
Previously published:—Vols. I.-IV., 12s. each.

MACMILLAN & CO., LIMITED, London.

HURST & BLACKETT'S
JANUARY LIST.

NEW AND IMPORTANT WORK.

In 2 vols. royal 8vo, containing numerous Illustrations in Colour, Photogravure, and Half-Tone, several Maps, &c., price 2l. 2s. net.

LHASA,
THE TIBET EXPEDITION,
1903-4.

By PERCEVAL LONDON,
Special Correspondent of the Times.
[In January.]

ANTARCTICA: Two Years amongst
the Ice of the South Pole. By Dr. OTTO
NORDENSKJÖLD. Illustrated by reproductions of over 200 Photographs specially taken for this Work. 1 vol. demy 8vo, price 18s. net.
[In January.]

TWENTY YEARS AGO. (Reminis- cences.) By EDMUND DOWNEY, Author of
'Through Green Glasses.' 1 vol. large crown
8vo, with numerous Portraits, price 6s. net.
[In January.]

The CHILD SLAVES of BRITAIN.
By ROBERT SHERARD, Author of 'The
White Slaves of England,' &c. 1 vol. large crown 8vo, illustrated, price 6s. net.
[In January.]

IN REMOTEST BAROTSELAND.
From the Victoria Falls to the Source of the Zambesi. By Col. COLIN HARDING, C.M.G., Acting Administrator for Barotseland. With over 50 Illustrations reproduced from Photographs taken on the Journey. 1 vol. demy
8vo, price 12s. 6d. net. [In January.]

NEW AND POPULAR
NOVELS.

The MARRYING of SARAH GAR-
LAND. By Mrs. FINNEMORE, Author of
'Tally,' &c. In 1 vol. crown 8vo, price 6s.

The MARRIAGE YOKE. By
ARABELLA KENEALY, Author of Dr.
Janet of Harley Street, 'Charming Renée,'
&c. In 1 vol. crown 8vo, price 6s.

The MAN at ODDS. By Ernest
RHYS, Author of 'Welsh Ballads,' 'The
Whistling Maid.' In 1 vol. crown 8vo, price 6s.

AFTER ALL. By Beatrice Whitby,
Author of 'The Awakening of Mary Fenwick,'
&c. In 1 vol. price 3s. 6d.

A VOICE from the VOID. By Helen
BODDINGTON, Author of 'The Awakening.'
In 1 vol. price 6s.

THAT LITTLE MARQUIS of
BRANDENBURG. By W. R. H. TROW-
BRIDGE, Author of 'An Inarticulate Genius,'
&c. In 1 vol. crown 8vo, price 6s.

AT the BACK of the WORLD. By
L. T. MEADE, Author of 'Rosebury,' 'The Witch Maid,' &c. In 1 vol. crown 8vo, price 6s.

The MASTER HOPE. By Phyllis
BOTTOME, Author of 'Life the Interpreter,' &c. In 1 vol. price 6s.

TWO LOVES. By Curtis Yorke and
E. M. DAVY. In 1 vol. price 6s.

London: HURST & BLACKETT, LIMITED.

MAJOR WEIR.

By K. L. MONTGOMERY,
Author of 'The Cardinal's Pawn.'

Illustrated. 6s.

"It is a powerful book; it is a witty book; it is rich in style, full of humour, full of hair-breadth escapes, pulsing with blood and life."—Academy.

CARTOONS IN RHYME AND LINE.

Verses by Sir WILFRID LAWSON, M.P.

50 Original Drawings

By F. CARRUTHERS GOULD.

Fcap. 4to, 4s. 6d. net.

A Second Large Impression of this brilliant Political Satire is in preparation.

MAJOR WEIR.

By K. L. MONTGOMERY,
Author of 'The Cardinal's Pawn.' 6s.

"Indeed, we do not remember to have read a novel in which fertility of invention was better wedded with vigour of narrative."—Times.

THE YOUTH OF
WASHINGTON.

By S. WEIR MITCHELL,
Author of 'Hugh Wynne.' 6s.

The story of the great leader's life up to his twenty-seventh year told in the form of an autobiography.

MAJOR WEIR.

By the Author of 'The Cardinal's Pawn.' 6s.

"I do not know when I read a story that held me so breathless from start to finish."—Truth.

A SONG OF A SINGLE NOTE.

A Novel.

By AMELIA E. BARR,
Author of 'Prisoners of Conscience.'

"Red Cloth Library." 6s.

MAJOR WEIR.

By K. L. MONTGOMERY. 6s.

The Athenæum, Spectator, Literary World, Daily Chronicle, Pall Mall Gazette, Scotsman, and practically the whole press unite in testifying to the remarkable interest and high literary quality of 'Major Weir.'

T. FISHER UNWIN, Paternoster Square.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 7, 1905.

CONTENTS.

|   | PAGE  |
|---|-------|
| JAMES I. AND VI. ....   | 7     |
| THE DIARY OF HENRY GREVILLE ....  | 8     |
| THE EVOLUTION OF JAPAN ....   | 8     |
| A CHRONICLE OF HENRY VIII. ....   | 9     |
| THE HISTORY OF DAGENHAM ....  | 10    |
| NEW NOVELS (In Dewisland; The Common Lot; Sir Roger's Heir; Duchess of Few Clothes; The House of Fulfilment) ....   | 11    |
| RECENT VERSE ....   | 12    |
| CHINESE BOOKS ....  | 12    |
| OUR LIBRARY TABLE (Colonial Memories; England and the English; Democracy and Reaction; Some English Gardens; The Story of Assisi; Irish Memories; Mrs. Pritchard's School; Rossetti's Poems; Vagabond Songs and Ballads; Patriarchs of the Coptic Church; The Hibbert Journal) .... | 14-16 |
| LIST OF NEW BOOKS ....  | 16    |
| MR. JOHN HENRY LOCK; THE VICEROY'S POSTBAG; HISTORY AND THE SCIENCE OF ARCHIVES; THE BOOK SALES OF 1904; THE REV. R. LOVETT; THE BRITISH MUSEUM READING-ROOM; THE SOURCES OF ALCUIN'S LITURGICAL LIBELLUS ....  | 16-20 |
| LITERARY GOSSIP ....  | 21    |
| SCIENCE—MARSHALL WARD ON LEAVES; HUXLEY'S PHYSIOGRAPHY; NATURAL HISTORY ESSAYS; GEOGRAPHICAL BOOKS; SALT-WATER FISHING; SOCIETIES; MEETINGS NEXT WEEK; GOSSIP ....  | 22-24 |
| FINE ARTS—MEMORIALS OF BURNE-JONES; THREE LANDSCAPE EXHIBITIONS; GOSSIP ....  | 24-26 |
| MUSIC—SONGS; PIANOFORTE MUSIC; GOSSIP; PERFORMANCES NEXT WEEK ....  | 27-28 |
| DRAMA—GOSSIP ....   | 28    |

LITERATURE

James I. and VI. By T. F. Henderson.
(Goupil & Co.)

MR. HENDERSON'S 'James I. and VI.' is, as a collection of portraits, rather unfortunate. Either there were no pretty women in the king's reign, or the painters (as is more probable) could not paint a pretty woman. Anne of Denmark was beautiful, but her portrait was not executed in her youth. The other ladies may have had charms, but they lacked a Vandyck, a Romney, a Gainsborough, or a Reynolds. Of James himself we take the miniature from the Duke of Buccleuch's collection (p. 134) to be the best likeness. None of his portraits known to us justifies the famous description which Scott made current in 'The Fortunes of Nigel.'

Mr. Henderson brings forward no inedited material, and, as is usual in the volumes of this series, he does not give references to chapter and verse in his authorities. His work may be called austere, and is a political biography. A mass of anecdotes about James, highly characteristic, may be found in contemporary dispatches and other good sources, but are generally omitted here. Mr. Henderson has probably read the remarkable account which an Edinburgh bookseller gives of his interview with the monarch. If the king was inspired (as the bishops are said to have alleged), then, as Sir John Harington remarked on another occasion, "the spirit was rather foul-mouthed." The letters of English residents in Scotland contain anecdotes, now grotesque, and again, concerning James's much bullied youth, melancholy and touching. These things are as germane to the king's biography as speculations on the designs of Morton or Lennox. Mr. Henderson has a tenderness for Morton. His hypocrisy—in talk with Throckmorton, for example—was loathsome, unless he was merely imitating the good Regent Moray, for pastime. Mr.

Henderson tries to show that, if Morton squeezed money out of Kirk and people, it was for the use of the State. But the State did not need his building of "a new and magnificent palace" for himself at Dalkeith; and that he managed to secrete, before his death, a great treasure, appears to be a well-authenticated fact. Mr. Henderson questions the statement that "under Morton the Kirk was being reduced to the same condition as the Church before the Reformation." The author quoted goes on, "Ignorance, profligacy, secular robbery under a thin disguise of ecclesiastical revenues, were all returning." This is undeniable. To Morton's influence one Douglas (a murderer) owed a bishopric, another Douglas (a murderer) owed the parsonship of Glasgow, a third Douglas owed the Tulchan Primacy of Scotland, and it was by pensions from bishops that Morton supported his bastards. As far as we are aware, nobody is now "haunted by the notion of a murder band" (for Darnley's killing) "signed by Morton." What Morton signed was the vaguer "band" of October, 1566. If Ormeston asserted that Bothwell kept a murder band "in a green box," the evidence that he made the statement has escaped us. It is not in the confession of the Black Laird of Ormeston: "He let me see a contract subscribed by four or five handwritings, which he affirmed to be the subscriptions of Huntly, Argyll, Maitland, and Sir James Balfour." Hepburn of Bowton, in the evidence suppressed by Moray, speaks of two silver coffers, out of one of which Bothwell took a "band," signed by himself, Huntly, Argyll, "and the Secretary's subscription far beneath the rest." This was to make room for signatures of men of higher rank, including Morton's, no doubt, if it could be got. But it could not be got, nor that of Balfour, probably. Bowton added (December 8th, 1567) that, as Bothwell told him, Morton and Balfour were to send two representatives to Darnley's murder. Archibald Douglas, Morton's cousin, went, with his retainer Binning. Morton confessed that Archie went, Binning confessed that he and his master went, but Morton denied that he commanded Archie to go. If that be true, Bothwell deceived Bowton. Morton was as morally guilty as any man except the actual murderers and procurers of the murder could be.

Lenient to Morton, Mr. Henderson declines to accept the short-lived conversion of the Master of Gray to honesty. During his grief for the death of Sir Philip Sidney, whatever the causes may have been, Gray, contrary to what historians tell us, did act as a loyal "Scottisman" when in London on the embassy to plead for Mary's life. That is proved not only by the report of his fellow-representatives to James, but also by Logan of Restalrig, who was betraying his cousin the Master to Walsingham. Leicester therefore tried to ruin Gray, who, finding honesty not the best policy, returned to his wallowing in the mire. For a month or two the Master was not so black as he has always been painted; besides, it was his interest to save Mary's life. His villainy had brought him to a sad pass. "Would to God I could get again bygones!" he wrote. It may be "romantic," but it is true.

It would have been more convenient for his readers if Mr. Henderson had introduced the new characters in each case by a brief account of them. The Master of Gray, Bothwell, and John Colville all leap on the stage unexpected, unheralded, and unexplained. Anne of Denmark, the queen, is left a shadow, yet in a biography of a man his wife is not an unimportant figure. The "Charter of the Kirk" of 1592 is too faintly sketched; on the other hand, the threads of the Bothwell adventures, and of Elizabeth's complicities and betrayals, is held in a firm grasp, and well unravelled. As to the Gowrie affair, Mr. Henderson clings to his old theory ('Dictionary of National Biography,' under 'John Ruthven, Earl of Gowrie') that a sudden quarrel or misunderstanding between James and the Master is the most probable hypothesis. But that theory does not explain why the Master of Ruthven left Perth for Falkland at four in the morning, and why James rode back with him to Perth, after a "long and sore chase," without waiting for luncheon. These strange proceedings indicate design, on one side or the other. Again, Mr. Henderson's view involves the perjury of Lennox, who was akin by affinity to the Ruthvens. Other witnesses, even Ramsay, would not swear to essential facts of which they had no knowledge. Mr. Henderson's theory also implies that James was a very prompt liar, for he told his tale of the armed man in the turret, inconsistent with the Ruthvens' innocence, before he slept that night. Again, the theory does not explain why Henderson, who later confessed to being the armed man in the turret, fled on the night after the events, though he was not implicated in them in any degree, unless he was the turret man. It is perfectly well understood how Henderson might leave the turret without meeting Sir Thomas Erskine as he went up the stairs thither. Yet Mr. Henderson pronounces it "impossible" that they should not have met. Not very consistently, Mr. Henderson accepts the "Bye" or "Surprising Plot," though it "reads like a mere tale out of the 'Arabian Nights.'" So does the Gowrie plot, which is not accepted. A lad like Gowrie, with the Kirk and its party behind him (the Rev. Robert Bruce had just brought Gowrie home), might brew a romantic plot as readily as Watson did in the case of the "Bye."

The authenticity of Sprot's alleged original for Logan's letter to Gowrie is a mere literary impression, to be accepted or not, according to the taste and fancy of the critic. Mr. Henderson's taste is adverse to the genuineness of the supposed original.

In narrating James's dealings with the Kirk and the Puritans, Mr. Henderson shows that he understands the situation. James spoke indecently, and succeeded by pottifogging and arbitrary measures. But these people were impossible, and were enemies of human liberty. Nothing short of ecclesiastical and political despotism for themselves would content them. Yet the grotesque brutality of James, acting as his own Pope, is disgusting. He was not a gentleman. An angel could not, however, have prevented the inevitable war, or saved Charles I. and England from the civil strife. Conceive a king for whom contending factions trained up pretty young men as favourites, personal and political! Personally, James is merely disgusting, despite his intelligence, which is not unduly appreciated. Had James possessed the spirit of several of his ancestors and descendants, it would have been unspeakably worse for England and Scotland, but history would have lost a very ugly figure. We do not know on what evidence Mr. Henderson asserts that James had no scruple in encouraging the wild scheme of Essex, in February, 1601, for the "capture of Elizabeth." It would only have been "tit for tat"; but how is the fact proved?

The book might have been made more interesting, but it is lucid, well informed, and well balanced and proportioned.

Leaves from the Diary of Henry Greville.
Edited by the Countess of Strafford.
Third Series. (Smith, Elder & Co.)

COMPARED with the journal of his brother Charles, Henry Greville's diary is as lemonade to October ale. The two frequented much the same society, but their attitude towards it differed completely. Charles was perpetually questioning motives and endeavouring to discover the inner workings of politics, whereas Henry overflowed with amiability, and placidly accepted his daily paper as the supreme expression of statesmanship. The latter was the more engaging character, but his brother was by far the more readable chronicler. A good deal of Henry Greville's diary might, indeed, have been omitted by Lady Strafford, since it merely summarizes events which are within the general knowledge, or records opinions more obvious than profound. The residuum, however, is of some interest, for though the writer's own reflections seldom rose above the commonplace, he was certainly fortunate in his correspondents.

Henry Greville moved much among musicians and actors. Grisi and Mario sang at his house; he knew Ristori, and he was an intimate friend of Fanny and Adelaide Kemble, afterwards Mrs. Butler and Mrs. Edward Sartoris. Fanny Kemble's letters to him from America contain many amusing passages. Thus she pokes fun at the summer society at Nahant, near Boston:—

"How you would open your eyes and stop your ears if you were here! This enormous house is filled with American women, one prettier than the other, who look like fairies, dress like duchesses or femmes entretenues, behave like housemaids, and scream like peacocks."

She writes in a different spirit in 1859, being unable to foresee any other issue than civil war to the differences between the North and the South:—

"They seem to me to want some great national trial or trouble. Their material prosperity has turned the head of the whole people. The Government is despicable and despised, public and private morality at a miserable ebb, and the whole country presenting the portentous aspect of the most rapid superficial progress, and retrogression in all that makes the true glory and safety of a people."

A correspondent of Henry Greville's who took a more active part in events than Fanny Kemble was Lady Canning. Her courage never quailed, even when Lucknow remained unrelieved. After the march of Havelock and Outram she wrote:—

"I never in my life was so delighted as to know we had no longer that horrid siege weighing on us, and still more that Lucknow was safe, and we had no longer to dread a repetition of the horrors of Cawnpore. The relief of Lucknow seemed at the time hardly possible without a miracle, and certainly it has been most providentially timed, for mines were actually found stretching far under, and quite ready to be loaded and blow up all these poor victims, or else to threaten to annihilate their defences. The force was so small that it could only have been employed for such a desperate service, and it did its work nobly; but it is not sufficient to occupy and take the town, and keep open the road; and the poor garrison cannot get away from that Residency until more troops arrive, and they are going towards them fast. Generals Havelock and Outram had never, I think, 4,000 men of all arms, and they lost a good many."

The Indian Mutiny and the War of Italian Liberation were the chief crises during the period covered by this instalment of Henry Greville's diary. He was well informed, as to the second of these two upheavals, about proceedings in Paris while the Emperor Napoleon was pursuing his enigmatic policy of menace combined with cajolery, and Lady Holland sent him vivacious accounts of the shifting scenes at Naples. When hostilities had begun, he noted that "no one can make out the strategy of the Austrians; at Paris they say: 'Il valait peu la peine d'entrer en Piémont pour y laisser seulement une carte de visite.' Paris is ringing with calembours on the present state of affairs—the last is not bad:—

Randan Plon Plon Vaillant,
Rendons Plon Plon Vaillant

(on the names of the French generals)."

It is curious how completely the meeting between the Emperors Napoleon III. and Francis Joseph took the world by surprise. A few weeks before it occurred Count Kilmansegge had predicted to Henry Greville that the war would be of long duration, as neither party could abide by a defeat, while he considered that Germany would not suffer the expulsion of Austria from any of the territories secured to her by the treaties of 1815.

Some there were who found Macaulay's conversation overpowering, but not so Henry Greville. Thus, in 1859, he reflected:—

"Another great social and literary luminary extinguished. He was associated with my pleasantest days at Holland House, where I constantly met him at dinner, and was astonished and delighted by his wonderful knowledge and eloquence, and delighted by his good humour and courtesy. This latter quality was shown by the way he had of putting one on an equality with him, as it were, by assuming that one was familiar with the extraordinary variety of facts which he imparted, instead of parading his wonderful superiority in this respect to any one living."

This is a fair sample of the pleasant, but not very penetrating notices of the deaths of friends with which the volume abounds. Greville was also much interested in criminal trials, and we receive echoes of the bullion robbery on the South-Eastern Railway, the case of Constance Kent, and similar occurrences, which are not without their value as records of current impressions. We seem, in short, to be listening to the club and drawing-room talk of the late fifties and early sixties in a blameless and fairly entertaining form.

Dai Nippon, the Britain of the East: a Study in National Evolution. By Henry Dyer, formerly Principal and Professor of Engineering in the Imperial College of Engineering of Tokyo. (Blackie & Son.)

FOR ten years, at a most interesting epoch of modern Japanese history (1872-82), Mr. Dyer was Principal of the Imperial Engineering College, Tokyo, one of the best institutions of the kind the world has known, admirably staffed—among the professors were men who have since attained such high distinction in science as Profs. Ayrton, Perry, and Divers—and inaugurating and maintaining courses of instruction, theoretical and practical, that have largely aided in the making of the industrial Japan of to-day. He has therefore approached his subject with early personal knowledge of it; but with the history of the last two decades his acquaintance appears to have been only of an indirect character. The seventies in Japan were experimental years, and it was not until the eighties were well advanced that the lines of progress, in the Western sense of the term, were assured. Of the course of events during the Meiji period Mr. Dyer gives a succinct and sufficient account, introduced by a summary of the history of what he calls "feudal" Japan, the whole based upon Capt. Brinkley's great work, and coloured by the idiosyncrasies of that able and enthusiastic defender of all things Japanese. We shall here only remark that the clan system was not feudalism; though it displayed some of the features of feudalism, it lacked the more essential characteristics, political and social, of that form of society, to which it approximated most closely under the Tokugawa dynasty, under conditions, however, that made the approximation virtually ineffective. It seems to us impossible for any one who has studied Japanese history in the native texts to come to any other conclusion. Nor can we admit that Mr. Dyer reads modern history more correctly when, in reference to the Japan of our day, he writes:—

"The fact that the impulse came from within accounts in great part for the rapid progress which Japan has made in Western methods."

To the present writer the contrary appears to have been the case. Of ancient Japan scarcely anything has come down to us. In the middle centuries of the first millennium of the Christian era the impulse from China arrested her language and her religion, gave her a literature and a vocabulary, and revolutionized not only the form of her polity, but also largely its substance, for it converted the tribal chief into a Chinese emperor appointed by Heaven for the good of the people, yet retaining, what became a shadow, but an enduring one, something of the autocracy of the chief. In the latter half of the nineteenth century the same phenomenon is repeated, and in the twentieth we still see the descendant of the sun goddess at once an object of worship and the head of a State acutely described by Mr. Dyer as made up of autocratic, oligarchic, and constitutional elements.

The truth is that it is almost impossible for any European writer to draw a true picture of Japan, past or present. The complications of the written language are such that they can only be mastered in youth, and thus the whole written record and thought of the country is as a sealed book to all but some half-dozen foreigners, who, in their turn, are rather scholars than publicists. Excellent as the present volume is—among the most lucid and fruitful that have appeared of recent years upon Japan—it is, of necessity, uncritical—accepts the Japanese estimate of themselves and the estimates of their perfervid admirers almost without examination, and attributes to the Japanese as special qualities many which other peoples show in at least an equal degree, and others which could easily be shown to be the direct and necessary outcome of history. To the ordinary Japanese the Government is still o kami—something august and divine; to the man of the West any form of government is a disagreeable necessity—in America the expression “scab” has been employed. So far the Japanese is Asiatic, but no further. Like the Celestial he differs from all other Asiatics by his want of religiousness.

The unity of China was effected too early in history for due consolidation of such an immense territory to be possible. The compactness of Japan, helped by the sharp lessons afforded by the civil struggles of centuries, gave her a receptivity which was lacking to the Middle Kingdom, round which external isolation and internal peace threw the obstructive coils of a purely administrative philosophy. There is, nevertheless, a gulf between the West and the Far East that is not likely to be bridged over. That gulf does not yawn in the domain of intellect, but in that of emotion. It is certain that upon the Far-Eastern mind the sublime, the pathetic, and the beautiful of the literature and art of the West make no impression whatever. East of Singapore the mental tract is an arid waste so far as the imagination is concerned, and fancy is there replaced by grotesquerie. Tennyson's scornful reference to “a cycle of Cathay” still holds good within the limits set by the poet. Even Buddhism, prevalent as it is, is misunderstood—more misunderstood in Japan than in China—and its lofty ideals are reduced to practical conveniences.

In the body of his work, the pages of which bristle with statistics, Mr. Dyer gives a full account of administrative and commercial Japan which deserves close attention at the present juncture, when the resources of the country are being narrowly scanned by friends and foes. On the whole, the industrial outlook is good, but scarcely splendid. We see no prospect of any serious rivalry with the West in the greater industries. The cultivation of tea and silk cannot be much extended, and they form Japan's only considerable exports. Some candid expressions are quoted from a book by Mr. T. Nakahashi:—

“Japan must work out her own greatness if necessary.....in spite of her allies. Friendship is one thing, self-aggrandizement another. Even at the risk of peace [war?] her colonization policy must be carried out on the plan she thinks best.”

And so forth. If other peoples do not accept this policy of “aggrandizement” so much the worse for them. These are “prave 'orts.” If they mean anything, they mean that Japan will insist upon pouring her surplus folk upon any shores that may lie handy, Korean, Manchurian, even Australian. However, they are words only. The strength of Japan is her insularity. It is also her weakness, for it exposes her to naval compulsion, a form of coercion from which Russia is almost safe. In a certain measure it may be right to call Japan the Britain of the Far East. But her geographical environments forbid more than a very limited employment of the analogy. Mr. Dyer very properly dismisses all idea of the so-called “yellow peril,” not, indeed, as impossible, but as wholly improbable.

His latter chapters, entitled ‘Social Results’ and ‘The Future,’ suggest a few observations. What travellers most admire in Japan is precisely what steam and iron must greatly modify, if not destroy. Eclecticism is not a policy, it is a mode of transition to a policy. What will Japan's policy be when the sacro-sanctitude of the Emperor is weakened, and the band of elder statesmen and their traditions shall have disappeared? It is not easy to say. Mr. Yokoi acutely observes: “How these two principles, the divine right of the sovereign and the divine right of the people,.....are to be harmonized is the problem.” The words are strikingly suggestive of a parallel with Russia. Our view is that it may not arise so long as a very limited oligarchy is assured to Japan by the confused system of scripts, which effectually bar not only the real education of the people, but also international intercourse. Mr. Dyer sees in bushido a conservative and ethical influence which we believe to be exaggerated. Bushido is merely an extravagant praise of the past; samurai-dom, as those who saw it in actual operation well know, was a gross and ruthless caste tyranny, which maintained by suicide and vendetta a code of honour altogether inferior ethically to the codes of the West. Mr. Dyer sees in Japanese morality nothing worse than what is only too visible in other countries. But does he forget I-é, the “gankiro,” the “screw-alleys,” and the abominable Yoshiwaras, concentrations of gilt and painted filth and slavery unparalleled in history? On the other hand, the peculiar hypocrisy of the West is not met with in Japan—or, indeed, anywhere out of Protestant countries, of which it is an undesirable, though frank, almost obtrusive by-product.

The Triumphant Reign of King Henry the VIII. By Edward Hall. “The Lives of the Kings” Series. Edited by Charles Whibley. (Jack.)

ADMIRABLE alike in print, paper, format, style, and introduction, this opening book in “The Lives of the Kings” series takes a worthy place beside the well-known “Tudor Translations” which Mr. Henley edited, and in which Mr. Charles Whibley had a considerable hand. This series is designed to include various histories of the sovereigns of England by Tudor and Stuart writers. It will, as at present arranged, consist of nine histories, the last of which will be Holinshed's ‘Chronicles.’ The general editor is the editor of the opening volume, and no one is better qualified than he to select and introduce these half-forgotten books. Hall's work is supposed to have been first published in 1542 by Berthelot; but Mr. Whibley remarks that it is doubtful if this “ever saw the light.” An edition by Richard Grafton appeared in 1548, and another in 1550. Under Mary the book was burnt in 1555, but naturally all the copies were not destroyed. Mary's reason for burning it was probably Hall's Protestant sympathy, for she could not object to his attitude towards the queen, her mother, and the divorce. Hall did not allow himself to comment on high matters of State. His was a servile spirit, and he preached submission to the royal authority. He undertook not the defence of the king, for in his eyes the king needed no defence, but a simple narration of the wondrous of his intellect and the marvels of his majesty. It is no use peering into Hall for an opinion on political matters. He simply ignores them when he chooses, and proceeds instead to a sumptuous description of, say, the Field of the Cloth of Gold. Nor had he the reasoned philosophy of such a thinker as Hobbes for his devotion to royalty. He accepted it as a dog accepts his master, with the same simplicity of mind, with the same meekness and lack of interrogation. To him the reign of Henry VIII. was “triumphant,” and the king was “the indubitate flower and very heire of both” Lancaster and York. And thus Mr. Whibley is right in saying that the book is more important than the man. Yet the book is not too important, except as an illumination and illustration of contemporary events seen by living eyes. It is, in fact, not a history, but a mere chronicle, and it has its value as such. When Anne Boleyn was brought to the Tower, and subsequently to the block, Hall has no comment to adventure; he simply narrates, and it would be impossible for any one only reading him to understand why she suffered death. Similarly, he records of the aged Lady Salisbury, whose execution was one of the most iniquitous acts of Henry's career, that

“on the same daie was Margaret, Countesse of Salisbury, which had been long prisoner in the Tower, beheaded in the Tower, and she was the last of the right lyne and name, of Plantagenet.”

Everything material was thus omitted. When he gave his judgment rein, his effort was not what might be called satisfying. He says of More:—

“I cannot tell whether I shoulde call him a foolish wyseman, or a wise foolishman, for undoubtedly he, beside his learning, had a great witte, but it was so myngled with taunting and mockyng, that it seemed to them that best knew him, that he thought nothing to be wel spoken except he had ministred some mocke in the communicacion.”

This adds to one's notion of More's personality, beyond question, as might the observation of a child; but it is fatuous as an attempt to sum up More's character. Hall's essay in respect of Wolsey, whom he hated, is also worth noting:—

"This Cardinall as you may perceyve in this story was of a great stomacke, for he compted himselfe equall with princes, and by craftye suggestion gatte into his handes innumerable treasure: He forced litle on symony and was not pityful and stode affectionate in his owne opinion: In open presence he wold lye and say untrueth and was double both in speche and meanyng: He wold promise muche and performe litle: He was vicious of his body and gave the clergie evyl example: He hated sore the cite of London and feared it: It was told him that he shuld dye in the way toward London.....the authoritie of this Cardinal set the clergie in such a pride that they dysdayned al men, wherfore when he was fallen thei folowed after as you shall heare. To wryte the lyfe and doynges of thys Cardinal, it were a great worke, but whatsoever he did, God forgeve his soul hys bodys misdedes."

This, again, is hardly adequate. As for Hall's style, Mr. Whibley makes the just remark that when he records contemporary events it is masculine and vigorous. Roger Ascham brought against it the accusation that it was "indenture Englishe" and full of "ink-horne tearmes." This is true, as Mr. Whibley points out, of some of his work, but not of his 'Henry VIII.' He had a sense of the picturesque and a love of colour, and is at his best in describing the pageants his master loved. He proves himself, in the editor's words, "a student of society rather than of politics." It was safer to be a student of society in those days; and though Hall by his death escaped the vengeance of Mary, his book did not. But in despite of her, we are able to enjoy it in this handsome form.

The History of Dagenham. By J. P. Shawcross. (Skeffington & Son.)

MR. SHAWCROSS has produced a good topographical book of about 350 pages on the parish of Dagenham. This parish lies at the south-east extremity of Essex, and consists of a long low-lying strip of land about  $7\frac{1}{2}$  miles long by  $1\frac{1}{2}$  broad, stretching from the Thames on the south to Hainault Forest on the north. This book will before long have a special value, for

"in a few years Dagenham will lose its rural individuality, and be drawn into the relentless vortex of Greater London, and the fields, lanes, woodlands, and green swards will disappear, never to return."

It is this certainty of the ultimate disappearance of the rural aspect of this district, already much encroached upon, that gives a particular interest to various manorial maps, and to illustrations of several manor houses that are still standing, as well as of certain details that have already disappeared, such as the three windmills that used to stand side by side on Chadwell Heath. The most entertaining and exceptionally interesting chapter is that on 'Dagenham Breach,' wherein are recorded the various efforts made from time to time to check the tidal inundations of the southern boundary of the parish. The earliest recorded inundation occurred in 1376, when the sea-bank or wall on the river's edge was swept away during a storm and high tide, completely submerging and putting out of cultivation many acres that belonged to Barking Abbey. The abbess successfully appealed to the Crown to be exempted from contributing to war assessments, on the ground of the loss sustained by the storm. Four years later a second storm did yet more damage, and a second appeal from the abbess and convent stated that the income of their house had decreased to the great extent of 400 marks through these floods. A third flood caused the Crown to appoint in 1381 a commission de wallis et fossatis to supervise the breach walls or banks, and report on their condition. The result seems to have been a mere temporary patching. Year after year the area of the "drowned" land increased, and Barking Abbey again petitioned the Crown in 1409. The authorities stated that the greater part of their income was spent in repairing the river banks, and that the sisters of this fashionable nunnery had not more apiece than 14s. per annum for clothes and necessaries. Thereupon a writ was issued to hire labourers to work at the sea walls, but the chief result was merely the exemption of the abbey from taxation for a period of seven years. The continued tidal incursions became so serious towards the end of the reign of James I. that the Sewer Commissioners engaged the services of the eminent Dutch engineer Cornelius Vermuyden, in 1621, to stem a breach in the Thames embankment at Dagenham. Vermuyden imported a large number of skilled Dutch workmen, and eventually obtained considerable success, in spite of much animosity. The fishermen, poachers, and lovers of sport resented the attempts at reclamation, and there was bitter hostility to the foreign workmen among the local labourers. The powers of the ballad-writer were called in to pour contempt upon the Dutchman's schemes. Mr. Shawcross reproduces two clever local songs. Here is a single stanza from one of them, which was printed in 1625:—

Behold the great design, which they do now determine,
Will make our bodies pine, a prey to crows and vermin;
For they do mean all Fens to drain, and water overmaster,
All will be dry, and we must die—'cause Essex calves want pasture.

In the next stanza the coming extinction of the trade of the stiltmakers is bewailed.

On December 17th, 1707, an exceptionally severe storm caused a grievous overthrow of the tidal banks, and brought about the great gap known as Dagenham Breach. Local attempts and local levies to repair or check the widening of this disastrous breach proved unavailing, and at last, in 1714, an Act of Parliament was passed to preserve the navigation of the Thames, by stopping the breach in the levels of Dagenham and Havering, the funds to be found by a duty for ten years of threepence a ton on the burden of every incoming ship, except fishing vessels and coasters. As a result, an embankment was formed strong enough to resist further tidal inundations, but no attempt was made to undo the effects of the storm of 1707, and a large sheet of water, covering forty acres of drowned land, still remains, known as Dagenham Breach. Efforts are now being renewed to convert this water into a dock.

The chapter on the social and political life of Dagenham is capable of improvement. It seems scarcely worth while in a book of this description to attempt to give a picture of early manorial life in the lord's house. The attempt, too, conveys but little idea of what the life really would be on such unimportant manors as those in Dagenham parish. The inmates are supposed to sit down to dinner with silver plates on the high table, and "lattyn or pewter" plates for the household. We do not suppose, however, that half a dozen high tables in the whole kingdom possessed silver plates at the time specified, whilst the general household would certainly dine off wooden trenchers; pewter was costly, and reserved for the more wealthy.

The accounts of the church and vicars of Dagenham have evidently taken much time, and show considerable research. A list of fifty vicars is given, extending from 1335 to the present time. Up to the Reformation, the vicars were all presented by the abbess and convent of Barking. Mr. Shawcross sees no reason to doubt that "the patronage was conscientiously and judiciously administered by the various abbesses, and regarded as a sacred trust." Since the Reformation the patronage has been very frequently changed, the advowson of the vicarage having been repeatedly sold. The last three vicars since 1857 have borne the same name as the patron.

Mr. Shawcross shows much industry, but no particular ecclesiological gifts, and it would have been wiser to obtain the services of an expert to revise the would-be explanatory notes and remarks on such subjects. The modest preface invites corrections, "in case the book should ever be republished." For the most part it is well worthy of republication, as a conscientious effort to tell the varied story of an interesting, though not picturesque district close to London, so that it is in no carping spirit that a few mistakes are pointed out. Vicar John Valentyne, who died in 1475, left money for the purchase of an antiphoner for use in the church. He also left to a young scholar of Oxford, if he became a priest, his "secunde best portose." A note explains that the portose was the "portiforium, portuary, or breviary; it contained the antiphonal service, with musical notation sometimes." Such a note wants entire rewriting; the portose was a portable breviary, in contradistinction to the great breviary to lie on the desk, and would not contain the antiphoner for the musical rendering of the hours. "A payer of small orgaynes" remained in Dagenham church temp. Edward VI. The note requires correction; the usual place for the pre-Reformation organ was in the rood-loft. A note to the pix mentioned in the same inventory describes it as "a brass cup-shaped vessel, with a cover, to contain the reserved consecrated Host"; but the pix for the reserved sacrament, according to the English use, was not of this shape, for it was suspended over the altar (often in the form of a dove), and was generally of precious metal.

Another mistake worth correcting occurs in the account of the parish registers. It is stated that a layman was substituted for the vicar or curate to perform the ceremony of marriage during the Commonwealth, and that "the legal official or registrar of marriages for this district was Justice Joachim Mathewes." The fact is that it was then ordered that the civil knot of marriage must be tied by a justice of the peace; but this did not exclude (any more than in France at the present time) a religious ceremonial in the church, and many registers bear witness to such a ceremony being performed by the minister. Moreover, the legal official or magistrate (any justice would suffice) was a different person from the registrar or "register," as he was then called, who was elected by the parish.

NEW NOVELS.

In Dewisland. By S. Baring - Gould. (Methuen & Co.)

THE book-like language of the farm-folk and labourers in this readable story might be intended to illustrate the theory that the peasants of Wales are more intelligent than those of England, as Mr. Baring-Gould maintains in 'A Book of North Wales.' 'Dewisland' is that one of the two western promontories of Pembrokeshire which, stretching north of St. Bride's Bay, contains St. David's headland and little city. The Rebecca riots, 1843-4, determine the date, and contribute to the action, of this fresh setting of the author's favourite impersonation, a fair daughter of the wild. Even Mr. Baring-Gould's most ardent admirers will hardly assert that he is here at his best, perhaps because Sheena Lewis, being at least half Irish, is not wholly in her natural environment. Her grandmother, Mrs. O'Grady, divides the humorous department of the work with Farmer Evans, the father of the two heroes, of whom, however, the elder, David Narberth, is stepson only. The farmer's own son, Shone (=John), must owe his fine character to his step-brother's good influence rather than to his parents. In short, the three leading characters flout the principle of heredity, and incline us to assume that the English parents of the vicious foundling Nathan Groes were, in spite of appearances, healthy and virtuous. The estimable David has short, misshapen legs, but is thoroughly unselfish, and solaces himself with his violin and silent adoration of Sheena. Though she is represented as attractive and capable of displaying courage with proper feminine reaction, the reader has so little opportunity of observing her in repose that she is less interesting than a fuller portraiture might have made her; but this is precluded by much description of wild scenery, fighting, and other stirring incident, not to mention the antiquarian element. 'A Book of South Wales' has been utilized in manufacturing this more recent work, which here and there, in spite of the author's skill and experience, suggests comparison with Mrs. O'Grady's patchwork quilt. On the whole, a pleasant and wholesome tone is maintained.

The Common Lot. By Robert Herrick. (New York, the Macmillan Company.)

THIS thoughtful and interesting study of professional life in Chicago will increase its author's reputation. Indiscriminate satire directed against the methods and manners of the over-rich in America by their less affluent fellow-countrymen has begun to pall, so that we welcome a more judicial and artistic presentment of American life, in which the millionaires are relegated to their due position of unimportance compared with the collective influence of national tendencies or the spirit of a great city. Mr. Herrick soberly reprobates the corruption and speculation which are so frequently the causes or accompaniments of exuberant success in money-making; but he is careful to indicate that some of the successful are honest and unostentatious, and that "most of our best people are religious and moral," and he anticipates that the craze for accumulating and spending dollars will eventually abate, so that men "will respect learning, ideas, and devotion to the public welfare." He gives us intimations of the luxuriant development in America of individuality, which British institutions and traditions tend to nip in the bud. The principal figure is a young architect to whom an uncle, after giving him first-rate educational advantages, leaves enough to enable him to set up an office for himself, some 600,000*l.* being left in trust for the technical education of the children of local working-men. The inevitable business details are kept within reasonable limits, and are lucidly described. The disappointed nephew is attached to a woman of sterling worth and domestic instincts, but yet is attracted by a very lively widow, whose daughter again is extremely vivacious, while the leading villain is a jerry-builder on a large scale.

Sir Roger's Heir. By F. Frankfort Moore. (Hodder & Stoughton.)

MR. FRANKFORT MOORE'S high spirits have prompted him to play a practical joke on his admirers. It is to be feared that few of them will find out, in spite of frank references to The Spectator, that not only Sir Roger, but nearly all the names and characters of this novel are transferred from that source. Sir Roger de Coverley's chaplain is the ostensible narrator, though his diction is, in spite of the sixteenth-century spelling "enemity," occasionally rather modern. Then we have Capt. Sentrey, the heir, Mistress Betty Arable, Ephraim the Quaker, Mrs. Arable, Biscuit, Tom Touchy, Moll White, Squire Quickset, and Will Wimble. Sir Roger de Coverley is defamed by being represented as keeping up for years an estrangement from his sister and her son because she had married a well-to-do London draper; for the nameless widow whom Sir Roger adored for some forty years is substituted the widow Arable, so that Mistress Betty Arable ought to be about twenty-eight years of age when Capt. Sentrey marries her. The adaptations of historical romance and the borrowed plots of drama perhaps excuse this tampering with Addison's delicate sketches of character, but we cannot think the audacity justified in this case. While, however, we regard most of the personages as rather clumsy pretenders, we frankly own that they talk and move briskly in a style fairly congruous with the period of Queen Anne. Our author has "wasted his spirits in laborious composition of his own," as well as endeavouring after "those other talents that are proper to enforce what has been penned by greater masters" (Spectator No. 106), and he might succeed in keeping a modern Sir Roger awake better than the chaplain's readings kept the original from nodding.

Duchess of Few Clothes. By Philip Payne. (Hutchinson & Co.)

SOME natural attractions, enhanced by repose of manner and simplicity of dress, might not have saved Miss Vantage, the nymph of the cigar stand in the rotunda of the Pantheon Hotel, Chicago, from being a very commonplace young woman, but for the persecution to which she was subjected by the hatred and malice of one of the hotel clerks, and the envy of the "lady cashier," who spitefully gave her the title "Duchess of Few Clothes." Chivalrous pity invested her with increased popularity among the male frequenters of the colossal hotel, and proved akin to love in the breasts of several, including the elderly proprietor, Alonzo A. Farson, one of the most fatuous persons who ever belied the proverb "a fool and his money are soon parted." Though he allows his rascally Irish valet to pay himself for his gross flatteries, the "old pomposity" has judiciously fostered his stupendous inheritance in spite of poetic justice, and remains an opprobrium of American plutocracy. If the satirical onslaught on over-opulent society had been less savage in the portrayal of this prominent representative, it would have been more effective. We prefer the sketch of an affluent haberdasher. As the ladies will not go round among their admirers, readers may be entertained by finding out for themselves how the matrimonial problems meander towards eventual solution. The minor characters are mainly underlings, and involve a superfluity of slang. We note a "dub," a "bell-hop," "guff," a "papa-guy," and a "slob." The background ought to have included a few figures typifying the élite of Chicago society, so as to form an illuminative setting for the principal actors in this lively but somewhat crude "comedy."

The House of Fulfilment. By George Madden Martin. (Hodder & Stoughton.)

THIS is a deliberate, thoughtful story, the scene of which is laid for the most part in Kentucky, at a time when the war between North and South was still an intimate memory among living men. There are half a dozen very good illustrations, in which the artist has been at more pains than usual to enter into the spirit of the work, and has succeeded. The theme of the story is not in any sense novel, being the contrast of the typical natures of the industrial, thriving North, and the graceful, generous, picturesque South. But, with nothing new or remarkable to work upon, the author, by virtue of his treatment, has produced a fresh and interesting story, full of quiet observation, and showing a good deal of nice discernment. The merit that lies in suggestion, as distinguished from mere statement, is ably demonstrated here. The book has grace and charm, and should be read.

RECENT VERSE.

The Testament of a Prime Minister. By John Davidson. (Grant Richards.)—In this, the latest of Mr. Davidson's dramatic monologues, a Prime Minister, sharing the fate of the "Vivisector," the "Man Forbid," and the "Empire-Builder," who went before him, submits his soul to the scalpel. What Prime Minister is not stated; there is, perhaps, room for conjecture in the fact that he describes himself as

A child among
The doctrinaires, a stranger in the House, and contrasts himself with some other politician who finds the soul of culture in trade, and is

The keystone of our bridge,
The linch-pin of the wheel of government,
The genius of the State.

It matters little, since, like his predecessors, he is but to serve as a projection of Mr. Davidson's own personality, and to present in his utterances from the operating-table Mr. Davidson's own familiar indigest of Nietzsche. Once more, as in every poem of the series, Mr. Davidson's desperate and baffled determination to be a philosopher does not avail to conceal the lyric impulse and quick sense of beauty which stamp him as inevitably a poet. The deliberate quest of beauty in speech he has apparently put away from him, preferring rather some wilful and perverted ideal of the strong and the expressive. Hence, no doubt, such monstrous, gnarled lines as these:—

Miraculous too, it was, to hear men lie
Against each other as the only means
And menstruum of truth; to watch debate
Lixivate matters till the recrement
Appeared, the perfect, smooth, exhausted sludge
That blinds the electorate and chokes it off.

We find much of such imagery and such vocabulary to wrestle with, much also of deliberate painting of ugliness, alike in landscape and humanity. Then suddenly the mood changes. You are carried from

The reaches of the tributary Lea,
Enamelled filthily in many hues, to nothing less than Epping at nightfall, and Mr. Davidson is a poet again:—

An exaltation of suburban larks
Against the lowering vault shattered their songs;
A ground-bee twanged across the chequered plain;
And then the forest took me. Evening fell.
I marked the lattice-work on swarthy boles
Of lusted chestnuts as I walked about,
And saw the trees keep up a torch-lit dance,
In noiseless chains and figures flitting past.
The cuckoos beat their golden gongs throughout
The echoing forest; finches, sparrows, wrens,
Blackbirds and nightingales in every bough
Descanted music fresh as garlands woven
In Arcady; in hollows where the mist
Began to hang its ghostly tapestry out,
Mistrustful creatures stole from tree to tree—
The fallow deer came from their inner haunts
To snatch a supper of the crusts and crumbs
Left by the Londoner. Bird after bird
Forbore its song as darkness crept abroad,
Till the last lark dropped breathless from the sky:
Only the passionate nightingales poured out
Their uninterpretable carol—wreaths
Of jewels, dewdrops, gold, chaplets of stars
That stained the ashen dusk with diverse fire.

Few contemporary writers are so interesting as Mr. Davidson, even when he most makes you gnash your teeth; none presents so singular a combination of yeasty thought and passionate dream.

The Legend of Saint Frideswide, and other Poems. By Florence Hayllar. (Constable.)—One does not often come across a volume of verse in which the impression formed at the outset needs to be reconsidered more completely than is the case here. Take the opening lines of the title-poem:—

The stream of the Thames is swift and sheen,
The vale of the Thames is broad and green:
A long summer's day a man may roam
Through the fields that were Frideswide's home.

Those who write verses such as these so seldom write anything else that the busy reviewer might have been excused for proceeding no further. Persisting, however, one finds a quatrain, reached early among the "other poems," which suggests a hope of better things:—

THE CANDLE.

Thou may a child's hand kindle, thee
His laugh extinguish, tiny spark,
Scarce seen a furlong off. To me
The difference between light and dark!

But it is not till the last four pieces are reached that the author reveals her real powers. The first is called 'The Witch.' Here the technique, with its cleverly contrived recurrence of the initial rhyme-words in each stanza, is faultless, save for an excessive preponderance of monosyllables, while the poem as a whole is invested with a weird and magical atmosphere, such as Coleridge knew well how to produce. The simile in the last stanza, the suppressed intensity of the feeling, and the strong, bold touches, are not unworthy of him. No less imaginative is 'Home from Battle,' which we quote in full:—

Here at the good king's tent stand I—
All the night is in the sky.
To-morrow, I trow, in battle I die.
There as I wait, stark, cold, and dumb,
Shall Brian and Denis and Roland come;
And find me, and lift me, and carry me home.
Three days will the journey be
These dear comrades must carry me—
I shall be home at the end of the three.
At sundown, marching the first long day,
Shall they desire to make their stay
In a strong house beside the way;
But the lord of that house shall ask and know,
I, the dead man, am his mortal foe—
And he shall drive us from him so.
And the second day, by moonlight clear,
To a castle once more shall we draw near;
And men will ask: "Whom have ye here?"
There she, who is queen of all the land—
My lady will by me stand;—
Will lift above me her tender hand!
When, with sad voice, they answer make,
Pale for pity will be her cheek;—
But she will not know whose name they speak.
Then with the dawn we forth shall fare;
And when the high stars shining are,
Me through my father's gates shall they bear.
By the pit side shall crouch my hound
As they lay me in the ground—
There I think to sleep full sound!

Dramatic power and a Homeric simplicity of manner are here combined, while the pathetic meaning is left to be suggested by the mere presentment of the situation, as Palgrave well said of Scott's little masterpiece 'Proud Maisie.' We are reminded not a little of Surtees's fine ballad 'Barthram's Dirge,' but it must, we think, be admitted that Miss Hayllar has the advantage of the older poet.

To Leda, and other Odes. By T. Sturge Moore. (Duckworth.)—There is an aloofness from current forms of thought and expression, and a robustness, about Mr. Moore's work which commend it at once to those who look to find in poetry something more than the tuneful embodiment of the commonplace. When a poet dares at times to be frankly prosaic, there must be a backing of solid thought and a capacity for presenting essentials, which few out of the many producers of modern minor verse would care to vindicate for themselves by making a similar experiment. Not that Mr. Moore is unable to charm the ear when he pleases. 'The Lament for Orpheus,' which excels all the other odes of this volume in dramatic power, is throughout duly harmonious; but where he rises to his highest plane of thought, as in the 'Ode on Death,' the verse takes on a rugged and almost repellent aspect. The effect of death on the living is exhibited by passing in review thus baldly the ends of Alexander, Alaric, Goethe, and last, with more adornment, of a bride dying on her wedding-day. After a memorable line—

One could have thanked death, though one dared not praise,
Mr. Moore continues:—

Such scenes concern but us, who linger here;
What their own death was to themselves, none knows.
Heard they our wailing as the insect's ear
List to the children's chaunt, a mere vague sound,
While calmly she, since life within her glows,
Is on her present occupation bound?

The thought moves at an equally high level with more grace in the last ode, called 'For Dark Days.' Whether judged by Matthew Arnold's test of single lines—this one for example,

Nothing is silent, when the heart will bear; or a single simile, as when Orpheus, after the loss of his Eurydice, is likened to

The ash-heap's treasured core of red,
Which waits all day the wood-cutter's return
Within his hut, and when he fans will burn
And make his cabin glow, his comfort thrive;

or by a whole poem, if any of the odes named above be taken, the most cautious of critics need not be afraid to assert that Mr. Moore's achievement is remarkable.

Ave Regina, by Hugh Macnaghten (George Allen), consists of verses which, without being in any sense great poetry, are simple and scholarly, and afford very pleasant reading. Not a few of his pieces, however, are so identified with Eton that their effect may be somewhat impaired for the many. Another and doubtless allied feature, which will commend them more generally, is a sympathetic insight into child-nature running through the whole collection, but specially noticeable in the little play called 'The Children of Sparta,' where, in very brief compass, the characters of the spiritually-minded and the natural child are differentiated most convincingly. The title-poem is a short but dignified elegy on the late Queen, whose last Prime Minister receives a similar tribute. One of the most striking pieces is suggested by the fire in a Chicago theatre a year ago. Mr. Macnaghten's capacity for translation is known. Here we have a charming rendering of a familiar fragment of Aleman:—

They are asleep, the mountain heights and glens,
The torrent beds, high headlands, and the trees,
All nurslings of dark earth on which they creep,
Wild denizens
Of mountains, and the people of the bees:
The great fish are asleep
Beneath the darkling seas,
Asleep the birds' wine-winged societies.

We note a version of Catullus's "Phaselus ille," the only defect in which is a superabundance of trisyllabic feet. The even lightness of the pure iambic measure in the original, chosen surely to express the light and even motion of the yacht, requires to be reproduced in English by the smoothest of dissyllabic feet.

CHINESE BOOKS.

My Chinese Note-Book. By Lady Susan Townley. (Methuen & Co.)—The number of books written on the late period of disturbance in China (1900) is legion, and from every possible point of view we have had the "Crisis" described and enlarged upon. It is a relief, therefore, to turn from that oft-repeated tale to a work, such as that before us, which treats of the quiet time which succeeded the Boxer outbreak. It was not until peace had been restored that Lady Susan Townley took up her abode in the British Legation in Peking. There she was happily placed at the headquarters of everything Chinese, and enjoyed constant intercourse with the occupiers of the throne and those who regulated the affairs of State. Hers was a highly fortunate position, for the Chinese authorities were on their best behaviour, and, having just felt the pressure of the European heel, were anxious, as they always have been in similar cases, to curry favour with the conquering powers. Everything in Peking was therefore open to the inspection of the author. She was fêted by the Dowager Empress, and she entertained in her turn the Imperial Princesses. On these and kindred matters she supplies much interesting information.

She begins by giving a sketch of Chinese history, and in a few brightly written pages traces the fate of the empire from the earliest times down to the reign of the present sovereign. The assumption of power (1889) by this potentate was heralded by a decree in which the Emperor writes:—

"When I heard of the decree [from the Empress Dowager handing over to me the reins of government], I trembled as if I were in mid-ocean, not knowing where the land is. Her Majesty will, however, continue to advise me for a few years longer on important affairs of State. I shall not dare to be indolent, and in obedience to the Empress's command, I have petitioned Heaven, Earth, and my Ancestors, that I may assume the administration of the government in person on the fifteenth day of the first moon in the thirteenth year of my reign. Guided by the counsel of Her Majesty, everything will be done with care."

The futile efforts of Kwanghsü to reform the administration of the empire; his defeat by the Dowager-Empress; and the judicial murder of six of the leading Reformers by the direct order of the same lady, are twice-told tales. And the only surprise is that these acts, coupled with the atrocities connected with the attack on the Legations in 1900, did not put the Dowager beyond the pale of social intercourse. But as Dr. Morrison remarks in a recent telegram to The Times :—

"It is a strange turn of fortune by which this ruler [the Dowager-Empress], under whose deplorable misguidance China has suffered such untold disasters, should now [on her birthday] be the recipient of autograph letters of eulogy and goodwill from emperors, kings, and other rulers."

Since kings and other rulers did not hesitate to draw a veil over the Dowager-Empress's misdeeds, Lady Susan Townley saw no good reason why she should be less forgiving. In company with other ladies of the Legation she, at the invitation of the Empress, attended an audience. With considerable state they proceeded to the palace, and, after passing through endless courtyards, reached the throne room, in which the Dowager-Empress was seated. "She sat," writes Lady Susan,

"upon a kind of Turkish divan, covered with figured Chinese silk of a beautiful yolk-of-egg colour; being low of stature, her feet (which are of natural size, she being a Manchu) barely touched the ground, and only her head and shoulders were visible over the table placed in front of her. She wore a Chinese coat, loose and hanging from the shoulders, of a diaphanous pale blue silk material covered with the most exquisite Chinese embroidery of vine leaves and grapes. Round her neck was a pale blue satin ribbon about an inch and a half wide, studded with large lustrous pearls, pierced, and sewn to the ribbon. Her head was dressed according to the Manchu fashion, the hair being parted in front and brushed smoothly over the ears, to be afterwards caught up at the back and draped high and wide over a kind of paper-cut of dark green jade, set, like an Alsatian bow, crosswise on the summit of the head. The ends of this paper-cut were decorated with great bunches of artificial flowers, butterflies, and hanging crimson silk tassels. Her complexion is that of a North Italian, and, being a widow, her cheeks are unpainted and unpowdered, according to Chinese custom in such cases. Her piercing dark eyes, when not engaged looking at the ladies, roved curiously about among her surroundings. Her age is sixty-eight, as she told us herself, but her hair being dyed jet black, and most of it artificial, her appearance is that of a much younger woman. Her hands are long and tapering, and like those of many Chinese women very prettily shaped, but they are disfigured by the curious national custom of letting the nails grow inordinately long. The nails of the two smaller fingers of the right hand were protected by gold shields, which fitted to the finger like a lady's thimble, and gradually tapered off to a length of three or four inches."

Seated on the left of his imperial aunt and a little behind her was the Emperor, a man of an abnormally youthful appearance and of a sad countenance, who might have escaped the notice of the visitors, were it not for the deference shown him by the officials. His attitude throughout the audience indicated his complete subjection, and readily explains the ease with which his projects of reform were swept away by the four winds of heaven. On another occasion at Paoting Fu, when Lady Susan Townley met the Dowager by chance, the same subdued manner of the Emperor was conspicuous, and it is obvious that so long as the Dowager-Empress lives we shall be obliged to deal diplomatically, and only, with that masterful lady.

Her faults and failings are, doubtless, to a great extent to be attributed to ignorance. She is too much inclined to act blindly on the advice of those about her, who know as little of the outer world as she does herself, and she has all the callous cruelty of an Oriental. She can laugh and almost toy with the Legation ladies, and she can sentence to death by slow torture any one who may venture to thwart her purposes. "She made a most favourable impression," to quote Sir Claude MacDonald's words, "by her courtesy and affability" on the ladies at the first audience she granted them, and she seems to have exercised the same charm on Lady Susan Townley. On the several occasions on which that lady met her she treated her with the greatest courtesy and friendliness. But so she behaved to the ladies who visited her before the outbreak of 1900, and yet she was then capable of ordering the attack on the Legations, and of sentencing to death by flogging a number of eunuchs who had ranged themselves on the side of the Emperor.

Lady Susan Townley writes brightly and well, her book being throughout both accurate and interesting.

The Wisdom of the East: the Sayings of Lao-tzū. Translated from the Chinese, with an Introduction, by Lionel Giles. (The Orient Press.)—"The Taotê King," the work which is traditionally attributed to Lao-tzū, the old philosopher, has of late attracted considerable attention; and though it has not been translated so often as Omar Khayyam, it has of recent years frequently appeared in English form. Apart from the intrinsic merits of the work, its main attraction seems to consist in its abstruse doctrines, and the very rugged language in which they are expressed. It has been suggested that Lao-tzū was a mythical character, and the almost entire absence of all biographical details concerning him may be held to lend countenance to this view. It is, to say the least, remarkable that, while we have full and explicit descriptions of the daily life of his junior contemporary Confucius—what he ate at dinner, how he sat in his chair and reclined in his bed—we know nothing of Lao-tzū, except that he appears as an old man in the State of Chow, and that finally he shook the dust of China off his feet and disappeared westward. Legend relates that as he crossed the barrier separating China from the rest of the world, he handed to the keeper of the pass a volume containing his musings, entitled "The Taotê King." But, however that may be, a work purporting to have been written by him has been handed down through all succeeding generations, and though it is not likely that we have it as it left his hands, yet it is more than "a mere jumble of stray aphorisms," and is, in fact, "a well-defined, though rudimentary outline of a great system of transcendental and ethical philosophy."

The centre of Lao-tzū's system was something that he called Tao, which bears some relation to the Brahma of the Brahmins, and, as Mr. Giles points out, to Plato's "Idea of the Gods." From it everything proceeds, and to it everything returns. The main principle of government inculcated is inaction: "The sage occupies himself with inaction, and conveys instruction without words." In another place the philosopher says, "Attain complete vacuity, and sedulously preserve a state of repose."

Mr. Giles claims that these teachings had a greater effect on the nation than any of the doctrines of Confucius, and sees in the laissez-faire attitude of the people the result of the doctrine "sedulously preserve a state of repose." In morality Lao-tzū excels Confucius, and rises to a high level of righteousness.

"Requite injury with kindness" was a saying of Lao-tzū, which was incomprehensible to the more matter-of-fact Confucius, who, when asked his opinion on it, replied, "With what then will you repay kindness?" "Repay injuries with justice, and kindness with kindness." These sayings indicate the difference between the two great contemporaries. The one caught glimpses of the sublime, while the other was of the earth earthy. Mr. Giles's little volume, though small in size, is full of food for reflection.

The Book of the Simple Way of Lao-tzū. A new Translation from the Text of the Taotê King. With Introduction and Commentary by Walter Gorn Old. (Wellby.)—Yet another work on "The Taotê King"! In this case the author professes, as the title-page asserts, to have made a new translation of Lao-tzū's celebrated work. This is probably the most difficult existing text in the Chinese language, and should be approached by those only who are well equipped for the enterprise. We are bound to say that Mr. Old's work shows no indication that he was thus provided; and, indeed, there are many and indubitable signs that he knows very little Chinese at all. As an instance, he in his introduction translates Tao Tien by "the Way of Heaven," an interpretation which the two words so placed cannot bear. And the spirit in which he has sat down to the task of making "a new translation from the text of 'The Taotê King'" may be judged by the following passage in his introduction :—

"There can be little doubt that any translation from the Chinese is capable of extreme flexibility and license, of which, indeed, the translator must avail himself if he would rightly render the spirit rather than the letter of the text."

Of this licence Mr. Old has taken full advantage, and has made his version so flexible that it is difficult to determine which passages form part of the "new translation" and which should be considered as paraphrases of the renderings of previous translators. The work is not an independently valuable contribution to the literature of the subject.

A Yankee on the Yangtze: being a Narrative of a Journey from Shanghai through the Central Kingdom to Burma, by W. E. Geil (Hodder & Stoughton), may be regarded as a companion volume to "An Australian in China." Both books describe the same journey and almost the identical route. Both the Australian and the Yankee were alike ignorant of Chinese, and yet they both met with every civility, and accomplished their pilgrimage with comparatively little fatigue. Both authors describe all they saw graphically and well, but are unable, owing to their ignorance of the language, to enlarge upon or explain the objects which met their view. Here the similarity between the authors ends, their opinions on Chinese matters being directly antagonistic. The Australian takes a delight in repeating stories not altogether complimentary to missionaries, whereas the Yankee finds in them all that is admirable, right, and good. Opium-smoking is, in the eyes of the Yankee, who adopts the missionary view on the question, a vice of the most destructive nature. According to him, "more than one-half of the population are victims of it, more or less," and one would naturally, therefore, expect to find the nation rapidly degenerating into a race of cripples. Yet the Yankee's description of the work done by the boat-trackers on the Yangtze gorges testifies to the contrary.

Like the Australian, the Yankee steamed up the Yangtze from Shanghai to I-ch'ang, a voyage of 1,200 miles, and at that port engaged a native boat to carry him and his following over the 400 miles of rapids which separate I-ch'ang from Chungking. These toilsome rapids have been repeatedly described, and Mr. Geil's experience of their difficulties and dangers differed nothing from those which have been encountered by his predecessors. After a short stay at Chungking, he proceeded westwards, and had the usual experience of travellers in those regions. He inspected the prisons of Luchow, and found them appalling sinks of filth and crime; he visited the troglodyte dwellings in the neighbourhood of Suifu; and he admired to the full the scenery of Yunnan, "the Switzerland of China." One point in which Mr. Geil probably had the advantage of other travellers across China was the speed at which he journeyed. He did the entire distance from Shanghai to Bhamo in a hundred days save one, which is no small feat.

Mr. Geil writes kindly and good-naturedly of the natives and their belongings, and his book would be more agreeable reading were it not for the habit he has of speaking of persons, streets, and places by their translated names. It is, for instance, provoking to read repeatedly of Mr. "Forest-of-Righteous-Fields" or of "Family-Han-Ridge Street." The illustrations to the book are numerous.

OUR LIBRARY TABLE.

SOME thirty years ago appeared a lively and entertaining account of station life in New Zealand, from the pen of a woman. Lady Barker, as she was then, became later Lady Broome, and she now issues a volume of Colonial Memories (Smith, Elder & Co.) which not only resumes her experiences in New Zealand, but touches pleasantly also upon her subsequent adventures in Natal, Western Australia, Trinidad, and elsewhere. As Lady Broome explains in her personal introduction, her second husband pushed his way from a journalistic appointment on The Times into the service of the Colonial Office. He was secretary to Sir Garnet Wolseley in Natal, and was successively Governor of Western Australia and Trinidad. It was in these remote regions of the far-flung empire that Lady Broome gathered the amiable experiences she records. In 1896 her wandering life came to an end, and she settled down, as she puts it. But she confesses gladly that that life has been happy. Indeed, by comparison, the present years seem monotonous, and Lady Broome hints that she may yet be moving on somewhere. That is a brave spirit, and is a sufficient key to the writer's character and this book. If we may judge, she enjoyed most the life in New Zealand, even although that was lived so long ago as the sixties. At any rate, she writes of it with more gusto. We like the story of the Maori chief with whom she danced, and who apologetically and regretfully observed to her that he could have danced so much better without his clothes. But wherever Lady Broome went, she held eyes for the unusual and a kindly spirit of sympathy. She is never discontented, and we feel that she deserves to have enjoyed her life. She even has praise, unlike the usual makers of reminiscence, for the modern young woman. She does not deny the girls were "dears" in old days, which, of course, grew giants, but adds: "Well, and you are dears too," which, we suppose, is the real solution of the question.

MESSRS. HURST & BLACKETT send us England and the English, by the well-known Dr. Carl Peters, which is a much fairer book than episodes in the author's past might lead us to expect. Dr. Peters is both very hard upon us in things in which we deserve criticism and very flattering to us in things in which our national complacency leads us to think that we deserve admiration. He perhaps exaggerates, but, if so, it is in both directions. He tells us that we are the only non-military nation, and want "to monopolise a World-Empire over the entire planet. Rome lorded it over the world because she also commanded the strongest army then existing."

He also describes society, and explains that "people who dawdle away day after day and year after year in such frivolous manner must needs remain superficial. There is practically no time left them for attending to their spiritual wants or even for instructive reading.....This, then, is the ultimate reason for the deterioration of English literature."

He shows how the defects in our education stamp "on the minds of the young that insular arrogance which forms the nation's worst characteristic." Our schooling

"imparts to modern English manners their ingenuous narrow-mindedness in their opinions of themselves and of all foreigners upon which in the main is based their racial prejudice.....The average Briton.....all his life remains, as compared with our standard, a person of very poor attainments.....The shallowness of national education.....is driving her fast into an inferior rank for science and industry to that occupied by other countries, more especially Germany and North America."

In all this who shall say that our sharp critic is mistaken? When he comes to those who are outside "Society" he shows that every one "wants to be the gentleman and lady.....To get quickly rich is the passion, and the money thus earned is squandered in luxury. And as honest trades do not suffice for this purpose, the people of all callings turn to the wheel of fortune—to gambling."

On the other hand, Dr. Peters, to judge from the greater part of his book, has got over any former dislike to us as a nation, and is really attracted by what he thinks our excellent qualities. As regards our strength, in spite of our military deficiency, he is an optimist, and writes: "No power on earth can embark in trans-oceanic warfare without the goodwill of England."

There are fewer errors in the book than are to be expected in a volume upon one people by a citizen of another nation. It is not generally or absolutely true of our House of Commons that "an officer whilst serving under the colours is ineligible for the House." A long passage on our electoral system, which begins with the words "the House of Commons," and ends with statistics of the number of Parliamentary electors, and other facts dealing with national elections only, suggests that the author thinks that some women have in the United Kingdom the Parliamentary vote. He appears to us also to be misinformed as to the nature of the oath or affirmation taken or made by every member of the House of Commons at the beginning of every Parliament. It is, however, the case that the better constitutional view is that that oath is rather one of adhesion to the Constitution than of personal fealty to the King. But if Dr. Peters had its words before him he would hardly, we think, have written in the terms he uses, without explanation, and, as a German, would probably understand the words in a more natural sense than that in which they are explained away by British constitutional authorities. He suggests that the British clothing and boot and shoe trades have been ruined by German and American competition. In spite of the large importation of American boots and shoes and of German slop clothing, the figures do not support his belief. Dr. Peters gives two different figures in different portions of his book for the value, stupendously great on either showing, of the catch of fish in the United Kingdom. It is not the case that in the electorate of Cambridge University Nonconformists predominate, or that the University "sends Liberals to Parliament." Neither is it true that in England "no point exists which is more than forty-five miles distant from the sea."

Mr. FISHER UNWIN publishes Democracy and Reaction, by Mr. L. T. Hobhouse, which for the most part bears too closely upon party politics to be the subject of a full criticism in our pages. It cannot be disputed that from the point of view of the ideas prevalent and believed to be triumphant two generations ago, there has been in many matters a marked reaction. But the illustrations, most powerfully given by Mr. Hobhouse, upon subjects such as primary education and Church schools, are not suitable for discussion in our columns. One point, in which we are free to express complete agreement with our author, concerns the treatment of the coloured races; and of the many writers who have called the attention of the nation to, and tried to arouse its conscience upon, this subject, none has done so with more insistence and with more truth.

ONE can well imagine that for artist and author alike it must have been a pleasant task to collect the impressions in colour and prose of Some English Gardens (Longmans). The main work in this beautiful book is by the artist, who is Mr. G. S. Elgood, while Miss Gertrude Jekyll's contribution is modestly described as 'Notes.' In so far as the latter are written round the illustrations in colour, they are correctly described, but the word fails to indicate the fulness of knowledge and taste which Miss Jekyll brings to bear on her subject. That, however, will be understood by those who are acquainted with her former books. She has a catholicity of feeling for gardens which never degenerates into partisanship. Thus she can admire with fervour the formal garden in which Mr. Elgood finds his chief attraction. The flower garden does not lend itself to composition in pictures, whereas ordered avenues, lawns, pergolas, and hedges, with all the appurtenances of the austere Italian style, are fruitful of design. Yet Mr. Elgood is probably at his best as a colourist. The gardens illustrated have been selected to present certain horticultural features, yet more or less at haphazard. Levens, with its topiaries, could not escape treatment, and some of the grandiose dignities of castle gardens are also obvious subjects, such as the yew hedge at Rockingham or the terrace at Brockley. But Mr. Elgood does not disdain "still-life" studies, such as groups of phlox, hollyhocks, or Michaelmas daisies. He is probably at his best in using large masses of green. From Miss Jekyll's 'Notes' it is possible to learn a great deal not only about the gardens illustrated, but also about taste in flowers. She has such an intimate learning that she cannot comment without edifying. It may interest the curious to know that the illustrations include Lady Warwick's Friendship Garden at Easton; and there is also a fine picture from the garden at Tangle, so wonderfully re-created in the space of eighteen years.

LOVERS of St. Francis and St. Clare are inclined to resent the appearance of books about Assisi, for fear lest they should cause tourists to remain in and spoil the quiet town. Up to the present time these have only rushed thither from Perugia to lunch, and sunset has seen the return of calm. Those who, like M. Sabatier, M. Émile Ollivier, and other distinguished men and women, have stayed for a long time in the neighbourhood of the places connected with the lives of the sweet saints of Umbria, and loved to linger in the holy land of Italy, have been able to do so with little interference from the vulgar crowd. Vendors of postcards and photographs have been added to the beggars and sellers of relics who were always there, and who pestered even the Popes, when, in the years after the death of St. Francis and during the lifetime of St. Clare, they came thither to proclaim the canonization, to found first the lower church and then the upper, and to open them to worship. Of all the host of books in the library of that most excellent of guides Signor Rossi, the innkeeper of Assisi, there was none better than that now reprinted, after four years of success, as an illustrated volume in the series "Mediæval Towns," under the title The Story of Assisi, by Lina Duff Gordon, and published by Messrs. Dent & Co. The illustrations are admirable. We need only criticize that representing the great church seen across the lower piazza from a window in the Albergo del Subasio, where the introduction of figures far too large, even for a foreground, has ridiculously dwarfed the magnificent architecture and proportions of the scene.

Irish Memories (Fisher Unwin) is a volume of biographies and battle-pieces by Mr. Barry O'Brien. Various Irish heroes—King Brian, Shane O'Neil, &c.—pass in single file before the reader until, Curran having again uttered (at this date one can hardly say cracked) his somewhat too famous jokes, we view in Sir Charles Gavan Duffy the flower of our modern policy of conciliation.

Mr. O'Brien had the privilege of hearing from Duffy's own lips the account of his five futile arraignments on a charge which shifted from treason felony to high treason. It is a curious fact that when Duffy, in February, 1849, was "put up for the fourth time," his leading counsel, Butt, who "fought like a lion," would have objected to the presence on the jury of the one man who, as it happened, held out for an acquittal, if Duffy had not desired him to be sworn. Duffy knew that this jurymen's wife and daughter were in his favour, and intended to sit opposite the jury-box. In view of the fact that Duffy was at last discharged, merely because two juries were unable to decide for or against him, his rise to the highest political distinctions in a Crown colony was a miracle which may sometimes have puzzled his contemporary the late John Boyle O'Reilly, poet and Fenian, who escaped as a convict from the continent where Duffy became a Prime Minister.

Mr. O'Brien makes a trifling omission in a quotation from Macaulay (p. 84), and misprints the names of some of Bompard's vessels (p. 167); moreover, his descriptions of battles are more vivid than accurate. He writes, however, like a man whose heart is in his work.

Mrs. Pritchard's School, by L. T. Meade (Chambers), is a story, like others by the same author, remarkable rather for charm and interest than for probability. We find it difficult to imagine an "up-to-date seminary for young ladies," where the pupils (apparently) play no games; and 'Candide' is surely an unlikely subject for a prize essay in any girls' school, modern or old-fashioned. The characters soliloquize in set theatrical fashion; the plot—a variation on the theme of 'The Giant's Robe'—is plainly impossible, and the distinguished editor who plays an important part therein displays a childlike simplicity and warmth of appreciation not generally characteristic of his calling; yet, in spite of all these things, the book is never dull, and we are throughout conscious of an originality and an imaginative power, especially as regards characterization, unusual in literature of this description.

We are glad to find from the second volume of the Poems of D. G. Rossetti (Ellis & Elvey) that the poem withdrawn by Rossetti, and now reinserted in his works, is, as we hoped, 'Nuptial Sleep.' The three poems not previously published are 'Dennis Shand,' a ballad; a sonnet 'After the French Liberation of Italy,' and a sonnet 'After the German Subjugation of France.' The last is a little over-emphatic, and adds nothing of value to Rossetti's work, but the other sonnet is a masterpiece, and the ballad has a note of poetic gaiety which rarely found its way from the man to his work. Mr. W. M. Rossetti comments admirably in his notes on the temporary reasons which seemed for a time to forbid the publication of these poems, and on the broader reasons which have decided him to publish them now: "I think I was then right, and am now not wrong," he says proudly and justly. The sonnet, in particular, is characteristic of Rossetti, and fine among his characteristic work, in its grave and serious use of the imagery of sex, not for its own sake, but as such imagery is used in the Bible, frankly after nature, as the most convincing kind of imagery in an argument or an appeal. Mr. W. M. Rossetti has added nearly thirty pages of notes to this volume, and most of them are very welcome. It is useless to try to explain poetry to the prosaic, and the commentaries on individual sonnets will do no good to any one; but all the information about the dates and occasions of poems is valuable, and the general account of 'The House of Life' is full of interesting details. It may amuse some readers to know that the sonnets in this sequence have been counted, and that there are 42 sonnets "the essential tone of which is happy; 35 the essential tone of which is unhappy; and 26 which, though certainly not unemotional, may be termed neutral in regard to happiness or unhappiness." There is another arithmetical table in regard to the immortality of the soul. What these numbers are supposed to prove we are unaware. The illustrations in this volume are hardly as well reproduced as even those in the first. This is especially unfortunate in the case of 'Lady Lilith,' as the reproduction is made from a negative taken before the picture was altered. All, however, are worth having, and the edition is one which no admirer of Rossetti can afford to be without.

THE collection of Vagabond Songs and Ballads, edited by Mr. Robert Ford, and originally issued in two large volumes (1899 and 1901), has been compressed into a single volume, the lesser prized and less characteristic songs and ballads only being omitted (Paisley, Gardner). Many new tunes have been added in this edition, and fuller notes are occasionally given. The notes are evidently designed rather for popular than for antiquarian use. Thus, in regard to 'The Bonnie House o' Airlie,' no attempt is made to explain the historical inaccuracies of the ballad, though these have been commented on more than once. The identity of 'Old King Cole' is by no means so clearly established in favour of Scotland as Mr. Ford would have us believe; and we should have been glad if he had more emphatically freed Dunkeld from the traditional reflection which identifies it with the "terrible parish" where

They hangit their minister, drooned their precentor,
Daug doon the steeple, and fiddled the bell.

The value of Mr. Ford's work is, however, not in its annotations, but in its record, before it was too late, of many meritorious songs and ballads of the Scottish people which have hitherto enjoyed only an oral existence. The book is a monument of loving and discriminating research in its own department, and its value is sure to increase with years.

History of the Patriarchs of the Coptic Church of Alexandria.—I. St. Mark to Theonas. Arabic Text, edited, translated, and annotated by B. Evetts. Patrologia Orientalis, ed. R. Graffin and F. Nau, Tome I. Fasc. 2. (Paris, Didot.)—The idea of an Oriental patrology, supplementary to his Greek and Latin collection, was, it is believed, entertained, though never realized, by Migne. Some twelve years since this idea seemed about to become a reality in the hands of Mgr. Graffin, who did indeed initiate a 'Cursus Patrologiæ Syriacæ,' modelled, in its outward features, upon Migne's volumes. But after the production of an edition of Aphraates nothing further was heard of the enterprise until it was stated, two or three years ago, that the same scholar, now in conjunction with the indefatigable Prof. Nau, was about to recommence his Oriental series on broader lines, embracing this time all the literatures of the Christian East. Prospectuses announced the preparation of several interesting and important works, almost all previously unpublished, and the collaboration of well-known scholars of all nationalities. Since then, the new 'Patrology' has taken material shape in four volumes—or, rather, parts of volumes—which initiate respectively the Syriac, Arabic, Ethiopic, and Coptic series to be embraced in the collection. The work here under notice is the first of the Arabic series, and it may be said at once that it promises very well for the quality of the future volumes. Mr. Evetts was exceptionally qualified by his previous work—his admirable edition of Abû Sâlih and his assistance of Mr. Butler in his 'Arab Conquest of Egypt'—to undertake an edition of this text. He has consulted six MSS. of the work (though these do not exhaust the number even of copies in Europe), and has produced thence a reasonable text, wherein his emendations of the many puzzling proper names are often especially happy. His translation is readable, idiomatic, and yet sufficiently literal. It is much to be hoped that he will continue his edition down to the thirteenth century, where, to the great loss of all who have to study the history of Egyptian Christianity, the invaluable chronicle ceases. The system of the 'Patrology' appears to be that text and translation shall be issued in parts simultaneously, while commentary and introduction are reserved for the conclusion of each volume: a plan, it must be owned, which few who use the books can approve, although it has its advantages for the editors, who are thus enabled to mature their conclusions.

Severus, Bishop of Eshmunên (Hermopolis Magna), whose name the patriarchal history usually bears, though but some two-thirds of it are from his pen, was a prominent Coptic divine of the tenth century, whose treatises, dealing chiefly with the sectarian disputes of his day, are enumerated by Abû 'l-Barakât, and are mostly extant to-day in Europe. It is strange that the list of his writings does not include the present chronicle, the only one of them by which he is likely to be remembered. His slightly earlier contemporary and rival, the Melkite patriarch Eutychius, whose annals have been known and distrusted since the seventeenth century, was the object of one of his polemics. Our chronicle was itself long ago introduced to Western students. In 1713 Renaudot published his invaluable 'History of the Alexandrine Patriarchs'—invaluable because based mainly upon this very compilation. Renaudot had, however, no high opinion of his author's worth, and his estimate was more than approved by Gibbon (see a note in chap. xlvii.). Indeed, as regards the earlier periods, distrust is no doubt justified; for Severus, though he draws freely upon a Coptic version (or possibly abstract) of Eusebius, too often manages to distort the text. But when the Arab conquest has been reached there is no longer any question as to his value. From the seventh century to his own day Severus is our best, generally our sole, authority for the history of the national church, whereof the Muslim writers (excepting Makrizi) of course say nothing; while for the remaining period (tenth to thirteenth centuries) there is no choice among authorities, and we become wholly dependent upon his continuators.

For the first three centuries Severus plainly had access, besides Eusebius, to various local documents (acts, martyrdoms, traditions).

This is especially evident in his accounts of St. Mark, of Demetrius, and of Peter I. But in what form these sources were available to him is a question still requiring investigation. He owns to being dependent on translations not only of Greek, but even of Coptic texts—so far was the ancient language already extinct—and it is to be hoped that Mr. Evetts will be able, with the help of what still remains of the Coptic versions of such acta, to trace some of his statements at least one step further back.

WE congratulate the promoters of The Hibbert Journal (Williams & Norgate) on a success which is by this time fully assured. The January number (vol. iii. No. 2), just out, contains two articles on the Scotch Church Crisis, by Mr. A. Taylor Innes and Dr. John Watson respectively. A young layman of ability, Mr. W. A. Pickard-Cambridge, writes freshly on 'The Christ of Dogma and of Experience'; and there are three articles on cosmic problems which, though independently produced, may be "considered," the editor points out, "as forming a group," Mr. Newman Howard writing on 'The Warp of the World,' and Prof. Keyser on 'The Universe and Beyond,' while Sir Oliver Lodge, in 'Mind and Matter,' firmly but politely exposes the obsolescent materialism of Prof. Haeckel. Mr. Howard's article is of especial interest to us, because it was foreshadowed in a paper of his published in this journal on April 30th of last year. He finds reason to believe that the foundations of music are those of all cosmic rhythms, and deduces thence the truth of intuition of the beautiful, reaffirming Keats's immortal collocation of truth and beauty. An admirable feature of the Journal is a 'Bibliography of Recent Literature.' We have persistently pleaded for such lists, which are a necessity in an age which rejoices in a multitude of books and a scarcity of experts.

WE have on our table Old Florence and Modern Tuscany, by J. Ross (Dent),—Round the World: Europe, by W. V. Mingard (Jack),—A Synopsis of Roman History to 138 A.D., by W. F. Mason and J. F. Stout (Clive),—Victorian Year-Book, 1903 (Melbourne, Sands & McDougall),—The Practical Statutes of the Session 1904, by J. S. Cotton (Cox),—Poverty, by R. Hunter (Macmillan),—The Science of Peace, by B. Das (Theosophical Publishing Society),—Daily Thoughts from Dante Alighieri, by J. B. (Stock),—The Story of the Merchant of Venice, retold by A. S. Hoffman (Dent),—How to Build a Bicycle, by H. R. S. Williams (Dawbarn & Ward),—Life's Lesser Moods, by C. L. Hind (Black),—Through Many Voices, by D. Earl (Bemrose),—The Doctrine of the Atonement, by the late A. Sabatier, translated from the French by V. Leuliette (Williams & Norgate),—The Gospel of the Childhood of our Lord Jesus Christ, translated from the Latin by H. C. Greene, with an Introduction by Alice Meynell (Burns & Oates),—Masters' Christian Classics, edited by V. Staley: The Psalter in English Verse, Part II., by John Keble (Brown & Langham),—Maria Creatrix, and other Poems, by the Rev. T. H. Passmore (Stock),—Totenhochzeit, by O. Schrader (Jena, Costenoble),—and Von den ältesten Drucken der Dramen Shakespeares, by R. Proells (Leipsic, Berger).

LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

ENGLISH.

Theology.

Men of the New Testament: Matthew to Timothy, by Various Authors, cr. 8vo, 3/6 net.
Practical Questions, cr. 8vo, 6/
St. Boniface (The Life and Times of), by J. M. Williamson, cr. 8vo, 5/ net.

Law.

Rowlands (E. B. Bowen-), Criminal Proceedings of Indictment and Information in England and Wales, 8vo, 12/6

Fine Art and Archaeology.

Ancestor (The), No. 12, imp. 8vo, 5/ net.
Egyptian Exploration Fund Archaeological Report, 1903-4, edited by F. L. Griffith, 4to, sewed, 2/6 net.

Poetry and the Drama.

Pemberton (H. L. Child-), Her Own Enemy, a Play in Four Acts, cr. 8vo, 2/6 net.

History and Biography.

Chamberlain (Rt. Hon. Joseph), Life of, by L. Creswicke, Vol. 4, roy. 8vo, 7/6 net.
Compton Wynyates, by William, Marquis of Northampton, 4to, 21/ net.
Rhodes (J. F.), History of the United States from the Compromise of 1850: Vol. 5, 1854-6, 8vo, 12/
Watt (James), of Soho and Heathfield, by T. E. Pemberton, cr. 8vo, 3/ net.

Sports and Pastimes.

Cars and how to Drive Them, Part 2, roy. 8vo, 3/6

Science.

Dobbin (L.) and Marshall (H.), Salts and their Reactions, 8vo, 3/6 net.
Ferguson (J. S.), Normal Histology and Microscopical Anatomy, 8vo, 21/ net.
Janeway (T. C.), The Clinical Study of Blood Pressure, 8vo, 14/ net.
Macfadden (B.), Diseases of Men, cr. 8vo, 4/6 net.

General Literature.

Cambridge University Calendar, 1904-5, cr. 8vo, 7/6 net.
Church Directory and Almanack, 1905, boards, 2/6 net.
Clergy Directory, 1905, cr. 8vo, 4/6
Ferne (W. T.), Meals Medicinal, 8vo, 9/ net.
Grant (M.), A Child of Love, cr. 8vo, 4/6 net.
Hendy (J. G.), The History of the Early Postmarks of the British Isles, cr. 8vo, 5/6 net.
Literary Year-Book and Bookman's Directory, 1905, 5/ net.
McCracken (E.), The Women of America, cr. 8vo, 6/6 net.
Medical Directory, 1905, roy. 8vo, 14/ net.
Oliver & Boyd's Edinburgh Almanack and National Repository, 1905, 12mo, 6/6 net.
Post Office London Directory, 1905, imp. 8vo, 40/
Rennison (R.), George's Geographia, cr. 8vo, 6/
Royal Blue Book, January, 1905, cr. 8vo, 5/ net.

FOREIGN.

Theology.

Jeremias (A.), Babylonisches im Neuen Testament, 3m.

Fine Art and Archaeology.

Monumenta Palaeographica, Erg. v. Chroust, Part 1, Series 1, Section 16, 20m.

Bibliography.

Chauvin (V.), Bibliographie des Ouvrages Arabes ou relatifs aux Arabes publiés dans l'Europe Chrétienne de 1810 à 1885: Part 8, Syntipas, 5m. 20.
Meyer (F.), Verzeichniss e. Heinrich Heine-Bibliothek, 4m. 50.

History and Biography.

Altmann (W.), Richard Wagners Briefe nach Zeitfolge u. Inhalt, 9m.
Blok (P. J.), Geschichte der Niederlande: Vol. 2, Bis 1559, 18m.
Piton (C.), Marly-le-Roi, son Histoire, 697-1904, 15fr.
Schnitzer (J.), Quellen u. Forschungen zur Geschichte Savonarolas, III., 3m. 40.
Schrauf (K.), Die Wiener Universität im Mittelalter, 10m.

Sports and Pastimes.

Bachmann (L.), Schachjahrbuch f. 1904, 2m.

Philology.

Daniels (A. J.), Kasussyntax zu den Predigten Wulfstans, 4m.

Science.

Collin (E.) et Perrot (E.), Les Résidus Industriels de la Fabrication des Huiles et Essences, 15fr.
Launoy (L.), Précis de Technique Histologique, 3fr.

MR. JOHN HENRY LOCK.

THE death of Mr. John Henry Lock, which took place on December 29th after a short illness, removes a figure long associated with a well-known publishing house. Mr. Lock, who succumbed to an attack of pneumonia at the age of sixty-two, was a remarkably young and active man for his years, and was in his place as manager of the financial department of Messrs. Ward, Lock & Co. down to a few days before his death.

Mr. Lock was a member of an old Dorsetshire family, which for two generations has been identified with various interests of the publishing world. He was the younger brother of the late Mr. George Lock, who, in conjunction with Mr. Ebenezer Ward, started the publishing business of Messrs. Ward, Lock & Co. in 1854. Originally established in Fleet Street, the firm moved, via Amen Corner, to its present quarters at Warwick House, Salisbury Square, in 1878, having in the meantime acquired the chief copyrights of older firms as varied as Edward Moxon, William Tegg, and, at a somewhat later date, the versatile S. O. Beeton. Moxon's famous editions of all the older poets of the nineteenth century incidentally became the property of the firm, which has since reissued them in various forms; and at a subsequent date the acquirement of "The Select Library of Fiction" concentrated in its hands the bulk of the works of such Victorian novelists as Trollope, Henry Kingsley, Whyte Melville, Lever, Mrs. Oliphant, Hawley Smart, and others. The firm was happy in a beginning which coincided with a period of real demand for educational books in a popular form, and soon took a prominent place among the pioneers of such standard works as 'Webster's Dictionary,' 'The Webster Spelling Book,' and other reference books.

John Henry Lock spent his entire business life in the one firm, becoming a junior partner in it in 1879, and a director in 1893, when it was made a private limited liability company. His loss will be greatly regretted by a large circle of friends and associates. Indeed, it may be said that no one who came into contact with Mr. Lock in the course of his long career could fail to appreciate the innate kindness and consideration of his character. He was a man essentially just in business and friendship alike, and the members of the staff with which he was associated, past and present, will regret the loss of a valued friend.

'THE VICEROY'S POSTBAG.'

149, Abbeville Road, Clapham Park, S.W.

PERHAPS you will permit me to correct two slips in your notice of my book 'The Viceroy's Postbag.' Both have reference to the section of the book dealing with the Emmet insurrection. "The insurrection of Emmet was already well known to us," says the reviewer, "and had been carefully told in Moore's 'Life' of him long ago, but we have in the present book many more interesting details." There is no life of Robert Emmet by Moore. The reviewer also says my book contains "a fuller and more exact narrative of Emmet's rebellion than we have yet read—all from the private correspondence of Lord Hardwicke." On the contrary, this particular section of my book is based—as I state in the preface—not on the Hardwicke letters, but on the secret papers of the Home Office, to which I was the first writer to be allowed access by the Secretary of State. These papers are in three large volumes, marked "Ireland, 1803. Most Secret and Confidential."

MICHAEL MACDONAGH.

THE following quotation from an unpublished letter (Hastings MSS., British Museum) of Sir John D'Oyly, then residing in Ireland, to Warren Hastings, may be interesting to readers of your review of Mr. MacDonagh's 'The Viceroy's Postbag':—

"What melancholy news from Dublin!—I trust however the Defection is not as widely extended as we at first imagined, and that they have no Leaders of Note.—But what are we to think of the Police of a City where such immense Depôts of Arms and Ammunition could be secretly established, or of the Vigilance of a Gent who having received actual Information of the Plot itself (two Gentlemen waited on Mr. Marsden the Secretary on Sat. morning with Intelligence on the Subject, but were not attended to) took no precautionary Measures for the Security of the Capital? No Credit seems to have been given to the Existence of such Plot till poor Miss Kilwarden broke into Mr. Marsden's Room, where he was sitting over his Bottle, with the News of the Murder of her Father and Cousin, of which she had just been a Witness. What appears, if possible, still more extraordinary is that on Sunday morning there was not a Ball Cartridge to be had in the Arsenal of Dublin."

SYDNEY C. GRIER.

HISTORY AND THE SCIENCE OF ARCHIVES.

THE newly appointed Regius Professor of Modern History at Oxford has lost no time in stating his views on the urgent question of our present method of historical study. The pronouncement was made by Prof. Firth in the form of an inaugural lecture entirely devoted to this momentous subject. As we might have expected, the new professor shows himself to be a strenuous advocate of the scientific teaching of history which for a long time past has been practised on the Continent. It will be remembered that the late Prof. York Powell held very similar views, which he did not hesitate to express in equally forcible language, though his criticism was directed chiefly against the authorities whom he regarded as responsible for the better ordering of our Archives. In his recent address the present Regius Professor strikes a new note. His appeal is addressed not to the Government to provide teachers of history with an effectual apparatus for research, but to the teachers themselves to train a body of students capable of original and, above all, of independent research. On the whole, we believe that this plan would be preferable to that of depending on a State school of technical historical study. At the same time we have no wish to minimize the difficulties that must be faced by students trained in an academic seminar when they change (as they inevitably must) the clear light of the Bodleian for the nebulous atmosphere of the metropolitan archives.

We read in the latest text-book on the "literature and sources" of our national history that this country unfortunately possesses no adequate treatise on its unrivalled archives, whereas considerable attention has been given to the subject abroad. The same remark has more recently been repeated in the official introduction to the admirable Report of the Treasury Committee on Local Records, but its full significance appears to have escaped the attention of English scholars. To foreigners the fact has long been known, and has frequently been the subject of unflattering comment. But although the moral which our own officials have offered for our consideration is sufficiently obvious, it must in justice to ourselves be remembered that even on the Continent the "science of archives" is a comparatively new one. Moreover, we could point to much solid work accomplished by official antiquaries since the reign of Queen Elizabeth, while throughout the whole of the eighteenth century greater attention was probably paid to this subject in England than could be spared by the militant and evanescent states upon the Continent. Finally, the prodigious feat accomplished during the past century in the centralization and rearrangement of the Public Records alone, has excited general admiration, and the merits of the modern official inventory or 'Guide' have been gracefully acknowledged in many lands. Even holiday students are unconsciously imbibing the rudiments of the new science. The manuscript exhibits in the British Museum and in the Record Office Museum founded by the present Deputy Keeper have proved an invaluable object-lesson to the masses, whilst many "educated" persons are now aware that Magna Carta was not signed by King John with a quill-pen, and that Domesday Book is not inscribed in "black-letter."

It might be thought, therefore, that hitherto we have, on the whole, got on very well without a "science of archives," and that the impatience of the modern student of history with the present rate of progress in the discovery and arrangement of sources is due to a failure to appreciate the conditions under which the work must inevitably be performed. The neglected bibliography of our own "archive economy" would perhaps reveal the appalling crisis through which we have yet scarcely passed. In the works of older antiquaries we have complacent references to the just appreciation of the records by intelligent sovereigns as "the chiefest jewels of their crowns." In all times the sanctity and authority of these legal evidences have been admitted and maintained by every party in the State, and on occasion they could serve as a bond of interest to unite the whole nation in opposition to foreign pretensions or internal abuses, whilst their authority has been eagerly cited on either side in every constitutional crisis of the State. Yet in the face of this general recognition of the value of the national records, we have the damning evidence of the irreparable losses which they have sustained. These were due partly to the personal neglect of their official custodians, and equally to the wanton refusal of Parliaments and ministries to adopt the simplest precautions for their safe keeping. The whole scheme of the custody and arrangement of the Records was subordinated to the exaction of fees by Patent officers and their needy deputies. The repository became a commercial warehouse where the articles for which there was a ready demand were duly preserved, and even temptingly displayed in official catalogues. The residue, consigned to some dusty attic or noisome vault, was allowed to moulder and rot unheeded. At length the day came when the Government ceased to haggle over the refitting of the lofts and cellars, the tanks and stables, which had become the last refuge of the greatest national treasure possessed by any country in the world. What was left of our national archives was transferred to a central repository, and we began to count our losses. These were indeed heavy; but they were not the only ones that had been suffered. When, after centuries of neglect, the archives were to some extent arranged and catalogued, it was found that the injury sustained by the nation could not be measured by these gaps alone. In one direction the local archives had been pillaged by enterprising antiquaries. In another quarter the official correspondence of the State continued to be carried off by successive ministers almost down to our own times, and from this private custody numberless documents have found their way into some great library or national collection.

The results of this devolution have, on the whole, been surprisingly favourable from the point of view of the preservation of these sources. At the same time, this independent survival is attended with one great disadvantage to private students. The originals of these historical manuscripts are often inaccessible, and they have in many cases been inadequately described in memoirs or reports, whilst their relationship with the parallel series in official custody has rarely been indicated. It will be evident that these grave irregularities, which were only too easily condoned, have thrown a heavy burden upon the modern archivist and student alike. The one has had to evolve order out of chaos, and to close the gaps which he can no longer fill up. The other, after he has grasped the endless intricacies of an official classification based on an Edwardian system, when he is at length acquainted with the official sources which exist for a particular episode in the history of the last two centuries, has still to reckon with the external documents which fill the gaps in the official series, or which supplement its evidence. For this purpose he must embark upon a new enterprise, not unlike some that will be familiar to the readers of a modern detective romance. He must connect a certain statesman or official body with the possession of these papers, and then trace their descent, often through numerous ramifications. Failing this, he must watch for their inevitable devolution to the national archives or to a public library.

For it is not enough that we should merely find and use a document; we should also know its manuscript relations. By treating every document as a separate unit we are in danger of making "documentary" history in a spasmodic and desultory manner. When a new document has been "discovered" our histories are made to accord with its evidence. Then another document is found, and our latest views must be modified, and so on, without any assurance of finality. These new discoveries and new views, ever shifting with the progress of research, are not only prejudicial to the reputation of the historian, but also exercise a demoralizing influence on our historical method.

The above reflection is not intended to convey the vague proposal of an impossible ideal, or to obscure the limits of historical research imposed by the requirements of literary proportion. The student of history must of necessity be sternly practical; but that he should secure himself against possible surprises would seem a measure of common prudence. Otherwise he would resemble a general advancing into the interior of an enemy's country by easy stages along a broad highway, leaving on either side woods and defiles unrecognised—the archives that may conceal an army of hostile facts.

The fact is that whilst all that pertains to the ethical or philosophical consideration of historical facts or problems, to analytical and synthetic criticism, and to the auxiliary studies necessary for the equipment of the thinker, the worker, or the critic, has been brought to a high degree of perfection; whilst time and money and still more precious scholarship have been lavished upon the publication and republication of historical texts which possess a conventional or a sensational interest, comparatively little attention has been paid, as Prof. Firth has so clearly shown, to that important branch of historical method to which German scholars have given the somewhat dreary title of "Heuristic." But in this particular instance we have not sinned alone. The historians of every country in the past have displayed a notorious lack of initiative in the discovery of materials. Even editors and commentators have preferred to ring the changes upon a few groups of famous records or MSS., whilst bibliographers and cataloguers have seldom found an interest in describing or classifying documents the historical or literary value of which was not well established.

There lies a famous manuscript, as sound and fresh as though this were the decade of its compilation, or else a shrivelled and tattered mass of parchment or paper restored by the marvellous art of the repairer. It is bravely bound in velvet or morocco, and is protected by a glass case. It has been honoured by countless sittings to photographers and artists, and it has been painfully transcribed by many generations of eager antiquaries. It has been printed and edited with all the skill and learning known to modern historical science, or, again, it has been utilized as the groundwork of an original treatise, the materials of which have been selected with the nicest scholarship and its plan constructed by a master mind. Finally, the manuscript itself, its facsimiles, its transcripts, its published texts or commentaries, have been described and classified by archivists and bibliographers in many works of reference. Here we see the recognition of a single document, but it is a process that has occupied the attention of several generations of scholars. As far as preliminary researches are concerned, the student's work is already done for him; but what proportion do these edited pieces bear to the whole mass of historical documents? If we sift the corn from the chaff by withdrawing obsolete texts and worthless inventories, the handful of grain is a small one.

These instances of the disadvantages under which our archivists have laboured, as well as of the capricious zeal which our scholars have frequently displayed in the cause of historical research, are by no means exhaustive. But if we admit that the existing conditions under which that research is carried on are unsatisfactory, it naturally concerns us to seek for some remedy, whether it be partial or complete.

Now if we were concerned with the general subject of the administration of our national archives, it would, doubtless, be possible to offer numerous suggestions inspired by the scientific literature which, as our official mentors have reminded us, is devoted to this subject abroad. We might, for instance, suggest the necessity for an inventory of the manuscript sources of our national history, like that which is appearing in France under very able direction. We might urge the practical success of the foreign missions historiques, both public and private, as an inducement for attempting to produce a comprehensive inventory of our historical sources abroad. We might endorse the recent dictum of MM. Langlois and Seignobos that historical MSS. are of comparatively little use to students outside of a public collection, or we might emulate the courage of these admirable authorities when they broadly hint that although an archivist should be the first to discover a rare document, he is, whilst catalogues remain on hand, the last person by whom it may be edited. We might still further occupy ourselves, more or less profitably, with a variety of abstruse and purely technical subjects which are handled with consummate skill by foreign experts; but, as matters stand, we have no desire to discuss the administrative question at all.

It would not, in fact, arise out of a review of the present attempt to improve our methods of historical study on academic lines, if there was not an apparent disposition in some quarters to regard an École des Chartes, with the drastic reforms in our archive economy which its establishment would necessarily involve, as a panacea for our educational shortcomings. But the continental and the English archive systems have scarcely a single condition or a single feature in common, and we are tempted to wonder if this rudimentary fact is generally known. We have no Ministry of Public Instruction, no official body of professors or doctors of history, and no departmental archives providing the chief employment of archivists. Our archives are under the nominal supervision of various dignitaries, who in some cases are probably unaware of their existence, and whose nominees are excellent officials without the least claim or desire to be regarded as "archivists."

Surely there is no opening here for an École des Chartes; but if for us French science is unattainable, we can still call German learning to our aid. There is a middle course between the worship of fortune and the cult of archives, and that leads to the plain study of sources. For after all what chiefly concerns the student is that he may be able to ascertain with speed and certainty the existence of particular sources, and their precise description for the purpose of reference. This information he will be able to obtain, in the case of printed sources, from the scientific bibliography which should furnish him with a key to every historical library. But with the exception of the general headings in official inventories, there exists no key to the historical subjects respecting which information may be found amongst our public records.

One explanation of this omission may be that the modern student is, comparatively speaking, a new-comer to our archives. In former days these were regarded as the special province of the legal practitioner and the legal antiquary, who shared with the zealous genealogist and the laborious topographer the mercenary attentions of their ill-trained custodians. Some devoted scholars there doubtless were whose learned monographs still excite our wonder and despair; but these men were neither trained historians nor efficient archivists, and their historical method was necessarily limited by the meagre sources at their command.

At length, some fifty years ago, the modern historian appeared upon the scene, as a patron of archives, but not as yet an original investigator. Like the dexterous crustacean that finds a covering for its vulnerable parts amongst the débris of the shore, our historian made shift to fortify his conclusions with the derelict texts and calendars of the old Record Commission. Later still, his wants have been supplied through an enlightened official régime by faultless texts, exhaustive calendars, and descriptive catalogues. It is, therefore, scarcely surprising that the need for an historical subject-index to the archives at large has been scarcely felt until our own time. But now the history schools of our own, and still more of foreign universities, have begun to send out a daily increasing army of students bent on exploring the innermost recesses of our archives. The time, then, has surely come when some attempt must be made to bring the mere student into touch with the skilled archivist. Abroad, as we have seen, it is contrived that each should understand the technical language of the other; for in default of such a system, it is scarcely reasonable to expect that the historical student should manifest a deep interest in a purely professional subject, or that the archivist should be prepared to grasp at once all the bearings of an abstruse historical thesis. Here, then, there seems to be room for a complementary study of the science of archives which may one day furnish us with an historical inventory and concordance of subjects and sources. The usefulness, if not the necessity of such a work, will scarcely be denied, but of its feasibility some doubts may well be entertained. And yet the problem has been fairly solved by a foreign scholar in the case of our mediæval printed sources. Our historical bibliography is the product of half a century of painful experiment, and its beginnings were sufficiently humble. This would furnish a ground-plan for such a work as we have contemplated; for the sources that we have in view are but historical texts yet unpublished, and for the most part they will merely supplement our printed literature. The difficulty will lie in the concordance of technical terms with historical ideas.

But although the harvest is so large the labourers are still few. It would seem that for the present we must largely rely on alien workers, but fortunately some of our ablest teachers have now the knowledge and, we are sure, the will to provide the preliminary instruction which facilitates the use of these original sources. The better equipment of our students from the light of our own hard-earned experience is a duty that we owe to ourselves and to posterity.

THE BOOK SALES OF 1904.

II.

MESSRS. HODGSON'S sale of March 9th contained a clean copy of 'The Exquisites,' by Thackeray, with the lithographic plates coloured, a hitherto unknown variation. This book brought 85*l.*, as against 58*l.* realized in December, 1898, for an example with the plates uncoloured. This just shows what a distinction with some sort of a difference can accomplish, for the plates are only four in number. Hubbard's 'Present State of New England,' 1677, with the genuine "Wine Hills" map, realized 45*l.*; and a clean copy of 'Endymion,' in the original boards, containing the leaf of errata, 27*l.* We next come to the late Sir Peter Edlin's library, sold by Messrs. Sotheby on March 12th, and leave it with the observation that it contained nothing of much importance. Mr. Henley's library was dispersed on March 14th, and contained a considerable number of presentation books. A complete set of the plays he produced in collaboration with Stevenson, four in number, and all in the original wrappers, realized 22*l.* When the Stevenson "boom" was at its height, in April, 1899, this set would, or ought to, have realized about 60*l.* The first volume of Stevenson's works—the "Edinburgh Edition"—contained a pathetic dedication, specially printed—"To William Ernest Henley and Anna his wife. O pulchra filia! O filia aureola! Vale, Vale—Et in aeternum—?" This was much commented upon at the time.

Messrs. Puttick & Simpson's sale of March 16th and 17th had been cleverly catalogued, a circumstance that no doubt assisted very materially from a marketable point of view. The first issue of the original edition of Sir Thomas Browne's 'Religio Medici,' 1642, brought 25*l.*; one of the twenty-five copies on vellum of the Doves edition of 'Paradise Lost,' 1902, 38*l.*; and the 'Vicar of Wakefield,' 2 vols., Salisbury, 1766, 75*l.* (original calf). Next comes Messrs. Sotheby's sale of March 21st and 22nd, which realized 2,700*l.*, a small matter for that firm. This collection was of a good old-fashioned kind, consisting entirely of sporting books, and those having illustrations of the "Phiz" and Cruikshank school. Alken's 'National Sports,' 1821, realized 60*l.*, and the rarely seen 'Ideas Accidental and Incidental,' published by Maclean, without date, 40*l.* Woodward's 'Caricature Magazine,' 5 vols., brought 75*l.*; 'The Humourist,' 4 vols., 1819-20, 40*l.*; and Dickens's 'Strange Gentleman,' 1837, with the frontispiece by "Phiz," which is nearly always missing, 14*l.* (wrappers). The farce of 'The Strange Gentleman' was founded on 'The Great Winglebury Duel' in the 'Sketches by Boz,' and was performed at the St. James's Theatre on September 29th, 1836. As is well known, 'Vanity Fair' is extremely scarce when in the original parts. The set sold on this occasion realized no less than 102*l.*, as against 62*l.* 10*s.* in October, 1902. The small collection of books sold by Messrs. Christie on March 29th contained the 'Liber Studiorum,' which brought 540*l.* Four plates were missing, but the majority of those that remained were in the first state. It will be remembered that the same firm sold a complete set of the 71 published plates, nearly all in the first state, for 566*l.* on November 22nd last.

On April 18th Messrs. Sotheby commenced one of those important miscellaneous sales which nowadays have almost usurped the place of the old private libraries. The catalogue comprised 1,188 entries, and the total amount realized was in excess of 11,400*l.* It is impossible to do more than refer to this sale in a very general way. Dibdin might have written a thick quarto about it. I find I made a mistake in quoting the price realized for the collection of books by and concerning Marat as 45*l.*; the actual amount was 20*l.*, and should have been higher. We find the Kelmscott 'Chaucer' reduced to 41*l.* (as issued), and the 'Poems' of Shakspeare to 4*l.* 5*s.* Many of the less important books from this press have suffered to a still greater extent. This, however, is a small matter. A number of the books offered at this sale were of unusual interest; nor must we forget the original warrant for the arrest of John Bunyan, which Mr. W. G. Thorpe picked up for a trifle: it realized 305*l.* The 'Dives et Pauper' of 1493, the first of Pynson's books with a date, brought 75*l.*; Caxton's 'Ryal Book,' circa 1487-8, two leaves in facsimile and some others mended, 295*l.*; the first edition of the second part of Shakspeare's 'Henrie the Fourth,' 1600, 1,035*l.* (two leaves washed and mended, morocco extra); a volume of Elizabethan tracts from the libraries of Edmund Spenser and Gabriel Harvey, 102*l.*; and the scarce work of Antoine Watteau on large paper, 2 vols., folio, n.d., 620*l.* (old morocco). A long series of early quarto and other plays realized very high prices—e.g., Cooke's 'Greene's Tu Quoque,' 1614, 96*l.* (uncut); John Day's 'Faire Maide of Bristow,' 1605, 89*l.* (cut); Chapman's 'The Widdowes Teares,' 1612, 106*l.* (uncut); and Dekker's 'Whore of Babylon,' 1607, 120*l.* (uncut). For Ben Jonson's 'Chloridia,' 1630, a masque of 10 leaves, 145*l.* was obtained (uncut). It may just be mentioned before passing on that John Wesley's first hymn-book, published anonymously in 1737, during the writer's mission to Georgia, brought 106*l*.

On May 3rd Burns's original MS. of 'The Whistle,' together with an autograph letter addressed to "Old Q.," realized 155*l*., and the editio princeps of the immortal work of Thomas à Kempis, 85*l*. (another copy sold at Paris a few weeks ago for 110*l*.). This was printed by Günther Zainer about the year 1471. The first edition with a date appeared at Venice in 1483 and was the earliest in the Waterton Collection. The portion of the library of Mr. J. W. Ford, of Enfield Old Park, contained some excellent books, the whole realizing more than 2,600*l*. Mr. Ford had some valuable editions of Goldsmith, and a fine presentation copy of Evelyn's 'Sylva,' 1670, which realized 15*l*. (large paper, original calf). I have reported Mr. J. Taylor Bell's extensive library of economic literature very fully in 'Book-Prices Current,' as it was of a very unusual character. The sale occupied Messrs. Hodgson on May 9th and four following days, and realized something over 2,000*l*. This collection is said to have cost Mr. Bell more than five times as much. Other important sales held during May included the library of Mr. William Crampton, and a miscellaneous collection of books sold on the 26th. The latter included a fragment of twenty-eight leaves from the 'De Amicitia' of Cicero, printed by Caxton in 1481, 125*l*. Another Caxton fragment was sold at Hodgson's on November 16th for 100*l*. It comprised thirty-six leaves from the first edition of 'The Myrrour of the Worlde.' A fragment, perhaps of the same copy, also consisting, curiously enough, of thirty-six leaves, was in the Sneyd library, and sold in December, 1903, for 103*l*.

Prof. Corfield's library, or rather that part of it sold on June 10th, was of little importance. An imperfect copy of the original edition of Walton's 'Angler,' 1653, is noticeable. It realized 61*l*., while an uncut copy of White's 'Selborne' in the original half binding brought 28*l*. 10*s*. The collection formed by the late Mr. Dykes Campbell included a copy of 'Pauline,' in the original boards, which changed hands at the record price of 325*l*. The previous copy sold by auction brought 120*l*. in December, 1900 (boards). Other high prices realized about this time include Dibdin's 'Bibliographical Decameron,' 3 vols., 1817, extra-illustrated, 90*l*.; Dugdale's 'Monasticon,' 12 vols., 1817-30, also extra-illustrated, 98*l*.; the first edition of the first part of 'Don Quixote,' Madrid, 1605, 94*l*. (contemporary vellum); a fairly good copy of the First Folio of Shakspeare's works, 950*l*. (this book was bought for five guineas in 1772); an annotated copy of the second Edinburgh edition of Burns's poems, 1793, 150*l*.; the autograph MS. of 'The Cotter's Saturday Night,' on four folio sheets, 500*l*.; and many Tennyson proof-sheets, all of which seem to have been secured for American collectors. The proof-sheets of 'Enid and Nimuë,' described in The Fortnightly Review of October, 1865, brought 210*l*. On July 11th Mr. Julian Marshall's copy of Haden's 'Études à l'Eau Forte,' Paris, 1866, brought 168*l*., but it had several additional etchings inserted. On December 14th last the series of twenty-five proof etchings and five vignettes, in a portfolio, realized 136*l*. at Hodgson's. The library of the late Mr. Philip Brookes Mason, sold by Mr. J. C. Stevens on July 12th, consisted entirely of works on natural history; and that of Sir Albert Woods, the Garter King, chiefly of genealogical treatises. On July 29th a copy of the original edition of 'Moll Flanders,' in the original calf as published, sold for 130*l*., though stained, and the unfortunate Dr. Dodd's copy of Shakspeare, 9 vols. 8vo, 1747, 131*l*. Another and imperfect First Folio brought 420*l*. Many other valuable and interesting works were disposed of just at the close of the season, but the sales, as a whole, dragged somewhat. One collection was of a most unusual character. It consisted entirely of Elizabethan dictionaries, grammars, and other linguistic works, formed by the late Prof. Helwick, of Prague. It is interesting to note that the first Latin-English dictionary published in this country is that by Sir Thomas Elyot, printed by Berthelet, one of Henry VIII.'s binders, in 1538, folio.

The sales held during the last month or two are well within recollection. The library of Mr. W. Sharp Ogden, of Manchester, contained what has come to be known as "Shakspeare's Bible," containing two signatures and the astounding inscription "off S. O. A.," supposed to mean "of Stratford-on-Avon." It realized 210*l*., less than the 'Robinson Crusoe,' which brought 250*l*. When autograph experts are confronted with a signature purporting to be that of Shakspeare, a ghost invariably rises and confounds them. In April last Rastall's collection of statutes, 1598, containing the signature "W<sup>m</sup> Shakspeare," realized but 80*l*. It had a pedigree of fifty years only. The fine collection of bindings formed by Prof. Corfield was catalogued by Messrs. Sotheby in a way that cannot be sufficiently praised. The beautiful coloured plates, many of them folding, invest this catalogue with a high educational value. The English portion was particularly fine, comprising books from the libraries of Edward VI., James I., Charles II., and Queen Anne, and more than fifty examples of the work of the royal binders, Samuel and Charles Mearne. John Reynes, Berthelet, and Godfrey of Cambridge were also represented. The entire collection realized 5,010*l*. On November 23rd Messrs. Puttick & Simpson sold a copy of that rare book 'The Victim' for 51*l*. The libraries of three royal Dukes have been sold by auction since 1827, viz., the Duke of York's library in that year (5,700*l*.), the Duke of Sussex's library in 1844 (19,000*l*.), and that of the Duke of Cambridge on December 2nd and 3rd last (1,725*l*.).

The last really important sale held during the year that has just closed was of a miscellaneous collection of books, dispersed by Messrs. Sotheby on December 7th to 10th. More than 12,000*l*. was realized, 1,560*l*. being paid for the family Bible of Robert Burns, and 4,000*l*. for the Latin Psalter of 1459. These two volumes have already been alluded to. Many other valuable books were disposed of on this occasion—so many that it would be impossible to describe them in a small compass; nor is it necessary to do so, as a very useful report of the sale was given in The Athenæum so recently as December 17th. All that need be said is that, given books of a really interesting, scarce, and valuable character, the tendency is all in favour of higher prices. No doubt the limit will be reached some day, but the time is evidently not yet. J. HERBERT SLATER.

THE REV. R. LOVETT.

THE ranks of experts in the literature of the printed English Bible and of Protestant missions have suffered a heavy loss by the sudden death, on December 29th, of the Rev. Richard Lovett, one of the Secretaries of the Religious Tract Society. Born at Croydon on January 5th, 1851, Mr. Lovett began active life at an early age in the warehouse of a New York publisher. Returning to England, he entered Cheshunt College, and took his B.A. and M.A. degrees at London. In 1876 he was called to the charge of the Countess of Huntingdon Chapel at Rochdale, where he worked until he was appointed, in 1882, book editor of the R.T.S., in succession to the Rev. Dr. Green. When, in 1899, Dr. Green retired from the secretaryship of the Society, Mr. Lovett was again chosen as his successor.

Mr. Lovett's work, both as book editor and as Secretary of the R.T.S., brought him into intimate relations with many authors, to some of whom, in their first literary experiences, he gave much kindly encouragement. He himself wrote with facility, mainly upon the two subjects in which he was deeply interested. His 'History of the London Missionary Society' entailed some years of hard work, and, no doubt, helped to impair a constitution never robust. His 'James Chalmers of New Guinea' and his 'Gilmour of Mongolia' are two missionary biographies written with enthusiasm, and amongst the most widely read books of their order. The history of the English Bible had for Mr. Lovett an irresistible charm. His own collection was one of much value, and he was always a watchful student of the subject. A primer on 'The Printed English Bible' and his catalogue of the English Bibles in the Rylands Library at Manchester were the serious outcome of a pursuit which was to him a recreation.

In politics a Liberal and ecclesiastically a Congregationalist, Mr. Lovett was intimately associated with many Nonconformist organizations; but he had not a few friends in the Church of England, who knew how to value his sterling character and kindly disposition. For many years he had known that his heart was weak, and during the last few months he had had two or three warning attacks of faintness. But he had a passion for work. The affairs of the Society he had served so long, the interests of Cheshunt College (now passing through a crisis), the work of the London Missionary Society, the prospects of the book upon which he was engaged—these things absorbed him, and he said little as to his health. Two days before his death he was playing golf with a colleague, and down to the moment of his seizure he appeared to be as well as ever. He has left many friends who will not soon forget his ready sympathy, loyal co-operation, and goodness of heart.

THE BRITISH MUSEUM READING-ROOM.

7, Coptic Street, W.C.

I HAVE been officially informed that the Trustees of the British Museum do not see their way to make any change in the present Reading-Room hours. This seems to me a very regrettable decision, in view of the fact that over 1,000 signatures—400 from readers, 600 from would-be readers—were appended to the memorial which I promoted, and especially having regard to the statement of many of my correspondents that they are unable to come before 6 or 6.30, and are consequently completely debarred from the use of the room on all days but Saturday.

There are two points to which I should like to call special attention. The first is that if the Trustees wish to economize, they could do so by postponing the hour of opening (provided they made up for it at the other end). I have seen less than half a dozen people at 9.30; and recently, on an ordinary fine day, there were under 90 at 10.45. On the other hand, at 6.30 I have seen as many as 140. Few people would be affected by a change in the hours of opening, and many would benefit by longer hours in the evening.

The second and more important point is this. The Trustees resolved to close at 7 instead of 8, because the attendance was insufficient. Many of the former evening readers now find it useless to come for the short time available; consequently there are no more in the room on many evenings at 6.30 than there were there in the old days at 7.30 (I speak, of course, without official figures before me). If, therefore, the Trustees are logical they will go on to close the room earlier still. Having made one successful experiment, let them make another and another, until they cease to waste money on opening the Reading-Room at all.

It does not seem to have dawned upon the Trustees that possibly the reason why few people are in the Reading-Room between 7 and 8 is that the human organism requires nourishment, and that, this being a mealtime for many people, it would be well, before taking the drastic step of shutting out some hundreds of people from working there because they are, unfortunately, not professional students, to try the experiment of keeping the room open—say three days a week, or even only on Saturdays—till 10 P.M. If, after a fair trial, the results were inadequate, the present hours might perhaps be justified, though it is difficult to see on what basis we are to calculate the value of the work done by the evening readers. Do the Trustees strike a balance between the value of the work of Mr. Jones, Miss Smith, &c., and the cost of attendance and electric light, and close the room when the balance is on the wrong side? If not, by what process do they arrive at the conclusion that the number of people in the evening is insufficient to justify the expense?

N. W. THOMAS.

THE SOURCES OF ALCUIN'S LITURGICAL LIBELLUS.

THE present subject carries us back for two hundred years from Alcuin at the end of the eighth century to Gregory the Great in his scriptorium at the Lateran.

True though it be that the Alcuinian Libellus was a "collection" of prayers thought to deserve the name of Gregorian, it by no means follows that Alcuin's editorship had deprived those prayers of any such textual authenticity as they may have had when they came into his hands. Nor are we free to believe that they did not include material which Pope Hadrian I. is known to have transmitted to Alcuin's royal patron Charles the Great.

According to the merciless Latin of the scribes of Charles's curia, Hadrian's letter on the subject was thus phrased:—

"De sacramentario uero a sancto disposito predecessore nostro deifluo Gregorio papa immixtum uobis emitteremus. Iampridem Paulus grammaticus eum pro uobis petente secundum sanctæ nostræ ecclesiæ traditionem per Ioannem monachum atque abbatem ciuitatis Rauennantium uestre regali emisimus excellentiæ."

In whatever sense, then, the Papal gift or loan had the guarantee of tradition, I assume that it may have been one of the sources of the Libellus, and that Alcuin may have treated it with ordinary care.

Thus assuming, I have examined the saints' masses of the Libellus in search of information concerning not so much Alcuin's literary methods as those of Gregory the Great himself. The result is so interesting that I once more crave the hospitality of the pages of The Athenæum.

If we cull from so respectable an authority as the Sanctorale of the Canterbury Missal such of its components as, having a prima facie claim to rank as primitive, enjoy the threefold guarantee of a distinctive titulation, a style not unworthy of St. Gregory, and a presumably unvitiated text; and if we scrutinize their respective titles by information to be had from the writings of St. Gregory and from itineraries almost contemporaneous with him of the Roman cometeria, we find that we have put ourselves in possession of a catalogue of saints, some grouped and some single, so strong in its claim to completeness as to justify us in appraising that claim by those laws of textual distribution which are with good reason believed to have governed the Pontiff in the construction of his masterpiece. And if, in view of this, we compute the stichometrical values of the Canterbury missæ in honour of those grouped or single saints, our pains are rewarded by the singularly luminous result which I set forth in the last column of the subjoined synopsis.

This done, I turn to Muratori's edition of the Alcuinian Libellus, and, reinstating items* which—as recently explained in No. 3989 of The Athenæum—would seem to have been suppressed on the score of double assignment, subject what thus becomes ex hypothesi the ultimate nucleus of the saints' masses of that document to a like enumeration. The result is such as to satisfy the most prudent scepticism. I notify it in the first column of the synopsis.

festivals, but that the other made one suffice; and that on a fifth occasion, the Feast of St. Cæcilia, the former, but not the latter, had a mass whose authenticity is beyond cavil.*

Again, on comparing the two numerical records, we perceive that in several instances, the more notable of which, for facility of reference, I mark with an a, the text common to the two collocations has in the latter of them

| Gatherings, Logical Divisions, and Totals of Earlier Collocation. | Saints Commemorated.                     | Successive Totals, Logical Divisions, and Gatherings of Later Collocation. |
|---|--|--|
| Two textless pages {  |  |  |
| 300   | Silvester (a)                            | 353 } 369. Last page of Temporale.   |
| 349   | Marcellus { Title                        | 16 } End of X. <sup>6</sup>  |
|   | Mass                                     | 333  |
| 2227 = 6 × 371 <sup>1</sup> / <sub>6</sub>                        | 357 Prisca                               | 352  |
|   | 349 Fabian }                             | 467  |
|   | 449 Sebastian }                          | 409  |
|   | 409 Agnes                                |  |
|   | 14 From title of the following           |  |
|   | 371 Tiburtius and Valerian (a)           | 466  |
|   | 355 Philip and James                     | 355 } 4156 = 12 × 371 <sup>1</sup> / <sub>3</sub>                          |
|   | 383 Alexander Eventius and Theodulus (a) | 431  |
|   | 379 Gordian and Epimachus                | 391  |
| 2962 = 8 × 370 <sup>1</sup> / <sub>4</sub>                        | 360 Nereus and Achilleus* }              | 418  |
|   | 360 Pancras }                            | 456  |
|   | 401 Marcellinus and Peter (a)            | 378  |
|   | 333 Marcus and Marcellianus (a)          |  |
|   | 20 From title of the following           |  |
|   | 371 John Baptist: Vigil                  | 378  |
| 1480 = 4 × 370  | 249 " " Feast                            | 249 } 1488 = 4 × 372   |
|   | 436 " " Feast                            | 436  |
|   | 424 John and Paul                        | 435  |
| End of A <sup>10</sup>  |  | End of XI.   |
| 1479 = 4 × 369 <sup>3</sup> / <sub>4</sub>                        | 755 Peter and Paul: Vigil (b)            | 362 } 739 = 2 × 369 <sup>1</sup> / <sub>2</sub>                            |
|   | 716 " " Feast (b)                        | 377 }  |
|   | 8 From title of the following            |  |
|   | 382 Paul the Apostle                     | 389  |
|   | 364 Processus and Martinian (a)          | 427  |
|   | 444 Octave of Apostles (a)               | 462  |
|   | 309 Seven Brothers                       | 412  |
| 3678 = 10 × 367 <sup>4</sup> / <sub>5</sub>                       | 462 Abdo and Sennes                      | 462 } 2571 = 7 × 367 <sup>2</sup> / <sub>7</sub>                           |
|   | 980 Sixtus†                              | 407  |
|   | 370 Felicissimus and Agapitus }          | 12 }   |
|   | From title of the following              |  |
|   | 367 Laurence: Vigil                      | 355  |
|   | 389 " Feast }                            | 361  |
|   | 381 " Feast }                            | 385  |
| 2217 = 6 × 369 <sup>1</sup> / <sub>2</sub>                        | 385 Tiburtius                            | 359 } 2582 = 7 × 368 <sup>6</sup> / <sub>7</sub>                           |
|   | 304 Hippolytus [and others] (a)          | 419  |
|   | 418 Hermes                               | 342  |
|   | 340 Felix and Adauctus                   |  |
| End of B <sup>10</sup>  |  | End of XII. <sup>5</sup>   |
|   | 345 Cosmas and Damian                    | 345  |
|   | 25 From title of the following           | 16 }   |
|   | 428 Michael the Archangel                | 437  |
|   | 343 Mark                                 | 342  |
| 3698 = 10 × 369 <sup>4</sup> / <sub>5</sub>                       | 297 Caixtus (a)                          | 331  |
|   | 421 Quattuor Coronati                    | 421  |
|   | 350 Cæcilia                              | nil. } 2951 = 8 × 368 <sup>7</sup> / <sub>8</sub>                          |
|   | 377 Clement                              | 388  |
|   | 317 Felicitas                            | 331  |
|   | 282 Saturnine (a)                        | 307  |
|   | 523 Andrew: Vigil (b)                    | 399  |
|   | 15 " Feast (b)                           | 410  |
|   | 571 " Octave*                            | 379  |
| 1846 = 5 × 369 <sup>1</sup> / <sub>5</sub>                        | 379 Damasus*                             | 402 } 2946 = 8 × 368 <sup>1</sup> / <sub>4</sub>                           |
|   | 402 Thomas* (a)                          | 574  |
|   | 423 Explicit                             |  |
|   | 56 Dedication of Church                  | 1181   |
| End of C <sup>8</sup>   |  | End of XIII. <sup>5</sup>  |
|   | Commune Sanctorum and Explicit           | 4419...4419 = 12 × 368 <sup>1</sup> / <sub>4</sub>                         |
|   |  | End of XIII. <sup>6</sup>  |

Here, then, we have two homologous but divergent schemes of aggregation and distribution applied to substantially one and the same subject. As we glance down the catalogue of names we note that on four occasions in the year, one system, proved by internal evidence to be considerably earlier than the other, gave a separate mass to each of two concurring been considerably expanded by the insertion of needless parentheses and other expletives; a converse, if less interesting, modification being made in four cases, which I mark with a b. Not one of these differences was without a purpose. Each of them in its turn was designed to aid in rectifying, first, a derangement of plan which I shall explain presently, * Four of these are missæ. I notify them by asterisks in the table. To the mass for St. Sixtus I restore the Preface of, say, 326 letters. This case is marked by a dagger.

† I have dealt with this in my Introduction to the 'Canterbury Missal,' where see Index.

and, secondly, the inevitable disturbance of stichometrical design consequent on the five modifications which I mentioned just now. Nor was the purpose frustrated. In the earlier system the masses for eleven months ending with that for St. Andrew's Eve, forty-four in number and of varying length, were distributed over forty-eight pages; in the later system the corresponding series of thirty-nine masses was contained in forty-one pages. And yet so cunningly contrived and so watchfully carried out was St. Gregory's economy of textual distribution that in one system, as well as in the other, the masses for no fewer than nine such prominent anniversaries as the Vigil and Feast of the Baptist, the Vigil and Feast of SS. Peter and Paul, St. Paul's Day proprie, the Vigil and Feast of St. Laurence, and the feasts of St. Michael and St. Andrew were made to begin each in its turn on the first line of a page.

This is much, but it is not all. Our two compendia of textual values inform us that, concurrently with this ruling principle of logical distribution, another principle was in unremitting operation. I refer to the law, now made manifest, by which St. Gregory bound himself, in his later editorial effort no less than in his earlier, to make each of his fasciculi, whatever its capacity, carry an integral number of missee, not a mixed number. This rigorous condition had on the former occasion been satisfied by each in turn of three fasciculi, composed of five, five, and four sheets respectively; on the latter it was satisfied by each of three successive quires and by the supplementary ternio.

These characteristics, common to two conspicuously distinct collocations of one and the same subject-matter, cannot fail, I think, to be of interest to historians and to archaeologists, for they may with some confidence be said to settle a long-vexed and puzzling discussion by informing us what precisely were the red-letter festivals of the Roman Church in the earlier and the later years of St. Gregory's public life.

I venture to believe that another class of students—those, I mean, who wish to see liturgiology become scientific in fact as it is in name—will find a special attraction in the very curious disparity which I have mentioned, but not as yet described. It is that the Sanctorale of the authoritative missalia sua which Gregory sent to England thirteen centuries ago, by throwing back its first item into the contiguous ternio, eleven of whose pages held the concluding masses of the Temporale, and by thus conjoining, without the intervention of distinctive capitulum, Explicit or Incipit, the two main divisions of his work, so clenched those two divisions together as to make a single book of them, thus helping us to realize John the Deacon's "coartavit in volumine unius libri"; whereas in the parent document of Alcuin's collectio, a document which is not known to have received official publicity from Gregory, the Sanctorale had evidently been so contrived as to have a textless leaf before its first item and a blank page after its last.

I cannot think this disparity to be without significance. It seems to me to shed a stream of unexpected light on the hitherto obscure history of the Pontiff's liturgical labours, and to reveal to us a period in his career when as yet he had not compiled an adequate Communione Sanctorum or dovetailed his own contribution to the Temporale with that bequeathed to him by his predecessors; and when as yet the only completed contribution towards the final whole was a solitary volume of eight-and-twenty leaves compiled in honour of the comparatively few patronal saints who were the local pride of the Roman Church.

MARTIN RULE.

Literary Gossip.

AMONG the first-fruits of the Tibetan expedition is a small book by Mr. Powell Millington which Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co. will publish next week, under the title of 'To Lhasa at Last.' It is a description of personal experiences, grave and gay, not dealing specifically with the scientific, the political, or the military aspects of the campaign, but rather with personal impressions of the country and its people, and the daily duties and incidents of the march.

MESSRS. METHUEN promise a book which should be of high interest, 'The English Buccaneers,' by Mr. John Masefield, a stirring writer of ballads. It traces carefully the gradual rise of a romantic caste among the lawless islands of the Spanish Main, including portraits of the greater buccaneers, and descriptions of famous ships, such as the Royal Fortune.

THE Committee of the Institute of Archaeology at Liverpool have been enabled by the munificence of Sir John Brunner to take in hand the publication of a 'History of Egypt,' including all the results of modern research, and extending from the earliest times to the conquest by Alexander the Great. It is estimated that the work will take two years to complete.

STUDENTS of Hawthorne are promised in the early spring a complete bibliography prepared by Miss Nina E. Browne, and published by Messrs. Houghton, Mifflin & Co., of Boston and London.

THE Classical Association of England and Wales, which has now been in existence just a year, meets to-day at University College, Gower Street. In the morning Prof. Postgate will make a statement of progress made by the Committee on Latin Spelling, and Prof. Butcher will move for a committee on pronunciation of Latin, and possibly also of Greek. Short papers will be read by Messrs. R. L. Leighton, T. Rice Holmes, and T. E. Page, and the Rev. W. C. Compton. Prof. Ernest Gardner will speak on methods for helping those employed in classical teaching to keep in touch with recent discovery and investigation. The Master of the Rolls will be succeeded as President by the Lord Chancellor.

A TRANSLATION and adaptation of Major Heppenstedt's 'Problems in Manœuvre Tactics, with Solutions, for Officers of all Arms,' by Major J. H. V. Crowe, Chief Instructor Royal Military Academy, will be published shortly by Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co. The book is designed to assist officers in self-instruction in tactics and in schemes for manœuvres, field days, &c., and to explain the action of the three arms when working in co-operation. The problems deal with detachments, collisions, and advanced-guard actions, of both large and small forces, reconnaissance, and the special duties of cavalry and artillery in connexion therewith. Conciseness has been aimed at, and theoretical discussions have been avoided. The volume includes four maps.

ON account of the illness of the editor of The Critical Review, it has been decided to discontinue this publication.

MESSRS. HARPER will publish shortly for Mr. A. J. Dawson a novel entitled 'The Fortunes of Farthings.' The background varies between Dorset and Morocco; and the story—one of love, separation, and final happiness for a young couple—is dated two centuries ago, hinging largely on the captivity of the hero and his enslavement under Moulai Ismail.

MR. DOUGLAS SLADEN has initiated in The Standard an interesting correspondence on the vexed question of Copyright Law between the United States and England. Many other authors have followed his lead, and we hope that something definite may come of the discussion. One thing is clear—that the system of simultaneous publication does not work well, and ought to be reconsidered.

THE Japan Society are to hear next Wednesday evening a paper on 'Japanese Undergraduates at Cambridge University,' by Mr. H. J. Edwards, a Fellow of Peterhouse, who takes a great interest in Japanese subjects.

A CORRESPONDENT from the United States, who writes to us protesting against the review of a book, and adds that he has not read the book, can hardly expect, we think, a hearing. To begin with, such qualifications are now so common that we should be overwhelmed with communications from experts of the sort, if we began to encourage them.

WE congratulate Messrs. Simpkin & Marshall on issuing with the end of last year the thousandth number of their useful Bulletin of New Books.

MR. AMEER ALI, who recently resigned his post as Judge of the High Court of Judicature in Bengal, will read a paper on 'Mohammedan Civilization in Spain' before the National Indian Association at the Imperial Institute on the 18th inst. The distinguished author of the 'History of the Saracens' has chosen a congenial subject, to which he should do justice. The chair will be taken by Sir Charles J. Lyall, K.C.S.I.

THE death is announced of one of the most prolific of modern French novelists, M. Charles Causse, better known as Pierre Maël. M. Causse was born at Lorient on September 30th, 1862, and an accident whilst he was in the navy compelled him to leave that calling. He turned first to journalism, and was on the parliamentary staff of the Gazette de France. He eventually devoted himself to novel-writing, his earliest effort dealing with marine subjects. His first great success was 'Le Torpilleur 29.' A mere list of his seventy odd books would fill a column. Most of these ran into several editions. His death has been followed by the interesting literary revelation that he had a collaborator, M. Charles Vincent, who, in accordance with an agreement arranged between the two, will "carry on," in commercial parlance, the business under the old name.

A WELCOME key to the diaries of Varnhagen von Ense, invaluable to the student of Prussian history, is shortly to be published by the Deutsche Bibliographische Gesellschaft. It will take the form of a full index, in which the blanks left by the first editor, Varnhagen's niece, for fear of hurting the susceptibilities of survivors of her uncle, will be filled up.

SCIENCE

Trees: a Handbook of Forest Botany for the Woodlands and the Laboratory.—Vol. II. Leaves. By H. Marshall Ward. (Cambridge, University Press.)

THE first volume of this series of six was noticed favourably by us a short time since, and now the second one, devoted to leaves, their structure, conformation, and function, claims similar commendation. Even the details of the terminology applied to the different shapes assumed by the leaves are not considered unworthy of serious attention. "In spite of expressed opinion to the contrary," says Prof. Ward, "I am convinced that much valuable exercise in observational and descriptive science can be obtained by learning to draw and properly describe the outline, margin, base, apex, and other peculiarities of leaves."

This is a significant pronouncement to come from the Cambridge botanical school, and is one more indication of the gradual swing of the pendulum towards descriptive and systematic botany, which has during the last few years been unduly neglected. These details are, in fact, serviceable according to the use made of them. We can remember the time when, for want of fresh specimens, the London medical students were wont to cut out the shapes of leaves in paper for the purpose of committing to memory the very extensive vocabulary relating to the subject which then filled the text-books. Little or nothing was taught of the significance of these varied forms and of the reasons why they occurred. Little or nothing could then be learnt by the average student of the value of the "characters" afforded by the leaves in distinguishing one species from another. It is no wonder, then, that these apparently meaningless details proved as uninviting as the minute study of bones which formed so large a part in the early education of the medical student. It seems at first as if it were of little consequence whether a leaf be described as ovate or as oblong; but the power of observation and of accurate description in terse and lucid sentences may be very readily and easily exercised in the study of such details. If to this investigation of outward form be added research into the reason why one leaf has one shape and another leaf a different conformation, the study at once assumes high scientific value. The influence of hereditary endowment, and the adaptation to circumstances are phenomena which are conveniently illustrated and explained by the study of leaves, their development and mode of growth. This being so, Prof. Ward is under no obligation to defend a course of investigation which leads to such important results. We are glad, also, to find that he advises his students to adopt the terse, crisp terminology employed by a good descriptive botanist. Many modern text-books in their diffuseness and superfluous verbiage compare very unfavourably with such text-books as those of Asa Gray or Lindley. In the present volume the configuration of the leaf, the arrangement of its veins, its minute structure, and the work that is done by it when it is exposed to sunlight, are clearly explained. There is a passage relating to such work which we would fain cite, but that the space at our disposal forbids us; it must suffice to say that it conveys a brief but excellent idea of the ceaseless activity of foliage:—

"Restfulness is the last attribute we can attach to machinery that is doing and undoing so much; setting free energy here and locking it up there, in forms that must mean powerful disturbances of the matter involved."

Having given a summary of the structure and the life-processes of the leaf—a summary which we commend to the notice of all who desire to get within small compass a readable account of the physiology of the leaf—the author devotes the latter half of the volume to an analytical classification of trees and shrubs according to the characters of the leaves. This portion appeals to foresters, gardeners, and systematic botanists, and its merits can only be gauged by actual use. The descriptions of the leaves, so far as we have tested them, are, it is almost needless to say, accurate; but the range of variation in particular cases is so great that the student must always be prepared to find specimens which will not fit into the elaborate "keys," or which might as well be placed in another section from that to which they are here assigned.

The arrangement adopted depends upon leaf conformation only, and thus we find Juniperus communis and Erica cinerea in juxtaposition; Cupressus sempervirens, Calluna vulgaris, and Viscum album are in similar approximation; and Genista anglica comes next to Ruscus aculeatus. Of course, this is all explained by the author, but careless students—and there are many—will, by reason of their own carelessness, find numerous pitfalls in this portion of the book. As we have pointed out, the author is not responsible for these danger-spots; indeed, he has provided a capital summary of the most important points in the conformation of the commoner trees and shrubs, has provided numerous illustrations, a bibliography which might have been advantageously extended, a glossary, and a copious index.

Physiography: an Introduction to the Study of Nature. By T. H. Huxley. Revised and partly rewritten by R. A. Gregory. (Macmillan & Co.)—This work was originally based on a course of lectures to young people delivered by Huxley five-and-thirty years ago at the London Institution, and repeated the following year at South Kensington. The lectures were so much appreciated at the time that he was urged to publish them, and after considerable delay they were issued, in an amplified form, under the title which stands at the head of this review.

Huxley's well-known 'Physiography' has done good service in its time, having been the means of introducing an elementary knowledge of natural science to a vast number of young folk. It has long been felt, however, that it needed remodelling in order to meet the requirements of the present day, and to bring it into harmony with the existing state of knowledge. This task of revision has been entrusted to Prof. Gregory, and he deserves no little commendation for the way in which he has accomplished a work of much difficulty and some delicacy.

In introducing the study of nature to an audience of boys and girls, Huxley, with his accustomed tact, selected a familiar concrete object as his text. Taking the Thames as a starting-point, he managed to group around this centre an astonishing amount of general information on various departments of natural science. In the preparation of the new edition this mode of treatment has been somewhat modified. Huxley used the Thames because he was speaking "as a Londoner addressing Londoners"; but it has been thought that the work would appeal to a much wider range of readers if it had no special reference to a particular district. Probably, however, this loss of local colour will be observed with some regret by metropolitan students.

Since the original appearance of this work a great extension has been given to the limits of physiography, and as an examination-subject it has acquired a breadth not contemplated in its early days. In the present volume the subject has been kept within moderate bounds. Comparing the new work with its predecessor, we find that, whilst it has been greatly improved in all its sections, it has been specially strengthened in the departments of astronomy and meteorology.

Great improvement, too, is to be remarked in the matter of illustrations. Since the work originally appeared, book-illustration has been so modified that it has been considered desirable to discard most of the old woodcuts and replace them by reproductions from photographs. The increased number of illustrations in the present work is a feature which will appeal strongly to the young student, for whom the book is specially intended. There are, in fact, about 300 illustrations in rather more than 400 pages. Such views as those of the West Indian eruptions of 1902 bring the work well up to date. Many of the illustrations are from the geological photographs collected by the British Association Committee—a source which sufficiently guarantees their value.

We hope that Huxley's 'Physiography' in its new and attractive form will prove as useful to the rising generation as it has been in its old form to their predecessors.

THE title Natural History Essays, given to his volume by Dr. Graham Renshaw (Sherratt & Hughes), is altogether misleading. It should have been called 'Sketches of some South African Mammals.' The papers are interesting enough, but of no special value, and the style is tiresomely prolix.

GEOGRAPHICAL BOOKS.

M. ALFRED HAMY, the author of Au Mississippi, la première Exploration (Paris, Toffin-Lefort), has written his work partly to stir up his countrymen from what he conceives to be their indifference in regard to the most memorable voyages of discovery in the Mississippi valley, and partly, and more especially, to refute such incompetent historians as Margry and G. Gravier, who, in their blind hatred of the Jesuits, declare La Salle to have been the first Frenchman who reached the great river coming from Canada, although the honour of that achievement is due to L. Jolliet and the Jesuit Father Marquette. Competent historians are at one with M. Hamy in his contention, but we doubt whether they will accept his assertion that Father Marquette, on account of his "incontestable supériorité morale," must be looked upon as the guiding spirit of the expedition. Father Marquette himself never put forward such a claim, whilst L. Jolliet was eminently fit to take the lead. He had done excellent work as an explorer previously, was a trained surveyor, and had a knowledge of several Indian languages. His contemporaries certainly gave him credit for what he had done on the Mississippi. If Father Marquette enjoyed greater popularity among the reading public, this was owing to the publication of his account of the voyage by Thevenot in 1683, whilst Jolliet's official report was neglected, and to the erroneous—if we adopted the language employed by M. Hamy in similar cases we should say “perfidious”—assertion of the Jesuit Father Charlevoix, in 1744, that it was Marquette whom Frontenac appointed head of the expedition, and not Jolliet.

Readers interested in Father Marquette as a man and a missionary will find much information in M. Hamy's volume concerning his ancestry, his early life and training, and labours among the Indians up to his death in 1675. They will even find translations of some of the speeches made on the occasion of the erection of monuments to the Jesuit father. There is an excellent portrait, only discovered since these monuments were erected.

The Opening of the Mississippi, by Frederic Austin Ogg, of Indiana University (New York, the Macmillan Company), is an historical survey of the great arterial river of North America from its discovery by the Spaniards to its ultimate surrender to the United States in 1814. The author must be congratulated upon the historical insight, the impartiality and thoroughness with which he has accomplished his task. There are innumerable references to works and documents which the student desirous of more minute information might wish to consult.

The third and concluding volume of John Boyd Thacher's Christopher Columbus: his Life, his Work, and his Remains (Putnam), has now been published. This volume deals with the personality of the great discoverer, his handwriting, and his last remains, deposited in the cathedral of San Domingo, with the exception of eight pinches of his dust, now scattered over the world. It concludes with an elaborate genealogical table, tracing the descendants of the admiral down to the present time. The volume is as sumptuously illustrated as its predecessors. There are as many as forty-one portraits of Columbus, including the one by Lorenzo Lotto, discovered at Venice in 1891, and officially accepted by the United States Government as the most authentic, a decision fairly open to doubt; numerous specimens of his handwriting; and other illustrations.

SALT-WATER FISHING.

British Salt-Water Fishes. By F. G. Aflalo. With a Chapter on the Artificial Culture of Sea-Fish by R. B. Marston. (Hutchinson & Co.)—This is a companion volume to Sir Herbert Maxwell's ‘British Freshwater Fishes,’ and is the latest addition to the “Woburn Library of Natural History,” edited by the Duke of Bedford. Without pretending to deep scientific knowledge, Mr. F. G. Aflalo is responsible, either as editor or writer, for more works on sport and natural history than could be counted on the fingers of two hands, but sea-fishing is his hobby, and on this subject no writer has a happier knack of compiling an interesting popular treatise than Mr. Aflalo. Nearly the whole of this volume is from his pen, Mr. Marston's chapter on the artificial culture of sea-fish forming but a small part of it. Leaving to the marine biologist the task of solving problems connected with “over-fishing” and the fluctuations in the supply of sea-fish, the writers only attempt in this volume to “summarize the habits and appearance, the distribution and the migrations of every fish yet described as ‘British.’” The scope of the work and its limitation in size made it impossible to deal fully with some two hundred species. As far as it could be done, Mr. Aflalo has succeeded admirably in presenting the non-scientific but intelligent lover of nature with all, and more than all, he is likely to want to know about our sea-fish. He might have been glad to remain in blissful ignorance that “real sharks of great size occur within a mile or two of our bathing-stations.” In addition to a dozen chapters on the fish themselves, supplied with very good coloured illustrations of many of them, there are chapters on ‘General Facts about Sea-Fish’ and on ‘Our Fisheries: their Practice and their Control.’ In the former such matters as the migration and distribution of fishes and their sexual maturity and food are dealt with; in the latter the great questions of the supply of sea-fish and our methods of procuring it for market, as well as the natural enemies of fish, receive attention. There can be no doubt that, thanks to the Wild Birds Protection Acts, fish-eating birds have increased enormously, and that great damage is done not only to salmon and other freshwater fisheries, but also to sea fisheries. From letters published recently by the editor of The Scotsman, it seems that some of the fish-eating birds, in addition to destroying great quantities of young salmon and other fish, are turning their attention to game and domestic poultry. In the clash of political arms the cry of the fish is unheard, and we must be blessed with more peaceful and prosperous times before questions affecting our fisheries are likely to get much attention from the Legislature. It is easier to get twenty millions voted for battle-ships than twenty thousand for fostering and protecting our sea fisheries, which ought to be the great nursery of our seamen; and yet the foreign competition which our fishermen have to contend with is every year becoming more serious. With regard to the extension of marine biological research, it is questionable whether it is wise to endow amateur investigators who happen to possess yachts with the right to trawl for science; it is a liberty which may easily be abused. Of the culture of sea-fish, referred to briefly by Mr. R. B. Marston, it cannot be said that the practical results obtained in Europe have been very satisfactory; on the other hand, in America magnificent success has been obtained in the culture of that valuable food fish the shad. Before 1871 shad were unknown upon the Pacific Coast. Now nearly twenty millions of shad are annually brought to market from the fisheries which have been there established, and without complaint that any other fisheries have suffered, so far as we are aware. We know, by the sad experience of Australasia, that it is dangerous to introduce some forms of animal life into some countries; they find the local conditions so favourable that they increase and multiply beyond all control, and become a grave danger to the community. In America the German carp, which does not do well in European rivers, and is cultivated chiefly in ponds, has not only taken to many of the rivers, but is even monopolizing them, crowding out more valuable fish, so that the Americans already speak of it as a plague, as the sparrow is. There is an excellent index to this work, which, although inexpensive, has been admirably produced by Messrs. Hutchinson; it will certainly give satisfaction to those for whom it is intended.

The Sea-Fishing Industry of England and Wales. By F. G. Aflalo. (Stanford.)—The recent outrage on our fishing fleet in the North Sea by the Russian Baltic squadron on its way to the Far East lends additional interest to this account by Mr. Aflalo. In his description of Hull and its fleet he gives a picture of one of the steam trawlers so roughly handled by the Russians.

Those who are afraid that our supply of sea-fish will be exhausted should get some comfort from the statistics of fish consumption in London. Bertram, in ‘The Harvest of the Sea,’ says that in the years 1878, 1879, and 1880 an average of over 128,000 tons of fish was delivered at Billingsgate. Mr. Aflalo, in his interesting and valuable work, gives the figure for 1902 as 216,183 tons, and estimates that the annual supply will reach over a quarter of a million tons by 1909. The figures quoted are probably approximately correct, and show nearly a hundred per cent. increase in thirty years for the London supply, and the increase for the rest of the country is doubtless as great. Fifty years ago estimates of the fish supply must have been enormously exaggerated; for instance, Mr. Braithwaite Poole gave an elaborate table of the number, weight, and value of the fish arriving at Billingsgate in a year about the middle of last century. He gives 3,000 millions of fish, weighing 230,000 tons, and valued at about 2,000,000l. Mr. George Dodd, author of ‘The Food of London,’ said:—

“It is worthy of note, however, as a commentary on all such estimates, that Mr. Goldham, Clerk of Billingsgate, is quite without means of knowing the quantity of fish sold at that market.”

As Mr. Aflalo points out, there is an opening for a popular account of the sea fisheries and fishing ports of England and Wales, since the best existing work on the subject, Holdsworth's ‘Deep-Sea Fishing and Fishing-Boats,’ published thirty years ago, has long been out of print. Moreover it belonged to the era which immediately preceded the introduction of steam trawling.

“The fishing industry as we know it to-day had no existence. Coal and ice have of late years enabled our trawlers to fish every ground between Iceland and Portugal.”

It is this great revolution in the methods of fishing which has caused former important fishing ports to fall into decay, and others, like Milford, to rise to the front rank. To give a popular account of our great sea-fishing industry as it exists to-day it would be difficult to find any one better fitted than Mr. Aflalo. In the first place, he is, as noted above, keenly interested in the subject; secondly, he has visited and gained personal knowledge of most of the fishing centres he describes; and, thirdly, he writes brightly and pleasantly, and is able to impart to his reader some of his own enthusiasm for the “grandeur” of our sea-fishing industry. After a general account of ‘Life on the Sea,’ he deals with its ‘Production,’ i.e., with the different methods employed in the capture of fish; then with the ‘Distribution’ of it by sea and land. The important subject of ‘Fishing Laws,’ national and international, is glanced at; then ‘Scientific Investigation,’ as now carried on, and the outlook for the future. Chaps. vi., vii., and viii. are the most important, as they deal with the whole of the fishery ports round our coasts from the Tweed to the Thames, and from the Thames round the south and west coasts to the Solway. Although, of course, in favour of all reasonable efforts to increase knowledge of fish life and the best methods of taking it, and also sparing it to grow to marketable size, Mr. Aflalo does well to point out that between fishing for scientific research and fishing for commercial results there is a wide gap, and it would never do to make regulations for commercial trawling, for instance, based on small scientific fishing experiments. As a popular handbook to our sea-fishing industry, this handsome volume can be safely commended; a map, many illustrations, chiefly from the author's own photographs, and a good index add much to its value.

SOCIETIES.

GEOLOGICAL.—Dec. 21.—Dr. J. E. Marr, President, in the chair.—Mr. P. C. A. Stewart and Mr. W. H. Williams were elected Fellows; and Prof. Giuseppe de Lorenzo, University of Naples, was elected a Foreign Correspondent. The following communications were read: ‘On Certain Genera and Species of Lytoceratidae,’ by Mr. S. S. Buckman, —and ‘The Leicester Earthquakes of August 4th, 1893, and June 21st, 1904,’ ‘The Derby Earthquakes of July 3rd, 1901,’ and ‘Twin-Earthquakes,’ by Dr. C. Davison.

MICROSCOPICAL.—Dec. 21.—Mr. G. C. Karop in the chair.—Mr. Conrady read a short paper explaining an experiment to prove the phase-reversal in the second spectrum from a grating of broad slits, the mathematical proof of which he gave in his paper on 'Theories of Microscopical Vision' read before the Society at its previous meeting. The object consisted of two gratings, one above the other, similar in every respect, except that one had broad slits, and the other had narrow slits. In accordance with what was theoretically predicted by the author, the difference was brought out when the direct light and the first and second spectra of one side were admitted; but when the direct light was cut off by the movement of a shutter, the image of the broad slits underwent a startling change. The lines jumped across to positions midway between the correct ones, showing there was an antagonism of phase between the light of the first and that of the second spectrum.—Some photographs showing the effects produced by cutting out the various spectra of one side were exhibited by Mr. Rheinberg.—Mr. J. W. Gordon gave a summary of his paper on 'The Theory of Highly Magnified Images,' and illustrated his remarks by numerous diagrams on the screen.—A discussion ensued, in which Messrs. Rheinberg, Beck, and Conrady took part.

MEETINGS NEXT WEEK

- MON. Royal Academy, 4.—'Truth to Nature,' Prof. G. Clausen.
 — London Institution, 5.—'Studies in Spider Life,' Mr. H. Hill.
 — Geographical, 8½.—Mr. Reginald Enock's Journeys in Peru, the President.
- TUES. Institution of Civil Engineers, 8.—'The Recent Visit to the United States and Canada,' Sir W. H. White.
- WED. Society of Arts, 5.—'The Production of an Illustrated Newspaper,' Lecture II, Mr. Carmichael Thomas. (Juvenile Lecture.)
- THURS. Royal Academy, 4.—'Style and the Ideal,' Prof. G. Clausen.
 — London Institution, 6.—'The Glee in its Decline,' Mr. F. A. Cox.
 — Institution of Electrical Engineers, 8.—Discussion on 'The Combination of Dust Destructors and Electricity Works Economically Considered,' Paper on 'Fuel Economy in Steam Power Plants,' Messrs. W. H. Booth and J. B. C. Kershaw.
- FRI. Astronomical, 5.
 — Institution of Civil Engineers, 8.—'Theory of Electricity and Magnetism,' Mr. J. Swinburne.
 — Philological, 8.—'Notes on some Mediæval Latin and Anglo-Saxon Glosses,' Mr. J. H. Hensels.

Science Gossip.

A NEW comet (e, 1904) was discovered by M. Borrelly at Marseilles on the evening of the 28th ult. It was situated in the constellation Cetus, moving in a north-easterly direction.

THE Report of the Superintendent (Rear-Admiral C. M. Chester) of the United States Naval Observatory for the fiscal year ending June 30th, 1904, has been received, and details the work done in the different departments during the period covered. The meridian instruments continued to be under the charge of Prof. Eichelberger, and a very large number of observations (nearly 12,000 in all) were obtained. It is earnestly desired that means may be found for publishing a catalogue of the Washington zone observations during the early years of the establishment. Photographs of the sun were taken, under the care of Mr. G. H. Peters, on each clear day of the year. Prof. Skinner, in charge of the equatorial instruments, furnishes a long record of observations of small planets, planetary satellites, comets, double stars, and other objects. The efficient work of the 'American Nautical Almanac' Department has been maintained, and the volume for 1908 will shortly be issued. The scheme for the construction of a branch astronomical observatory at Tutuila Island, in Samoa, has been approved, and a site selected at Blunt's Point, on the western side of the entrance to the harbour.

THE Lalande Prize of the French Academy for last year has been awarded to Prof. S. W. Burnham, of Chicago, in consideration of his important work on double stars; the Valz Prize to Admiral de Campos Rodrigues, Director of the Observatory at Lisbon, for his labours, in collaboration with MM. de Campos and Oom, in observations of stars and of Mars, but especially of the small planet Eros, for determination of solar parallax; the Janssen Medal to M. Hansky, of Odessa, for his studies on solar photography, his actinometrical observations on the summit of Mont Blanc (for which he made two ascents in 1898), and his important geodetic work on the Russo-Swedish expedition for measurement of an arc of the meridian.

THE rainfall at Greenwich during December last amounted to 2.25 inches, which is about half an inch above the average for that month as taken from the fifty years 1841-1890. The total rainfall for 1904 was 20.66 in., which is nearly four below the average for those years.

SIR J. NORMAN LOCKYER has been elected a Corresponding Member of the Imperial Academy at St. Petersburg.

M. TROOST, the new President of the Paris Académie des Sciences for 1905, is the well-known Professor of Elementary Chemistry at the Sorbonne. He is a native of Paris, where he was born in 1825. He has been a member of the Académie since July 7th, 1884. The new Vice-President is M. Poincaré, the distinguished mathematician, who will in due course succeed M. Troost as President in 1906. MM. Berthelot and Darboux are the "secrétaires perpétuels" of the Académie.

FINE ARTS

Memorials of Edward Burne-Jones. By G. B. J. 2 vols. (Macmillan & Co.)

THE reflections induced by the first sight of such volumes as these are somewhat despondent. Of the Romantic revival of the nineteenth century four men only are left to us of its best: Swinburne and Meredith, Holman Hunt and Legros. Millais, Rossetti, Ruskin, Madox Brown, Morris, and Burne-Jones are but memories, and no promise of others to take their place appears. The seats of the mighty are empty.

Rossetti and Burne-Jones are often spoken of, but incorrectly, as Pre-Raphaelites. This movement—whose founder, Holman Hunt, is still among us—was in its origin not so much a part of the Romantic revival as a revolt against the code of artistic rules drawn from the practice of Raphael's pupils (Raphaelites) by the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries. It was in part due to a wish to return to the earlier freedom of composition of Raphael and his predecessors, partly to the peculiar temperament of Holman Hunt and Millais, and partly, perhaps—though, if so, entirely unconsciously—to the sharper edge which the invention of photography had given to artistic vision. Rossetti, early associated with Hunt and Millais in the Pre-Raphaelite movement, soon abandoned their principles and practice, and became a Romantic Mediævalist. It was after this definite break with Pre-Raphaelitism, and abandonment of the signature "P. R. B.," that he came in contact with Burne-Jones and Morris, who were already influenced by the Romantic movement in literature, and moulded their lives at the very turning-point of their career. Burne-Jones's secondary part in the revival is shown unconsciously by the author of these 'Memorials,' which are, in truth, indispensable supplements to the lives of Rossetti and William Morris. "Rossetti was the planet round which we revolved," says Prinsep; "mediævalism was our beau idéal, and we sank our own individuality in the strong personality of our adored Gabriel"; and Burne-Jones himself says: "In those first years I never wanted to think but as he thought, and all he did and said filled me through and through." But if Rossetti was their prophet, the friends lived in a circle of strong men, who greatly influenced the young painter. Though the cleavage between Rossetti and the Pre-Raphaelite movement was complete, the gaps had not opened. Holman Hunt came in and out among them, and Ford Madox Brown, representative of still another school, was a familiar. "For the first three or four years he was a great part of my life"; and it is hard to say whether Rossetti or Brown was more important in the genesis of such pictures as 'Sidonia.' For all this, though "Morris's friendship began everything for him," though "it was Watts much later who compelled him to try and draw better," Rossetti and his doctrine, "A picture is a painted poem," was the main influence of Burne-Jones's life.

"I've no longer Rossetti at my back—he has left me more to do than I've the strength for, the carrying on of his work all by myself," was his complaint at the end of his life. The motto of Paracelsus, "Alterius non sit, qui suus esse potest," was not for him.

If Burne-Jones's judgment is to be trusted, the current estimate of Rossetti's character needs revision. 'Tis pity, if it be so, that he never was able to carry out his intention of "displaying Gabriel—after a time."

"Some sort of image of him will be made out—and if it is a perfect image and all overlaid with gold, it will be truer really than one that should make him halt or begrimed or sully him in the least."

In truth the artist's judgment was coloured by the memories of those extraordinary years when Ruskin, Rossetti, Hunt, Millais, Morris, Swinburne, and Burne-Jones were producing fresh masterpieces continually. The love of beauty was religion to them: witness the words of one of their models:—

"It was being in a new world to be with them. I sat to them and was there with them, and they were different to every one else I ever saw. And I was a holy thing to them—a holy thing to them."

And this religion of beauty they were able to spread in most unexpected quarters. Imagine a purchaser of to-day's pictures kissing a part of the panel for its pure beauty (i. 296)! But in later days the fact that Rossetti was unable to keep the friendship of his equals as he kept their unquestioned admiration shows that some falling-off on his part must have taken place, though from Burne-Jones, at any rate, every word is in his praise.

Ruskin, too, exerted a great influence on the young painters, alike as a critic and a friend. He was much older than any of them, and his noble familiarity encouraged and stimulated them: "Think of knowing Ruskin like an equal and being called his dear boys" (i. 147). And it is significant of the good effect he had on them that in a letter of this period, after saying "his noble words used to make me shake and tremble," Burne-Jones adds:—

"One seems to want no guide now, but to flow down with the course of great spirits new and old and understand them without an interpreter."

A few anecdotes show Ruskin's lighter side, as a patron of the Christy Minstrels, and an admirer of the grace of Kate Vaughan and Phyllis Broughton, and some letters prove that after little differences of opinion on Italian painters, the pupil-friendship developed into a charming camaraderie.

After Rossetti, however, Morris was the deepest and the most constant influence on the painter's life. Not only were they side by side in all the crises of their career, but the sight of Morris's steady care "to get work done, to do each task as well, without trying to do it better than he could, leaving improvement to the next," should have been a constant inspiration. The lifelong connexion with the firm of Morris & Co. was a potent tie, which held them together during the years of partial disagreement, when "Morris turned to Iceland and I to Italy," and, again, when Morris became a Socialist, to the painter's distressed disgust, until a common task again brought them together in the decoration of the Kelmscott Press books. The strength or weakness of their sympathy can almost be traced in the stained-glass work of Burne-Jones, where right principles of construction disappear in the "eighties," just after his own pronouncement (ii. 109), "One needs to forget that pictures exist in considering a coloured window," and the artist's designs were made to show neither the colour nor the leading, the two essential considerations in stained glass. Even in the wonderful Merton tapestries, Burne-Jones's designs were in monochrome only, the colour and details being due to Morris and his assistant. Through it all, however, an intimate feeling for each other subsisted, and the loss of Morris was a calamity which the approach of age alone enabled his friend to bear. The whole book is filled with the poet's personality, and little anecdotes of his sayings and doings. In this connexion we welcome a first instalment of the 'Adventures of Red Lion Mary,' a work which we feared was to take a place with the 'Diary of Mrs. Samuel Pepys' and the 'Book of Mother Maturin' amongst unwritten masterpieces.

Though this book does not profess to give an account of Burne-Jones's artistic creed, it preserves for us many interesting obiter dicta. One of these is on the difference between pencil and charcoal drawing, of which latter he said, "You can't draw, you paint with it." Finished draughtsman as he was, he said of the pencil:—

"It is always touch-and-go whether I can manage it now.....I look on a perfectly successful drawing as one built upon a groundwork of clear lines till it is finished. If I have once india-rubbed it, it doesn't make a good drawing."

He was greatly interested in wood-engraving, and in 1862, after a design for Good Words had been mangled by the wood-engraver, he writes:—

"I see that for the engraving I want, the most perfect design and beautiful drawing is needed, more than in pictures even, for in them so many other qualities come in and have their say, and a picture may be great if it has only one quality pre-eminently grand. But in engraving every faculty is needed—simplicity, the hardest of all things to learn—restraint, in leaving out every idea that is not wanted (and perhaps fifty come where five are wanted)—perfect outline, as correct as can be without effort, and, still more essentially, neat, and a due amount of quaintness.....As to scribbly work, it enrages one beyond endurance. Nearly all book and periodical illustration is full of it—drawings, you know the kind, that have wild work in all the corners, stupid, senseless rot, that takes an artist half a minute to sketch, and an engraver half a week to engrave, for scribble is fearful labour to render. My dear, look at most things in Once a Week—the wasted time of poor engravers in rendering all that scrawl, if rightly used, might fill England with beautiful work."

Some side-lights on his theories are given in a dictum on "expression" in portraiture:—

"The only expression allowable in great portraiture is the expression of character and moral quality, not of anything temporary, fleeting, accidental. Apart from portraiture you don't want even so much, or very seldom: in fact, you only want types, symbols, suggestions."

His feelings towards modern art were of a very mixed nature. Of French painters he says:—

"The skill and daring in their work, and singleness of purpose and esprit de corps, their indifference to comfort and luxury, and even necessary food, proves them to be a set of splendid gentlemen whom it would be difficult to match in this country, which I do think is spoiled and sullied by wealth! I feel a constant irrepressible hope in the French—they try the experiments for the smug world outside to profit by."

And this latter, the desire to find the right path and walk in it, was a feeling he estimated highly. He once said that "Carlyle's advice to work at the task that lies nearest one might be mere atheism." But he was not always pleased with the results of these experiments. The account of the Whistler trial shows the stress he laid on finishing a picture, and his remarks on "Impressionism," or what he took for it (ii. 188), are of the same order. It is, indeed, true that much of the painting shown at "advanced" exhibitions should only be shown to fellow-artists; the ordinary picture-lover feels almost like an intruder on a party en déshabille.

From a conversation recorded it appears that his suppression of the dramatic element in his paintings was as deliberate as Morris's suppression of humour in his poetry. Wit is indeed at the opposite pole to poetry (ii. 137), there is neither wit nor fun in the best books—these being Homer, Æschylus, Dante, or the 'Morte d'Arthur.' His love for illuminated manuscripts is recorded with some very acute remarks on the disposal of drapery, a new method of which was invented in the twelfth century, probably by a Frenchman. We can only echo the author's regret that Morris never found time to write down all he knew about "painted books." In ordinary literature Burne-Jones shared to the full the love of the Romantics for Dumas, and could not read stories that ended badly—"sad stories for stockjobbers, sorrowful art to penetrate the hide of the obtuse." If a tragedy is to be read, let it be in lofty rhymes about heroical queens. Splendid melancholy things like Iona, or Tolstoy's novels, wounded him too deeply. He was not above strong prejudices either, as when he announced his intention of binding the Berlin Botticelli 'Dante,' after "ungratefully burning the German text," or when he remarked on the fortune of Germans—à propos of "the late, vulgar, brutal Pergamus sculptures"—that when they "go forth to dig and discover, their special providence provides for them, and brings to the surface the most depressing, heavy, conceited, dull products of dead and done with Greece: and they ought to be thankful, for it is what they like."

In reading the biography of a man with great aims and steady purpose, one asks what measure of success rewarded his efforts, what results followed them. He lived a happy life, as lives go, tortured by a continual desire to do better than he could, by what Rossetti called a vanity which made "even his pictures not good enough for him." The sight of his early work, "his poor and faint beginnings," was a trial almost greater than he could bear; and, at the end,

"the people who professed the greatest admiration for his work were equally enthusiastic about that [work] whose principles he held in the greatest abomination."

His ambition all his life was to work for the public. "If I had lived," he says, "in the Middle Ages, people would have known what to do with me"; but neither his native Birmingham nor any other place offered him the opportunity which Amiens gave to Puvis de Chavannes, though his plans for 'The Four Ages' promised frescoes worthy of mediæval Siena. He founded no lasting school, and his influence on English painting grows slight. The reason is not far to seek. At the end he said that if he had his time over again, he would try to paint more like the Italian painters, or, as he long before expressed it: "If I could travel backwards I think my heart's desire would take me to Florence in the time of Botticelli." And to paint Florentine pictures without the Florentine temperament is to foredoom oneself to failure.

"No life of any man whose work we know is needed—his life is bound up in what he longed for and loved and regretted and desired." That is his own theory, but, things being as they are, some memorial of the private life of Sir Edward Burne-Jones was necessary for the great world outside, and as he was fortunate in his friends and his surroundings, so is he fortunate in his biography. Simply and directly told, it leaves us with the happiest impression of a gentle life spent in noble effort among congenial surroundings. It introduces us with him to the companionship of the most interesting men of the century, full of vigorous life and hopes. Its form is worthy; the illustrations, with the exception of a misleading photograph of William Morris (ii. 260), are excellent, and many of them are new. G. B.-J. has worthily carried out her task, and the world is the richer for the story of a great artist and a lovable and much-loved man.

THREE LANDSCAPE EXHIBITIONS.

It is fast becoming the fashion for artists of similar tastes to avoid large exhibitions, and to combine in holding small ones. To judge by the fact that the Landscape Exhibition, after continuing this practice for some ten years, has moved from the Dudley Gallery to the more open, if less central rooms of the Royal Water-Colour Society in Pall Mall, the experiment in this case would appear to have been a distinct success.

As usual, the exhibition is both attractive and restful: attractive, because the six exhibitors are all capable and all independent; restful, because their pictures are not too numerous or too noisy to be examined quietly. The collection has the additional advantage of representing several quite distinct attitudes towards the difficult problems which the modern landscape painter is compelled to face. On one wall Mr. Mark Fisher emphasizes the brightness of sunlight, on another Mr. Peppercorn grapples with the majestic mystery of darkness, while the remaining members seek rather for a harmonious general impression of nature than for any particular beauty or quality.

The result seems to indicate that the modern technique of oil painting lends itself much better to emphasis than to moderate statement. Mr. James S. Hill, who takes the place of Sir Ernest Waterlow, certainly succeeds most completely with his flower pieces, where his attention is concentrated on a single plane and a single object simply lighted. As a painter of flowers he deserves far more recognition than he has hitherto received, and his small paintings would hang without discredit by the side of similar works by Fantin-Latour. The emphatic design of the large Thames at Southwark and the King's Cross (8) gives a force and dignity to pictures which, without such a firm substructure, might have been scattered and ineffective. Mr. Leslie Thomson's admirable view of La Pernelle, Normandy, compares favourably with his less powerfully built works, for the same reason—that is to say, he succeeds best where he is most emphatic. The more consistent talent of Mr. R. W. Allan appears too easily satisfied with approximate completeness of design, and his works are thus picturesque rather than fine, respectable rather than remarkable.

A picture of Mr. Aumonier's, however, throws some light on the difficulties which confront a painter who is equipped only with the current modern technique. In his Old Citadel, Montreuil, Mr. Aumonier has a splendid subject, and has treated it soundly enough. But the result somehow is far from satisfactory. The fault does not lie in the design, the tones, or the colour, and must be sought in the relative quality of the hill and of the sunset cloud behind it. A heavy impasto is used to make this cloud luminous and right in tone, with the result that the cloud has actually become more solid than the hill in front of it. The fault lies with Mr. Aumonier's method rather than with his vision. We have only to think of the same subject as it would have been treated by Gainsborough or Crome to recognize in a moment that space and air and light in the sky could only have been obtained by the transparent or semi-transparent painting of which our generation has neglected or forgotten the secret. In the hands of one of these old masters the hill might have been painted much as Mr. Aumonier has done it, but would have gained weight and mass by contrast with the translucency of the sky behind it, a sky which, by the use of glazes, would be full of light diffused through its very substance, instead of being a mass of thick, opaque paint.

Mr. Peppercorn and Mr. Mark Fisher have each exercised year after year a very personal talent for emphatic statement of particular facts, so that their work at once stands out as a thing apart from any other pictures with which it may be associated. The strength of Mr. Peppercorn's talent lies in the consistency with which he restricts himself to a very limited scale of tones and colours, all unified by an admixture of black. By this restriction he is enabled to construct a picture without being distracted by irrelevant details of natural colour, while his broad and summary brushwork frees him in the same way from the tyranny of small forms, which are the great trouble of all landscape painters whose vision of nature is less coherent. Mr. Peppercorn, as a designer of landscape, is thus almost always good, and sometimes, as in the picture of Evening (6), noble. Nevertheless, his self-imposed limitations are dangerous things. He denies himself all positive colour, but does not sufficiently make up for the sacrifice by increased scrupulousness as to the quality of his pigment, which is often needlessly coarse, as in the Derbyshire Road (5). His renunciation of detail in the same way betrays him into emptiness, as in the Moonlight (5), which contains only the subject-matter of a sketch.

Mr. Fisher's talent is entirely different. His natural preoccupation is with details, with the exact hue and pitch of each portion of the sunlit landscapes he prefers to paint. To get as near as possible to the unattainably high key of nature's light, he has for years worked in a manner similar to that of Claude Monet, by which complex tones are obtained by the juxtaposition of touches of pure pigment. He has used the method with freedom and discretion, without binding himself to any dubiously scientific theory of colour analysis, and so his pictures are generally more pleasant and truthful in effect than those built up by more rigid optical formulæ, yet the method itself does not tend to unity, and thus, except where a composition contains some very simple and definite structural element, his pictures do not always hang together.

In the present exhibition Mr. Mark Fisher would seem to have made a strong effort to remedy this spottiness. The Heath (3), with its dappled sky, is still marked by his old tendency to unrest; but in The Water-meadows (1), The Mill Stream (4), The Fisherman's Hut (6), The Village of Longstock (9), and The Willows (10), he achieves a real and remarkable success. Every one of these pictures is based upon a sound and admirable design, and, in addition, possesses the charm of vivid, natural, and harmonious colour which is characteristic of Mr. Fisher's work. Posterity may decide that these pictures would have been better still had they been executed with less disregard for the shapely traditional technique of oil-painting. But the impressionist point of view once granted, they are, undoubtedly, among its most delightful and artistic products. Their success is none the less pleasant because it is the reward of a struggle with a natural failing, a struggle which in these days few artists appear to have the intelligence or the energy to carry on.

The Panel Exhibition of Water-Colours at the Dudley Gallery contains a good deal of fresh, if not exactly notable work, among which one or two drawings by Mr. Wilfred Ball, Mr. Robert Little, and Mr. V. P. Yglesias show to some advantage. A feature of the exhibition is the collection of water-colours by Mr. Selwyn Image, in which a discreet blending of the methods of Gainsborough and Rowlandson is employed upon a series of landscape studies of remarkable charm and restfulness. In these days of noisy competition such scholarly restraint is as delightful as it is rare.

A word of praise, too, must be given to the drawings of 'Little Shops of Chelsea,' by Dorothy Osborn, recently shown at the Ryder Gallery. The artist showed a real comprehension of the principles underlying the work of Whistler, and used her knowledge with modesty, good taste, and no little skill.

Fine-Art Gossip.

MR. JOHN BAILLIE opens to-day at his gallery his Winter Exhibition, consisting of works by Mr. Frank Brangwyn, Mr. Ambrose Paterson, and other artists.

TO-DAY is also the private view at the Fine-Art Society's Rooms of 'English Lawns and Gardens,' water-colours by Mrs. Caldwell Crofton, and 'On and Under a Sussex Down,' water-colours by Ruth Dollman.

AN exhibition of paintings in oils and water-colours of India, by Mr. R. Gwelo Goodman, who has spent many years in the East, will also be opened to-day at the Leicester Galleries, Leicester Square.

IN the January number of The Burlington Magazine Mr. A. M. Hind publishes a drawing recently discovered in the Print-Room of the British Museum, which he identifies as a study for the 'Christ blessing Little Children' in the National Gallery. This study, and therefore the picture (which was bought as a Rembrandt), he attributes to Karel Fabritius. The attribution is supported in a further note by one of the editors. Mr. A. H. Smith writes on the sculptures at Lansdowne House, and gives amusing particulars as to the methods of Gavin Hamilton, who made the collection by contract for the first Marquess of Lansdowne. An important article on 'Early Christian Art in the Roman Catacombs,' by Dr. J. P. Richter, is illustrated by a reproduction in colour of a third-century wall-painting in the catacomb of Prætextatus. Miss May Morris contributes an informing article on 'Opus Anglicanum,' taking as an example the Syon cope; and M. Léonce Aumaudy concludes his series of papers on the Carvallo Collection, dealing in this article with the "Primitives" of various schools, which include a Gerard David, a probable Metsys, and other Flemish works, besides a very interesting French picture, and several examples of the early Spanish schools. There are other contributions, and the numerous plates include several reproductions in colotype.

BELGIAN landscape painters have come into receipt of a valuable legacy. The painter Jules Racymaekers has bequeathed his house in the Ardennes, and a sum of money to the Belgian Government, in order to enable artists to take up their residence there free of expense, and study landscape painting for a period not exceeding two years. The residue of the money is to accumulate until there is a sufficient sum to form a travelling fund for young artists. The selection in both cases rests with the Royal Belgian Academy.

M. EUSTACHE BERNARD, the sculptor, who died recently, was born at Grenoble in July, 1836, and studied chiefly in the studios of Cordier and of Isin. After seven years in Paris he returned to his native place, where he was instrumental in founding an École de Sculpture, whilst the Grenoble Museum owes much to his untiring and patriotic energies. He was an exhibitor at the Salon of the Artistes Français, and executed a large number of busts of eminent men, in addition to many medallions. He assisted at the restoration of the cathedral at Chartres, and of the Palais de Justice at Grenoble. One of his last works was a bust of M. Félix Viallet, the President of the Société des Amis des Arts, recently exhibited at the Grenoble Salon.

THE royal gold cup of the kings of France and England, now preserved in the British Museum, is probably for its historic interest, and certainly as an example of the art of the mediæval goldsmith, one of the most important treasures of the Empire. It is therefore gratifying to know that the Society of Antiquaries has published a series of illustrations of the cup in colour, accompanied by a monograph by Mr. Charles H. Read, wherein are narrated its eventful story and fortunate return to this country, mainly through the patriotic exertions of the late Sir Wollaston Franks. It will be remembered that the shape of the cup was altered in the reign of Henry VIII.; its stem was increased in height, and Tudor roses were added to the ornamentation. Mr. Read has given a drawing of it in its original state, showing how much finer was the taste of the mediæval artist than that of the Tudor restorer.

THE Antiquary has just completed the first quarter of a century of its existence, and with the new year appears in an enlarged form, though the price remains unaltered. Eight pages are added, allowing for development of the familiar features; and a new section, 'At the Sign of the Owl,' will offer each month two pages of gossip on the literary side of antiquarianism. A number of interesting articles are promised for this year. The issue for January contains a valuable article on 'Old Sussex Glass: its Origin and Decline,' by Mr. Charles Dawson, and a striking paper by the Rev. W. J. Loftie, on 'Some London Street-Names.'

THREE lectures are to be given on 'Recent Excavations in Rome,' on Wednesday afternoons, beginning on January 18th, in the Lecture Hall at 20, Hanover Square. The lecturer will be Mrs. Burton-Brown, of Rome, whose classes at the British Museum attracted large audiences in the autumn, and will be continued in February and March. A great number of illustrations, slides, coins, &c., will be shown. The lecturer published last year the first English account of the discoveries of Commendatore Boni, under whom she has studied ever since his work began.

MUSIC

SONGS.

THE Canto Popolare in Elgar's concert-overture 'In the South' possesses rare charm and simplicity, and Shelley's poem As the moon's soft splendour has been adapted to it; in this form it has been published by Novello. This taking away of a melody from its context is not altogether commendable, but the song thus formed is naturally of delicate, dainty character.—The Easter Morn, a sacred song, with organ, violin, or 'cello accompaniment ad lib., by Coleridge Taylor (Enoch), is broad, dignified, and effectively written for contralto voice. We cannot, however, say that the music is thoroughly characteristic of the composer. Far more so is his soft, refined setting of Moore's poem Keep those eyes, for soprano and tenor (Novello).—There are poems which naturally lend themselves to music, but this can scarcely be said of Mr. Kipling's in 'The Just So Song Book.' Mr. Edward German, however, is an able composer, and in The First Friend, Rolling Down to Rio, and Morrow Down (same publisher), he has caught much of the spirit of the words. The order in which the titles are named represents to us their respective musical merits.—Mr. Reginald Somerville, the composer of The Ballad of Thyra Lee, dramatic scena, poem by Harold Boulton (Enoch), colours the words of the poem with good effect, though he can hardly be said to intensify them. But if dramatic strength be lacking, we have picturesque and refined writing.—The German words of Where Lilac Blows are by Oscar von Redwitz, while the French original of Ah! that no touch of grief, music by Baroness W. de Rothschild (Enoch), is anonymous; both have English versions by R. H. Elkin. The composer has a certain gift of melody which is supported by tasteful accompaniment. The songs are expressive, simple, and natural.—In Twelve Small Songs for Small People, by Alicia Adélaïde Needham (Schott & Co.), the poems by various authors are well calculated to please children, and the melodies to which they are set are fresh and attractive. The volume is admirably got up.—An Irish Mother's Lullaby, words by Mary Elizabeth Blake, music by Margaret Ruthven Lang, Op. 34 (Enoch), is a charming song. It is not a lullaby of conventional type, and the harmonies of the accompaniment are effective without being forced.

PIANOFORTE MUSIC.

DR. CHARLES VINCENT considers that "no studies are more useful to pianoforte students for acquiring independence of hands and fingers than the Inventions of J. S. Bach." At the same time he is aware that for players at an early stage something simpler is required, and he has accordingly published (Vincent Music Company) a set of Easy Two-Part Inventions of his own, which are ably and pleasantly written, and will, therefore, prove of great service.—Sonata-writing has gone much out of fashion; the spirit of the age seems, indeed, to be opposed to the old cyclic form, yet some modern composers are anxious to test their strength in this particular branch. We have before us two sonatas: one in A minor by Percival M. Garratt (Willcocks), the other in E minor by John B. McEwen (Novello). The first, though thoughtful and ambitious, is patchy in style, while the writing for the instrument is uncomfortably difficult. The second is clear in form, and the treatment of the subject-matter clever, but the composer does not convince us that his talent will be displayed to the best advantage in music of this severe character.—Gavotte Élégante, Coquette Valse, and Barcarolle, by Josef Holbrooke, Op. 17, Nos. 4, 5, and 6 (Leonard & Co.), are light, dainty little pieces; they are only trifles, but they show the composer in a more natural mood than in some of his more ambitious works.—Études Pittoresques, by George H. Clutsam, Nos. 1, 3, and 5 (Enoch), are attractive and pleasant to play.—Six Pieces, by Cyril Scott (Forsyth), all short and published under one cover, are dedicated to Prof. Iwan Knorr and Lazzaro Uzielli "in grateful remembrance of my student days." They are written in a thoughtful, expressive style; the music may not be very strong, but it shows talent and restraint. Three Frivolous Pieces (detached) are bolder, both as regards rhythm and harmony, and although neatly made rather than richly inspired, they are interesting.—Three Miniatures, by A. von Ahn Carse (Novello), are all short and simple; there is, however, a due mixture of art and nature which gives to them colour and character.—Several transcriptions for pianoforte of orchestral works, published by Novello, will prove of interest. The keyboard instrument cannot reproduce orchestral colouring, which not only gives charm to the music, but also enables a composer to make a melody stand out from its surroundings, or to produce contrasts of a far more striking character than the dynamic changes which can be obtained from the pianoforte. Yet with all its disadvantages the popular household instrument offers a convenient, and to many the only, means of studying orchestral music. The transcriptions are those of Elgar's early concert overture entitled Froissart, written for the Worcester Festival of 1890, and his latest work of the kind, viz., In the South (Alassio); two Cardiff Festival successes, Arthur Hervey's interesting and effective Tone-Pictures, On the Heights and On the March, and Edward German's brilliant Welsh Rhapsody; also Cowen's graceful pieces entitled Childhood and Girlhood. The arrangements of the Hervey, German, and Cowen works are by the composers themselves.

Musical Gossip.

THE works produced by great composers at an early stage of their career possess undoubted interest. The early works of Bach and Beethoven show the strong influence of their immediate predecessors. And, in like manner, those of Wagner show not only that of Beethoven, but also that of the music with which as capellmeister he became familiar. Another point of interest in such works is the foreshadowing of future greatness. The three overtures of Wagner produced, for the first time in England, by Mr. Henry J. Wood at the New Year's concert at Queen's Hall, were, in these respects, instructive. The first, 'Polonia,' is clear in structure, and bright in character; the second, 'Christopher Columbus,' is more ambitious: in it there are faint foreshadowings of 'The Flying Dutchman' period; while No. 3, the 'Rule, Britannia,' is not only the weakest of the three, but commonplace, blatant in its orchestration, and monotonous. Whatever the quality of the music, Mr. Wood, however, deserves the thanks of musicians for satisfying their curiosity as to works of which only the titles were known.

A SERIES of ten Monday Subscription Concerts will commence at the Æolian Hall on January 16th. Among the vocalists already engaged are Mesdames Albani and Blanche Marchesi, and Messrs. Hugo Heinz and Theo Lierhammer; and among the instrumentalists Madame Roger-Miclos, Miss Janotha, Miss Gertrude Peppercorn, and MM. Fugno, Godowsky, Wolff, and Becker. The London Trio and the Kruse Quartet are also engaged. This enterprise seems like a revival of the Popular Concerts under new conditions. The concerts will be held every Monday, with the exception of February 6th and March 6th.

MISS MAUD MACCARTHY will play the Brahms Violin Concerto at the first, and the Beethoven Concerto at the second, of the two concerts to be given at Queen's Hall on February 2nd and 7th, on which occasions the London Symphony Orchestra will be under the direction of Herr Fritz Steinbach. Each programme will include a symphony (Beethoven and Brahms, both in c minor) and other orchestral works.

PROF. PROUT's portrait, painted by Mr. E. B. Walker, was recently handed over to him by Mr. Edward Chadfield on behalf of the subscribers. It will be in the keeping of the Incorporated Society of Musicians during the Professor's lifetime, after which it will be offered to the Trustees of the National Portrait Gallery.

THE firm of Ricordi & Co. intend to offer a prize of 500*l.* for the best opera in English by a British composer. M. Massenet is already named as one of the adjudicators. This generous offer ought to result in a work which will prove of more than passing interest.

MR. LANDON RONALD has persuaded M. Maurel to give some vocal recitals in London, but the dates are not yet fixed.

A BOOK on 'The Art of Singing,' from the pen of Mr. Ffrangcon Davies, the well-known vocalist, will shortly be published by Mr. John Lane. The preface to this work has been written by Sir Edward Elgar.

MADAME BELLE COLE, who died early in the morning of last Thursday at her London residence, was American by birth. She came to London in 1887, and at once attracted attention. She possessed a contralto voice of rich quality. As a ballad singer she was much in request. She made successful tours in Australia, New Zealand, and South Africa.

DR. THEODORE THOMAS, the eminent conductor, whose death is announced, was born at Esens, East Friesland, in 1835. His family went to New York in 1845, and in 1851 the young musician was touring with Jenny Lind, Grisi, Mario, &c., as solo violinist. In 1861 he instituted "Symphony Soirées" at Irving Hall, New York, which were discontinued in 1869, but resumed at the Steinway Hall in 1872. In 1880 he was elected conductor of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra, which post he held until called to Chicago as Director of the Conservatory of that city, and it was there, as conductor of the Chicago Orchestra, that he won high fame. He only retired from public life in 1901.

Le Ménestrel of January 1st informs its readers that Richard Strauss was not the first composer to write a "Domestic Symphony."

It appears that H. A. J. B. Chelard, born at Paris in 1789, wrote a work bearing the following title and programme:—

Les premières harmonies de la vie Fantaisie joyeuse pour orchestre composée par M. le Maître de Chapelle Chelard de Weimar.

Programme : Naissance, Baptême, Berceuse, Chanson de la nourrice, la Mère, l'Enfant, ses jeux, la première leçon, époque de la jeunesse, choral.

It was produced at Jena, March 9th, 1845, under the composer's direction. Chelard was named maître de chapelle at Weimar before Liszt. His opera 'Macbeth,' produced at Paris in 1827, was performed at Drury Lane, with Schroeder Devrient in the rôle of Lady Macbeth. Le Ménestrel, by the way, in referring to Strauss's "Sinfonia domestica," mentions that it has been performed in England. Anyhow, it has not been heard in London.

PERFORMANCES NEXT WEEK.

|        |  |
|--------|--|
| SUN.   | Sunday Society Concert, 3.30, Queen's Hall.                |
| —      | Sunday League, 7, Queen's Hall.                            |
| MON.   | Sousa's Band, 8, Queen's Hall.                             |
| TUES.  | Sousa's Band, 3 and 8, Queen's Hall.                       |
| WED.   | Sousa's Band, 3 and 8, Queen's Hall.                       |
| THURS. | Sousa's Band, 3 and 8, Queen's Hall.                       |
| —      | Broadwood's Concert, 8.30, Eolian Hall.                    |
| —      | Mr. Chatham's Vocal Recital, 8.30, Bechstein Hall.         |
| FRI.   | Sousa's Band, 3 and 8, Queen's Hall.                       |
| —      | Miss Blanche Esmonde's Vocal Recital, 8.30, Steinway Hall. |
| SAT.   | Miss E. Stuart's Orchestral Concert, 3.30, Bechstein Hall. |
| —      | Sousa's Band, 3 and 8, Queen's Hall.                       |

DRAMA

Dramatic Gossip.

GERMAN performances were resumed on Monday at the Great Queen Street Theatre, whereat the run of 'Alt-Heidelberg' was continued on the first three days of the week. The principal features in the cast consist of Herr Hans Andresen as Dr. Jüttner, Herr Max Behrend as Kellermann, Herr Leyrer as the Staats-Minister, Herr Pabst as the Prince, and Fräulein Rosina Grawz as Kathie. Hauptmann's 'Die Weber' was given for the first time on the 5th inst.

IN the reconstructed Haymarket Theatre, which, though it has lost something of its seating capacity, is one of the most comfortable of modern houses, the run of 'Beauty and the Barge,' transferred from the New Theatre, is continued. Mr. Cyril Maude repeats his ripe performance of Capt. Barley, and the cast differs little, if at all, from that with which it was produced on August 30th. 'That Brute Simmons' is also given.

'THE CRADLE,' adapted from 'Le Berceau' of M. Brieux, will be given at the Court on February 28th. On March 21st it will give way to 'The Thieves' Comedy' ('Der Biberpelz'). 'The Trojan Women' of Euripides, translated by Dr. Gilbert Murray, will follow on April 11th. Revivals of 'John Bull's Other Island' and 'You Never Can Tell,' by Mr. Bernard Shaw, and Ibsen's 'Wild Duck' are also promised.

'I PAGLIACCI' will be withdrawn from the Savoy on Saturday next, and will be followed by an adaptation of 'Du Barry,' by M. Brieux. The rendering of the latter piece will presumably be that by Mr. Belasco, produced three years ago in America.

NOTHING definite is yet announced concerning a projected visit to Berlin of Mr. Tree and his company, in course of which that actor will set before the German public some of the most conspicuous of his Shakespearean revivals at His Majesty's.

THE Rev. Forbes Phillips, whose 'For Church and Stage' had a brief and unprosperous career at the Savoy, will, it is said, give to the stage soon after Easter another play, entitled 'Lord Danby's Affair.'

A THREE-ACT farce by Mr. R. C. Carton may be expected shortly at the Avenue.

MR. ALEXANDER'S next production will consist of a new comedy by Mr. Alfred Sutro, with the curious title 'Mollentrave on Women.' This will in due course be succeeded by an adaptation by Mr. and Mrs. Temple Thurston of the well-known novel 'John Chilcote, M.P.'

ANOTHER interesting experiment at the St. James's consists in the appearance of Madame le Bargy, of the Gymnase Dramatique, in an adaptation of 'L'Adversaire,' by M. Alfred Capus. Madame le Bargy, who will act in English, will be supported by Mr. Alexander.

REHEARSALS begin forthwith at Wyndham's of a new play by Capt. Marshall in which Miss Nancy Price, Mrs. Theodore Wright, Mr. Weedon Grossmith, Mr. C. M. Lowne, and Mr. Vane Tempest will appear.

THE death is announced of Mr. Edward Rose, who won some recognition as an actor and a dramatist. Born at Swaffham, Norfolk, on August 7th, 1849, and educated at Islington Proprietary School and Ipswich Grammar School, he was articled to a solicitor. His first dramatic production consisted of 'Our Farm,' a comedietta given at the Queen's Theatre June 29th, 1872. 'Agatha Tylden, Merchant and Shipowner,' in four acts, was presented at the Haymarket, October 17th, 1892, with Mrs. Langtry as the heroine, and a cast comprising Messrs. Lewis Waller, Cyril Maude, and W. T. Lovell; and 'In Days of Old,' a romantic drama in four acts, at the St. James's, on April 26th, 1899. Alone or in collaboration he was responsible for adaptations of 'Vice Versâ,' 'The Prisoner of Zenda,' 'Under the Red Robe,' and 'English Nell.' As an actor he was seen at the Haymarket, the Strand, and Globe. He wrote theatrical notices for The Sunday Times, and took much interest in the Shakespeare Society.

MRS. PATRICK CAMPBELL, we regret to say, has broken her kneecap by a fall in New York, and will be prevented for some months from acting.

THE scene of 'The Ship,' the new tragedy of Gabriele d'Annunzio, is laid in the fifth century in the Venetian lagoons. Basiola, the heroine, has a fate similar to that of Edmund in 'Lear,' or that with which Prince Arthur is menaced in 'King John,' and has her eyes burnt out by hot metal.

'SO ICH DIR,' the title of a four-act play by Herr Paul Lindau, produced at the Berliner Theater, is an abridgment of 'Wie du mir so ich dir.' It shows yet another aspect of the code of German military honour. Its hero, an officer of the reserve, is struck publicly in the face by his private secretary, a cripple, both being in love with the same woman. The man thus insulted quits the room—it is supposed, to commit suicide, since, as he cannot return or resent the blow, he can never again hold up his head in society. Though announced as new, the subject seems familiar.

'DIE GRAF VON CHAROLAIS,' a five-act tragedy by Herr Richard Beer-Hofmann, given at the Neues Theater, Berlin, is founded on 'The Fatal Dowry' of Massinger and Field, a play which also supplied the basis of Rowe's 'Fair Penitent' and Aaron Hill's 'Insolvent.' In a fourth alteration of it, by Shiel, Macready played Romont, a part subsequently taken by Phelps. In the German rendering the termination is greatly altered.

ADAPTATIONS from the English which have recently seen the light in Germany are those of Mr. George Bernard Shaw's 'Arms and the Man,' and 'Cousin Kate,' by Mr. H. H. Davies.

TO CORRESPONDENTS. — S. G.—E. B. O.—M.—G. S.—F. H. E.—G. F. R.—received.
W. H. C.—L. B.—Many thanks.
N. R.—E. A. P.—Too late for publication.
No notice can be taken of anonymous communications.

MESSRS. BELL'S IMPORTANT ART WORKS.

MINIATURE ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE
post free on application.

THE HISTORY OF PORTRAIT MINIATURES.

By GEORGE C. WILLIAMSON, Litt.D.

2 vols. imperial 4to, with upwards of 700 Illustrations.
Dedicated by Special Permission to H.M. Queen Alexandra.

ÉDITION DE LUXE, containing 35 Hand-Painted Miniatures, and including as Frontispiece a Replica of a Portrait of Queen Alexandra, for which Her Majesty graciously sat to Mr. Alyn Williams for this Work. This exquisite Portrait can be obtained in no other form. Limited to 50 Copies, of which very few Copies remain unsold. 52l. 10s. net.

HAND-MADE PAPER EDITION, without the Frontispiece and Coloured Illustrations. Limited to 510 Copies. 10l. 10s. net.

"Dr. Williamson has made himself an expert of the first class, and his monumental work, which contains practically everything that is known upon the subject—much of which, indeed, he is the first to know—must share with Dr. Probert's 'History of Miniature Art' the distinction of being indispensable to the student and the collector Standard.

"Dr. Williamson's magnificent work gives a most comprehensive history of portrait miniatures, and it represents enthusiasm, care, and intelligence, which cannot be too highly praised. We congratulate Dr. Williamson on an extremely valuable contribution to art history, and the publishers deserve high praise for the sumptuous get-up of the volumes."—Morning Post.

"We venture to think that Dr. Williamson has gone farther than any other writer or critic before him to teach the collector of miniatures what qualities and points to look for in his search for the perfect example."—Pull Mall Gazette.

"His history of the gradual development of the art, his soundness on technical points, and his compilation of facts useful to the collector show a studious thoroughness and an understanding of his subject that are worthy of all praise. .... Everything has been done to make the book a worthy record of a three hundred years' alliance between courtliness and art."—Manchester Guardian.

Small folio, 5l. 5s. net.

DANTE GABRIEL ROSSETTI.

An Illustrated Memorial of His Art and Life.

By H. C. MARILLIER.

With 30 Photogravure Plates printed on Japanese Vellum, and nearly 200 other Illustrations, with binding designed by LAURENCE HOUSMAN.

"Mr. Marillier's monumental tome, fully and excellently illustrated as it is, must remain for many years, if not for permanence, the chief emporium of facts and data concerning Rossetti's fine art. .... The whole work forms a memorial of which any artist might be proud, and which survivors in his family cannot but accept with gratitude."—W. M. Rossetti in the Magazine of Art.

Crown folio, 5l. 5s. net.

HANS HOLBEIN.

By GERALD S. DAVIES, M.A.,

Author of 'Frans Hals.'

With 34 Photogravure Plates and about 80 Collotype Reproductions, including all the Artist's most important Works.

"In this truly noble monograph on the life and work of one of the greatest masters of the sixteenth century Mr. Davies has successfully grappled with the many difficulties with which his path was beset. Out of the overwhelming mass of material at his command he has selected the essential only, retraining from spoiling the dignity of his narrative by the inclusion of extraneous gossip, at the same time weighing well the evidence for every assertion to which he has committed himself."—Studio.

Crown folio, 5l. 5s. net.

ANTHONY VAN DYCK:

Historical Study of His Life and Works.

By LIONEL CUST, M.V.O. F.S.A.,

Director of the National Portrait Gallery, London.

With 61 Photogravure Plates and 20 Collotype and other Reproductions from Drawings and Etchings.

"To the student, whose attention gets scattered by the conflicting claims of many works of partial scope and trustworthiness, a single work of authority is a great saving of labour; and it is this which Mr. Cust gives us in a volume which stands second to none of the many noble monographs on painters issued by the same publishers in the last few years."—Manchester Guardian.

London: GEORGE BELL & SONS,
Portugal Street, Lincoln's Inn, W.C.

MACMILLAN & CO.'S LIST.

SIEPMANN'S PRIMARY FRENCH COURSE (FIRST PART). 2s. 6d. Second Part in the press. First Term, 1s. 6d.
PERRY and REUM'S NEW FRENCH COURSE for SCHOOLS. Part I. 1s. 6d.

NEW WORKS ON GEOMETRY TO MEET THE NEW REQUIREMENTS.

LESSONS in EXPERIMENTAL and PRACTICAL GEOMETRY. By H. S. HALL, M.A. and F. H. STEVENS, M.A.
 Crown 8vo, 1s. 6d. [Shortly.]

A SCHOOL GEOMETRY. By H. S. HALL, M.A. and F. H. STEVENS, M.A. Crown 8vo.

This work is based upon the recommendations of the Mathematical Association, and will be found to satisfy the requirements of University, Local, London Matriculation, Army, Navy, and other Examinations. In particular, the suggestions recently proposed by the Cambridge Syndicate have been carefully considered.

PARTS I.-VI. Containing Plane and Solid Geometry, treated both Theoretically and Graphically. 4s. 6d.

PARTS I. and II. PART I. Lines and Angles, Rectilinear Figures. PART II. Areas of Rectilinear Figures (containing the Substance of Euclid, Book I.). 1s. 6d.

PART III. Circles (containing the Substance of Euclid, Book III. 1-31, and part of Book IV.). 1s.

PARTS I., II., and III. 2s. 6d.

* * * This volume exactly suits the requirements of the New Syllabus for the King's Scholarship Examination.

PART IV. Squares and Rectangles, Geometrical Equivalents of Certain Algebraical Formulæ (containing the substance of Euclid, Book II. and Book III. Props. 35-57). Sewed, 6d.

PARTS I.-IV. 3s.

PARTS III. and IV. Containing the Substance of Euclid, Books II. and III. and part of Book IV. 1s. 6d.

PART V. Containing the Substance of Euclid, Book VI., with additional Theorems and Examples. 1s. 6d.

PARTS I.-V. 4s. 6d.

PARTS IV. and V. Containing the Substance of Euclid, Book II., Book III. 35-37, and Book VI. 2s.

PART VI. Containing the Substance of Euclid, Book XI. 1-21, together with Theorems relating to the Surfaces and Volumes of the Simpler Solid Figures. 1s. 6d.

PARTS IV., V., and VI. 2s. 6d.

A NEW GEOMETRY for SCHOOLS. By S. BARNARD, M.A., Assistant Master at Rugby School, and J. M. CHILD, B.A. Cantab. Lecturer in Mathematics, Technical College, Derby (containing the Substance of Euclid, Books I.-VI.) Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d.

A NEW GEOMETRY for JUNIOR FORMS. By S. BARNARD, M.A. and J. M. CHILD, B.A. Cantab. (containing the Substance of Euclid, Books I., III. 1-31, the easy parts of Book IV., and a description of the forms of the simpler solids). Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

This volume contains all the Practical and Theoretical Geometry required for a pass by Junior Candidates in the University Locals.

A NEW GEOMETRY for SENIOR FORMS. By S. BARNARD, M.A., and J. M. CHILD, B.A. (containing the Substance of Euclid, Books II., VI., XI., together with the Mensuration of Solids). Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

THEORETICAL GEOMETRY for BEGINNERS. By C. H. ALLCOCK, Senior Mathematical Master at Eton. Part I. (containing the Substance of Euclid, Book I.); Part II. (containing the Substance of Euclid, Book III. Props. 1-31, and Book IV. Props. 1-9); Part III. (containing the Substance of Euclid, Book II. Props. 1-11, Book III. Props. 35-37, and Book IV. Props. 10-16); and Part IV. (this Part treats of Ratio and Proportion and their application to Geometrical Theorems and Problems). Globe 8vo, 1s. 6d. each.

PRACTICAL GEOMETRY for BEGINNERS. By V. LE NEVE FOSTER and F. W. DOBUS, Assistant Masters at Eton College. Crown 4to, 2s. 6d.

PRACTICAL EXERCISES in GEOMETRY. By W. D. EGGAR, M.A., Assistant Master at Eton College. Revised Edition, with Answers. Globe 8vo, 2s. 6d.

AN ELEMENTARY TREATISE on GRAPHS. By GEO. A. GIBSON, M.A. F.R.S.E., Professor of Mathematics in the Glasgow and West of Scotland Technical College. Globe 8vo, 3s. 6d.

AN INTRODUCTION to the CALCULUS. Based on Graphical Methods. By GEORGE A. GIBSON, M.A. F.R.S.E., Professor of Mathematics in the Glasgow and West of Scotland Technical College. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

A SHORT INTRODUCTION to GRAPHICAL ALGEBRA. By H. S. HALL, M.A. Third Edition, Revised and Enlarged. Globe 8vo, 1s. KEY, 3s. 6d.

ELEMENTARY ALGEBRA for SCHOOLS. By H. S. HALL, M.A., and S. R. KNIGHT, B.A. Eighth Edition, Revised, with a Chapter on Graphs. Globe 8vo, 3s. 6d. With Answers, 4s. 6d. Answers, 1s. KEY, containing full Solutions, with Diagrams of the Graphical Examples, ss. 6d.

CAMBRIDGE LOCAL EXAMINATIONS, 1905.

|  | s. | d. |
|--|----|----|
| ACTS of the APOSTLES—AUTHORISED VERSION. T. E. PAGE and A. S. WALPOLE. ( Junior and Senior ) ... | 2  | 6  |
| — The GREEK TEXT. With Notes. T. E. PAGE. ( Junior and Senior ) ...                                     | 3  | 6  |
| MILTON'S SAMSON AGONISTES. H. M. PERCIVAL. ( Senior ) ...  | 2  | 6  |
| SCOTT'S LAY of the LAST MINSTREL. G. H. STUART and E. H. ELLIOT. ( Junior ) ...                  | 2  | 0  |
| — CANTOS I. to III. 1s. 3d. Sewed, 1s. ( Preliminary ) ...  |    |    |
| — IVANHOE. With Notes. ( Junior and Senior ) ...  | 2  | 6  |
| SHAKESPEARE'S MACBETH. K. DEIGHTON. ( Senior ) ...   | 1  | 9  |
| — TWELFTH NIGHT. K. DEIGHTON. ( Junior and Senior ) ...   | 1  | 9  |
| RANSOME'S SHORT STUDIES of SHAKESPEARE'S PLOTS—MACBETH. Sewed. ( Senior ) ...                    | 0  | 9  |
| TENNYSON'S PRINCESS. P. M. WALLACE. ( Senior ) ...   | 3  | 6  |
| CAESAR'S DE BELLO GALLICO. BOOK I. A. S. WALPOLE. ( Junior ) ...                                 | 1  | 6  |
| CICERO'S PRO MURENA. J. H. FREESE. ( Senior ) ...  | 2  | 6  |
| HORACE'S ODES. BOOK I. T. E. PAGE. ( Senior ) ...  | 1  | 6  |

|   | s. | d. |
|---|----|----|
| LIVY. BOOK V. M. ALFORD. ( Senior ) ...   | 1  | 6  |
| VIRGIL'S AENEID. BOOK II. T. E. PAGE. ( Junior and Senior ) ...                           | 1  | 6  |
| XENOPHON'S ANABASIS. BOOK IV. E. D. STONE. ( Junior ) ...                                 | 1  | 6  |
| EURIPIDES'S MEDEA. M. A. BAYFIELD. ( Junior and Senior ) ...                              | 1  | 6  |
| — MEDEA. A. W. VERRALL. ( Junior and Senior ) ...  | 2  | 6  |
| PLATO'S EUTHYPHRO, APOLOGY, CRITO, and PHAEDO. Translated by F. J. CHURCH. ( Senior ) ... | 2  | 6  |
| DEMOSTHENES'S PHILIPPIC I., OLYNTHIACS I.-III. J. E. SANDYS. ( Senior ) ...               | 5  | 0  |
| HOMER'S ILIAD. BOOK XXIX. W. LEAF and M. A. BAYFIELD. ( Senior ) ...                      | 1  | 6  |
| MÉRIMÉE'S COLOMBA. G. E. FASNACHT. ( Junior and Senior ) ...                              | 2  | 0  |
| HAUFF'S DAS WIRTSCHAUS IM SPESSART. G. E. FASNACHT. ( Junior ) ...                        | 3  | 0  |
| GOETHE'S IPHIGÉNIE AUF TAURIS. H. B. COTTERILL. ( Senior ) ...                            | 3  | 0  |
| — IPHIGÉNIE AUF TAURIS. C. A. EGGERT. ( Senior ) ...   | 3  | 6  |

COLLEGE OF PRECEPTORS EXAMINATIONS, 1905.

|  | s. | d. |
|--|----|----|
| WELCH and DUFFIELD'S EXERCISES in UNSEEN TRANSLATION in LATIN ...   | 1  | 6  |
| ALFORD'S LATIN PASSAGES for TRANSLATION ...   | 3  | 0  |
| CAESAR'S HELVETIAN WAR. W. WELCH and C. G. DUFFIELD. ( Third Class ) ...                               | 1  | 6  |
| — GALLIC WAR. BOOK I. A. S. WALPOLE. ( Second Class ) ...   | 1  | 6  |
| — GALLIC WAR. BOOK IV. CLEMENT BRYANS. ( First and Second Class ) ...   | 1  | 6  |
| — GALLIC WAR. BOOK V. C. COLBECK. ( First Class ) ...   | 1  | 6  |
| EUTROPIUS. BOOKS I. and II. W. WELCH and C. G. DUFFIELD. ( Third Class ) ...                           | 1  | 6  |
| VIRGIL'S AENEID. BOOK II. T. E. PAGE. ( First and Second Class ) ...                                   | 1  | 6  |
| — AENEID. BOOK III. T. E. PAGE. ( First and Second Class ) ...  | 1  | 6  |
| HORACE'S ODES. BOOK III. T. E. PAGE. 1s. 6d. Edited by the same. ( First Class ) ...                   | 2  | 0  |
| XENOPHON'S ANABASIS. BOOK I. A. S. WALPOLE. ( First and Second Class ) ...                             | 1  | 6  |
| — ANABASIS. BOOK I. E. A. WELLS. ( First and Second Class ) ...   | 1  | 6  |
| — ANABASIS. BOOK IV. E. D. STONE. ( First and Second Class ) ...  | 1  | 6  |
| EURIPIDES'S HECUBA. J. BOND and A. S. WALPOLE. ( First Class ) ...                                     | 1  | 6  |
| — MEDEA. M. A. BAYFIELD. ( First Class ) ...  | 1  | 6  |
| — MEDEA. A. W. VERRALL. ( First Class ) ...   | 2  | 6  |
| PEACOCK and BELL'S PASSAGES for GREEK TRANSLATION ...   | 1  | 6  |
| The ACTS of the APOSTLES—AUTHORISED VERSION. With Notes by T. E. PAGE, M.A., and Rev. A. S. WALPOLE, M.A. ... | 2  | 6  |
| — The GREEK TEXT. With Notes. T. E. PAGE, M.A. ...   | 3  | 6  |

|   | s. | d. |
|---|----|----|
| MACAULAY'S HORATIUS. W. T. WEBB. Sewed. ( Preliminary ) ...   |    |    |
| POEMS of ENGLAND. B. GEORGE and A. SIDGWICK. ( Third Class and Preliminary ) ...                      | 2  | 6  |
| SCOTT'S LAY of the LAST MINSTREL. F. T. PALGRAVE ...   | 1  | 0  |
| — LAY of the LAST MINSTREL. G. H. STUART and E. H. ELLIOT. 2s. Cantos I.-III. ( Second and Third Class ) ... | 1  | 6  |
| SHAKESPEARE'S JULIUS CAESAR. K. DEIGHTON. With Appendix. ( First and Second Class ) ...               | 1  | 9  |
| — TWELFTH NIGHT. K. DEIGHTON. ( First and Second Class ) ...   | 1  | 9  |
| SAINTSBURY'S SHORT HISTORY of ENGLISH LITERATURE ...   | 8  | 6  |
| NESFIELD'S OUTLINE of ENGLISH GRAMMAR. ( Second and Third Class ) ...                                 | 1  | 6  |
| — KEY, 2s. 6d. net.   |    |    |
| ORAL EXERCISES in ENGLISH COMPOSITION. ( Third Class ) ...  | 1  | 6  |
| JUNIOR COURSE of ENGLISH COMPOSITION. ( Second and Third Class ) ...                                  | 1  | 6  |
| SENIOR COURSE of ENGLISH COMPOSITION. ( First Class ) ...   | 3  | 6  |
| — KEY, 1s. net.   |    |    |
| MANUAL of ENGLISH GRAMMAR and COMPOSITION. ( First Class ) ...  | 2  | 6  |
| — KEY, 2s. 6d. net.   |    |    |
| MÉRIMÉE'S COLOMBA. G. E. FASNACHT. ( First Class ) ...  | 2  | 0  |
| HAUFF'S DAS WIRTSCHAUS IM SPESSART. G. E. FASNACHT. ( First Class ) ...                               | 3  | 0  |

DAVID NUTT,

57-59, LONG ACRE.

Mr. NUTT has sent out to all Members of the Irish Text Society who have paid their Subscription for 1902,

Vol. V. The MARTIAL CAREER of CONGHAL CLAIRINGHNEACH. Edited for the first time, with Translation, Introduction, Notes, and Glossary, by PATRICK MACSWEENEY, M.A. Demy 8vo, lxvii-233 pp. cloth, 10s. 6d. net.

*.* The Volumes for 1903, 1904, are in the press. The Volumes for 1899, 1900 (Vols. I.-III.), are out of print. The Volume for 1901, KEATING, HISTORY of IRELAND, Vol. I., is on sale at 10s. 6d. net.

Mr. NUTT has sent out to all Members of the Folk-Lore Society who have paid their Subscription for 1902-1903,

Vol. LI. FOLK-LORE of the MUSQUAKIE INDIANS, and CATALOGUE of MUSQUAKIE BEAD-WORK and other OBJECTS in the COLLECTION of the FOLK-LORE SOCIETY. By MARY ALICIA OWEN. With 8 Plates (some Coloured) and numerous Figures in the Text. Demy 8vo, x-147 pp. cloth, 10s. 6d. net.

Vol. LIII. COUNTY FOLK-LORE. Vol. IV. PRINTED EXTRACTS, No. 6. Examples of Printed Folk-lore concerning Northumberland. Collected by (Mrs) M. C. BALFOUR, and Edited by N. W. THOMAS. Demy 8vo, xvi-180 pp. cloth, 10s. 6d. net.

*.* The Annual Subscription to the Folk-lore is 1l. 1s., in return for which Members receive the Extra Volume for the year, and the Transactions, FOLK-LORE, which form a yearly volume of some 450 pp., published at 20s. net.

NOTES AND QUERIES.

GENERAL INDEXES.

THE FOLLOWING ARE STILL IN STOCK:—

|                    | £. | s. | d. |
|--------------------|----|----|----|
| GENERAL INDEX,     |    |    |    |
| FOURTH SERIES ...  | 3  | 3  | 0  |
| GENERAL INDEX,     |    |    |    |
| SIXTH SERIES ...   | 0  | 6  | 0  |
| GENERAL INDEX,     |    |    |    |
| SEVENTH SERIES ... | 0  | 6  | 0  |
| GENERAL INDEX,     |    |    |    |
| EIGHTH SERIES ...  | 0  | 6  | 0  |

For Copies by post an additional Three-pence is charged.

JOHN C. FRANCIS,
Notes and Queries Office,
11, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

SIXTH EDITION, fcap. 8vo, cloth, price Sixpence.

REMARKABLE ECLIPSES:

A Sketch of the most interesting Circumstances connected with the Observation of Solar and Lunar Eclipses, both in Ancient and Modern Times.

By W. T. LYNN, B.A. F.R.A.S.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON &amp; CO., LIMITED, St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, E.C.

NOW READY, price 10s. 6d. net.

THE NINTH SERIES
GENERAL INDEX

OF

NOTES AND QUERIES.

With Introduction by JOSEPH KNIGHT, F.S.A.

This Index is double the size of previous ones, as it contains, in addition to the usual Index of Subjects, the Names and Pseudonyms of Writers, with a list of their Contributions. The number of constant Contributors exceeds eleven hundred. The Publisher reserves the right of increasing the price of the volume at any time. The number printed is limited, and the type has been distributed.

Free by post, 10s. 11d.

JOHN C. FRANCIS, Notes and Queries Office, Bream's Buildings, E.C.

NATIONAL PROVIDENT
INSTITUTION

Estab.] FOR MUTUAL LIFE ASSURANCE. [1835.

Accumulated Fund over ... £6,000,000
Paid in Claims more than ... £12,400,000

PROFITS.

These are divided every five years solely amongst the Assured. At the 1902 Division a Cash Profit of £761,602 was apportioned amongst the members, being considerably more than one-third of the amount paid in premiums during the previous five years.

ENDOWMENT-ASSURANCE

Policies are issued, combining Life Assurance at minimum cost with provision for old age, and are singularly advantageous.

L. F. HOVIL,

Actuary and Secretary.

48, Gracechurch Street, London, E.C.

Applications for Agencies invited.

THE

LIVERPOOL and LONDON and GLOBE
INSURANCE COMPANY.

Total Invested Funds.....£10,401,149.

FIRE. LIFE. ENDOWMENTS. ANNUITIES.

For the Quinquennium ended December 31, 1903, the large Reversionary Bonus of 35s. per cent. per annum was again declared on Sums Assured under the Participating Tables of the Prospectus, and provision made for Intermediate Bonuses during the present Quinquennium.

Head Office—1, DALE STREET, LIVERPOOL.
London Chief Office—CORNHILL, LONDON.

TENTH EDITION, price Two Shillings,

CELESTIAL MOTIONS: a Handy Book of Astronomy. Tenth Edition. With 3 Plates. By W. T. LYNN, B.A. F.R.A.S.

"Well known as one of our best introductions to astronomy."
Guardian.

Sampson Low, Marston & Co., Limited, St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, E.C.

WHEN IN DOUBT—

Use Vinolia Soap

for your complexion.

Premier 4d.

Toilet (otto) 10d.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.
The best remedy for
ACIDITY of the STOMACH, HEADACHE, HEARTBURN, GOUT,
And INDIGESTION.
And Safest Aperient for Delicate Constitutions,
Ladies, Children, and Infants.
DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

LONDON LIBRARY, ST. JAMES'S SQUARE, S.W.

Patron—HIS MAJESTY THE KING. President—The Right Hon. A. J. BALFOUR, M.P.
Vice-Presidents—The Right Hon. VISCOUNT GOSCHEN; FREDERIC HARRISON, Esq.; GEORGE MEREDITH, Esq.
ALFRED RUSSEL WALLACE, Esq., F.R.S.
Trustees—EARL of ROSEBURY, K.G.; Right Hon. LORD AVRBURY, F.R.S.; Right Hon. Sir M. GRANT DUFF, G.C.S.I.

Committee—Sir Rowland Blennerhassett, Bart., LL.D., Dr. J. H. Bridges, Horace T. Brown, Esq., F.R.S., Prof. Ingram Bywater, Prof. Lewis Campbell, LL.D., Austin Dobson, Esq., LL.D., Sydney Gedge, Esq., Sir A. Geikie, F.R.S., Sir R. Giffen, K.C.B., F.R.S., Edmund Gosse, Esq., LL.D., Mrs. J. R. Green, Rev. W. Hunt, M.A., Litt.D., Sir C. P. Ilbert, K.C.S.I., Sir C. M. Kennedy, K.C.M.G., C.B., Sidney Lee, Esq., Litt.D., W. S. Lilly, Esq., Sidney J. Low, Esq., Sir Frank T. Marzials, C.B., Sir F. Pollock, Bart., Rev. J. H. Rigg, D.D., H. R. Tedder, Esq., Rev. H. Wace, D.D., Sir Spencer Walpole, K.C.B., A. W. Ward, Esq., Litt.D., LL.D.

The Library contains about 220,000 Volumes of Ancient and Modern Literature, in various Languages. Subscription, 3l. 3s. a year, with an entrance fee of 1l. 1s.; Life Membership, according to age. Fifteen Volumes are allowed to Country and Ten to Town Members. Reading-Room Open from Ten to Half-past Six. The NEW CATALOGUE (1626 pp. 4to, 1903) is now ready, price 2l. 2s.; to Members, 25s.
C. T. HAGBERG WRIGHT, LL.D., Secretary and Librarian.

THE BOOK OF THE MOMENT.

JAPAN BY THE JAPANESE.

A Survey by its Highest Authorities.

[Third Impression.]

Edited by ALFRED STEAD. Large 8vo, 20s. net.

St. James's Gazette.—"Let us say at once that 'Japan by the Japanese' is indispensable to all who would learn what Japan has done in the past, what she is now doing, and what she seeks to do in the future."

Speaker.—"Mr. Stead is to be congratulated on having compiled the most authoritative and instructive book upon Japan that has yet appeared in English."

AT ALL LIBRARIES AND BOOKSELLERS.

London: WM. HEINEMANN, 21, Bedford Street, W.C.

SEE

BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE

FOR JANUARY

FOR THE OPENING CHAPTERS OF

THE MYSTICS,

A NEW STORY BY THE AUTHOR OF 'JOHN CHILCOTE, M.P.'

ALSO

THE WAR IN THE EAST.

By O.

I. The BLOCKADE-RUNNER.

II. The AFFAIR of the BRIDGE GUARD.

Recollections of a Visit to Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton at Knebworth in 1857.

By R. H. J.

Old Galway Life: Further Recollections.

A STUDY OF THE
RUSSO-JAPANESE WAR.

By CHASSEUR.

I. The NAVAL CAMPAIGN.

The Consequences of a Japanese Victory.

Boy at the Public School.

An Eighteenth-Century Laird.

By Sir HERBERT MAXWELL, Bart., M.P.

Manners and Morals in the Kennels.

Musings Without Method.

"Very Excellent Things are Spoken of Thee," Jerusalem.

By Col. HENRY KNOLLYS, M.V.O.

The Rawhide. By Stewart Edward White.

Richard Hartley, Prospector.

By DOUGLAS BLACKBURN.

DO NOT MISS

BLACKWOOD for January.

DIGBY, LONG & CO.'S NEW LIST.

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE ADVENTURES OF A NAVAL OFFICER.

By Capt. CHARLES HUNTER, R.N.

Edited by Sir SPENSER ST. JOHN, G.C.M.G.

In crown 8vo, cloth gilt, price 6s.

NEW SIX-SHILLING NOVELS

The REDEMPTION of DAMIAN
GIER. By WINKFRIDE TRAFFORD TAUNTON,
Author of 'Silent Dominion,' &c.

Morning Advertiser.—"It is a wonderfully interesting problem that the authoress has set herself to work out in her latest book, 'The Redemption of Damian Gier,' and she has brought in the task a mind well qualified for its performance....An absorbing story. The authoress has already made a name for herself as a clever writer, but she has surpassed herself in the present instance....A book which will not easily be forgotten."

CELIA'S FORTUNE.

By ADRIANE SERGEANT.

Times.—"A well-told story."
Scotsman.—"Celia is a sweet and lovable heroine."
Pall Mall Gazette.—"A very human and interesting group of characters."

Family Fair.—"A good novel."
Outlook.—"The novel shows Miss Sergeant's power at its ripest."
Manchester Courier.—"Well written, and full of vigorous interest."

IMPUDENT PRUE.

By ADAM ASCUE.

Glasgow Herald.—"A very clever book, which is an immense relief from everyday fiction."

The MASTER of MADRONO MILLS.

By IZA DUFFUS HARDY, Author of 'The Love that He Passed By,' 'McGillroy's Millions,' &c.

Daily News.—"The story is well conceived and cleverly written. It is interesting all through."

Bookman.—"A very exciting and realistic tale."

In crown 8vo, cloth gilt, price 7s. 6d. net.

The DIVINA COMMEDIA of DANTE.

Translated into English Verse by C. POTTER

Aberdeen Press.—"We have here a translation of the 'Purgatorio' and the 'Paradiso' of Dante, together with a rendering into English of the two cantos from the 'Inferno'....This translation has led us to read again the great poem of Dante. It is a translation to be read with pleasure and profit. The verse in English has music and rhythm, it glides easily along, and it bears with it the meaning of the poet in such a measure that the English reader may readily grasp it."

Liverpool Courier.—"Mr. Potter's translation is well written and pleasant to read."

London: DIGBY, LONG & CO.,
18, Bouverie Street, Fleet Street, E.C.

MR. EDWARD ARNOLD'S NEW BOOKS.

TO BE PUBLISHED ON TUESDAY NEXT,
JANUARY 10.

THE UNVEILING OF LHASA.

An Account of the Recent Expedition to Tibet.

By EDMUND CANDLER.

With a large number of Illustrations and a Map.
Demy 8vo, 15s. net.

NOW READY AT ALL LIBRARIES AND BOOKSELLERS.

THE REMINISCENCES OF

SIR HENRY HAWKINS (Baron
BRAMPTON). In 2 vols. 30s. net.

The RUSSO-JAPANESE WAR, UP to LIAO-YANG. By THOMAS COWEN. With striking Illustrations and numerous Plans. Demy 8vo, 15s. net.

EDWARD and PAMELA FITZ-

GERALD. Being some Account of their Lives, compiled from the Letters of those who knew them. By GERALD CAMPBELL. Demy 8vo, with numerous Portraits, 12s. 6d. net.

PALL MALL GAZETTE.—"Mr. Campbell's book adds to our knowledge of Lord Edward's intimate life, and gives us by the way the most delightful pictures of the everyday life of the Leinster family, as well as of the characters of a group of men and women whose lives and personalities were of the most romantic and fascinating."

MY SPORTING HOLIDAYS. By

Sir HENRY SETON-KARR, C.M.G. M.P. Demy 8vo, with numerous Illustrations, 12s. 6d. net.

SPECTATOR.—"The book which, like 'Scolopax's' delightful gossip, informs the reader's mind without ever taxing his patience grows yearly rarer. Sir Henry Seton-Karr's volume is a very pleasing specimen of this class, the notebook of one who has wandered far afield in search of sport, and can write of his doings without egotism or vain repetitions. His sketches of Western society are very vivid pictures, full of insight and good humour."

PAGES from a COUNTRY DIARY.

By PERCIVAL SOMERS. Large crown 8vo, with Photogravure Illustrations, 7s. 6d.

SPECTATOR.—"A very pleasant book."

PALL MALL GAZETTE.—"Mr. Somers is readable in every page."

SECOND IMPRESSION.

GHOST STORIES of an ANTI-

QUARY. By M. R. JAMES, Litt.D., Director of the Fitzwilliam Museum, Cambridge. Bound in art canvas, 6s.

GUARDIAN.—"We do not hesitate to say that these are among the best ghost stories we have ever read; they rank with that greatest of all ghost stories, Lord Lytton's 'The Haunted and the Haunters.'"

MR. F. C. GOULD'S NEW BOOK.

POLITICAL CARICATURES, 1904.

By F. CARRUTHERS GOULD. Super-royal 4to, 6s.
net.

Also an ÉDITION DE LUXE of 100 Large-Paper Copies, Numbered and Signed, 2l. 2s. net.

NEW SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.

THIRD IMPRESSION.

THE CELESTIAL SURGEON.

By F. F. MONTRESOR,

Author of 'Into the Highways and Hedges,' 'At the Cross Roads,' &c. 6s.

SECOND IMPRESSION.

THE RAMBLING RECTOR.

By ELEANOR ALEXANDER,
Author of 'Lady Anne's Walk.'

THIRD IMPRESSION.

PETER'S PEDIGREE.

By DOROTHEA CONYERS,

Author of 'The Boy, Some Horses, and a Girl.'

Illustrated with Thumb-nail Sketches by NORA K. SHELLEY.

London:

EDWARD ARNOLD, 41 and 43, Maddox Street, W.

SMITH, ELDER &amp; CO.'S PUBLICATIONS.

NEXT WEEK, with a Frontispiece, crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

TO LHASSA AT LAST.

By POWELL MILLINGTON,

Author of 'In Cantonments,' 'In and Beyond Cantonments,' &amp;c.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITIONS OF TWO POPULAR BOOKS.

IMMEDIATELY, crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. each.

The TRAGEDY of the "KOROSKO." By A. CONAN DOYLE. With 40 Full-Page Illustrations.The GREEN FLAG, and other Stories of War and Sport. By A. CONAN DOYLE. With a Frontispiece.HISTORICAL MYSTERIES. By Andrew Lang. With a Frontispiece. Small demy 8vo, 9s. net.DAILY EXPRESS.—"Mr. Lang is a sort of mediæval Mr. Holmes. He is ever probing the past for mystery, which he expounds in a pleasing fashion. All the cases, set out with great attention to detail, make fascinating reading."COLONIAL MEMORIES. By Lady Broome, Authoress (as Lady Barker) of 'Ribbon Stories,' 'Stories about ———,' &c. Large post 8vo, 6s. net.TIMES.—"Written with first-hand knowledge and a pleasing sense of humour."PUNCH.—"Very pleasant reading, being imbued with the unaffected art of a traveller's letters home."LEAVES from the DIARY of HENRY GREVILLE. Third Series.

By ALICE, COUNTESS OF STRAFFORD. 8vo, 11s.

TRUTH.—"Excellent reading from the first page to the last. There are many very good and quite new stories about well-known people."SPECTATOR.—"Entertaining and good-humoured. The book is full of wise judgments and curious gossip."TRAGIC DRAMA in ÆSCHYLUS, SOPHOCLES, and SHAKESPEARE. An Essay. By LEWIS CAMPBELL, M.A. Oxon., LL.D. Glasgow, Hon. D. Litt. Oxon., Emeritus Professor of Greek at the University of St. Andrews, &c. Large post 8vo, 7s. 6d.SCOTSMAN.—"Full of ripe learning, and well-weighed opinions."MANCHESTER COURIER.—"A very delightful ramble through the dramas of three of the world's greatest tragedians in the company of one who knows the country well."The SONNETS of MICHAEL ANGELO BUONARROTI. By JOHN ADDINGTON SYMONDS. NEW EDITION. Small crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

* * The Italian Text is printed on the pages opposite the Translation.

WORKS BY W. H. FITCHETT, B.A. LL.D.

Capt. R. F. SCOTT, R.N., Commander of the Antarctic Expedition, states that Dr. Fitchett's histories were favourite reading with his men.

NEW VOLUME RECENTLY PUBLISHED.

THE COMMANDER OF THE "HIRONDELLE."

With 16 Full-Page Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 6s.

METHODIST RECORDER.—"We are more than proud—we are devoutly thankful that a story so perfect in all respects, and so noble in spirit, should have come from the pen of a colonial Methodist minister. The illustrations are excellent."NELSON and HIS CAPTAINS.

Sketches of Famous Seamen. SECOND IMPRESSION. With 11 Portraits and a Facsimile Letter. Crown 8vo, 6s.

WELLINGTON'S MEN. Some

Soldier Autobiographies. Edited by W. H. FITCHETT, B.A. LL.D. Crown 8vo, 6s.

The TALE of the GREAT MUTINY.

THIRD IMPRESSION. With 8 Portraits and 4 Maps. Crown 8vo, 6s.

HOW ENGLAND SAVED EUROPE.

The Story of the Great War (1793-1815). SECOND IMPRESSION. In 4 vols. crown 8vo, with Portraits, Facsimiles, and Plans, 6s. each.

FIGHTS for the FLAG. Second

EDITION. With 16 Portraits, 13 Plans, and a Facsimile Letter of the Duke of Marlborough. Crown 8vo, 6s.

DEEDS THAT WON the EMPIRE.

SEVENTEENTH EDITION. With 16 Pictures and 11 Plans. Crown 8vo, 6s.

NEW NOVEL BY MRS. HENRY DE LA PASTURE.

NEARLY READY, crown 8vo, 6s.

PETER'S MOTHER.

By Mrs. HENRY DE LA PASTURE,

AUTHOR OF 'DEBORAH OF TOD'S,' 'ADAM GRIGSON,' 'CORNELIUS,' &amp;c.

SECOND IMPRESSION

OF

KATHARINE TYNAN'S
NEW NOVEL.

AT ALL LIBRARIES AND BOOKSELLERS.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

JULIA.

SECOND IMPRESSION.

BY

KATHARINE TYNAN.

WORLD.—"There is much to praise in Mrs. Hinkson's story. Mrs. O'Kavanagh, Julia's grandmother, is one of her very best-drawn characters."SKETCH.—"Full of simple, human feeling, touched with delicacy and refinement."SCOTSMAN.—"Julia" is as charming a novel as any that has been published this season."

JULIA.

SECOND IMPRESSION.

BY

KATHARINE TYNAN.

GENTLEMAN.—"A very charming story. It should give pleasure to all readers who like a story that is at once wholesome and undeniably interesting."WEEKLY SURVEY.—"Here is Mrs. Hinkson quite at her best. The book cannot fail to charm."DAILY TELEGRAPH.—"Katharine Tynan can always be depended upon for telling an engaging love story."STANDARD.—"Cornhill Magazine has a restful trustworthiness about it which is particularly pleasing in these changeable times of ours."THE CORNHILL
MAGAZINE

For JANUARY. Price ONE SHILLING.

ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTION, INCLUDING POSTAGE TO ANY ADDRESS IN THE POSTAL UNION, 14s. PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.

MRS. MARGARET L. WOODS,

Author of 'A Village Tragedy,' 'Sons of the Sword,' &amp;c.,

BEGINS IN THE JANUARY NUMBER

A NEW SERIAL STORY, entitled

THE KING'S REVOKE.

The JANUARY Number contains in addition the following Contributions:—

BLACKSTICK PAPERS. No. 10, 'Jacob Omnium.' By Mrs. Richmond Ritchie. With an Unpublished Sketch by RICHARD DOYLE.

ROSE of the WORLD. Book II. Chaps. XIII-XV. By Agnes and Egerton Castle.

The TERCENTENARY of 'DON QUIXOTE.' By Austin Dobson.

A WELSH RECTOR of the LAST CENTURY. By His Honour Judge Parry.

A RHODES SCHOLAR from GERMANY on OXFORD. By Hans E. von Linderer-Wildau.

WHEN MY SHIP COMES IN. By Frank Sidgwick.

The AMBASSADOR'S STORY. By Lady Maud Rolleston.

WEIGHING a WORLD. By W. A. Shenstone, F.R.S.

The HAUNTED BOAT: a Story of the Norfolk Breads.

By G. F. Bradby.

The LAST of the PROCTORS. By Bernard Capes.

The LAND of ROMANCE. By Frank T. Bullen.

G. D., FRIEND of LAMB. By E. V. Lucas.

To be had of all Booksellers and Newsagents, or direct from the Publishers.

* * Messrs. SMITH, ELDER &amp; CO. will be happy to send a CATALOGUE of their PUBLICATIONS post free on application.

London: SMITH, ELDER &amp; CO. 15, Waterloo Place, S.W.

THE ATHENÆUM

Journal of English and Foreign Literature, Science, the Fine Arts, Music and the Drama.

No. 4029.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 14, 1905.

PRICE
THREEPENCE
REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER

ROYAL INSTITUTION of GREAT BRITAIN, ALBEMARLE STREET, PICCADILLY, W.

TUESDAY NEXT, January 17, at 5 o'clock, Prof. L. C. MIALL, D.Sc. F.R.S., Fullerian Professor of Physiology, R.I., FIRST of SIX LECTURES on 'Adaptation and History in the Structure and Life of Animals.' One Guinea the Course.

THURSDAY, January 19, at 5 o'clock, Prof. CHURTON COLLINS, M.A., FIRST of TWO LECTURES. I. 'The Religion of Shakespeare.' II. 'The Philosophy and Significance of "The Tempest."' Half-a-Guinea.

SATURDAY, January 21, at 3 o'clock, Prof. CHARLES OMAN, M.A. F.R.S., FIRST of TWO LECTURES on 'Wat Tyler in London.' Half-a-Guinea.

Subscription to all the Courses in the Season. Two Guineas.

FRIDAY EVENING, January 20, at 9 o'clock, Prof. Sir JAMES DEWAR, M.A. LL.D. D.Sc. F.R.S., on 'New Low Temperature Phenomena.'

UNIVERSITY of LONDON.

MARTIN WHITE BENEFACTION.

TWO LECTURES on 'The JAPANESE SPIRIT' will be delivered by Mr. Y. OKAKURA, of the Imperial University, Tokyo, at the LONDON SCHOOL of ECONOMICS, on TUESDAY, January 17, and FRIDAY, January 20, at 8.30 p.m.

Cards of Admission may be obtained free on application to the SECRETARY, London School of Economics, Clare Market, W.C.

UNIVERSITY of LONDON.

A COURSE of NINE LECTURES on 'The ASCOMYCETES, with SPECIAL RELATION to the ORIGIN of the ANTHUS,' will be given by Mr. Y. H. BLACKMAN, M.A., at UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, on WEDNESDAYS, at 5 p.m., beginning on JANUARY 18. The Lectures are free.

Tickets may be obtained on application to THE ACADEMIC REGISTRAR, University of London, South Kensington, S.W.

BRITISH ARCHEOLOGICAL ASSOCIATION.

32, Sackville Street, Piccadilly — EVENING MEETING, JANUARY 18, 8 o'clock. The following Paper will be read:— 'Norman Art and Architecture in Sicily,' by Rev. HENRY CART. M.A. GEO. PATRICK, A.R.I.B.A., Hon. Secretary.

ROYAL HISTORICAL SOCIETY.

(Incorporated by Royal Charter.)

AN ORDINARY MEETING of the SOCIETY will be held on THURSDAY, January 19, at 5 p.m., in CLIFFORD'S INN HALL, Fleet Street, when the following Paper and Communication will be read and made:—

'The Development of the Inclosure Movement in England,' by Miss M. M. LEONARD, F.R.Hist.S.
'Hordmen in Surrey,' by Mrs. H. E. MALDEN, V.P. and Hon. Sec.

THE FOLK-LORE SOCIETY.—THE TWENTY-SEVENTH ANNUAL MEETING of the SOCIETY will be held at 22, ALBEMARLE STREET, PICCADILLY, on WEDNESDAY, January 18, at 8 p.m., when the President, Dr. W. H. D. ROUSE, will deliver an Address. Miss M. L. HODGSON will also exhibit some Necklaces, Powder Horns, Needle-boxes, and other Objects made and used by the Huculs.

F. A. MILNE, Secretary.
11, Old Square, Lincoln's Inn, January 9, 1905.

NEWSVENDORS' BENEVOLENT and PROVIDENT INSTITUTION.

Founded 1839.

Funds exceed 4,000L.

Office: Memorial Hall Buildings, 16, Farringdon Street, London, E.C.

Patron:

The Right Hon. the EARL of ROSEBURY, K.G.

President:

The LORD GLENESK.

Treasurer:

The LONDON and WESTMINSTER BANK, LIMITED.

A Donation of Ten Guineas constitutes a Vice-President and gives three votes for life at all elections. Each Donation of Three Guineas gives a vote at all elections for life. Every Annual Subscriber is entitled to one vote at all elections in respect of each Five Shillings so paid.

MEMBERSHIP.—Every Man and Woman throughout the United Kingdom, whether Publisher, Wholesaler, Retailer, Employer, or Employee, is entitled to become a Member of this Institution, and enjoy its benefits upon payment of Five Shillings annually, or Three Guineas for life, provided that he or she is engaged in the sale of Newspapers, and such members who thus contribute secure priority of consideration in the event of their needing aid from the Institution.

PENSIONS.—The Annuitants now number thirty-six, the men receiving 25L and the Women 20L per annum each and they include:—

The "Royal Victoria Pension Fund," which was established in 1887 and enlarged in 1897, 1901, and 1902, perpetually commemorates the great advantages the News Trade enjoyed under the rule of Her late Majesty Queen Victoria, provides Pensions of 20L a year each for Six Widows of News-vendors.

The "Francis Fund" provides Pensions for One Man, 25L, and One Woman, 20L, and was specially subscribed in memory of the late John Francis, who died on April 6, 1882, and was for more than fifty years Publisher of the Athenæum. He took an active and leading part throughout the whole period of the agitation for the repeal of the various then existing "Taxes on Knowledge," and was for very many years a staunch supporter of this Institution.

The "Herbert Lloyd Pension Fund" provides 25L per annum for one man; and was established in 1903 in perpetual and grateful memory of Mr. Herbert Lloyd, who was a generous benefactor of this Institution, and who died May 12, 1899.

The "Hospital Pensions" consist of an annual contribution of 35L, whereby Sir Henry Charles Burdett and his co-directors generously enable the Committee to grant 20L for One Year to a Man and 15L for One Year to a Woman, under conditions laid down in Rule 8c.

W. WILKIE JONES, Secretary.

EDUCATION.

Parents or Guardians desiring accurate information relative to the CHOICE of SCHOOLS for BOYS or GIRLS or TUTORs in England or Abroad are invited to call upon or send fully detailed particulars to MESSRS. GABBITS, THRING & CO.,

who for more than thirty years have been closely in touch with the leading Educational Establishments.

Advice, free of charge, is given by Mr Thring, Nephew of the late Head Master of Uppingham, 36, Sackville Street, London, W.

THE BOOKSELLERS' PROVIDENT INSTITUTION.

Founded 1837.

Patron—HER MAJESTY QUEEN ALEXANDRA.

Invested Capital 30,000L.

A UNIQUE INVESTMENT
Offered to London Booksellers and their Assistants.

A young man or woman of twenty-five can invest the sum of Twenty Guineas (or its equivalent by instalments), and obtain the right to participate in the following advantages:—

FIRST. Freedom from want in time of Adversity as long as need exists.

SECOND. Permanent Relief in Old Age.

THIRD. Medical advice by eminent Physicians and Surgeons.

FOURTH. A Cottage in the Country (Abbotts Langley, Hertfordshire) for aged Members, with garden produce, coal, and medical attendance free, in addition to an annuity.

FIFTH. A furnished house in the same Retreat at Abbots Langley for the free use of Members and their families for holidays or during convalescence.

SIXTH. A contribution towards Funeral expenses when it is needed.

SEVENTH. All these are available not for Members only, but also for their wives or widows and young children.

EIGHTH. The payment of the subscriptions confers an absolute right to these benefits in all cases of need.

For further information apply to the Secretary, Mr. GEORGE LARNER, 23, Paternoster Row, E.C.

FRANCES MARY BUSS SCHOOLS for GIRLS.

NORTH LONDON COLLEGIATE SCHOOL, Sandall Road, N.W.

Head Mistress—Mrs. BRYANT, D.Sc. Litt.D.

School Fees per Term: 5L 19s. 6d. or 7L 7s. according to age. Scholarships are awarded annually to the value of about 300L.

There are Three Boarding Houses approved by the Governors, at Fees from 5L to 70 Guineas per annum.

The SPRING TERM COMMENCES on JANUARY 17, 1905.

For all particulars apply to the SECRETARY.

TUDOR HALL SCHOOL,

FOREST HILL, LONDON, S.E.

(Founded in 1850 by the Rev. J. W. TODD, D.D., and Mrs. TODD.)

For the DAUGHTERS of GENTLEMEN (Boarders only).

Principal—Miss MARGARET WORTERS.

First-rate Modern Education. Prof. H. G. SEELEY, F.R.S., J. CHURTON COLLINS, M.A., H. E. MALDEN, M.A., J. STEPPAT, Ph.D., G. GARCIA, R.C.M., G. PRADAU (Paris Conservatoire), P. STOEVEING (Leipzig), A. P. HUGUENET, TERRICK WILLIAMS (R.I.), C. JERAM, M.A., &c. Large Resident Staff of highly qualified English and Foreign Mistresses. Cricket, Hockey, Tennis, Riding, Swimming, Bicycling. Grounds over Four Acres. Large Gymnasium. Special attention to health. Matron, Trained Nurse.—Prospectus, with views on application.

RESIDENT PUPILS carefully PREPARED for PUBLIC SCHOOL, UNIVERSITY, or other EXAMINATIONS.

Lovely country, bracing air. Moderate terms.—Apply RECTOR, Abberley, Stourport.

MONTROSE ACADEMY.

HEAD MASTERSHIP of the MODERN LANGUAGES DEPARTMENT.

Owing to the resignation of the Head Master, who has been appointed to the Senior Modern Languages Mastership, Campbell College, Belfast, applications are invited for the post thus rendered vacant. Candidates must have resided abroad. Commencing salary at the rate of 180L per annum.—Applications, together with recent Testimonials, should be lodged, as soon as possible, with the undersigned, from whom any further particulars may be obtained.

WM. ROSS, Clerk to the Barch.

School Board, Montrose.

OLDBURY SECONDARY SCHOOL and PUPIL-TEACHERS' CENTRE.

THE GOVERNORS REQUIRE in JANUARY NEXT an ASSISTANT TEACHER, Male or Female, to teach ordinary Form Subjects and Science or Mathematics. Salary 160L per annum, non-resident.

Applications should be forwarded to the undersigned on or before JANUARY 16, 1905.

H. A. ANDERSON, Secretary.

AUTHORS of a few projected BOOKS on PHILOSOPHICAL TOPICS REQUIRED.

Remuneration will be given.—Apply, stating qualifications, to Box 970, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

ASSISTANT EDITORSHIP WANTED by a GENTLEMAN.

Has had great experience and was four years Editor of a Colonial Daily. Special knowledge of Far East.—Address Box 953, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

ADVERTISER desires post as LITERARY ADVISER to PUBLISHING FIRM.

University Classical Honours Man.—Address A. H. S., Box 162, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

LADY PROOF READER, of some experience.

Wants SITUATION. In London preferred.—Apply, personally or by letter, J. E. F., Athenæum Press, Bream's Buildings, E.C.

INTELLIGENT CLERK WANTED for INDEXING and CATALOGUING.

Industry clear Handwriting and aptitude for Classification essential.—E. B., Box 571, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

TRANSLATION, LITERARY or SECRETARIAL WORK WANTED by UNIVERSITY HONOURS GRADUATE (M.D.).

Medical Work preferred. Moderate terms. Or Swiss Travel with Invalid. Unexceptionable references.—Inverness, Summit, Ancilly Hill, S.E.

OXFORD GRADUATE (M.A.), with good Honours

Degree; trained; Classics, English Subjects (History, &c.), French, &c.; experienced, desires MASTERSHIP or TUTORSHIP. Fair salary.—Box 972, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, E.C.

Yearly Subscription, free by post, Inland, 15s. 3d.; Foreign, 18s. Entered at the New York Post Office as Second Class matter.

FRANCE.—The ATHENÆUM can be obtained at the following Railway Stations in France:—

AMIENS, ANTIBES, BEAULIEU-SUR-MER, BIARRITZ, BORDEAUX, BOULOGNE-SUR-MER, CALAIS, CANNES, DIJON, DUNKIRK, HAVRE, LILLE, LYONS, MARSEILLES, MENTONE, MONACO, NANTES, NICE, PARIS, PAU, SAINT RAPHAEL, TOURS, TOULON.

PARIS: W. H. SMITH & SON, 248, Rue de Rivoli; and at the GALIGNANI LIBRARY, 224, Rue de Rivoli.

ADVERTISER (38) desires ENGAGEMENT as MANAGER to a LONDON PUBLISHER. Twelve years' experience. Highest references.—D. A., Box 609, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

RESEARCH WORK (Literary, Political, Medical, &c.)

undertaken at British Museum or elsewhere by experienced Worker. Own Type-writer. Excellent references.—Write Miss BRADSHAW, 7, Crossfield Road, Hampstead, N.W.

TRANSLATION, REVISION, RESEARCH, REVIEWING, INDEXING, and other LITERARY WORK, or non-resident Secretaryship.

Classics, French, German, Italian. Special Subjects, Mythology and Literature. Varied experience.—Miss SELBY, 53, Talbot Road, W.

LITERARY RESEARCH undertaken at the British Museum and elsewhere on moderate terms. Excellent Testimonials.—A. R., Box 910, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

TYPE-WRITING.—AUTHORS' MSS. and all

LITERARY WORKS executed accurately, promptly. Duplicates. Highest references. 9d. per 1,000 words.—Miss W. H. 18, Sheppard Street, Stoke-on-Trent.

TYPE-WRITING.—The WEST KENSINGTON

OFFICES. Authors' MSS., Translations, &c. Legal and General Copying. Circulars &c. Duplicated. Usual terms. References. Established eleven years.—SIXES & SIXES, 259, Hammersmith Road, W. (Private Address: 13, Wolverton Gardens, Hammersmith.)

TYPE-WRITER.—AUTHORS' PLAYS, MSS., &c.

of every description. Carbon and other Copies. MS. from Dictation quickly and accurately.—Miss E. M. THORP, 5, Maidland Park Road, Haverstock Hill, N.W. Established 1884.

TYPE-WRITING.—SERMONS, AUTHORS' MSS., &c.

carefully and promptly executed. 5L per 1,000 words, paper included.—Miss A. MASON, Stratford-on-Avon, Longfield Kent.

AUTHORS' MSS., NOVELS, SERMONS, PLAYS, REVIEWS, TYPE-WRITTEN

accurately and promptly, 5L per 1,000 words. References to well-known Writers.—M. STUART, Thirlbank, Roxborough Road, Harrow.

TYPE-WRITING undertaken by highly educated

Women (Classical Tripos; Cambridge Higher Local; Modern Languages). Research, Revision, Translation.—THE CAMBRIDGE TYPE-WRITING AGENCY, 10, Duke Street, Adelphi, W.C.

TYPE-WRITING.—MSS., SCIENTIFIC, and of all Descriptions. COPIED. Special attention to work requiring care. Dictation Rooms (Shorthand or Type-writing). Usual Terms.—Misses E. B. and I. FARRAN, Donington House, 30, Norfolk Street, Strand, London.

AUTHORS' MSS., SERMONS, PLAYS, ENVELOPES, CIRCULARS, and all kinds. TYPE

at home. Remington, 9d. per 1,000. Good paper. Orders promptly executed.—M. L., 7, Vernon Road, Clapham.

THE AUTHOR'S AGENCY.—Established 1879.

The interests of Authors capably represented. Agreements for Publishing arranged. MSS. placed with Publishers.—Terms and Testimonials on application to Mr. A. M. BUKKIS, 24, Paternoster Row.

MR. GEORGE LARNER, Accountant and

Licensed Valuer to the Bookselling, Publishing, Newspaper, Printing and Stationery Trades. Partnerships Arranged. Balance Sheets and Trading Accounts Prepared and Audited. All business carried out under Mr. Larner's personal supervision.—28, 29, and 30, Paternoster Row, E.C. Secretary to the Booksellers' Provident Institution.

NEWSPAPER PROPERTIES

BOUGHT, SOLD, VALUED, and supplied with every requisite. Write for the COMPILLED JOURNALIST, sent post free. The Imperial News Agency, London, 2 and 1, Tudor Street, E.C. America: 7 and 9, Fourteenth Street, N.W., Washington, D.C.

C. MITCHELL & CO., Agents for the Sale and

Purchase of Newspaper Properties, undertake Valuations for Probate or Purchase, Investigations, and Audit of Accounts, &c. Card of Terms on application. Mitchell House, 1 and 2, Snow Hill, Holborn Viaduct, E.C.

ATHENÆUM PRESS.—JOHN EDWARD

FRANCIS, Printer of the Athenæum, Notes and Queries, &c. is prepared to SUBMIT ESTIMATES for all kinds of BOOK, NEWS, and PERIODICAL PRINTING.—13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

Catalogues.

CATALOGUE No. 42.—Drawings—Engravings—Turner's Liber Studiorum—Lucas's Mezzotints after Constable—Engravings, Hogarth, Girtin, Etchings, Patmer, Whistler—Japanese Colour-Prints—Illustrated Books—Works by Ruskin. Post free, Sixpence. WM. WARD, 2, Church Terrace, Richmond, Surrey.

THE INTERNATIONAL BOOK CIRCULAR, No. 139, containing a Special Article, entitled 'SOME CONTEMPORARY FOREIGN CHEMISTS,' by Dr. M. O. FORSTER, together with an exact Bibliography of their Publications, and a Double Plate of their Portraits. Specimen Copies gratis.—WILLIAMS & NORGATE, Book Importers, 14, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, W.C.

MESSRS HENRY YOUNG & SONS possess one of the LARGEST STOCKS of OLD and NEW BOOKS in GREAT BRITAIN, and they will be glad to hear from any one in search of Books out of print, as they can in many cases supply them at once.
ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE MONTHLY. Price 6d.
12, South Castle Street, Liverpool.

LEIGHTON'S

CATALOGUE of EARLY PRINTED and other INTERESTING BOOKS, MANUSCRIPTS, and BINDINGS.
Part VII. R—SHAKESPEARE, 160 Illustrations, price 2s. NEARLY READY.
Parts I.—VI., containing A—Q, with 890 Illustrations in Facsimile. Price 15s. the 6 Parts.

J. & J. LEIGHTON, 40, Brewer Street, Golden Square, W.

H. H. PEACH, Antiquarian Bookseller, 37, Belvoir Street, Leicester, issues CATALOGUES of MSS. and OLD BOOKS post free to Book Collectors. No. 8 contains Early Medical Books, English and Foreign—a Volume of interesting Swift Items—Henry VIII. A Necessary Doctrine, 1513.

BERTRAM DOBEL L, SECOND-HAND BOOKSELLER, and PUBLISHER, 77, Charing Cross Road, London, W.C.

A large Stock of Old and Rare Books in English Literature, including Poetry and the Drama—Shakespeareana—First Editions of Famous Authors—Manuscripts—Illustrated Books, &c. CATALOGUES free on application.

PORTRAIT of GEORGE MEREDITH, after the celebrated Painting by G. F. WATTS, R.A., Engraved by W. BISCOMBE GARDNER. Limited to 600 Artist's Proofs at One Guinea each. Size 12 in. by 8 1/2 in.—Address W. BISCOMBE GARDNER, Hoathly, Hind Head, Surrey.

GEORGE CRUIKSHANK.

Collectors, Dealers, and Owners having Coloured or Plain Caricatures, Etchings, Engravings, Woodcuts (or Books containing same)

Done by GEORGE CRUIKSHANK

Which they wish to dispose of

Are requested to send Title, Publisher, Date, Condition, and Price asked to

EDWIN H. WENDELL, Esq.,
500 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

MARLBOROUGH.—TO BE SOLD, WITH POSSESSION.—AXHOLME, on the London and Bath Road, within a mile of Marlborough College, with fine Views of the magnificently Timbered Slopes of Savernake Forest, a DETACHED FREEHOLD RESIDENCE, with Six Bedrooms, Dressing Room, Three good Reception Rooms, and Domestic Offices. Stabling, Lodge, Gardener's Cottage, and other out-buildings. Well-timbered Grounds, nearly Four Acres, bounded and intersected by the River Kennet.—Solicitors, Messrs KAYS & JONES, 37, Norfolk Street, W.C. Particulars of Mr. MARK JEANS, Marlborough.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS.—WINTER APART-MENTS.—Comfortably Furnished Sitting-Room and One Bedroom. Pleasant and central. No others taken.—R. H., 66, Grove Hill Road, Tunbridge Wells.

Sales by Auction.

Valuable Books, including several small Private Libraries.

MESSRS. PUTTICK & SIMPSON will SELL by AUCTION at their Galleries, 47, Leicester Square, W.C., at the END of JANUARY, valuable BOOKS in all branches of Literature, including important Scientific Works, rare First Editions, &c.

Rare and Valuable Books.

MESSRS. HODGSON & CO. will SELL by AUCTION, at their Rooms, 115, Chancery Lane, W.C., on WEDNESDAY, January 25, and Two Following Days, at 1 o'clock, RARE and VALUABLE BOOKS, comprising Graves and Cronin's History of the Works of Sir Joshua Reynolds, 4 vols. Engravings from the Works of Sir Thomas Lawrence—Mrs. Frankau's J. R. Smith, and William and James Ward, with the Portfolio of Engravings—Benson's Florentine Painters, 2 vols.—Foster's Miniature Painters, 2 vols., Edition de Luxe, and other Modern Fine-Art Books—Gould's Mammals of Australia 3 vols. Original Subscriber's Copy—Meyrick's Ancient Armour, Plates in Gold and Colours, 3 vols.—Enderbie's Britannia Triumphans, with upwards of 250 Embellished Coats of Arms—Smith's History of Virginia, 1632—Barclay's Ship of Fools, 1570—A Collection of Incunabula, including Specimens from the Early Venetian Presses—an Illuminated Horse, with full-page Miniatures and other MSS. on Vellum—Black-Letter Books and Books in Old Bindings—a Complete Set of the Ninth Library 29 vols., Large Paper—Hakluyt's Voyages and Travels, 12 vols.—Goupil's Historical Monographs, Japanese Paper Copies—Editions de Luxe of Fielding, Dickens, and Lytton, and other handsome Sets of Thackeray, Scott, Kipling, &c. several in fine bindings—the Haddon Hall Library, and Fur and Feather Series, on Large Paper—Fgan's Life in London and other Books, with Coloured Plates—Standard Works in History, Travel, and Biography—Journal of Botany, from 1863 to 1901, and other Scientific Serials, &c.

Catalogues on application.

General Natural History and Entomological Specimens—fine Collection of Minerals and Fossils.

JANUARY 17, at half-past 12 o'clock.

MR. J. C. STEVENS will OFFER, at his Rooms, 38, King Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C., COLLECTION of LEPIDOPTERA, including some rare Specimens, in fine condition—Eggs, and Cabinets of various sizes—Heads and Horns of Big Game; a COLLECTION of MINERALS and FOSSILS in CABINET; Skins and Mounted Specimens of Birds and Animals.
On view day prior 10 to 4 and morning of Sale. Catalogues on application.

Scientific Instruments and Apparatus, formerly the Property of the late Mr. GEORGE GRIFFITHS, Science Master at Harrow School, and other Property.

FRIDAY, January 20, at half-past 12 o'clock.

MR. J. C. STEVENS will OFFER, at his Rooms, 38, King Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C., SPECTROSCOPES by Browning—Polariscopes—Diffraction Apparatus—Nicol and other Prisms—Microscopes—Balances, and other Instruments and Apparatus—Optical Lanterns and Slides—fine Microscopic Slides—Photographic Cameras and Lenses—Japanese Porcelain and Ivory Carvings—Furniture—Plated Goods—and a large quantity of Miscellaneous Property.
On view day prior 2 to 5 and morning of Sale. Catalogues on application.

MESSRS. CHRISTIE, MANSON & WOODS respectfully give Notice that they will hold the Following SALES by AUCTION at their Great Rooms, King Street, St. James's Square, the Sales commencing at 1 o'clock precisely:—

On THURSDAY, January 19, SILVER PLATE, the Property of the Dowager COUNTESS of ROSSLYN and others.

On FRIDAY, January 20, PORCELAIN, DECORATIVE OBJECTS, and TAPESTRY, the Property of the Dowager VISCOUNTESS ESHER deceased, and from various sources.

On SATURDAY, January 21, and MONDAY, January 23, the REMAINING WORKS of the late EDWIN HAYES, R.H.A. R.I.

TO UNDERSTAND

THE UNPARALLELED MILITARY SUCCESSES OF THE JAPANESE,

READ

'THE ARMY AND THE FAMILY IN JAPAN,'

Which forms the principal feature of

MORE QUEER THINGS ABOUT JAPAN.
The Newest Book on Japan.

By DOUGLAS SLADEN and NORMA LORIMER.

Price 21s. net.

AT ALL LIBRARIES AND BOOKSELLERS.

A. Treherne & Co., Limited, London, W.C.

TENTH EDITION, price Two Shillings.

CELESTIAL MOTIONS:

A Handy Book of Astronomy.

Tenth Edition. With 3 Plates.

By W. T. LYNN, B.A. F.R.A.S.

"Well known as one of our best introductions to astronomy."—Guardian.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & CO., LIMITED, St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, E.C.

SIXTH EDITION, fcap. 8vo, cloth, price Sixpence.

REMARKABLE ECLIPSES:

A Sketch of the most interesting Circumstances connected with the Observation of Solar and Lunar Eclipses, both in Ancient and Modern Times.

By W. T. LYNN, B.A. F.R.A.S.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & CO., LIMITED, St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, E.C.

THIRD EDITION, Revised to 1904, fcap. 8vo, cloth, price Sixpence.

ASTRONOMY FOR THE YOUNG.

By W. T. LYNN, B.A. F.R.A.S.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & CO., LIMITED, St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, E.C.

JANUARY NUMBER NOW READY.

THE HIBBERT JOURNAL.

A Quarterly Review of Religion, Theology, and Philosophy.

Price 2s. 6d. net; Annual Subscriptions, which may commence with any Number, 10s., post free.

Principal Contents of the JANUARY Number:—

The CREED CRISIS in SCOTLAND. A. Taylor Innes.
The CHURCH CRISIS in SCOTLAND. The Rev. John Watson, D.D.
The CHURCH of DOGMA and of EXPERIENCE. W. A. Pickard, Cambridge, Fellow of Magdalen College, Oxford.
A PLEA for MYSTICISM. The Rev. G. W. Allen, Vicar of St. James's, Bradford.
The WARP of the WORLD. Newman Howard.
The UNIVERSE and BEYOND: the Existence of the Hypercosmic. Prof. C. J. Keyser, A.M. Ph.D., Adrain Professor of Mathematics, Columbia University, New York.
MIND and MATTER: a Criticism of Prof. Haeckel. Sir Oliver Lodge, LL.D. D.Sc. F.R.S., Principal of the University of Birmingham.
The NEW SAYINGS of JESUS and the SYNOPTIC PROBLEM. Prof. Kirsopp Lake, University of Leiden.
ON the INNER MEANING of LIBERAL THEOLOGY. The Rev. C. J. Shebbeare, B.A., Rector of Swerford, Oxon.
The JOHANINE PROBLEM. III. Indirect Internal Evidence. B. W. Bacon, D.D., Professor of New Testament Criticism and Exegesis in Yale University.
Discussions and a number of signed Reviews, and also a Bibliograph of Recent Literature.

Williams & Norgate, 14, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C.

£50 PRIZE.—The EDITOR of the ANIMALS' GUARDIAN offers a PRIZE of £50 for the best ANTI-VIVISECTION NOVEL.—For full particulars see JANUARY Issue, price 1d., of all Newsagents, or post free for 2d. from the Animals' Guardian Office, 13, Regent Street, London, S.W.

THE THAMES BARRAGE SCHEME; Building By-laws (Institute of Architects); Libraries (Architectural Association); Neufchâtel-en-Bray (with 2 Illustrations); The International Society's Exhibition; Bromley Municipal Buildings (First Premiered Design); Ruskin House; Concrete-Steel Structures (Student's Column), &c.—See the BUILDER of January 14 (4d.; by post, 4 1/2d.) Through any Newsagent, or direct from the Publisher of the Builder, Catherine Street, London, W.C.

LOCAL EXAMINATIONS in MUSIC, 1905.—The Pianoforte Works selected by the Associated Board of the Royal Academy of Music and Royal College of Music form eleven Volumes of the Augener Edition. Net 1s. each. Specified List of Pieces gratis on application.

Augener, Ltd., 199, Regent Street, 6, New Burlington Street, W., and 22, Newgate Street, E.C.

TO SCHOOLS.—Suitable SELECTION PARCELS of MUSIC are sent on approval. Liberal Discount allowed. Returns to be made at the end of the Term. Catalogues gratis.

"This energetic firm continues to issue every month novelties of interest and educational value."—Daily Telegraph.

Augener's School Department, 6, New Burlington Street, London.

THE TECHNIQUE of INDEXING. By MARY PETHERBRIDGE, Nat. Sci. Tripos, Indexer of the East India Company's Records, the Drapers' Company's Records, the Warrington Corporation Records, &c. Price 5s. net.—Published by the Secretariat Bureau, 52A, Conduit Street, London, W.

TO BE PUBLISHED ON MONDAY NEXT.

A SECRET AGENT IN PORT ARTHUR.

Being the Adventures of a Correspondent in Port Arthur and Manchuria.

By WILLIAM GREENER. Crown 8vo, 6s.

Contents.

Secret Agent's Correspondents and Spies—Russia and Manchuria before the War—Life in Port Arthur—War—Hiding in Port Arthur—Last Days in Port Arthur—The Day's Work—In Neutral Territory—Consul's Correspondents and Others—The Battle of Tashichiao—The Japanese as Conquerors—Contrasts and Comparisons—The Attack on Port Arthur—The Advance on Port Arthur—Japan's Requirements and China's Future.

A SECRET AGENT IN PORT ARTHUR.

AT ALL THE BOOKSELLERS' AND BOOKSTALLS.

Order at once to prevent disappointment.

APOLOGY.

BROKE OF COVENDEN.

The Author, Mr. J. C. Snaith, wishes to tender his apologies to Messrs. Bovril, Limited, for a statement appearing in his book with reference to their well-known preparation.

The statement referred to was made by Joan Broke, and was not intended to be taken seriously.

As it has been represented to the Author that the passage in question is calculated to cause injury to the Proprietors of "Bovril," he wishes to state that he had no intention whatever of causing them any injury, and that, indeed, he has a very high opinion of "Bovril."

Owing to the wide circulation the Author considers it his duty to make this apology public.

SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.

BROKE of COVENDEN. By J. C. SNAITH.

"A clever book, broadly conceived, and executed with a vigorous amplitude of detail."—Times.

"We have to welcome in 'Broke of Covenden' the freshest and most original piece of comedy."—Saturday Review.

AS SUNNY AND ATTRACTIVE AS 'MARTA.'

The BANDOLERO. By PAUL GWYNNE.

"REALLY A GREAT BOOK."

PATHS of JUDGMENT. By ANNE DOUGLAS SEDGWICK.

A NOVEL WHICH IS BEING WIDELY APPRECIATED BOTH HERE AND IN AMERICA.

The DIVINE FIRE. By MAY SINCLAIR.

'IN THE BISHOP'S CARRIAGE' IS THE MOST POPULAR NOVEL IN AMERICA JUST NOW, WHERE IT IS SELLING BY THOUSANDS.

IN the BISHOP'S CARRIAGE. By MIRIAM MICHELSON.

BY THE WELL-KNOWN CANADIAN AUTHOR.

The PRISONER of MADEMOISELLE. By CHARLES D. G. ROBERTS.

"VASTLY AMUSING."

ARCHERS of the LONG BOW. By ARTHUR MOORE.A JAPANESE NIGHTINGALE. By ONOTO WATANNA.

BY THE AUTHOR OF 'THE LITTLE SHEPHERD OF KINGDOM COME.'

CHRISTMAS EVE on LONESOME. By JOHN FOX. 3s. 6d. net.LETTERS of WILLIAM STUBBS, BISHOP of OXFORD. Edited by WILLIAM HOLDEN HUTTON. 17s. 6d. net.

"Mr. Hutton has done his work well. He has, for the most part, allowed the Bishop to paint his own portrait through the medium of his familiar correspondence.....Well-woven thread of narrative and appreciation discloses many an intimate trait of character which even the letters themselves do not reveal."—Times.

"Many biographies might remain unwritten without any loss to the world; not so that of William Stubbs, and he has been fortunate in his biographer. Mr. Hutton.....has told his story clearly and succinctly, and given us a most interesting collection of letters."—Standard.

LIFE and LETTERS of H. TAINE. Translated by Mrs. R. L. DEVONSHIRE.

2 vols. 7s. 6d. net per vol.

"This book is a piece of fine literature finely translated; its arrangement and the excellent snatches of biography the preface each chapter are well thought out and admirably unobtrusive."—Outlook.

JOHN of GAUNT. By SYDNEY ARMITAGE-SMITH. 18s. net.

"Mr. Sydney Armitage-Smith has made a careful study of the career of John of Gaunt.....He has produced a trustworthy and scholarly book."—Times.

"The depth of research.....displayed.....is scarcely more remarkable than the skill with which the results of that research have been applied.....No more important work on medieval history has appeared during recent years."

"A remarkable achievement in historical research and analysis."—Globe.

"The scenes of contemporary history are drawn with a minuteness which has never been surpassed.....Reveals a wonderful completeness of research."—Daily Chronicle.

WANDERINGS in the GREAT FORESTS of BORNEO. By ODOARDO

BECCARI. Translated by Dr. E. H. GIGLIOLI, C.M.Z.S., and Edited by F. H. H. GUILLEMARD, M.D. F.R.G.S. &c. 16s. net.

"The general naturalist will find the book packed with interesting information.....The intending traveller will pick up many valuable suggestions.....The botany of the tropical forest is dealt with with greater knowledge than is usual in similar books."—Nature.

"Rendered into English with remarkable skill and success.....A most interesting and instructive book."

Morning Post.

London: ARCHIBALD CONSTABLE &amp; CO., LIMITED, 16, James Street, Haymarket.

READY ON THE 20th INST.

HYPERION.*A FACSIMILE OF KEATS'S
AUTOGRAPH MS.WITH A TRANSLITERATION OF THE MS. OF

THE

FALL OF HYPERION:

A Dream.

WITH INTRODUCTIONS AND NOTES BY

E. DE SELINCOURT.

Only 225 Copies, all numbered, have been printed, of which 170 are for Sale in this Country.

The Subscription prices are 2l. 12s. 6d. in boards and 3l. 13s. 6d. in leather.

The Autograph MS. of 'Hyperion' is written on paper 16 by 9½ inches in size, and it consists of 27 leaves, of which 6 have lines written on their versos as well as on the rectos. It shows Keats's careful corrections, and his beautiful, legible handwriting is reproduced exactly by the collotype process.

The MS. of 'The Fall of Hyperion,' not being an autograph, has not been reproduced in facsimile. The Copy contains 21 hitherto unpublished lines, and it supplies many important corrections of the Printed Text.

London: HENRY FROWDE,
Oxford University Press Warehouse, Amen Corner.

JUST OUT, 464 pages, price 6s. net.

With 42 Illustrations taken from Contemporary Sources.

FROM THE MONARCHY TO THE REPUBLIC IN FRANCE, 1788-1792.

BY

SOPHIA H. MACLEHOSE,
Author of 'Tales from Spencer.'

"For those who are not familiar with the true meaning which the word 'revolution' in this context ought to bear, and as a reminder to those who are, I doubt if there is anywhere so brief, so clear and so convincing a narrative of the series of sequences which led up to the overthrow of the French Monarchy."—From Article on the Military Situation in the Far East in the Daily Telegraph.

"The author has achieved a signal success.... As good a piece of historical work as any which has lately been published in Great Britain. It is founded on a wide acquaintance with the best authorities, both contemporary and secondary, is thoughtful, well put together, and agreeably written."—Journal of Education.

"So clear, accurate, and readable a narrative of those great years is here presented that one wonders it has not been done before."—British Weekly.

"Sound in its facts, well illustrated, smoothly written, and profoundly interesting in its subject."—Scotsman.

"A careful and cultivated work and exceedingly well written."—St. James's Gazette.

"It is all remarkably full, so that the first efforts of the Third Estate.... are developed with something akin to dramatic force."—Spectator.

"A succinct yet, at the same time, a comprehensive and readable account of the early years of the revolutionary period."—Literary World

SECOND THOUSAND, 408 pp. price 6s. net.

With 41 Illustrations taken from Contemporary Sources.

THE LAST DAYS OF THE FRENCH MONARCHY.

BY

SOPHIA H. MACLEHOSE.

"Nothing hitherto published in English supplies the exact equivalent of this simple yet detailed account of French institutions before the Revolution. Miss MacLehose's work is conceived in the spirit of a scholar, and is written in an interesting and unpretending style; whilst the illustrations which accompany it are illustrations in a true sense of the word, no mere embellishments."—Athenæum.

"We do not want for the ordinary reader a more readable and a more thorough guide to the decay of the Monarchy than this lucid and carefully digested sketch of the most interesting period of the eighteenth-century history. It is more than a sketch, it is a history."—Spectator.

"We can imagine no better introduction to the history of France in the eighteenth century than is afforded by 'The Last Days of the French Monarchy.' An intelligent and lucid work of this description was certainly needed, and the author of this volume has fulfilled her task with both ability and discretion."—Daily News.

"This is one of those too infrequent works which really accomplishes its purpose. It is a clear, straightforward, and easily digestible little history, but at the same time quite sound and solidly supported by authority."—Pall Mall Gazette.

Glasgow: JAMES MACLEHOSE & SONS,
Publishers to the University.

London and New York: MACMILLAN & CO., LIMITED.

MESSRS. LONGMANS & CO.'S LIST.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION.

THE AMERICAN REVOLUTION.

By the Right Hon.

Sir GEORGE OTTO TREVELYAN, Bart.

CHEAP EDITION. With Portrait. Vols. I., II., III.

Crown 8vo, 5s. net each.

* * * Vol. I. of this Edition was issued as Part I. of the Original Edition. It has been largely Rearranged, carefully Revised, and in part Rewritten.

FOURTH THOUSAND.

MY EXPERIENCES OF THE BOER WAR.

By COUNT STERNBERG.

With an Introduction by Lieut.-Col. G. F. R. HENDERSON.

Crown 8vo, 5s. net.

Field-Marshal EARL ROBERTS writes that this is "A book to which I would draw the attention of every one interested in our army."

EIGHTH THOUSAND.

STONEWALL JACKSON

AND THE

AMERICAN CIVIL WAR.

By Lieut.-Col. G. F. R. HENDERSON.

With 2 Portraits and 33 Maps and Plans.

2 vols. crown 8vo, 16s. net.

Field-Marshal EARL ROBERTS writes:—"The late Lieut.-Col. Henderson did more than any one else to make the Students (of the Staff College) appreciate the importance of military history. They read with the deepest interest his fascinating book—'The Life of Stonewall Jackson.'"

A GARDENER'S YEAR.

By H. RIDER HAGGARD,

Author of 'A Farmer's Year,' &c.

With 26 Illustrations, 8vo, 12s. 6d. net.

* * * This Work is not a Text-book, but a record kept throughout the year of the various operations carried on in a Norfolk garden of moderate size, in which a good many varieties of fruit-trees, flowers—including orchids—and vegetables are grown. It also treats incidentally of matters kindred to their cultivation.

The Author hopes that it may please those readers to whom such things are of interest, and at the same time convey a certain amount of useful information which may help towards the establishment of a successful garden.

WORKS BY WALTER BAGEHOT.

BIOGRAPHICAL STUDIES. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

LITERARY STUDIES. 3 vols. crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. each.

ECONOMIC STUDIES. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

THE EDINBURGH REVIEW.

No. 411. JANUARY, 1905.

Price 6s. [On Tuesday next.]

1. The REFORMATION in ENGLAND.
2. AUBREY DE VERE, POET.
3. The COLOUR QUESTION in the UNITED STATES.
4. The FALL of the DIRECTORY.
5. BISHOP CREIGHTON.
6. SWEDEN.
7. SPENSER in IRELAND.
8. HOMER and his COMMENTATORS: a Review of Modern Researches in the Prehistoric Mediterranean.
9. TYPHOONS and CYCLONES.
10. BURNE-JONES.
11. The 'GREAT CONSULT.'

LONGMANS, GREEN & CO.
39, Paternoster Row, London, E.C.

THE METAPHYSIC OF EXPERIENCE.

BY

SHADWORTH H. HODGSON.

IN FOUR BOOKS.

Book I. General Analysis of Experience.

Book II. Positive Science.

Book III. Analysis of Conscious Action.

Book IV. The Real Universe.

In 4 vols. 8vo, buckram (the vols. not to be had separately), 36s.

ALSO BY THE SAME.

TIME and SPACE: a Metaphysical Essay. 8vo, 16s. 1885.

The THEORY of PRACTICE: an Ethical Enquiry. 2 vols. 8vo, 24s. 1870.

The PHILOSOPHY of REFLECTION. 2 vols. 8vo, 21s. 1878.

OUTCAST ESSAYS AND VERSE TRANSLATIONS.

Essays.—The Genius of De Quincey, and De Quincey as Political Economist—The Supernatural in English Poetry, with Note on the True Symbol of Christian Union—English Verse.

Verse Translations.—Nineteen Short Passages, mostly familiar, from Greek and Latin Classic Poets. Crown 8vo, 6s. 1881.

LONGMANS, GREEN & CO.

39, Paternoster Row, London, E.C.;
New York and Bombay.

THE COMMONWEALTH.

Monthly, 3d. net.

EDITED BY

Canon HENRY SCOTT HOLLAND.

The COMMONWEALTH begins a NEW VOLUME with the JANUARY, 1905, Number. Subscription, 4s. per annum post free. The Manager will send SPECIMEN COPIES (recent Issues) GRATIS on receipt of Post Card containing Name and Address of Applicant.

Among the principal Contents of the JANUARY Issue are:

The TRUCE of CHRISTMAS. By G. K. Chesterton.

The UNEMPLOYED.

I. The Present Situation. By George Lansbury.

II. The Proposed Farm Colony. By C. S. Edwards.

The NEED of EVANGELISM. By Percy Dearmer.

The DUTY of the CHURCH towards PEACE. By Canon E. L. Hicks.

The C.S.U. and TRADE. By Edward Thomas.

ENGLAND a NATION. By the Editor.

HYMNS ANCIENT and MODERN. By P. D.

ADDRESS to the C.S.U. ANNUAL MEETING. By Bishop Gore.

PERSONAL v. IMPERSONAL CHARITY. By R. A. Bray.

London:

WELLS GARDNER, DARTON & CO., LTD.,
3, Paternoster Buildings, E.C.; and 44, Victoria Street, S.W.

GEORGE PHILIP & SON'S LIST.

A NEW WORK BY SIR ROBERT BALL, LL.D. F.R.S.,

Lowndean Professor of Astronomy and Geometry in the University of Cambridge.

A POPULAR GUIDE TO THE HEAVENS.

A SERIES OF 83 PLATES WITH DESCRIPTIVE LETTERPRESS.

Small 4to, cloth gilt, gilt top, price 15s. net.

[Just published.

Extract from Preface.

"The object of the present work is to provide a popular guide to the study of the sky by furnishing a summary of our present knowledge of the solar system, a guide to the position of the planets for the first half of the present century, a series of star maps, some examples of the finest achievements in the art of drawing and photographing celestial objects, and a list of interesting objects which may be observed with small telescopes."

AN INVALUABLE WORK FOR PRACTICAL ASTRONOMERS AND NAVIGATORS. POPULAR STAR MAPS. A Rapid and Easy Method of Finding

the Principal Stars. A Series of 20 large Plates (10 Coloured), size 15 by 13½ inches. With Explanatory Text by COMTE DE MIREMONT, F.R.A.S., Author of 'Practical Methods in Modern Navigation.' In cloth Portfolio, price 10s. 6d. net.

[Just published.

In order that this series of plates may resemble as nearly as possible the actual appearance of the sky at night, the stars are shown as white points on a dark blue ground. All names are given in a corresponding series of key maps, on which have been traced certain connecting lines in order to give the student a ready system of identification. The plates are accompanied by full descriptive letterpress, including a complete alphabetical index and a table of the mean places of the stars shown on the maps in order of right ascension.

AN ATLAS FOR YACHTSMEN, TRAVELLERS, AND MERCHANTS.

FIRST EDITION PUBLISHED MARCH, 1904.

NEW AND ENLARGED EDITION REVISED TO JANUARY, 1905.

PHILIP'S MERCANTILE MARINE ATLAS of the WORLD.

A Series of 30 Plates, containing over 100 Charts and Plans, with Tables of 2,600 Distances between Ports, National and Mercantile Flags, List of British and United States Consulates, and Complete Index of nearly 20,000 Ports, &c. Edited by GEORGE PHILIP, F.R.G.S. Imperial folio, half bound, gilt top, price 3l. 3s. net.

[Just published.

Extract from Review of First Edition.

"What might, without exaggeration, be termed the most graphic and scientific expression in cartography of the world's ocean highways. A study of this beautifully executed work affords a convincing exposition of the term sea power."—Yachtsman, April 28, 1904.

AN ATLAS FOR GENERAL READERS.

NEW AND ENLARGED EDITION, REVISED TO DATE.

PHILIP'S NEW HANDY GENERAL ATLAS of the WORLD.

A Series of 70 Plates, containing 160 Coloured Maps, Plans, and Diagrams illustrating Physical, Political, and Commercial Geography, with Index of 100,000 Names. Edited by GEORGE PHILIP, F.R.G.S. Crown folio, cloth gilt, price 21s. net; half-leather, gilt top, price 27s. 6d. net.

[Just published.

"The maps are easy to read, for the colours are well judged and the printing and paper are good. Great care and considerable knowledge of the details of political decisions on matters of frontier have been expended on the Atlas."—Standard, November 9, 1904.

NEW NAUTICAL WORKS.

PRACTICAL METHODS in MODERN NAVIGATION for the ready Solution of Daily Problems at Sea. With numerous Diagrams and Coloured Frontispiece. By COMTE DE MIREMONT, F.R.A.S., Author of 'Popular Star Maps.' Demy 8vo, cloth, price 4s. net.

[Just published.

The ABC of COMPASS ADJUSTMENT. Being a Thorough Explanation in Simple Language of a Complex Problem. With numerous Coloured Illustrations. By E. W. OWENS, F.R.A.S., Examiner of Master and Mates, London and Southampton. Demy 8vo, cloth gilt, price 5s. net.

[Just published.

TIME CHART of the WORLD, showing Instant Time in 160 Important Cities. Patented by EDWARD COWELL. Folded in paper cover, price 6d. net.

[Just published.

WORKS BY THE LATE CAPT. S. T. S. LECKY.
WRINKLES in PRACTICAL NAVIGATION. Fourteenth Edition. With 130 Illustrations. Royal 8vo, cloth, price 25s. net.

The DANGER ANGLE and OFF-SHORE DISTANCE TABLES. Thirteenth Edition. Small 8vo, price 4s. 6d. net.

NEW ATLASES.

An ATLAS of the WORLD'S CHIEF

INDUSTRIES. Prepared under the direction of Commercial Intelligence. A Series of Coloured Maps and Diagrams. With Explanatory Text. 4to, stiff paper cover, cloth back, price 2s.

[Just published.

"A serviceable book of reference for students of economics."—Scotsman, December, 1904.

MODERN ATLAS of AMERICA.

A Series of 90 Coloured Maps, with Commercial Index-Gazetteer. Imperial 4to, cloth gilt, price 10s. 6d.

[Immediately.

PHILIP'S HANDY - VOLUME

ATLAS of LONDON. Fourth Edition. Revised and Enlarged, with New Index. Cloth gilt, 5s.; French morocco, gilt edges, 7s. 6d.

"As a guide to the metropolis and its surroundings is unequalled."—St. James's Gazette, October, 1904.

PHILIP'S HANDY - VOLUME

ATLAS of the WORLD. New Edition, Revised to Date. Cloth, rounded corners, 3s. 6d.; French morocco, gilt edges, 6s.

"For clearness and convenience the best atlas we know."—Western Morning News, December, 1904.

CHATTO & WINDUS, PUBLISHERS.

TALES of the FIVE TOWNS. By ARNOLD BENNETT, Author of 'Anna of the Five Towns.' Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

FLEUR-DE-CAMP: a Daughter of France. By A. GODRIC CAMPBELL. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. [January 19.

HEIRS of REUBEN. By Chris Healy, Author of 'Confessions of a Journalist.' Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. [Shortly.

A SPOILER of MEN. By Richard MARSH, Author of 'The Beetle.' Cr. 8vo, cl., 6s. [March.

The YOUNGEST MISS BROWN. By FLORENCE WARDEN, Author of 'The House on the Marsh.' Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. [March.

The ERROR of her WAYS. By Frank BARRETT, Author of 'Fettered for Life.' Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. [April.

The MISSING ELIZABETH. By ADELINE SERGEANT, Author of 'The Story of a Penitent Soul.' Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. [Shortly.

The ISLAND of TRANQUIL DELIGHTS. By C. WARREN STODDARD. With Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 6s. net. [Shortly.

STUDIES in ASTRONOMY. By J. ELLARD GORE, F.R.A.S. With 8 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 6s.

The DECAMERON of BOCCACCIO. Pott 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 2s. net; leather, gilt edges, 3s. net.

AN ILLUSTRATED HUMOROUS BOOK.

Shortly. A NEW EDITION. Crown 8vo, cloth, 1s. net.

HUMOURS of CYCLING. By JEROME K. JEROME, H. G. WELLS, BARRY PAIN, CLARENCE ROOK, W. PETT RIDGE, J. F. SULLIVAN, and others.

NEW EDITIONS.—Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. each.

The MASSARENES. By Ouida.

The LADY of LYNN. By Walter BESANT. 12 Illustrations by DEMAINE HAMMOND.

The ALABASTER BOX. By Walter BESANT.

The CLYFFARDS of CLYFFE. By JAMES PAYN.

A QUEEN of CURDS and CREAM. By DOROTHEA GERARD.

DICTIONARIES.

The READER'S HANDBOOK of Famous Names in Fiction. Allusions, References, Proverbs, Plots, Stories, and Poems. By Rev. E. C. BREWER, LL.D. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

A DICTIONARY of MIRACLES: Imitative, Realistic, and Dogmatic. By Rev. E. C. BREWER, LL.D. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

FAMILIAR ALLUSIONS. By WILLIAM A. and CHARLES G. WHEELER. Demy 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d. net.

FAMILIAR SHORT SAYINGS of GREAT MEN. With Historical and Explanatory Notes by SAMUEL A. BENT, A.M. Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

The SLANG DICTIONARY: Etymological, Historical, and Anecdotal. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. 6d.

WORDS, FACTS, and PHRASES: a Dictionary of Curious, Quaint, and Out-of-the-Way Matters. By ELIEZER EDWARDS. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

NEW SERIES OF NOVELS.

Feap. 8vo, cloth, 1s. net each; leather, 1s. 6d. net each.

TWO LITTLE WOODEN SHOES. By OUIDA.

The FROZEN DEEP. By WILKIE COLLINS.

The WANDERING HEIR. By CHARLES READE.

THE ST. MARTIN'S LIBRARY.

Pott 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 2s. net each; leather, gilt edges, 3s. net each.

ACROSS the PLAINS. By R. L. STEVENSON. [Shortly.

NATURE NEAR LONDON. By R. JEFFERIES. [Shortly.

BY WALTER BESANT. BY RICHARD JEFFERIES. The Life of the Fields. The Open Air.

BY HALL CAINE. The Deemster. BY CHARLES READE. The Cloister and the Hearth. 'It is Never Too Late to Mend.'

BY WILKIE COLLINS. The Woman in White. BY ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON. Memories and Portraits. Virginibus Puerisque. Men and Books.

BY DANIEL DEFOE. Robinson Crusoe. (The Two Parts) With 37 Illustrations by George Cruikshank. BY THOMAS HARDY. Under the Greenwood Tree.

BY BRIT HART. Condensed Novels. BY OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES. The Autocrat of the Breakfast Table. With Illustrations by J. G. Thomson.

BY MARK TWAIN. Sketches. BY WALTON AND COTTON. The Complete Angler.

London: CHATTO & WINDUS, 111, St. Martin's Lane, W.C.

Illustrated List of up-to-date Atlases sent gratis on application.

The London Geographical Institute:

GEORGE PHILIP & SON, LIMITED, 32, Fleet Street, London.

MACMILLAN & CO.'S LIST.

DIARY & LETTERS OF MADAME D'ARBLAY

(1778-1840). As Edited by her Niece, CHARLOTTE BARRETT. With Preface and Notes by AUSTIN DOBSON. With Photogravure Portraits and other Sketches. In 6 vols. Vol. I, 1778 to June, 1781. Vol. II, 1781-86. 8vo, 10s. 6d. net each.

TIMES.—"We have nothing but the warmest welcome to offer to Mr. Austin Dobson's admirable edition."

MEMORIALS OF EDWARD BURNE-JONES.

By G. B. J. With 41 Photogravures and other Illustrations. In 2 vols. 8vo, printed on Hand-made Paper, 30s. net.

FIFTY YEARS OF FLEET STREET.

Being the Life and Recollections of Sir JOHN R. ROBINSON. Compiled and Edited by FREDERICK MOY THOMAS. With Portrait. 8vo, 14s. net.

ENGLISH MEN OF LETTERS.—NEW SERIES.

THOMAS MOORE.

By STEPHEN GWYNN. Crown 8vo, gilt top, flat back, 2s. net. [Next week.]

SHAKESPEAREAN TRAGEDY.

Lectures on HAMLET, OTHELLO, KING LEAR, and MACBETH. By A. C. BRADLEY, LL.D., Litt.D., Professor of Poetry in the University of Oxford. 8vo, 10s. net.

Mr. WILLIAM ARCHER in the DAILY CHRONICLE.—"An admirable piece of work. To call it the most luminous piece of Shakespearean criticism that has ever been written would be to pretend to an impossible familiarity with the whole gigantic literature of the subject. Let me only say, then, that no such minutely searching and patiently convincing studies of Shakespeare are known to me."

POPULAR EDITION NOW READY.

THE GOLDEN TREASURY.

Selected from the Best Songs and Lyrical Poems in the English Language. Selected and Arranged with Notes by FRANCIS T. PALGRAVE. Pott 8vo, 1s. net.

NEW VOLUME OF ESSAYS

BY HENRY SIDGWICK.

MISCELLANEOUS ESSAYS AND ADDRESSES. 8vo, 10s. net.

MORNING POST.—"The essays are singularly lucid and sane, revealing a thoroughness of knowledge of the subjects discussed and an evenness of judgment which mark the author as on a level with the best minds of his time. No one can read them without wishing to know more of Sidgwick's work."

MACMILLAN'S GUIDE BOOKS

GUIDE TO EGYPT AND SUDAN,

Including a Description of the Route through Uganda to Mombasa. With 35 Maps and Plans. Third Edition. Globe 8vo, 5s. net. [Tuesday.]

GUIDE TO PALESTINE AND SYRIA.

With 13 Maps and 5 Plans. Third Edition. Globe 8vo, 5s. net. [Tuesday.]

GUIDE TO ITALY AND SICILY.

With 19 Maps and 36 Plans. Fifth Edition. Globe 8vo, 10s. net.

NEW WORK BY SAMUEL DILL, M.A. ROMAN SOCIETY FROM NERO TO MARCUS AURELIUS.

By SAMUEL DILL, M.A., Author of 'Roman Society in the Last Century of the Western Empire.' 8vo, 15s. net.

HARVARD LECTURES ON GREEK SUBJECTS.

By S. H. BUTCHER, Litt.D., LL.D., late Professor of Greek in the University of Edinburgh. Crown 8vo, 7s. net.

NEW VOLUME BY A. E.

THE MASK OF APOLLO AND OTHER STORIES.

Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. net.

Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

COLONIES AND COLONIAL FEDERATIONS

By E. J. PAYNE, Fellow of University College, Oxford. With Map. [English Citizen Series.]

MACMILLAN & CO., LIMITED, London.

HURST & BLACKETT'S JANUARY LIST.

NEW AND IMPORTANT WORK.

In 2 vols. royal 8vo, containing numerous Illustrations in Colour, Photogravure, and Half-Tone, several Maps, &c., price 2l. 2s. net.

LHASA, THE TIBET EXPEDITION, 1903-4.

By PERCEVAL LANDON,
Special Correspondent of the Times.

[In January.]

ANTARCTICA: Two Years amongst the Ice of the South Pole. By Dr. OTTO NORDENSKJÖLD. Illustrated by reproductions of over 200 Photographs specially taken for this Work. 1 vol. demy 8vo, price 18s. net. [In January.]

TWENTY YEARS AGO. (Reminiscences) By EDMUND DOWNEY, Author of 'Through Green Glasses.' 1 vol. large crown 8vo, with numerous Portraits, price 6s. net. [In January.]

The CHILD SLAVES of BRITAIN. By ROBERT SHERARD, Author of 'The White Slaves of England,' &c. 1 vol. large crown 8vo, illustrated, price 6s. net. [In January.]

IN REMOTEST BAROTSELAND. From the Victoria Falls to the Source of the Zambesi. By Col. COLIN HARDING, C.M.G., Acting Administrator for Barotseland. With over 50 Illustrations reproduced from Photographs taken on the Journey. 1 vol. demy 8vo, price 12s. 6d. net. [In January.]

EDNA LYALL'S NOVELS.

DONOVAN: a Modern Englishman.
WE TWO. | KNIGHT ERRANT.
IN THE GOLDEN DAYS.
WON BY WAITING.
A HARDY NORSEMAN.
TO RIGHT THE WRONG.
IN SPIKE OF ALL.

In a new artistic binding. Each in 1 vol. crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

DR. GEO. MACDONALD'S NOVELS.

DAVID ELGINBROD.
ROBERT FALCONER. | SIR GIBBIE.
ALEC FORBES OF HOWGLEN.
SALTED WITH FIRE.

Each in 1 vol. crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

H. & B.'S NEW CHEAP SERIES.

IT WAS a LOVER and his LASS. By Mrs. OLIPHANT.
BARBARA'S HISTORY. By Amelia B. EDWARDS.
LORD BRACKENBURY. By Amelia B. EDWARDS.

LES MISÉRABLES. Authorized Translation from the French of VICTOR HUGO.

Each in 1 vol. crown 8vo, 1s. 6d. net in cloth, 2s. net each in leather binding.

London: HURST & BLACKETT, LIMITED,
182, High Holborn, W.C.

JOHN LONG'S POPULAR NOVELS.

MR. JOHN LONG has much pleasure in announcing the publication of the following important NEW NOVELS by the foremost Writers of the day:—

SIX SHILLINGS EACH.

The MASK.

By WILLIAM LE QUEUX.

CONFESSIONS of a YOUNG LADY.

By RICHARD MARSH.

OLIVE KINSELLA.

By CURTIS YORKE.

The PROVINCIALS.

By LADY HELEN FORBES.

The FACE in the FLASHLIGHT.

By FLORENCE WARDEN.

LORD of HIMSELF.

By Mrs. AYLMER GOWING.

STRAINED ALLEGIANCE.

By R. H. FORSTER.

The NIGHT of RECKONING.

By FRANK BARRETT.

FROM the CLUTCH of the SEA.

By J. E. MUDDOCK.

LOVE and TWENTY.

By JOHN STRANGE WINTER.

The FATE of FELIX.

By Mrs. COULSON KERNAHAN.

LITTLE WIFE HESTER.

By L. T. MEADE.

The TEMPTATION of ANTHONY.

By ALICE M. DIEHL.

The INFORMER.

By FRED WHISHAW.

ROSAMOND GRANT.

By Mrs. LOVETT CAMERON.

The WAR of the SEXES.

By F. E. YOUNG.

RONALD LINDSAY

By MAY WYNNE.

LINKS of LOVE.

By DACRE HINDLE.

The STORM of LONDON.

By F. DICKBERKY (Twelfth Edition).

GUY BOOTHBY'S POWERFUL NEW ROMANCE OF PRESENT-DAY RUSSIAN LIFE.

IN SPIKE OF THE CZAR.

By GUY BOOTHBY,

Author of 'Dr. Nikola,' &c.

With 8 Full-Page Half-Tone Illustrations on art paper by LEONARD LINSDELL.

Price 5s. [This day.]

* * A Catalogue containing descriptive paragraphs of the above Novels post free on application.

London:
JOHN LONG, 13 and 14, Norris Street, Haymarket

SATURDAY, JANUARY 14, 1905.

CONTENTS.

|  | PAGE  |
|--|-------|
| MEMOIRS OF CHARLES I. ... ..   | 39    |
| LETTERS OF HORACE WALPOLE ... ..   | 40    |
| THE CORRESPONDENCE OF ADMIRAL MARKHAM ... ..   | 41    |
| A SOLDIER'S SERVICE IN INDIA ... ..  | 42    |
| HISTORICAL REMAINS OF E. A. FREEMAN ... ..   | 43    |
| NEW NOVELS (Bray of Buckholt; The Prospector; David the Captain; Bible and Sword; Fortune's Castaway; Pamela's Choice; Limanora) ... ..  | 43-44 |
| THEOLOGICAL BOOKS ... ..   | 44    |
| SHORT STORIES—TWO FRENCH NOVELS ... ..   | 46    |
| OUR LIBRARY TABLE (His Young Importance; American Familiar Verse; My Cookery Books; The Works of Motlev; The Law of Copyright; Poems of 1848 and Earlier Days; Dictionary of Quotations in Prose; Black's Novels; Poets and Poetry of the Nineteenth Century; Mother Goose's Melody; Children's Wild Flowers; Chirp and Chatter; The Dream Garden; Swedish Fairy Tales; The Literary Year-Book and other Annuals; Two Reprints) ... .. | 47-49 |
| LIST OF NEW BOOKS ... ..   | 49    |
| A WINTER SUNSET; CLASSICAL ASSOCIATION OF ENGLAND AND WALES; WHEN WAS JOHN KNOX BORN? THE HISTORY OF WEXFORD; INCORPORATED ASSOCIATION OF ASSISTANT MASTERS ... ..   | 49-50 |
| LITERARY GOSSIP ... ..   | 51    |
| SCIENCE—THROUGH THE UNKNOWN PAMIRS; MODERN SCIENCE AND THEORY; THE ANALYTICAL THEORY OF LIGHT; THE BECQUEREL RAYS AND THE PROPERTIES OF RADIUM; THE MATHEMATICAL THEORY OF ELECTRICITY AND MAGNETISM; SOCIETIES; MEETINGS NEXT WEEK; GOSSIP ... ..   | 52-55 |
| FINE ARTS—DILLON ON PORCELAIN; ART AND ARTISTS; THE WORK OF WATTS AT BURLINGTON HOUSE; GOSSIP ... ..   | 55-58 |
| MUSIC—BRITISH MUSIC; GOSSIP; PERFORMANCES NEXT WEEK ... ..   | 58-59 |
| DRAMA—THE STRATFORD TOWN SHAKESPEARE; THE SCARLET PIMPERNEL; GOSSIP ... ..   | 59-60 |

LITERATURE

Memoirs of the Martyr King. Edited by Allen Fea. (Lane)

THIS sumptuously produced and handsomely illustrated volume supplies a detailed record of the closing years of the life of Charles I. It begins with the story of the king's escape from Oxford in disguise, when he crossed over Magdalen Bridge at three o'clock on the morning of April 27th, 1646, and continues down to the final scene, nearly three years later, on the scaffold at Whitehall.

The plan of the book is to give reproductions in extenso of the various memoirs or narratives of those who were in close attendance upon the king during the period under discussion. These include the narrative of Dr. Michael Hudson, his chaplain, and his companion on his flight from Oxford, which was originally printed in Peck's 'Desiderata Curiosa'; the short memoirs of Sir Thomas Herbert, usually known as 'Threnodia Carolina'; the conflicting treatises of Sir John Berkeley and John Ashburnham; and the three brief accounts of particular episodes by Major Huntington, Sir Henry Firebrace, and Col. Edward Cooke, which were made use of by Dugdale in his 'Brief Narrative of the Late Troubles.' Mr. Fea has shown much diligence in the useful work of editing these various accounts, and though the size and cost of this volume prohibit it from becoming a work of reference, in the ordinary acceptance of the term, its possession cannot fail to be an advantage to any student of the life and times of the Stuart dynasty.

The chief value of the volume will, however, undoubtedly lie, in the opinion of most of its purchasers, in the general beauty and finish of its cover, paper, typography, and illustrations, which unite to make it worthy of the subject of which it treats. The binding of brown leather, richly stamped in gold, with the royal arms, roses, thistles, and fleurs-de-lis, is a reproduction of the covers of the Bible which Charles used upon the scaffold, and which he handed to Bishop Juxon. The illustrations may be divided into three classes. First in importance are the forty portraits, which are executed in the best method of photogravure reproduction. They have been chosen with much judgment, and include the Dresden Gallery painting of Charles I. by Sir Peter Lely, after Vandyck, as a frontispiece, the triple portrait by Vandyck at Windsor Castle, and a variety of contemporary miniatures; members of the royal family, such as Henrietta Maria and the Princess Elizabeth; some of the king's devoted friends, as Sir Thomas Herbert and Juxon; and also stern opponents, like Cromwell, Bradshaw, and Ireton. The second division consists of reproductions of a variety of extant relics, about thirty in number, a few of which have not previously been pictured. The last division includes a considerable variety of views of buildings where the king tarried or was detained during the closing scenes of his chequered career, as well as some copies of contemporary and other prints.

The larger portraits are exceptionally fine reproductions, but some of the photographs of extant old buildings are not very successful. For instance, the two small views of the present condition of Titchfield Place, Hampshire, where the king made a brief sojourn in November, 1647, are insignificant, and give no real idea of the "stately" appearance of the remains mentioned in the text. Of Holdenby House, Northamptonshire, a rather poor photographic view is given, without any intimation that it represents the residential portion of this once vast palace or house prior to 1884, when the late Viscount Clifden undertook a considerable amount of restoration. As that restoration included the bringing back to Holdenby from Northampton of a former entrance and other old parts, a photograph of the house in its present condition would have given a much better idea of its appearance during the protracted detention of the king as a prisoner of the Parliament. Moreover, there is at the British Museum an interesting sketch of the ruins in 1721, showing their great extent, as well as one of Buck's views in 1729; but neither of these is given. It is also somewhat of a surprise to find that none of the three rare engravings by Depuis of the set of three pictures painted by Peter Angelis, of Dunkirk, in this country between 1712 and 1728, is here reproduced. Their subjects, singularly suitable to such a volume as this, are: 'The King seized by Joyce at Holmby House,' 'The King's Escape from Hampton Court,' and 'The Trial of the King.' Other omissions might readily be named, which tend to show that the language of the introduction, claiming that "a complete pictorial record" has been supplied, is somewhat exaggerated.

Mr. Fea's work in this volume, apart from the important labour of selecting and collating the best text or manuscript of the different memoirs, is not very considerable. About fifty pages are occupied by a chronological record or diary of the events recorded in the diverse memoirs, the exact date being supplied in the margin of each paragraph. This is a useful idea, as dates are often omitted, after a tiresome fashion, in the actual narratives; but a condensed sketch itinerary, without other comments or repetitions, would have proved more serviceable. An account of the personal relics of the latter years of Charles I. occupies a few more pages. The relics of this unfortunate king (particularly if doubtful or apocryphal instances are included) are so surprisingly numerous that those here described and figured are strictly confined to 1646-8, and "I have attempted," adds Mr. Fea, in awkward phraseology, "to discriminate between those which are well authenticated." The story of one of these "relics" we would fain hope is not authentic. A small representation is given of the chalice and cover-paten of Baldock, Herts. It is of a usual Elizabethan design, but here stated to be of 1629 date. It is asserted, on the authority of the parish register, that when Charles was being conducted by Joyce in June, 1647, from Royston to Hatfield, he passed through Baldock, and was met by the rector, at the entrance of the town, "in full canonicals, who with the words 'God bless your Majesty,' presented the Communion cup filled with wine for the king's refreshment," of which the king partook. It would have been more satisfactory if Mr. Fea had given the actual words of the entry in the register and the date at which the entry was made. It seems hard to believe that a loyalist rector would have put the chalice to such a use, nor does it seem likely that Charles would have given countenance to such irreverence.

Mr. Fea states in the introduction that he has "attempted to describe the several buildings, many of which still exist, where the king was imprisoned or made a lodging, adding some little side-lights in regard to local traditions and so forth."

These attempts, however, except in one or two cases, are not particularly successful. For instance, he has very little to say of the above-mentioned Holdenby House, either in the text of the diary section or in footnotes. Charles's stay here was far more prolonged than at any other place save Carisbrook Castle, during the period under consideration. The very meagre account repeats the errors of others, and seems to show that the writer had not visited the place. It is stated that the fine Elizabethan chancel screen of Holdenby church, much mutilated and altered in 1868 during a "restoration," came from the chapel of the great house when it was demolished. If Mr. Fea had studied Thorp's plans of Holdenby House at the Soane Museum, he would have found that this was an impossibility. The measurements are all wrong, and the screen on the north side of the chapel opened on to a lobby and had no entrance through it. There is no doubt that the fine Renaissance screen of Holdenby church was part of the beautifying of the parish fabric accomplished by Thorp's workmen when Hatton's great house was being built. The arguments in favour of this are overwhelming. "An Elizabethan manorial pew," only a few fragments of which survived the 1868 restoration, is also said by Mr. Fea to have come from the chapel, which is another mistake. In happier times, when Charles tarried at Holdenby with his queen, the Roman Catholic Mass was sung for the latter in the palace chapel; whilst the king doubtless attended the adjacent parish church, and sat, probably, in the state pew, long called by the old folk "the royal pew," at the east end of the north aisle, the old manorial seat being in the south aisle.

When Charles was at Holdenby, under Parliamentary sufferance, two ministers of the party in power were attached to the household, and preached alternately morning and afternoon in the chapel. The king naturally rejected their ministrations, and it has generally been stated that the Parliament refused to allow the king to see any divine who had not signed the Covenant, and, consequently, prohibited the attendance of all his chaplains. This suggestion is here supported both by Sir Thomas Herbert's memoirs and by the narrative of Major Huntington. Nor does Mr. Fea offer any qualification of this broad statement. But although the placing on the household staff, in the pay of the Parliament, of any episcopal chaplains was probably forbidden throughout his sojourn at Holdenby, it is pleasant to know that one, at all events, of Charles's royal chaplains was at this time permitted to visit him. A letter of John Otway, dated from Gray's Inn, April 28th, 1647, says:—

"My sister has been at Holmby with Dr. Cosin, where she stayed three dayes, in which time she had the happiness to kiss the king's hand, and then his Matie was pleas'd to afford her a gracious smile and strike upon the cheekes in token of special favour which (we must needs imagine) was matter of exceeding joye to Abigail."

Dr. Cosin (afterwards the well-known Bishop of Durham) was at that time the nominal Dean of Peterborough, and was one of the king's chaplains.

Another important house, curtly dismissed in six lines, where the king made a brief visit in November, 1647, was Titchfield Place, near the coast of Hampshire. It was formerly a Premonstratensian abbey of no little repute, where more than one of our kings tarried. At the Dissolution the Earl of Southampton changed the abbey into a great mansion. Mr. St. John Hope has recently treated of its architectural remains, which are of no small interest from both monastic and secular points of view. Titchfield Place, if any description was attempted, certainly deserves far better treatment than it has here received.

Although it is easy to note ways in which both letterpress and illustrations might be improved, the claim of the publisher, in a preliminary prospectus, that "On the whole 'Memoirs of the Martyr King' will be the most remarkable book on Charles the First ever issued," has been abundantly justified. Only three hundred and fifty copies have been printed for sale, and the value of such a book, which is hardly likely to be reprinted, is almost certain to rise.

Letters of Horace Walpole. Vols. IX.—XII. Edited by Mrs. Paget Toynbee. (Oxford, Clarendon Press.)

THE four new volumes of Mrs. Toynbee's comprehensive and definitive edition of Walpole's letters occupy ten years, 1774-1783, leaving for the last four, to be issued in the spring, a space of thirteen years. The period thus covered opens with Walpole in his fifty-eighth year, which may be considered as his grand climacteric. He shows a tendency in these later volumes to regard himself as an old man, which he certainly was not; but, knowing our hero well, we may perhaps be justified in regarding this as a little affectation. He poses in the expectation of contradiction, and in any case he holds so high a place in his own esteem that he can afford to proffer his case as one for sympathy. For there is no decline of his intellectual or imaginative powers; here he shows as excellent a wit, as perfect a style, as deft a grace as ever. He could turn a compliment with more neatness than any of a younger generation, and he displays an increasing tenderness for the old. Walpole, we must conceive, was never greatly affected by mere beauty. He admired a pretty woman, but could criticize her. He looked for more than physical charm, and found it in his correspondents, several of whom were his senior in years. He is faithful to his friend the Countess of Upper Ossory, to whom a large number of the letters in these volumes are penned, and he is almost at his best in making an epistolary leg before her. His true attitude of mind at this time is probably best expressed by a passage in one of his letters to Sir Horace Mann, that tried and proven friend, to whom he poured forth for over forty years the secrets of public and private life. "Two old persons that you remember are dead," he writes at sixty,

"Sir Thomas Robinson and Lady Shadwell; she lived to ninety-six. The Duke of Norfolk, but two years younger, is recovered from a dangerous illness. Lady Chesterfield has had a stroke of palsy, but may linger some time longer. In short, my dear Sir, you and I can only talk in common of a few Methusalems, cock and hen; for as to the travelling boys that you get acquainted with en passant, I do not. I have done with the world, except parting with it in form; and chiefly pass my time with a few acquaintances or alone at Strawberry Hill, where I never want amusement. My old age is as agreeable as I desire it: oppressed with no misfortunes, disappointments, or infirmities,—for I am determined to consider the gout as a remedy that only makes my liberty more welcome; with a fortune as ample as I wish for pleasing myself, or for doing some kindnesses; indifferent to pleasures that would be ridiculous, and encumbered with no glory or vanity that would impose restraint or reserve on me. I enjoy the remnant with cheerfulness, and think I shall lay it down with no more regret than what must attend parting with what is not disagreeable. I am exceedingly thankful for the happiness of my lot, and own it has been far greater than I should have dared to ask."

There is the truth without affectations. The man lived a happy life, and was aware of it. He grows more placid as he progresses, more of a spectator; but he was always a philosopher. Perhaps his comments lose a little of their youthful sharpness; he mellows, and one is sure proved a delightful old fellow. But that is not yet. We have not yet come to sainted Hannah and to the pretty Miss Berrys. One of his friends at this time was Madame du Deffand, with whom he corresponded in French. For some reason he was anxious that his letters to her should be destroyed, and his earlier letters actually were burnt by Madame du Deffand. Mrs. Paget Toynbee has managed to secure seven letters from the later correspondence, which are printed for the first time. The lady died in 1780, at the age of eighty-four, and was lamented with every mark of sincerity by her friend, who was twenty years younger. In inquiring after her during her last illness he writes:—

"I can scarce bear to name it, but should the worst happen, I beg, my dear Sir, that you will get from M. Wiant all my letters, and keep them till you come. After much entreaty, my dear friend did, I believe, burn many, but some, I fear, she kept. As they all went by the post, and I know were thoroughly inspected, I should not care who saw them except a bookseller, and thence everybody. My bad French ought to be their security even against that chance, but you cannot wonder that I do not desire to run even that, especially as a power of exposing me to ridicule would compensate for the badness of the language."

It was, then, because he deemed his French not wholly perfect that he was so feverishly anxious to obtain his letters back, and he could think of this when his old friend lay on her death-bed. It was characteristic of his amiable, self-centred, superficial, and wholly charming personality. He received all Madame du Deffand's MSS., and his letters to her were destroyed after his death by the Miss Berrys. It is interesting in this connexion to remember that we are to receive presently from Mrs. Toynbee's hands the correspondence of Madame du Deffand. The faithful Cole, to whom occasional letters were doled out over a vast space of years, lying wholly out of Walpole's worldly sphere, blundered, on a rumour, into congratulating him at sixty-four on his marriage to a beautiful young lady, and one can see Walpole's little contemptuous, tolerant smile as he wrote:—

"My good Sir,—You forget that I have a cousin, eldest son of Lord Walpole, and of a marriageable age, who has the same Christian name as I. The Miss Churchill he has married is my niece, second daughter of my sister, Lady Mary Churchill, so that if I were in my dotage I must have looked out for another bride—in short, I hope you will have no occasion to wish me joy of any egregious folly."

Walpole was strongly attached to Mrs. Damer, who was the daughter of his old friend General Conway, and one volume is prefaced with a portrait of himself in her company, after Angelica Kauffmann. It is not a convincing portrait of Walpole, who resembles therein a Puritan, and might well have written 'The Pilgrim's Progress.' But Mrs. Damer suggests her "solid understanding." There is, however, no accounting for portraits. One of the pleasant features of this edition is the large number of portraits of Walpole himself at various ages. There is nothing comparable between Angelica Kauffmann's idea of him and Lawrence's, which forms the frontispiece to the twelfth volume. There is in the latter, which is, perhaps, the most interesting portrait of Walpole, a haunting suggestion of R. L. Stevenson. The picture of the famous Perdita, here given after Gainsborough, presents no point of resemblance to the picture of the frivolous lady by Englehart. Altogether, these volumes contain nearly nine hundred letters, addressed to a number of correspondents, but chiefly to Sir Horace Mann, the Countess of Upper Ossory, and the Rev. William Mason. Mason was one of those various correspondents who were subsequently separated from their distinguished friend by a quarrel. With the exception of the Du Deffand letters, the additions in this section of the correspondence are not considerable. But the value of Mrs. Toynbee's work, as we have pointed out before, does not lie in fresh discoveries so much as in the patient devotion with which she has sifted and sorted the whole correspondence. The notes, once more, are unobtrusive, and admirable in clarity and conciseness, and, as editing goes, this collection of letters could not be bettered. We are promised in the last volume an index, and we have no doubt that will do equal credit to the editor. It is the one thing wanting on the way to make the work perfect. Once more we regret that the letters in Lord Ilchester's possession were not at Mrs. Toynbee's disposal.

---

Selections from the Correspondence of Admiral John Markham during the Years 1801-4 and 1806-7. Edited by Sir Clements Markham, K.C.B. (Navy Records Society.)

AMID the multifarious anxieties in connexion with the recent Antarctic Expedition which fell on the shoulders of the President of the Royal Geographical Society, Sir Clements Markham has found time and energy to edit for the Navy Records Society the correspondence of his grand-uncle Admiral John Markham, whose biography he published some years since under the title of 'A Naval Career during the Old War.' Admiral Markham never attained high distinction, and has no place in history, but in the navy he was known as a man of iron nerves, strong will, and excellent judgment. In 1800 he was captain of the Centaur when Lord St. Vincent commanded the fleet off Brest, and won the esteem and confidence of his exacting superior, who in the next year, when he was appointed First Lord of the Admiralty, chose Markham as his colleague not only in the routine of administration, but also in the measures of reform on which he was determined to insist. St. Vincent's bad health and that of his wife compelled him to be frequently at his country house, and Markham acted as his deputy, keeping up a very close correspondence with his chief, from whom he received notes nearly every day on every conceivable point of administration or detail. St. Vincent, and Markham with him, went out of office in May, 1804, when Addington resigned the Premiership; but under the Ministry of "All the Talents" Markham again became First Sea Lord, while his old chief commanded the fleet off Brest. The correspondence continued, but gives the impression that St. Vincent could not always realize that he was no longer head of the Admiralty, and that, for the time, Markham was his superior. However, there does not seem to have been any friction, and throughout St. Vincent's criticisms on current events and on the men of the day are exceedingly free and caustic, though it is sometimes difficult to understand whether they are his real opinions or were written under some momentary pique. He wrote, for instance, on November 3rd, 1803:

"You have determined wisely to reinforce the Ferrol and Irish squadrons, and the latter should have a flag officer to direct it. I hope Sir Robert Calder will have more confidence than when he served with me; his dread of approaching the shore at that time was truly ridiculous, and I was under the necessity of instructing the master not to pay the smallest regard to his influence when called upon to give an opinion."

Now Calder had been with him as "captain of the fleet" during his command in the Mediterranean and in the battle where he won his peerage, and it is difficult to see how he could give his confidence to a man so ridiculously nervous as is here described. On the other hand, there is a well-known anecdote told by Tucker—which may perhaps have more truth in it than has been generally supposed—that when, after the battle, Calder spoke of Nelson's action as "an unauthorized departure from the prescribed mode of attack," Jervis replied, "It certainly was so; and if ever you commit such a breach of your orders, I will forgive you also." This was written, and may have been invented, long after the battle off Cape Finisterre; but there is no doubt about the letter we have just quoted.

Here is another uncomplimentary opinion of a contemporary, written from off Brest in 1806, which we quote rather as paving the way to a question:—

"For God's sake put Lord Howick upon his guard against the artful and presumptuous proceedings of Tom Wolley, who thinks he sees his way to the top of the navy office, or some other important situation. He is the meanest thief in the whole profession, abounding as it still does with Cape Bar men."

What are Cape Bar men? Clearly rascals of a peculiarly low type; but what? The point seems to have escaped the editor, or surely there ought to have been a note.

Here, too, is an important mention of sub-lieutenants, a class of officers introduced at this time specially for service in the gun-brigs. At first it seemed as if the promotion might prove a stepping-stone for a mate or midshipman; but it completely failed, and the idea was very properly given up:—

"If Lord Howick does not get rid of this vile institution of sub-lieutenants, all the youth of the service will be contaminated. The commanders of gun-brigs lord it over them, and they are soon driven out of his mess and mixed with the warrant officers, by which means they soon become professed drunkards. George Grey gave me a dreadful account of those in the North Sea, but they appear to be worse to the westward."

Many will probably find the most interesting letters in the volume those from Lord Keith while commanding in the Downs, 1803-4, the time when the public was very nervous about Bonaparte's threat of invasion. The Navy Records Society has already issued two volumes detailing the counter-measures adopted by Cornwallis off Brest, and here, on a smaller but fairly sufficient scale, we have an outline of the preparations in the Narrow Sea. Keith was far from being an optimist, but he could take a calm professional view of the situation, and wrote on October 11th, 1803:—

"Flushing, I think, I can watch with cruising ships. Ostend to Dunkirk is difficult, the sea is narrow and dangerous in long nights. I have the York off Beachy to quiet minds. By the way, I see a riot stirring up at Edinburgh by the judges, &c., about the defenceless state of the coast; the fact is, all the law is in the interest of Lord Melville, and, of course, not well inclined to the present government, but the answer is plain. Where is the expedition to come from? The Texel has a force before it, the Elbe and Weser the same, besides the ice will soon render those preparations nugatory. It is certainly to be wished that all the coast was in safety, but that is not in nature."

One great evil that he had to contend against was the number of smugglers who came pretending to be bearers of intelligence, but were shrewdly suspected of carrying intelligence to the enemy. There was no trusting them and no clear case against them. He had also frequently to complain of the carelessness and ignorance of his officers; and, indeed, though there were at the time many who carried the art of seamanship to a pitch of perfection, there were many strangely ignorant. Keith was especially troubled by their ignorance of navigation and pilotage:—

"What you observe of officers not studying pilotage and failing to provide books and maps is too much the case. Master, carry me here or there—this used not to be the case, so that I can hardly get them to go from the Downs to Spithead without a pilot."

By November he thought the French were really meditating a start. "Look well to the French ships," he wrote, "and Augereau's army for Ireland"—all which Cornwallis had well in hand. A few days later he wrote:—

"I am really of opinion the Ferrol squadron has some communication with Augereau's army at Bayonne, and may come on the west of Ireland or up the Channel as you glance at, so covering a descent as they passed up the Channel. Too much precaution cannot be used, it is the safe side to err on. I do not think they will stop at Cancale, it is too open and come-at-able unless the Brest fleet was with them."

All along the French coast his frigates were constantly patrolling, and from their captains he received frequent reports. Here is an extract from one, sent by Capt Owen of the Immortalité on December 26th:—

"It never was my opinion that anything more was intended on the side of Boulogne than a feint to draw a large military force to this part of the country, whilst the attempt is made elsewhere. Nor does the accumulation of vessels at Boulogne at all alter my opinion. Nevertheless, as the number of those vessels is now considerable, and the distance short, it is necessary to watch them closely whenever they can move."

It is especially interesting at the present time to see that in 1804 the Admiralty was already contemplating a naval establishment in the North, and—from the personal point of view—to note that the canny Scot was convinced that a piece of his own property, Long Annet, would be found "the best—I may say the only proper situation for it." By January he had arrived at the conclusion that there was more pretence than reality in the threats of invasion, and he wrote on the 16th:—

"Bonaparte begins to discover he hath to do with an element he little understands; at the same time he is compelled to do something, or at least to talk of it. He may cripple our ships, the cure for which is a succession of them, and I am glad to see you are advertising for gun-vessels (could not they be spar-decked?), which are of an easy draught of water and strong."

Through all his letters at this time runs a continued expression of annoyance with Sir Sidney Smith, a man whose genius was often obscured by his exaggerated vanity, and who, with his father, his brothers, and his follower—Commander Wright—succeeded in making Keith hate them to the point of loathing. Wright's tragic death and the mystery that seemed to envelope it are perhaps answerable for the popular idea that he was an officer of great promise, and that his death was an incalculable loss to the navy. He was no doubt an able man and an accomplished linguist, but neither sailor nor officer, and Keith had a very strong opinion of his impudence and the futility of his pretensions. Not the least striking feature of these letters is the confidential estimate of the characters of men of the day. They may be right, they may be wrong—sometimes, at least, written in a fit of petulance or spleen—but often they ring true, though a cautious biographer might not accept them. Here is one such from Keith:—

"As to Captain Cochrane [afterwards Sir Alexander], you will find what I wrote from Egypt, that he is a crackheaded, unsafe man, and was one with others who endeavoured to stir up dissensions in the fleet; and I am sorry to find his nephew [Lord Cochrane] is falling into the same error—wrongheaded, violent, and proud."

There is no doubt that Lord Cochrane was a brilliant partisan leader, but certainly so far wrongheaded as to quarrel with and insult every superior that the chance of the service put over him. Up to 1805 and the months or years immediately following, ships' logs were dated in what was then called nautical time, by which the day began at the previous noon, twelve hours too soon. This was altered by Admiralty order in the summer of 1805, but no sudden change was made, and for the most part the new reckoning came into force only when a ship was newly commissioned. When Admiral Murray was fitting out in the Polypheus in November, 1806, his attention was called to this, and his letter on the subject, and on logs generally, is most interesting as showing that senior officers were beginning to think that such records ought to be so kept as to be really valuable:—

"The manner of keeping the ship's log at present is very different from what it used to be. The master says he had a verbal order from Captain Redman to keep it so, and I find by Bayntun, given me on his arrival, it is the same. It will puzzle the astronomical gentlemen, for it is now kept according to the calendar day, beginning from twelve at night.....I suppose there must have been some order for it from the Admiralty, or they could not have altered it? Do tell me, and what the intention is by so altering it. I have desired Captain Heywood to have the ship's log ruled, so as to express more than ships' logs do in common, for I think every information should be put in the log. I don't know whether or no I shall not have inserted the rise and fall of my marine barometer or thermometer. A ship's log cannot be too full of information, and as Captain Heywood has a turn for these things he will correct it."

Admiral Murray's letters are mostly about the disaster at Monte Video, the detailed story of which might very well be pieced out from them; and for the rest, all Markham's correspondents, men in positions of trust and confidence, write with a knowledge of their facts and a freedom from restraint which make the volume one of the most interesting yet issued by the Navy Records Society.

My Service in the Indian Army—and After.

By General Sir J. Luther Vaughan, K.C.B. (Constable & Co.)

THE recent renumbering and naming of the regiments of the Indian army, and the appointment to them of honorary colonels, of whom Sir Luther Vaughan is one, may have suggested to him the desirability of compiling a record of his services, and dedicating it to the officers of the 58th Vaughan's Rifles (Frontier Force). For though the first part of his service was passed in a regular Bengal Infantry regiment, his name is known chiefly from his connexion with the Punjab Irregular Force, commonly called "The Piffers," from the initial letters of their title. He joined the Force in 1850, and about a year after was appointed Commandant of the 5th Punjab Infantry, which post he held till he left the Force on promotion in 1869. During that time his regiment was considered one of the best of the Frontier Force, and with its leader took part in many expeditions. In 1868 he was selected to command the 2nd Brigade of the Hazara Field Force, then assembled to punish certain tribes of the Black Mountain for misconduct spread over a considerable period, which culminated in an attack on the police-station at Oghi, in the Agror Valley. Warned by experience gained five years before at Ambela, the Indian Government sent out a strong force, which made tribal resistance hopeless; therefore there was little fighting, and that was for the most part confined to the 1st Brigade. Sir Luther Vaughan, in describing events, remarks that after the first two days the campaign resolved itself into a military-topographical promenade,

"full of interest and instruction, and took us through a large tract of absolutely unknown country, to the great delight of the professional surveyors and map-makers who accompanied us. The Muchaie peak, supposed to be the highest of the whole range, was reckoned by the surveyors to be upwards of 9,000 feet. The view from it was magnificent. Many of the features so familiar to us in the Umbeyla campaign of five years before were recognizable from Muchaie. The Mahabun mountain, on a northern spur of which stood Mulkah, destroyed for us by our late enemies the men of Bonair in 1863, seemed from Muchaie almost within a stone's throw. The lofty Gurroo mountain, on which I had bivouacked for three weeks in 1863, towered farther to the west, and marked the position of our camp on the crest of the Umbeyla Pass. The conical hill and the Crag picket could be clearly made out, and, less distinctly, our glasses showed us the fort of Murdan, recalling to my mind the days of the Mutiny and the pursuit of the mutinous 55th."

The description is fairly accurate of the view to the north-west, the direction to which the writer naturally turned; but the panorama is in every direction marvellous. Towards the west and north on a clear day, but specially near sunset, the snows of distant Kafiristan and Hindu Kush could be made out, glowing in pink at the close of day. North and east, as far as the eye could reach, range after range of hills was seen; those near, being lower and looked down on, closely resembled successive great waves of the sea. Eastward lay Kashmir, whence a spur from the distant Nanga Parbat met the outer slopes of the Black Mountain, and the wonderfully picturesque hills of Elahi, Nandihar, and the Tikri Valley came into view. The Hazara district was nearly due south, and the hills about the road from Abbottabad to Murree could be distinguished. Altogether it is a prospect difficult to surpass in extent or in grandeur.

Early in 1869 Col. Vaughan was promoted to the post of Brigadier-General commanding the Gwalior district, and this step, which looked like the recognition of previous good service and the assurance of better things to come, proved to be the beginning of the end of his military career. For like many other men he was promoted too quickly. Instead of enjoying a tenure of office for five years, with the opportunity of saving money, within a year or thereabout he became major-general, and had to vacate his appointment. The prospects, too, of employment in the higher grade were small, and though he did not immediately retire, his career as a soldier was closed. Before leaving this part of the story it should be recorded that in 1855 the author devoted some of his leave to service with a Turkish contingent, thereby extending his experience and seeing parts of the world always of great, but then of special interest.

On return to England as an unemployed major-general, he lamented relegation "to the insipidity of English domestic life," a phrase for which he has apparently been taken to task, and which he recants. Still, some complaint is natural:—

"For many years I had been a big man in my own small sphere, and an object of respect to those by whom I was surrounded.....In England I was nobody."

And income did not permit of expensive distraction. Consequently he tried to get employment, and was more successful than many other men similarly situated. First, he got the place of superintendent of the southern division of the London and North-Western Railway, which he held for four years till 1878. Next, on the outbreak of the second Afghan war, he applied for and got the post of Times correspondent, as such revisiting old scenes, and seeing new ones in Afghanistan and Persia. On his way home in 1881 he was sent to South Africa to accompany Sir F. Roberts, but arrived to find that that officer had come and gone, in consequence of the unfortunate convention which followed the defeat at Majuba. After seeing a good deal of the country, General Vaughan returned home

"in time to be present in the House when the Transvaal debate took place in the latter days of July. The result, in the then state of political parties, was, of course, a foregone conclusion. The events of the war and the way in which it had been brought to a conclusion were alike mortifying to all Englishmen, except the small minority who put the success of their political party before all consideration of their country's honour and welfare."

General Vaughan's work as special correspondent is by no means the least successful in his varied career, as is testified by the extracts from his communications published as appendixes, and by the expressed commendation of Mr. Macdonald of The Times.

The volume, which is attractively presented, will be read with keen attention by the author's many old friends, and by all who are interested in the history of the North-Western frontier of the Punjab.

Western Europe in the Fifth Century: an Aftermath. By E. A. Freeman. (Macmillan & Co.)

Western Europe in the Eighth Century: an Aftermath. (Same author and publishers.)

A MELANCHOLY interest is attached to these two volumes of lectures. Prof. York Powell had undertaken to see them through the press, but he did not live to accomplish the work. The couple of hundred pages which were revised by him bear witness to his multifarious occupations and his ill-health. It is to be regretted that Mr. Scott Holmes, who completed the editorial task, did not revise the revision, and remove the misprints which disfigure this portion of the first volume. What would a guileless reader make of the following passage?

"It was the Goth who was called, in the forefront of all the nations of Western Europe, to bear the assault of the Saracen, to bridge over the time when the strife was between the older and the newer life of Europe, between the elder power of Rome and the younger power of the Turk, and the time when both had to strive against wholly alien foes from Africa and Asia."

What would the shade of Freeman say to this displacement of his beloved Teuton by the unspeakable Turk? A certain footnote on p. 25 might lead the unwary to imagine that it was the Emperor Tacitus who moved from Rome to Capri.

We welcome these volumes, for, though some important parts of them have already appeared in The English Historical Review, there is a great deal of new and valuable matter. The tyrants and barbarian invaders of Gaul in the reign of Honorius, the West-Gothic and Burgundian settlements, the careers of Boniface and Aetius, are treated in detailed narrative, with a minute critical discussion of the sources. The errors which have distorted the true relations of the two generals are shown up convincingly. As to the story that Boniface invited the Vandals into Africa, which most modern critics reject, Freeman admits that it is possible, but not more than possible. In contemporary writers there is no direct reference to it; there is only a vague sentence in Prosper's 'Chronicle'; and we have to wait a century for Procopius to give us a full story.

Freeman has occasion to refer to the title "Rex Romanorum," which Gregory of Tours bestows on Syagrius, the last Roman ruler in Gaul. He contemplates, though doubtfully, the idea that it was used formally by Syagrius himself and his Romans. This surely is inconceivable. For himself and the Roman provincials whom he governed Syagrius cannot have been more than a dux or a comes. It is clear that "King of the Romans" can only have been his designation in the mouths of the Franks, who saw him ruling as independently as one of their own kings; and that Gregory derived the title from a Frankish source. Hence there is no ground for the guess that "Syagrius, king or tyrant, was disowned by the Augustus at New Rome, to whom his kingly style would certainly not be pleasing." But we can cordially endorse the words which follow:—

"One thing at least is certain; at Soissons, as at Salona, the year 476 A.D., the year so dear to the compiler and the crammer, the year so really memorable at Rome and at Ravenna, was a year of no special moment."

From the fifth we pass to the eighth century, and are plunged into the midst of the difficult story of the first Karlings, where we have to depend so much on the uncertain guidance of the 'Liber Pontificalis.' In the study of the change of dynasty in Gaul, the intervention of the Frankish rulers in Italy, and the intricate questions connected with that intervention, Freeman's work is equal to his best. He discusses at length the significance of Pope Gregory's appeal and offer of the consulship to Charles Martel:—

"One might at first be tempted to ask why the orthodox king of the Lombards was not welcomed as a deliverer from the heretical Emperor, and why the not more orthodox Prince of the Franks was called in against him. Doubtless because, if the Lombard king had got possession of Rome, he would have been a real master of Rome. He might have made the city his royal seat; he might have ruled it from Pavia or Ravenna; in any case, he would have really ruled it. But a consul coming out of Gaul or Germany to help St. Peter to his rights might likely enough do what his son actually did; he might wage a campaign of deliverance and then go home again. Charles might be Mayor where there was no King, Consul where there was no Emperor. Gregory doubtless hoped that he would himself be, in St. Peter's name, something that he was not as yet, in a city and duchy where, if there was neither King nor Emperor, neither was there practically any Consul."

The question of the so-called Donation of Pippin to the Roman See is not only discussed in a lecture, but also forms the subject of a long appendix, in which the various views of German critics are examined. Freeman's treatment is marked by characteristic clearness and common sense. He holds that Pippin made a promise to the Pope at Ponthion; that this promise was renewed at Quierzy; that there is no evidence that this promise on either occasion took the shape of a written grant; and that it could only have been conditional—namely, on Pippin's success. It was not till after the first defeat of Aistulf that the king "put his hand to something in writing which could be spoken of as a gift to the see of Rome." But the point on which Freeman is most anxious to insist all through these transactions is the place held by the Empire and the Emperor in the eyes of all the parties concerned. Most writers, in treating the Italian and Frankish history of these years, are apt to forget the Empire altogether. Freeman makes it very probable that the Patriciate was conferred on Pippin by imperial authority. The Pope was still, and for many years to come, confessedly the subject of the Emperor; to Pippin the Empire was a friendly power; and no one but the Emperor had any power to create a Patricius.

It is to be remembered in reading these lectures that they were all written more than twelve years ago, and therefore in some respects they are not abreast of modern information, for better editions of many of the texts which the writer criticizes have appeared since. We notice that he still laboured under the old misapprehension that Tiro was not part of the name of Prosper, the Aquitanian annalist.

NEW NOVELS.

Bray of Buckholt. By Edmund White. (Blackwood & Sons.)

It is a strange household to which Mr. White introduces us in this story of farm life. Deserted by her husband, who has proved to be unstable as water, Mrs. Bray has been the mistress of Buckholt Farm for ten years. Anthony Bray, bankrupt in health and fortune, suddenly returns from America, and takes over the management of the farm. Unable to regain his wife's affection, he turns for sympathy to Margery Hartwell, an attractive and simple girl in her employment, for whom eventually he acquires a strong passion. Meanwhile, Mrs. Bray, having grown accustomed to lean upon her trusty steward in all her affairs, learns to look upon him tenderly. A picturesque figure is this Derrick Venwood, and the most striking and interesting character in the book—strong in will and limb, full of delight in the simplest of his tasks, dimly conscious of the poetry in the common things of country life. All the rough places in these people's lives are made smooth by the timely death of Anthony Bray, who, witnessing a love scene between Margery and his sailor son, rushes away in a fit of jealousy, and is drowned. The story, though not very convincing, is powerfully told. Some of the situations have great dramatic force, and Mr. White has succeeded in getting the atmosphere of farm life into the book. Its chief defect is that much of the talk is unreal. Mrs. Bray speaks of human existence as "this close-packed fellowship, where each is born into bonds which coil about his limbs and heart to the end of life." We think that even Mr. White would be astonished if a farmer's wife were to speak to him in this fashion.

The Prospector. By Ralph Connor. (Hodder & Stoughton.)

THE author of this tale has already achieved a considerable reputation, which the present book will do nothing to injure. What readers really appreciate in Mr. Connor's writings is muscular Christianity. The phrase takes one back a good many years, perhaps, but the taste is undying in England. It is the antithesis of mysticism in religion, and therefore, perhaps, makes no strong appeal to the Latin peoples. But it touches the essence of the English character. From cover to cover physical strength is glorified; but it is the physical strength of teachers and preachers, of earnest, deadly earnest, muscular Christians. It follows the career of one young man from the university in Toronto, through his work as a minister in the wilds, with, of course, a love interest added. Literary merit has nothing to do with the author's success. His English is fairly sound, and that is as much as may be said for the writing. There is a long chapter devoted to a university football match. This is a fleshly revel. It is an astonishing picture of savagery, and reminds one of a Spanish story of a bullfight; for the writer's sympathies are evidently deeply involved. Girls among the spectators are excited to frenzy, and shout aloud that their favourites among the players look beautiful, when their faces and heads are streaming with blood. A man's leg is broken. Then the girls groan: "Oh, isn't it horrible?" But their frenzy almost immediately returns. According to this author, Canadian football is a fearful business, in which men glory in kicking and tearing each other's face, while bloodshed appears to be an essential feature.

David the Captain. By Arthur S. Way. (Macmillan & Co.)

THE text of this novel—which, however, is not in the least of the preaching order, and contains nothing that Lamb would have described as "sermoni propria," or things properer to a sermon—will be found in 1 Samuel xvi. 14 to xviii. 27. The brief account of David's career, from the time of his anointing by Samuel to his marriage with Michal, is here expanded into a narrative of between four and five hundred pages, not altogether to its advantage. It would appear that the author's main object is to impress upon us what a brilliant strategist and general the shepherd boy was; at any rate, there is a great deal of fighting described in detail, and we are called upon to admire the tactics no less than the physical prowess of the hero, to an extent that somewhat strains our credulity. Yet some of the war passages are well enough done; and, indeed, the merit of the book, from the purely literary point of view, is considerable. But the characterization is conventional and lifeless, and we find it impossible to take any warm interest in the story. Mr. Way has, we think, been ill advised in his choice of a subject, and might, with a happier theme and a less remote environment, produce a much more readable romance.

Bible and Sword. By P. Hay Hunter. (Hodder & Stoughton.)

A READING of this volume inevitably suggests comparisons with 'Old Mortality.' For 'Bible and Sword' is a story of the Cameronians set in the days of the Scottish Covenanters and "bonnie Dundee." It is a bold thing for a writer to tread thus in the footsteps of the great; but Mr. Hunter may honestly claim the justification of success. He does not, of course, handle with so firm a grip as Scott the conflicting tastes and interests of the Covenanters and Royalists; but, on the other hand, he shows nothing of Scott's bias. To those who know all the intimate details of those tumultuous times, the book will appeal with convincing force. It is vigorous and full of dash and go. Its central figures are touched with something of the heroic quality; and if there is little humour in the story, there is also nothing of that mawkish sentiment which is characteristic of the "kailyard" school." Mr. Hunter has, in short, produced a tale which satisfies at once the historical sense and the desire for good narrative.

Fortune's Castaway: a Historical Romance.

By W. J. Eccott. (Blackwood & Sons.) THIS is an addition to the many novels in which the Duke of Monmouth plays a leading part. Though his ill-fated adventures have suggested the title, that "lovely person," as John Evelyn calls him, is not the hero of the story. That position is filled, with the usual distinction, by Col. Hugh Malet, who performs the most valiant deeds in furthering the interests of William of Orange, to whose Court he is attached. For heroine there is Lady Wentworth, whose relations with Monmouth in this historical romance are very different from those recorded in plain history. How far a novelist is justified in deliberately altering the characters of historical personages is a question we need not stay to discuss. The union of hero and heroine is of the first importance, even in an historical romance, and only a lady of spotless reputation could become the wife of so gallant and high-minded a soldier as Hugh Malet. Most of the other historical characters whom Mr. Eccott introduces, including Charles II., James II., Judge Jeffreys, and William of Orange, are faithfully and skilfully drawn. The story, which is strong in incident, is particularly well written, though the dialogue is, perhaps, sprinkled rather too plentifully with such expressions as "Odsbodikins!" and "Gad!"

Pamela's Choice. By Margaret Weston. (Isbister & Co.)

THIS story hinges upon an improbability that is not made probable. Impossibilities are well enough in fiction, if they are made possible for the nonce. But for this a master hand is required, and here we have a prentice hand. Still the tale has many elements of interest, particularly in its first part, before the improbable state of affairs is disclosed. A young man of wealth falls in love with a beautiful girl, whom he meets by accident at a railway station, and who shows him only a kind of stiffness which amounts to rudeness. She proves to be the adopted daughter of a middle-aged woman who has taken a vow that she will never willingly address a man, or have any dealings with men. This woman is rich, and devotes her fortune to the work of assisting other women, on the condition that they are willing to ignore the existence of men in the world. The thing sounds more childish than the author makes it appear. So far the book is successful. Then the rich young man, failing to obtain access to the heroine by any ordinary means, personates an old lady who has left him an estate in Scotland. The rich man-hater becomes poor, and accepts a position as bailiff to the rich young man who poses as an invalid old lady. Here the story becomes frankly impossible, but it is fairly readable.

Limanora: the Island of Progress. By Godfrey Sweven. (Putnam's Sons.)

It is explained that this book is a sequel to one published a year or so ago, called 'Riallaro.' This 'Riallaro' purported to describe a Darwinian experiment in artificial selection on a group of islands in the South Pacific, in various physical ways sealed from intercourse with the rest of the world. The main island was purged entirely of the criminal element and of criminal tendencies in its people, by the planting out in other islands of all undesirable types. 'Limanora' describes the scientifically perfect beatitude of the purged community on the main island. It might have been a brilliantly entertaining sociological extravaganza; it is something of a nightmare, but lacking in the vivid sense of reality and verisimilitude which makes nightmares at once fearful and interesting. Mr. Sweven has taken himself a great deal too seriously here. His touch is too heavy for satire of the pleasing sort. His detail is too wearisomely minute, his whole work too solemnly and ponderously categorical. The glossary alone is calculated to frighten any ordinary reader, and will certainly fend off from the book any one not blessed with a great supply of leisure. Not but what a glossary is needed badly enough; one readily admits so much. But this is the wrong sort of glossary. It tells us that a "vamolan" is simply a "makro-mikrakoust," and that a "salosan" is merely a "gustagraph"; that the "ooloran" is no other than the "son-architect," and that a "tirleomorán" is just an ordinary "electric earth-perforator"; but, somehow, this is not sufficient—or else it is too much. We infinitely prefer 'The Hunting of the Snark.'

THEOLOGICAL BOOKS.

On Holy Scripture and Criticism: Addresses and Sermons. By Herbert Edward Ryle, D.D., Bishop of Winchester. (Macmillan & Co.)—The words of a distinguished scholar and prelate of high position on the important subject indicated in the title of this book command attention. Since scholarship must be unhampered and criticism free, there arises the question of the effect of this liberty on the authority of the Holy Scriptures. The consensus of opinion among competent judges regarding, for example, the composite character of the books once ascribed to Moses raises the problem of inspiration, and of the relation of inspiration to authority. Whatever relevant problems are raised must be seriously considered; but there is always the danger that answers to these problems may injure religious faith that is based on the traditional conceptions of the inspiration of the Bible. There is, too, the suspicion in many quarters—justified, perhaps, by some of the theories made in Germany—that critics have more zeal for their methods than reverence for their subject. It is deeply interesting, then, to the pious and intelligent reader of the Bible to hear what Dr. Ryle, a scholar and a Churchman, has to say on some of the important problems suggested by the criticism of the Holy Scriptures. The Bishop deals mainly with the Old Testament. Some of the subjects treated by him are 'Old Testament Criticism in its Bearing on Teaching,' 'The Old Testament in Teaching and Preaching,' and 'The Study of the Old Testament, with special reference to the Element of Compilation in the Structure of the Books.' He does not fail to give a definition of inspiration. "St. Luke," he says,

"speaks in his Prologue of his labours in collecting the materials for his Gospel. Even so the compilers of the Old Testament books derived their materials by human industry from human sources. The inspiration of the books consists in no imaginary method of communication, but in that spiritual force which has made them God's word to men's hearts."

In the same address, 'Old Testament Criticism in its Bearing on Teaching,' from which these words are quoted, he has a message to the man who takes everything in the Bible as literal fact. "The ordinary reader," he says, "likes to regard everything as literal fact; and he is quite at liberty to do so. But he has no right to denounce or reproach for faithlessness to Christianity his brother who considers that the general evidence is in favour of the story of Jonah being allegorical, that of Esther being an unhistorical patriotic tale, that of Job a dramatic poem. Christianity is not injured by this liberty of interpretation. It is relieved from a great reproach by the charity of a larger freedom in the work of teaching."

The quotations here given indicate Bishop Ryle's attitude to the Bible; and it need not be said that there is reverence marked on every page of the book. There will be many, doubtless, who will gladly receive the Bishop's teaching, and be encouraged to read the Bible in the light of criticism, without the fear that their faith will be thereby injured. The book is published in the hope, the author says, that it may be acceptable to some of those who believe with him

"that the Church's steady progress upon the pathway of reason and truth is capable of being combined with an attitude of unswerving loyalty and reverence towards Holy Scripture."

Problems and Principles. By the late Rev. R. C. Moberly, D.D. (Murray.)—This volume is a posthumous collection, well edited by the Rev. R. B. Rackham, of stray papers on theological and ecclesiastical subjects, written within the last twenty-two years by Canon Moberly, who was for some years before his death Professor of Pastoral Theology at Oxford. These collectanea will be widely welcomed. Their necessarily fragmentary character renders them difficult to review adequately within a short space; but in many ways they show the great characteristic merits and some of the defects which were conspicuous in Dr. Moberly both as a thinker and a writer. There are thirteen papers in all, some of the longest being discussions on 'Disestablishment and Disendowment,' 'The Independence of Church Courts,' and 'Doctrinal Standards.'

But it is perhaps in some of the shorter papers, such as those on 'Belief in a Personal God' and 'Reason in relation to Christian Evidences,' that Dr. Moberly is most at home, if not at his best; and these reveal the great mental grasp and power of metaphysical analysis which he undoubtedly possessed, and which, had he been equally endowed with the power of exposition and elucidation, would probably have made his influence far more widely felt than it has been. In his paper on a 'Personal God' (1891), while avoiding any definition of personality, the author speaks of it as "a centre to which the universe of being appears in relation, a distinct centre of being." He subsequently modified this statement in his 'Atonement and Personality' (1901), lest he might seem to conceive of human personality "at all otherwise than in its capacity of relation to and dependence on God." Yet in his sermon on 'A Religious View of Human Personality' (1902) he speaks of Created Persons, so far as they can be said to be "an addition to God's being," as an addition "which can be said to utter and so to enrich.....Him." It does not seem to us that in any strict sense the finite can be said to enrich the Infinite.

We select two or three of his papers as types of his method in the less strictly theological field. Those on the 'Marriage Law,' while able in their statement of the Scriptural and general ecclesiastical standpoint, might perhaps have been improved by discussion of the modern divergences in reformed bodies, such as the Dutch Evangelical and the Lutheran Churches; but the essay on 'Undenominationalism as a Principle of Primary Education' is one of the strongest essays in what is, on the whole, a strong book. The writer is masterly in his analysis of the true inwardness of denominationalism and undenominationalism. He warns the State that the latter is as much a sect as any of the others, and that it "cannot without frantic unwisdom invent a new denomination of its own, under whatever specious title, and identify itself with that."

The Modern Pilgrimage from Theology to Religion. By Robert Locke Bremner. (Constable & Co.)—A book may sometimes possess a value unexpected by its author. This book, whatever may have been Mr. Bremner's full purpose in writing it, serves to show a trend of thought which cannot be ignored by the serious spectator of religious movements. The trend undoubtedly is towards religion, but it is religion without theology. The question arises whether such an end is possible. Creation, for instance, may be rejected as a theory inadequate to explain the origin of the world, and evolution may be put in its place. The substitution of one theory for another does not destroy theology, though it may injure an existing theological system; and it is well that those who clamour for a religion without theology should see clearly the nature of their demand. On the last page of Mr. Bremner's book are these words:—

"I appeal, therefore, to thee, my Hebrew, my Roman brother, my Salvation Army sister, my Mahometan, my Buddhist cousin, my far-off kinsman of the woods and islands—hast thou known the near presence of the Divine? Hast thou received strength, not thine own?.....And like the whisper of many waves on a summer shore, I hear the answer from East and West, Yes, yes; it is even so with me."

It may be pointed out that this general address to various persons implies that God is sought by all of them; but it does not and cannot indicate that each seeker after God has no conception of the nature of the Being he tries to find. Each in having a conception, however undefined, of God has a theology. Mr. Bremner, and those who share his sympathies and join him in his quest, may repudiate the doctrines set forth in the creeds, confessions, and articles of the Christian Churches, and may turn away from systems like Calvin's, but they are after all looking for a new theology without clear definition. Mr. Bremner tells us that "it will presently appear that the voice of God is to be heard, not only in wooden pews, proceeding out of wooden pulpits, but in the whistle of the blackbird and mavis, in the glad laughter of the sea waves, in the sunshine and the cloud."

Nobody denies the statement; and, in spite of the rhetoric, there may be some to say that the preacher from the pulpit may be as fitted as the blackbird or the wave to be the voice of God. Mr. Bremner is not without insight into the significance of what religion has done in the past. "As we grow older," he says,

"if we keep an open mind, we see that the Church legends as well as the fairy tales of our childhood had a deep truth in them after all. We had grown so wise as to disbelieve them. But we grow wiser, and we find them deeply true after all."

The writer of these words might be recommended to extend his charity to the doctrines as well as the legends of the Church, and to ask himself if the proposed pilgrimage from theology to religion does not imply a want of understanding of the nature and aim of theology.

Mr. Bremner is never dull in any of his pages; but sometimes the smartness of the style may appear to some of his readers to be out of harmony with the seriousness of his subject. A want of artistic fineness is shown in the choice of names in his 'Tale of the Three Candidates.' There can be no objection to Agnostikos and Discipulus; but what of Kökh Shûr, the son of Dogmah and of Terrib-ul-Phûl?

Christian Life in the Primitive Church. By Ernst von Dobschütz. Translated by the Rev. George Bremner and the Rev. W. D. Morrison. "Theological Translation Library." (Williams & Norgate.)—The writer of this book does not seek to set forth or systematize the ethics of Jesus and the Apostles, but endeavours to discover the real morals of the primitive Christian communities. It is evident that the moral environments of Jerusalem and Rome would exert very different influences on the Christians in these cities, and Prof. Dobschütz does not make the mistake of delineating the life of the early Church in such fashion that it would represent the circumstances of no particular community. It is further to be noted that the blunder is not committed of painting too dark a picture. The writer draws attention to Hausrath's representation of the moral life of the primitive Christians, and says it is "so gloomy that one is compelled to wonder where Christianity ever found the power to conquer the ancient world." The flagrant sins in the Corinthian Church, which St. Paul noticed in his Epistles, did undoubtedly exist; but it does not follow that because they existed they were practised by the whole Christian society of the city. A catalogue of sins made by zealous purists or strict disciplinarians does not by itself indicate their extent; and their existence did not certainly prove that the new religion had no effect on the life of the converts. In many places after the Reformation sinners were brought to discipline, who in pre-Reformation days would have escaped detection; but it may not be said in consequence that Protestantism deteriorated the public morals.

Prof. Dobschütz tries to avoid the traps into which a writer on the morals of an age or a locality may easily fall. He wisely adopts the historical method, and, drawing the materials for his representations from the records of the primitive Church in the period from the death of Jesus to the time of Hadrian, pays attention to the facts of time and place. An examination is made of the Pauline Churches; then Jewish Christendom, and later Christianity among the heathen, are reviewed. In the third of these critical examinations there are interesting inquiries into morals as affected by Gnostic teaching, and into the manners of the Christians in the period of the transition to Catholicism. No critical examination of the early Christian literature is made; but occasionally there are valuable suggestions such as the following:—

"My view is that the Epistle to the Romans is distinguished from the other writings of the Apostle by the fact that he does not handle questions which were suggested to him by the Church: he elaborates trains of thought which were at work in himself."

For some of his interesting statements the Professor unfortunately offers no arguments. Thus, for instance, he says of John of Ephesus that "he had seen the Lord Himself, and in His last period had come into contact with Him, although he did not belong to the twelve regular companions of Christ."

This suggestion lacks authority derived from any stated evidence. The translation, it ought to be said, has been extremely well done, and the reader is not troubled with sentences which betray clumsy renderings from a foreign language.

The Golden Book of John Owen. By James Moffat. (Hodder & Stoughton.)—The full title shows that this book consists of "passages from the writings of the Rev. John Owen, M.A., D.D., sometime Vice-Chancellor of the University of Oxford, and Dean of Christ Church"; and that these passages are "chosen and edited, with a study of his life and age," by Dr. Moffat. 'Memoirs' of Owen and a large collection of his works have already been published; but except to students of the theology and ecclesiastical movements in England of the seventeenth century, he has been, and is, little more than a name. This 'Golden Book' is no doubt intended to bring him forward as a help to religious men and women. Owen wrote more than eighty books or treatises, and was in the main a theological controversialist. Controversial writings are generally lively, if not always edifying; but Owen's are prolix in argument and dull in style. Robert Hall described them as "a continent of mud." There is more, however, than mud in Owen's writings, as Dr. Moffat is able to show by his selected passages; indeed, there are many things in them to command respect and admiration. Owen did not live in a century when toleration was either a grace of manner or a virtue in conduct; but he wrote:—

"Whatsoever restraint or other punishment may be allowed in case of grosser ends, yet slaying of heretics for simple heresy, as they call it, for my part I cannot close withal, nor shall ever give my vote to the burning, hanging, or killing of a man, otherwise upright, honest, and peaceable in the State, merely because he misbelieveth any point of Christian faith.....As such heresy is a canker (but a spiritual one), let it be prevented by spiritual means."

Owen's charity and wisdom may be further exemplified by these words:—

"And if ever we intend to take one step towards any agreement or unity, it must be by fixing this principle in the minds of all men—that it is of no advantage to any man whatever church or way in Christian religion he be of, unless he personally believe the promises, and live in obedience unto all the precepts of Christ; and that for him who does so it is a trampling of the whole gospel under foot to say that his salvation could be endangered by his not being of this or that church or way, especially considering how much of the world hath immixed itself into all the known ways that are in it."

Passages of exposition form a section of this volume. One of these, on Matt. xv. 25, may be quoted as showing Owen's sound sense in religion. "Consider," he says, "that it is not failing in this or that attempt of coming to Christ, but a giving over of your endeavours, that will be your ruin."

To the selected passages, in many places, Dr. Moffat has added interesting notes; and he has made a very valuable study of Owen's life and times. Some may doubt whether the 'Golden Book' was of sufficient worth to justify its publication; but it has furnished its compiler with an opportunity for writing a really good historical introduction. Dr. Moffat exhibits ample knowledge of the theological works and ecclesiastical and political movements of the period, and writes with judicial fairness.

SHORT STORIES.

The Watchers of the Trail. By Charles G. D. Roberts. (Duckworth.)—Mr. Roberts's books about animal life in the forests of Canada and the Northern States of America promise to form a regular series, a "library," before long. An important factor in the charm these books undoubtedly possess is their illustrator, Mr. Charles Livingston Bull, whose pictures of bears, wolves, moose, wild cats, and the like, in the surroundings of their native forest, swamp, and mountain side, are admirable, distinctive, and really interesting. Mr. Roberts is very fortunate in having found an illustrator of so much talent, who can enter thus completely into the spirit of his studies of wild life. At the same time, the best illustrations in the world could hardly reconcile one to poor or ignorant writing upon a subject so clearly calling for expert knowledge. But here one has no such drawbacks to face. Mr. Roberts is a master of his special subject. In the constant hunt for novel themes there has of late years (particularly in America) been a deal of writing upon animal life, but the reviewer calls to mind none which shows a more thorough knowledge of the subject, or indicates a closer or more loving study of it, than these stories of Mr. Roberts's. He has long passed the stage of mere observation of the habits of our wild kindred, and has evidently become absorbed by the study of their motives, feelings, individual character, and fine, temperamental differences. The result is that every one of the score of tales in this volume, apart from its picturesqueness, due to scenery and atmosphere, possesses something of the intellectual interest that appeals to one in a thoughtful and subtle study of human character. This is the latest refinement of the animal story, and, as exemplified by the tales in this book, it is fine and desirable. One mistake the artist of this book has made in his otherwise admirable pictures of animals. His portrait of an Irish red setter is less like a setter than a Newfoundland, and rather a libel upon either of those excellent breeds.

Scenes of Jewish Life. By Mrs. Alfred Sidgwick. (Arnold.)—There are half a dozen longish short stories in this volume. They are all clever and well realized, and three of them are amusing. Yet upon the whole it is a distinctly unpleasant book. It is full of a quality which, for lack of a more adequate and appropriate word, is generally called vulgarity. Almost without exception the characters portrayed here are terribly vulgar people. Some of them are amusing, many are very rich people, most live more or less in luxury, the majority are clever folk; hardly one among them is the sort of person one would care to meet at one's own table, still less to spend an evening with. And this indescribable quality, in attempting to indicate which the reviewer has used the word "vulgar," is most noticeable in the tale with which the volume opens. That is a pity, since it may prevent readers reaching the clever stuff which follows; for the remaining stories, if they have no charm to recommend them, are clever, and probably truthful, pictures of various phases of Jewish life. Doubtless there are many phases of Christian life equally gross and unpleasant, though one may at least rejoice that the marriage tragedies unfolded here would scarcely be possible among the peoples of modern Christendom. They form revolting reading. One can hardly credit that a girl brought up as the heroine of the opening story in this book was brought up could ever show such crude and blatant want of tact and common courtesy as she is made to show. It is so bad that it seems almost to justify the blatant rudeness (in which one really does not believe) with which she is treated by the aristocracy of a provincial German town.

Atoms of Empire. by Cutcliffe Hyne (Macmillan), includes fifteen short stories of foreign parts strung together by the high-spirited author of 'Captain Kettle.' There are certain rather irritating peculiarities which recall Mr. Kipling's short stories—aggressiveness, a "bumptious" manner, and so forth. They are all reproduced here with remarkable fidelity. One wishes one could say that more of Mr. Kipling's rich compensations were present in Mr. Hyne's volume. This is the way his characters talk. They are most of them closely related, cocksure children of empire:—

"I laughed. 'Oh, yes,' I said, 'I came on board her sixteen minutes ago; saw the Purser, and found I knew him; made him give me the best room in the ship instead of the one I'd got; carted my things in there one-time, and locked the door; and then cleared out here, and didn't worry any more.'"
"You're an old, bold haud," said Vaurennan, "and many years of wandering have made you perfect in the art of looking after yourself."

But the collision at sea which follows is described in strenuous, spirited fashion. The author should give more time to his work, particularly to its revision—with a heavy blue pencil.

The Other World. By F. Frankfort Moore. (Nash.)—One is uncertain as to the justification for collecting and publishing in book form the seven stories which make up this volume. The title probably refers to things supernatural. But the supernatural is not merely the impossible. In fiction, particularly, it should be something more than that. The wildest flights of the writer upon things supernatural must convince one in the reading, for the moment, if he is to attain success. Now a story like 'Magic in the Web of It,' in this book, is simply a bald statement of an impossible situation. No single line of it deceives one; no doubt or wonder enters the reader's mind, and no attempt whatever is made by the author to convey a plausible explanation. He apparently has no theory in the matter, we form no theory, and the result is boredom. Mr. Moore is a facile writer, a practised craftsman, and should spare more thought for work that is to appear in book form.

We must sorrowfully confess that A Spoiled Priest, and other Stories (Burns & Oates and Fisher Unwin), has not fulfilled the pleasurable anticipation excited by the announcement of a new book from Canon Sheehan. 'My New Curate,' though presenting a picture of the Irish Roman Catholic clergy idealized rather beyond the limits of probability, gave evidence of powers which in the present case seem to be almost wholly in abeyance. There is scarcely a trace of the former pleasant humour, and the pathos is in a terrible degree open to that charge of unreal and sickly sentimentality which even in the earlier book too often attached to it, while the author has entirely abandoned his former approach (most moderate from the Anglican standpoint) to a critical attitude on religious questions. Perhaps this falling-off arises partly from the fact that only one of these stories, which seem to be in some cases republications from magazines, treats directly of the Ireland of our day, and partly from Canon Sheehan's evident desire to appeal on this occasion mainly to readers of his own creed, who naturally will not experience the jarring effect produced upon the average Protestant by many things here contained, especially by finding actions, and even words, unhesitatingly assigned to the Madonna which he has been accustomed to consider as having a higher origin.

TWO FRENCH NOVELS.

Les Centaures. By André Lichtenberger. (Paris, Calmann-Lévy.)—In his new book M. Lichtenberger breaks new ground with a vengeance. Human passion and human beings are entirely banished from his drama, or only used as a secondary influence. When we say that his present heroine is a white Centauress (of uncertain summers), it is evident that his material savours of novelty, and a novelty not likely to appeal to the mass of novel-readers. What the French once paraphrased as the "Stroggl fur life" and the ultimate defeat and disappearance of the Centaurs are presented with detail and fancy, if without much of the poetic imagination and sublime inspiration of a Maurice de Guérin. Whether the book is to be considered in the light of a success or a failure (or something between the two), there can be no question as to the author's courage in addressing himself to such a subject and to a twentieth-century audience. M. Lichtenberger brings us too close to his imaginary world, and depicts it in too strong a focus. His book lacks real interpretation and insight into the bygone forces of nature, and the strange beings that are supposed to have dominated the world. Still it is, at the least, an interesting and spirited experiment in reconstruction, and a striking incursion into the domain of the purely speculative and unknown.

In Ames d'autrefois, by L. Chasteau, issued by the same publisher, the story unfolds itself quietly, dreamily, perhaps a shade inertly. Yet one feels that the men and women belonging to it are vital enough to have known the impress of joy and pain, of loss, failure, or triumph—all that makes up human existence as we know it, and as others after us will know it too. As a story it is not in construction or incident powerful. It has no remarkable qualities of style or diction, but, as it progresses, a property of sympathy and gentleness becomes felt. The time chosen is the early days of the Consulate, when sundry returned nobles were beginning to rear their heads and their hopes revived. The scene is set in the quiet of Central France. The author contrives in a few words to convey an impression of the varied yet rather melancholy charm of the district; the neighbourhood is made to exhale a discreet, almost a mysterious grace.

OUR LIBRARY TABLE.

IN His Young Importance (Heinemann) Mr. Ralph Harold Bretherton essays the difficult task of depicting minutely in a series of tales and sketches a young boy's thoughts and feelings in various experiences of every-day life. It cannot be said that he has altogether succeeded. The book is by no means without interest; it is often subtle, and always, up to a certain point, clever, but we feel throughout that the author is making a conscious effort to analyze the processes at work in his hero's mind, and that his characterization is the result of painstaking elaboration and not of intuition; in short, the psychologist, or would-be psychologist, is more in evidence than the artist. We feel a want of spontaneity, a failure in selecting the vital points, and too often the painful intrusion of some glaringly false sentimentality. So it is that we never get to know the boy at all intimately, and we part from him at the end without any of that personal affection which the genuine child of literature almost invariably inspires. No doubt he is meant to be a somewhat exceptional person, being artistic and introspective in temperament—not but what a good many boys are that—but after all it is the more normal side of him that is chiefly insisted on, and we cannot be persuaded that it is true to life. A youth of his type and in his surroundings would hardly, we imagine, feel inclined to assert his Philistinism with such unnecessary violence; and surely for a boy of thirteen or fourteen, who goes to school, he is preternaturally childish in many of his speeches, acts, and thoughts. For instance, the habit of docking long words, so effectively employed by Mr. Kipling in some of his sketches of early childhood, is not common in later life, and such mutilations as "miliating," "dolatry," "spiracy," and so on, seem out of place in the mouth of a youth of that age.

American Familiar Verse. Edited with an Introduction by Brander Matthews. (Longmans & Co.)—The "Wampum Library" has been planned (as Prof. Brander Matthews, the general editor, tells us)

"to include a series of uniform volumes, each of which shall deal with the development of a single literary species, tracing the evolution of this definite form here in the United States, and presenting in chronological sequence typical examples chosen from the writings of American authors."

So far, short stories and literary criticism have been treated, and the third volume is this on vers de société by the general editor himself. A definition of what is included under that term is extremely difficult. The boundaries must be always loose and variable. Prof. Matthews suggests "familiar verse" as a better phrase, and it certainly has the advantage of being English. But does it cover what is signified? Mr. Clarence Stedman's alternative "patrician rhymes" is intolerable. Let us be French if we cannot be more accurate than that in our own tongue. Many people have attempted to define vers de société, and have more or less succeeded. Locker-Lampson declared it must be brief and brilliant; but clearly that is not enough. To these Hood added buoyancy, and with this alliterative trinity Prof. Matthews professes himself content, though he immediately proceeds to expand the formula. Certainly epigram must be eliminated; it must not be too brief. Mr. Austin Dobson, whose mastery of the art Prof. Matthews recognizes, advises the aspirant to be colloquial, but not commonplace, and "to be pathetic with the greatest discretion." The truth is that on the one side vers de société merges into the real lyric, while, on the other, it may degenerate into the frankly comic. It is a delicate art. It must be gay and it may be sentimental; it certainly may not be narrative. It deals with slight issues, touched, if you like, to tenderness. Great bards, as the editor points out, rarely condescend to it, though Shakspeare has written "O mistress mine," an undeniable example. The art has been "the casual recreation of true lyrists not in the front rank." But Herriek, though a master of familiar verse, is at his best something more. No one would dare to claim "Gather ye roses while ye may" as a specimen of vers de société, and the lyrists of the Restoration were so variable in their song as to perplex the critic with a passion for classification. How would Prof. Matthews class Waller's poem "Go, lovely rose," or Lovelace's "To Althea from Prison"? Perhaps these are instances of indiscreet pathos. Yet they have every one of the qualifications laid down by Prof. Matthews. As verse is an organic product, there are no sharp delimitations in it; there is an easy gradient up and down, and sentiment melts into pathos, not into sheer comedy. For these reasons it is not possible to agree with the editor that the art was unknown in Greece. No one, of course, would think of Theocritus in the connexion, as Prof. Matthews seems to fancy; but are the poets of the Anthology free from suspicion, Meleager and Agathias in particular? and what of the following translation (by Miss Alma Strettell) from Rufinus?—

Rhodope queens it by her beauty's sway;
And whoso'er I give her a "Good-day,"
Only with haughty glances greeteth me.
When by her door I bind my garlands sweet,
She doth but cast them under her proud feet,
Trampling, in sooth, upon them angrily.
O pitiless old age, O wrinkles, haste!
Come quicker, quicker yet; perchance at least
Ye may prevail and soften Rhodope.

It is notable that there is no anthology of vers de société in France, which gave the art at any rate its name; while in English there are several collections, notably, of course, Locker-Lampson's "Lyra Elegantiarum." Though seemingly derived from France, the art has been practised more in this country. And in America the traditional taste for it has been maintained. But Prof. Matthews's anthology is the first purely American one, and as such has an interest. That interest, however, is more ethnological than literary, for it must be confessed that, to judge from the specimens here, the level of accomplishment is not high. We are all acquainted with Lowell and Oliver Wendell Holmes, but familiar verse must be above the reproach of polemics, even of serious satire. The authors represented here were all of them born before 1850, so that it is not possible to say how the younger school of literature is faring. The great bulk of the names will be unknown to English readers. Lowell's "Auf Wiedersehen," and several other sallies by his contemporaries, are meet for any anthology. Eugene Field and H. C. Bunner were elegant exponents of an elegant art. These were men of the younger generation, but are included because they are not living writers. Why Prof. Matthews stopped short of living writers born later than 1850 is not clear, unless he was following a precedent set by Locker-Lampson. But, to judge from his treatment of writers born earlier and yet alive, it is perhaps as well that he did limit himself. He says of Mr. Stedman, for example, that his "slightest lyrics are always poetry," and gives us a specimen of that poet from which the following is a quotation:—

Within the garden of Beaucaire
He met her by a secret stair,—
The night was centuries ago
Said Aucassin, "My love, my pet,
These old confessors vex me so!
They threaten all the pains of hell
Unless I give you up, ma belle";—
Said Aucassin to Nicolette.

The introduction is far more valuable than the anthology, showing extensive knowledge and discriminating taste.

My Cookery Books. By Elizabeth Robins Pennell. (Houghton, Mifflin & Co.)—We esteem Mrs. Pennell a thrice fortunate woman: first and chief of all, because she has learnt the lesson her sex refuse to credit, that cooking is an art which, unlike that of reading, does not come by nature; next, that she has been led on by easy stages to the entralling pursuit of book-collecting; and lastly, that she has been able to publish a book about her books so well printed in every way as the volume before us. We cannot but remark on the extraordinary ability of type-setting and press-work which, in the hands of the Riverside Press, contribute to make this book a masterpiece of American printing. Pity it is that the type used was not more distinguished.

Mrs. Pennell tells us the story of her adventures among her books. In the early days of the articles we remember well, memory and experiment alike failed her on a moment—and she bought a cookery-book. Another and another followed, till she found that she had become a book-collector. Friends came to her aid in all quarters, and her store of books became a collection (some of them "illuminated" in black on their backs), comparing favourably with any she has had the fortune to see. The limits of the useful widened into the interesting, and overflowed into the historical—Latin books—incunabula even! Of course Mrs. Pennell has been told by this time that her first Apicius must sacrifice its pride of place; it was not printed in 1486, but very probably in 1500, or even later, for Bernardinus de Vitalibus did not begin to print till 1491, nor use the type it is printed in till 1498. But even this must gratify her, for she says in a note that the 1498 edition looks earlier. Her Venice Apicius, too, besides being late, is abnormal, as Hain's collation shows that there are 32 leaves, while Mrs. Pennell's contains 30 "sheets," which should mean 120 leaves or 240 pages.

As a whole, her collection is fairly rich in sixteenth-century Italian cookery-books, when Italian cooking was at its best. In the seventeenth century France, under the influence of Louis XIV., took a leading place, and French books increased, followed by England, not in cooking, but in number of works and interest of title-pages. Mrs. Pennell gives us a facsimile from her first edition of Mrs. Glasse, which, like every one else except the dealers, she over-values (the copy sold the other day went for very few pounds), and another of the fourth edition, showing her as a habit-maker in Tavistock Street. A little mystery as to Chloe, the French cook to the Duke of Newcastle, in Walpole's letters, is cleared up by a quotation from Verral—he was M. de St. Clouet, afterwards cook to the Maréchal de Richelieu. A large number of facsimiles—all worthy of the book—some of title-pages, others of cuts of kitchens and cooking utensils, give an additional interest to a pleasantly chatty volume, and the descriptive bibliography may be freely absolved from the charge of being pedantic. Altogether it will be a pleasant memento for Mrs. Pennell and her friends of a happy diversion.

We have before us The Works of Motley, in nine volumes (Murray), three of which are occupied by 'The Dutch Republic,' four by 'The United Netherlands,' and two by 'John of Barneveld.' The first volume of this handsome "Library Edition" appeared in November, and now that it is complete we may repeat our praise of the whole. Motley, a fascinating writer, has never been exhibited to better advantage than in this form. The type is clear and pleasant, the illustrations are excellent, and the binding is ideal for the purpose, being strong, yet comely. A library which does not contain Motley should rectify the omission at once, and those which, like our own, have long possessed him, may well be desirous to exchange their old edition for this new one.

The Law of Copyright, by W. A. Copinger, F.S.A. (Stevens & Haynes), has reached a fourth edition, edited by Mr. J. M. Easton, who has given great prominence to the important question of International Copyright. Each foreign country is taken separately, and the remarks of the author are divided into two parts—on the local copyright laws, and the rights of foreigners. The article upon the latter subject in the United States is very lucid, and clearly indicates the difficulties with which the unhappy English publisher has to strive owing to the selfish "manufacturing clause" of the Chace Act. The Musical (Summary Proceedings) Copyright Act, 1902, is shortly discussed, and the reasons for its total failure explained, and the author does not seem very hopeful regarding the Bill recently promoted to amend this Act. The treatise has been brought thoroughly up to date, and the recent case of Lawrence & Bullen, Limited, v. Aflalo and Cook, on the subject of copyright in encyclopædia articles, is fully discussed. The work is a leading authority which should be consulted by all literary people.

A FEW translations from Victor Hugo's poems, a good many from Heine's, and various songs and lyrics from such poets as Eichendorff, Wilhelm Müller, and Mörike, make up the greater part of Poems of 1818 and Earlier Days, translated by E. Robinson (Sherratt & Hughes). We are told in the preface that the work was executed during hours of enforced idleness, and it is comforting to learn that the translator found it full of pleasure. But it seems rather a pity that the pieces should have been published in book form. For though it may sound somewhat harsh to say so, a conscientious critic has no choice but to declare that the work is by no means satisfactory. One or two of the simpler songs come out passably enough, but as a rule the verses are sadly wanting in form, in melody, and very often in meaning. The renderings from mediæval German betray a strange ignorance of that language. In a single short poem of Walther von der Vogelweide, or, as the translator is pleased to call him, Walter of the Bird's Meadow, we have counted more than a dozen mistranslations.

A Dictionary of Quotations in Prose, by Anna L. Ward (Dean & Son), deserves praise, as pains have been taken with the index and cross-references abound. Further, it includes a number of excellent sayings by American writers, and translations from foreign authors, both recent and ancient. We get bits of Plato from Jowett's translation, of Cicero, Plutarch, and Montaigne. One could, of course, suggest many additions under each heading, but it is better to say that there is much good thought enshrined from sources less familiar than the trite authors of wit and wisdom.

MESSRS. SAMPSON LOW send us several of Black's novels—White Heather, Madcap Violet, Three Feathers, &c.—in a neat brown cloth binding. They are to be had at a very moderate price, and should be popular for wintry days.

WE are very glad to find that Messrs. Routledge have reissued three neat little volumes of The Poets and the Poetry of the Nineteenth Century, edited by Alfred H. Miles. The series covers the periods from Keats to Lytton, Southey to Shelley, and Crabbe to Coleridge. We gave long notices of these collections when they first appeared, and we may point out that they form a record of exceptional value, because they include specimens and appreciations of many minor poets whose works are not gathered in any other selection. Thus in the volume 'Keats to Lytton' we find notices of Clare, Talfourd, our old contributor George Darley, Motherwell, Thom, Charles Wells, R. H. Horne, Beddoes, Laman Blanchard, and Charles Whitehead. Many of these are only names to the average reader of to-day, who might well reduce his perusal of popular trash and take to something better. These little volumes are decidedly cheap, and sure of a wide circulation, whether the class just mentioned secures them or not.

Mother Goose's Melody. A Facsimile Reproduction of the earliest known Edition, with an Introduction and Notes by Col. W. F. Prideaux. (Bullen.)—Col. Prideaux's introduction tells us all that is known about this charming children's book, and puts a gravestone on some of the legends that have grown about it. Everybody will be interested in the extreme probability that Goldsmith wrote the maxims and moralizations for which it is so famous, of which one, fathered on Grotius, may be commended to modern editors: "It is a mean and scandalous practice in authors to put notes to things that deserve no notice." We gather from the notes that the word "hent" on p. 89, which appears in the facsimile, does not appear in the original. If so, it is surely a mistake to alter what purports to be a facsimile. Children of all ages will appreciate some feature or other of the book, from the verses to the serious maxims which point their moral.

A GREAT deal is being done in these days to inculcate in children the study of nature. They are remarkably observant, and have keen senses, which are developed quicker than their intelligence. Consequently Mrs. Miller Maxwell's idea of such a book as Children's Wild Flowers (Edinburgh, Douglas) is very happy. It does not set forth to instruct its readers in botany, but merely in the love of flowers, in their literary lore, and in the means of identifying them. This last object is materially assisted by the coloured illustrations by Miss Roxburgh, which, without calling for special comment, are adequate and accurate. There is a considerable number of wild flowers included; but one misses some popular kinds. Where, for example, is the toad flax, and where the campions? It is true the latter are mentioned, but such a common guest of the countryside might well have claimed an illustration. But there is little fault to find with Mrs. Maxwell's treatment of the flowers of her choice. She collects much agreeable information. It is pleasant to learn that the foxglove is foolishly called "poppy" in Devon, in Sussex "flops" and "flop-a-dock," and in Lancashire "fairy petticoat." This is perfectly useless information, we are aware, but it is charming, and the knowledge of it will add to the charm of childhood.

Chirp and Chatter. By Alice Banks. Illustrated by Gordon Browne. (Blackie.)—Children are generally devoted admirers of the beast fable, and these quaintly illustrated specimens of that class of literature are likely enough to find favour in their eyes, in spite of the solid scientific facts, or even the rather obtrusive moralizing, by which they are characterized. It is true that the morals inculcated are sometimes more than usually open to question. That the daily use, for example, of good instead of bad coffee makes no difference in the month's bills is a comfortable, but an ill-founded doctrine; and, personally, we should prefer the gift of even a single gold piece from a pessimistic aunt to any number of "cheerful words" from one of more hopeful mood. But young people are less troubled by such discrepancies than their elders are in the habit of imagining.

THE most artistic of children's annuals for 1905 is The Dream-Garden (John Baillie), edited by Miss Netta Syrett, and charmingly furnished with stories and poems by the editor herself, Mr. Laurence Housman, Miss Evelyn Sharp, Mrs. Deland, Mrs. Mann, Fiona Macleod, E. Nesbit, Mr. Norman Gale, and others. The frontispiece, by Miss Nellie Syrett, is perhaps the most strikingly beautiful feature of the book. It is exquisite in colour and design, and if it bring to mind the 'Paradiso' of Fra Angelico, why so much the better, especially as it is in complete concord with the atmosphere of the story it illustrates. The rest of the pictures, with one exception from the same hand, belong too much to the self-conscious but immature school of attempt to be wholly pleasing. In the next volume Miss Syrett would be well advised to edit her artists.

DISPOSE them as you may, the jewelled pieces of the kaleidoscope cannot fall into any but an agreeable pattern, and, much after the same fashion, the familiar yet ever romantic constituents of the old folk-tales lose nothing by repetition. In Swedish Fairy Tales (Walter Scott), by F. Berg, translated by Tyra Engdahl and Jessie Rew, the youthful reader will be made happy with many an immemorially ancient motive thrown into different forms in a simple and pleasing manner. There is much to be said in favour of simplicity in fairy tales nowadays, as against affectation and a certain condescending jocosity, and this volume of stories is both plain and pleasant, a notable instance of old wine in new bottles.

The Literary Year-Book and Bookman's Directory for 1905 is published by Messrs. Routledge & Sons, who in taking up the volume have introduced certain changes and new features. A list of 'Books of 1904,' arranged under subject-headings, replaces reviews of literature and literary tendencies. There is also an 'Index of Titles,' intended to answer the question, "Who wrote so-and-so?" but whether it will achieve that purpose seems doubtful, owing to its defective arrangement. It is by no means sufficiently definite in description or inclusive, and, being derived partly from the 'Authors' Directory,' includes some forgotten books, such as 'Who was then the Gentleman?' (3 vols., 1885) and some privately printed publications, such as the catalogue of Mr. Pierpont Morgan's pictures, which might well retire in favour of important books of the last two years. The section on 'Law and Letters' is useful. The list of 'Pensions' is worth a glance. The section on 'Libraries' needs careful revision; not, for instance, to have noticed the death of so prominent a scholar as Dr. T. G. Law is very slack. In 'Periodical Publications' some inclusions and omissions surprise us. Surely "Sylvanus Urban" is not the editor of The Gentleman's Magazine. The Motor, a capital little paper, is omitted, so is the new sporting paper The Winning Post. It is rather odd to find The Windsor Magazine asking for "good work of any kind." The editor of Vanity Fair is not now O. A. Fry. Why is The Burlington Magazine omitted? The editor of The Cambridge Review is hopelessly wrong. In fact, the whole volume would be the better for careful revision, which it deserves, since it has wisely developed the practical side which such a record ought to present.

THAT wonderful book The Post Office London Directory is before us in the edition for 1905 (Kelly's Directories), admirably bound for our special use as usual. This is the one hundred and sixth year of this monster guide, which is a triumph of practical classification and arrangement. It contains no fewer than 3,449 pages, and with the Country Suburbs nearly 4,600 pages, exclusive of advertisements. The entire contents of the volume are always kept standing in type, and the way in which corrections are made down to a few days before publication is noteworthy. This issue includes a 'Street Directory' of London Country Suburbs, covering such districts as Blackheath, Woolwich, Dalston, Hampstead, Streatham, and Stoke Newington, a new feature which will be highly appreciated, though by the use of finer paper the bulk of the whole is not much increased. The volume forms most interesting reading. It ought, for instance, to supply many novelists with suitable names, comic and serious, dignified and pert. The 'Trades Directory' always attracts us. Looking through it, we notice that there is only one of each of the following callings: anchovy paste maker, breeze merchant, cigarette paper manufacturer, dripping merchant, flagstaff maker, oakum manufacturer, osier grower, and teacher of memory. There are two rat-catchers, tallow-melters, tarpaviers, and bone merchants, but over forty cats'-meat dealers.

MESSRS. HARRISON & SONS send us Burke's Peerage for the present year, the sixty-seventh edition of this standard publication, which is well up to date, and abounds in the detail which renders the history of distinguished families interesting. The section of 'Mottoes, with Translations,' appears to have been improved, but still contains some canine renderings. In general information this handsome volume is laudably accurate, though some of the early forbears of titled families are tolerably mythical. It may, however, be argued that where no sound evidence is to hand tradition is more likely to be right than wrong.

Whitaker's Almanack and Whitaker's Peerage (Whitaker) are both welcome in the new issues, being compact and accurate. The former, indeed, retains its unique place as supplying information which can be had nowhere else. We are glad to see that it does not, as the preface says, "take a stereotyped form, and so become fossilized." This year it includes summaries of commerce, health resorts, and the military and educational systems of the world.

MESSRS. ROUTLEDGE & SONS publish an admirable little edition at a shilling of Considerations on Representative Government, by J. S. Mill, with an index now first added.

MR. H. G. WELLS's Twelve Stories and a Dream (Macmillan) should be popular in a sixpenny form.

LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

ENGLISH.

Theology.

Baptist Handbook, 1905, 8vo, sewed, 2/6 net.
Burnside (F.), Village Sermons, cr. 8vo, 2/6 net.
Congregational Year-Book, 1905, 8vo, sewed, 2/6
Doherty (R. R.) and Meyer (H. H.), Illustrative Lesson Notes, 8vo, 5/
Martineau (J.), National Duties, and other Sermons and Addresses, cr. 8vo, 3/ net.

Fine Art and Archaeology.

Adams (C. L.), Castles of Ireland, roy. 8vo, 10/6 net.

Poetry and the Drama.

Keats (J.), Hyperion, a Facsimile of Keats's Autograph, with Notes by E. D. Sellincourt, folio, boards, 52/6 net.
Passmore (T. H.), Maria Creatrix, and other Poems, 3/6
Willobie His Avis, with an Essay by C. Hughes, 10/ net.

Music.

Beethoven and his Forerunners, by D. G. Mason, 8/6 net.
Fullerton (G. S.), A System of Metaphysics, roy. 8vo, 17/ net.

Political Economy.

Cochrane (C. H.), Modern Industrial Progress, 10/6 net.

History and Biography.

Brodsky (Mrs. A.), Recollections of a Russian Home: a Musician's Experiences, cr. 8vo, 2/6 net.
Cunnington (H. J.), An Account of the Charities of Braintree, 8vo, 5/
Maybrick (F. E.), My Fifteen Lost Years, cr. 8vo, 6/
Mitchell (S. W.), The Youth of Washington, cr. 8vo, 6/
York: the Story of its Walls, Bars, and Castles, by T. P. Cooper, 8vo, 10/6 net.

Geography and Travel.

Post Office London Directory for 1905: Country Suburbs, roy. 8vo, 15/
Vaile (G. B.), River Scenes of Merrie England, 4to, 3/6
Wheeler (W. A.), The Commission of H.M.S. Pandora, Mediterranean Station, 1901-4, cr. 8vo, 4/ net.

Folk-lore.

Squire (C.), The Mythology of the British Islands, 12/6 net.

Education.

Public Schools Year-Book, 1905, cr. 8vo, 2/6
Schoolmasters' Year-Book, 1905, cr. 8vo, 5/ net.

Philology.

Euripides, Vols. 1 and 2 in 1 vol., cr. 8vo, Oxford India paper, 9/

Science.

Booker (F. W.), Elementary Practical Building Construction, Stage 1, cr. 8vo, 2/6
Innes (C. H.), The Fan, cr. 8vo, 4/ net.
Lambkin (F. J.), The Treatment of Syphilis, cr. 8vo, 3/ net.
Lockwood's Builder's and Contractor's Price-Book, 1905, 4/
Macfarlane (W.), Laboratory Notes on Practical Metallurgy, cr. 8vo, 2/6
Science Year-Book for 1905, 8vo, 5/ net.
Woodworth (J. V.), American Tool-Making and Interchangeable Manufacturing, roy. 8vo, 17/ net.

General Literature.

Appleton (G. W.), The Luck of Bella Barton, cr. 8vo, 6/
Barr (A. E.), A Song of a Single Note, cr. 8vo, 6/
Barrett (F.), The Night of Reckoning, cr. 8vo, 6/
Boothby (G.), In Spite of the Czar, cr. 8vo, 5/
Bourne's Insurance Directory, 1905, 8vo, 5/ net.
Collings (M. A.), Life's Phases, cr. 8vo, 6/
Ferne (W. T.), Meals Medicinal, 8vo, 9/
Gowing (Mrs. A.), Lord of Himself, cr. 8vo, 6/
Hillis (N. D.), The Quest of John Chapman, cr. 8vo, 6/
Keays (H. A. M.), He that Eateth Bread with Me, cr. 8vo, 6/
Le Queux (W.), The Mask, cr. 8vo, 6/
Leigh (E. C. A.), A List of English Clubs in all Parts of the World for 1905, oblong 12mo, 3/6
Lodge (E.), The Peerage, Baronetage, Knightage, and Companionage, 1905, imp. 8vo, 31/6 net.
Mabie (H. W.), Parables of Life, 8vo, 6/6 net.
Marsh (K.), Confessions of a Young Lady, cr. 8vo, 6/
Mask of Apollo, and other Stories, by A. E., cr. 8vo, 2/6 net.
Sergeant (A.), The Mystery of the Meat, cr. 8vo, 6/
Warden (F.), The Face in the Flashlight, cr. 8vo, 6/

FOREIGN.

Law.

Gumplowicz (L.), Geschichte der Staatstheorien, 12m.

History and Biography.

Merki (C.), La Reine Margot et la Fin des Valois, 1553-1615, 7fr. 50.
Rimini (C.), L'Italie Sanglante: Murri et Bonmartini, 3fr. 50.
Steinacker (H.), Regesta Habsburgica: Part 1, Die Regesten der Grafen v. Habsburg bis 1281, 10m.

Geography and Travel.

Heuzé (P.) et Cessonnet (P.), En Allemagne, 3fr. 50.

Science.

Lacroix (A.), La Montagne Pelée et ses Éruptions, 60fr.

General Literature.

Bienaimé (Amiral) et Colliard (P.), Pêril National, 2fr. 50.
Formont (M.), Le Pêché de la Morte, 3fr. 50.
Hirsch (C. H.), Pantins et Ficelles, 3fr. 50.
Rochehoucauld (G. de la), L'Amant et le Médecin, 3fr. 50.

A WINTER SUNSET.

THE starlings pipe and whisper in the trees,
Now loud, now low, for autumn's lease is run;
The skies are stiller than still summer seas
As sinks in shining and translucent ease
The late November sun.

November sunset—and a phantom moon
That floats, a shell-pale sickle in the blue:
The light that comes—the light that fades so soon,
Both with the season's silence seem in tune;
With my heart's silence too.

This misty hour, whose garrulous birds will cease
Their fitful gossip as the west grows pale,
Breathes it not more of solace and release
Than sunsets golden as the Golden Fleece
Or song of nightingale?

ROSAMUND MARRIOTT WATSON.

CLASSICAL ASSOCIATION OF ENGLAND AND WALES.

THE Classical Association is to be congratulated on its general meeting, held on the evening of January 6th and on January 7th at University College, London. There was a full and interesting programme, the different items of which were kept to time with draconian strictness, the only inconvenience being that the closure had to be put somewhat prematurely on some important discussions. Two interesting lectures were given on Friday evening: the first by Prof. Percy Gardner, on the use of lantern-slides in classical teaching, the other by Mr. Gilbert Murray, on some points in teaching Greek plays. Prof. Gardner pointed out that it is unnecessary now to lecture in darkness, and that by the invention of a new lamp, which can be fixed to any electric light, the lantern is brought to any ordinary room. There are now available long lists of good slides for class teaching in Germany, America, and England. Eye-training is strangely neglected in England: we do not enough aim at giving vividness to our studies. One important caution is necessary: a mass of slides quickly succeeding one another is useless. Each slide should be allowed to remain before the eye a long time, and from a dozen to twenty are enough for one lecture.

Mr. Gilbert Murray's lecture was an appeal to teachers of Greek plays to study not only the linguistic element—which, of course, must form a large part of their work—but also the inner motives of the actors; to work up to the dissection and analysis of the play, so as to be able to answer such questions as an actor might ask of an author whose play he was helping to realize. Teachers should always remember that the language is spoken language, which was bound to be clear at the instant, that it was uttered by the human voice with powers of emphasis. It is for teachers to think out where this emphasis would have fallen, and to realize what was the point. At each speech they should ask themselves why the actor says what he does, and be on the look-out for dramatic interruptions and irregularities in speech, as well as for unmarked divisions in choruses. Looked at from this point of view, the least eloquent speeches will often prove to be the most dramatic; the frigid and so-called comic scenes will tend to disappear. Things which to a reader in a comic mood seem comic, in a tense mood seem tragic and particularly poignant. In commentators who have realized the whole dramatic situation, a psychological line of explanation will probably be right as against a strictly logical one.

On Saturday morning, after the necessary business had been gone through, Prof. Butcher moved for the appointment of a committee on the pronunciation of Latin, to consider also, later, the pronunciation of Greek. He urged that matters are now worse than before the reform was partially introduced; that in England we are in a state of chaos, not even using "a consistently incorrect method." In these islands, especially now that there is so much interchange of teachers between England, Ireland, and Scotland, it is imperative that we should have a uniform pronunciation which is approximately correct. The essential points are the observance of quantity, of the quality of the vowels (roughly speaking, Italian), and of the hard sound of c, g, and t. The meeting adopted the proposal with one dissentient.

Two excellent papers on the utility of classics were read, one by Mr. R. L. Leighton, the other by Mr. T. Rice Holmes.

At this point the Lord Chancellor, who has become President in succession to the Master of the Rolls, arrived and gave his presidential address. He entered a plea on behalf of a more diffuse and free reading of Greek, even though it were not Attic. We should extend our studies to Herodotus, Lucian, Athenæus, and even the Byzantine authors. Accuracy should not be sought for too early, but allowed to come late, after many mistakes have been made.

In the afternoon Prof. Ernest Gardner suggested some methods for helping those employed in classical teaching to keep in touch with recent discovery and investigation.

Mr. Page's paper on the concentration of classical work in schools on what is essential was perhaps the most important contribution made to the cause of classical learning during the meeting. If the study of classics is not to be dropped very tenderly overboard, we must lighten the curriculum, and the present is certainly not the time for introducing yet other studies, such as orthography, philology, and textual emendation, into schools. We want better teachers, but boys are labouring under too great a strain in trying to tackle two ancient languages during the early part of their school career. Grammar and composition should be taught almost entirely in Latin; and more time given to Greek literature. Under Dr. Kennedy no Shrewsbury boy deigned to practise Greek prose.

Mr. S. E. Winbolt, in supporting Mr. Page, made a practical application of desirable classical subjects to a fourth-form time-table, and urged that our present practice of classical composition in forms below the fifth and sixth is decidedly excessive, and that the only classical composition which must be retained in lower forms is Latin prose.

After the Rev. W. C. Compton had advocated a reform in school grammars, a motion was carried for appointing a committee to consider ways of lightening the classical curriculum and for improving the means of instruction.

WHEN WAS JOHN KNOX BORN?

University of Aberdeen, December 31st.

MANY will have read with satisfaction Dr. Hay Fleming's announcement, in The Athenæum of December 24th, that he is about to publish a 'Life of Knox,' and to "discuss at considerable length" the date of the Reformer's birth.

The fact that almost all the additional considerations in favour of the later date, adduced by Mr. Andrew Lang and myself, had already occurred to so accomplished an archaeologist, strengthens my belief that they have some weight, although one must keep an open mind until altera pars has been heard. I am glad to know that Dr. Fleming recognizes that Dr. Buchanan must have seen Spottiswoode's unpublished MS. before composing his own work, so that the former's testimony need be no more than an echo of the latter's. I was misled by Dr. Fleming's omission to refer to Buchanan's dependence, when he was contending that "their joint but unauthenticated statement as to the Reformer's age ought not to be implicitly accepted." But Dr. Fleming was reserving, apparently, that notable consideration (to which I drew attention) for his book. It will be admitted, I presume, that but for Prof. Hume Brown's most important recovery of Young's letter of 1579, belief in the traditional date would probably not have been seriously shaken; but to Dr. Hay Fleming belongs, undoubtedly, the credit of fortifying and supplementing Young's testimony, and of first setting the question effectively before the public view.

HENRY COWAN.

'THE HISTORY OF WEXFORD.'

December 17th, 1904.

MR. PHILIP HORE'S 'History of Wexford' is published by Mr. Elliot Stock, of Paternoster Row. Vols. i. to iv. have been issued. The last of these, containing the history of Duncannon Fort, Loftus Hall, Hook, Slade, Baganbun, and Bannow, was advertised in the July number of The Antiquary, a well-known monthly journal, published by Mr. Stock, as "now ready, price 20s. net to subscribers." I had entered my name as a subscriber to the series from 1900 at 20s. a volume, and in course received a copy of vol. iv., but with it there was a note that the price had been raised to 2l. To this I demurred.

Even on the amended prospectus it is stated, "This volume is issued at 20s. net to subscribers," and the words printed in red, "In consequence of the fourth volume of Mr. P. Hore's 'History of Wexford' being nearly double the size of previous volumes, the price will be raised to 2l.," show that subscribers are distinguished from non-subscribers, and that the rise in price was not to act retrogressively. Though not controverting the above statement, Mr. Stock refuses to let me have the volume at subscription rate. I think this is unfair treatment, against which I make this protest. Subscribers of 1896 receive the volumes as published at 10s. each.

E. PERCEVAL WRIGHT, M D.

Late President R. Soc. Antiq. Ireland.

INCORPORATED ASSOCIATION OF ASSISTANT MASTERS.

THE annual general meeting of the Assistant Masters' Association was held on January 4th at the Mercers' School, Holborn. Mr. G. E. S. Coxhead, the chairman for 1905, in referring to the progress made by the Association since its foundation in 1891, congratulated its members on having secured a hearing from the public, and warned them of the danger of becoming too sectional or infected with trades unionism. Secondary schools, which had gradually been shut out from the main stream of national feeling and progress, had been given by the Act of 1902 a chance of getting back again. He emphasized the value of the A.M.A. in relation to local bodies, and hoped it would co-operate loyally with the universities and elementary teachers in helping to co-ordinate the three grades of education. The retiring chairman, Mr. G. F. Daniell, in presenting the annual report for 1904, said that the Association had had a year of steady progress in every direction. He referred to the support given by the Head Masters' Association in urging before the Board of Education the claims of assistants to better security of tenure, and also to help received in this direction by the recommendations of such experts as Prof. Sadler. "That his recommendations may be put into effect is our earnest hope." Dealing with the disabilities under which assistants too often labour, he remarked that "it would be a national gain if not only our teachers, but our administrators, and even our statesmen, would learn to think biologically. To such a statesman it would appear unwise to sterilize one of the more intellectual sections of the community, and particularly unwise to diminish the sources from which recruits may be expected for the teaching profession."

In the matter of the Board of Education's regulations for secondary schools, he believed it possible to have a great organization of higher education without destroying the individuality of the teacher or of the school, but admitted "the danger of petty and injudicious interference with the details of school management," and quoted a recent example. While the Board's regulations for secondary school buildings are excellent, the fear is that we shall have the buildings and the pupils, but no money properly to remunerate a good teaching staff, the importance of securing which is utterly neglected in the latest edition of the regulations. In reference to the local authorities, he congratulated them on having, for the most part, taken the right step first, namely, by making a survey of the existing provision of secondary education, both as regards public and private schools. For his own part, he had faith that the increased popular control would bring greater popular interest. Costly mistakes would probably be made, but the state of higher education in England would be greatly improved.

Mr. R. F. Cholmeley then moved a resolution on the control of endowed schools:—

"That in the opinion of this Association any endowed school for which the Local Education Authority, acting through an Education Committee constituted in accordance with the provisions of the Education Act of 1902, provides, or is prepared to provide, a large proportion of the money required for the maintenance of the school, should be controlled in the manner which appears most desirable to the Local Education Authority; and, further, that the Board of Education should not oppose, in such a case, the abolition of the existing governing body, if the Local Education Authority is in favour of such abolition."

Quoting the recent friction in the case of Burnley School, he urged that it was an anomaly that the money should be found by the educational authority, and that the control of a school should rest with an independent governing body. Personally he had little confidence in the "pious founder," but thought that we must learn to trust our educational authorities.

Mr. G. F. Bridge, in seconding, said that one consideration seemed to him axiomatic, that the school which is not controlled by the local authority must go to the wall; but on these authorities there should be co-opted members representing secondary and university education. He therefore moved the addition of the words, "and provided that both on the local authority and on the committee of managers of the school there is adequate representation of secondary and university education."

This was unanimously accepted by the meeting.

A twofold resolution on salaries, which was adopted by the joint conference of head and assistant masters, was moved by Mr. E. D. W. Hewlett, with the omission of the words, "each rise to require the assent in writing of the head master":—

"1. That a salaries scheme should, with the approval of the governing body, be established for each school, to include (a) provision for annual or other periodic increase of assistant masters' salaries; (b) power for the head master to recommend further increase of salaries.

"2. That this meeting considers it highly desirable that the commencing salary paid in any secondary school to any master registered in Column B should be not less than 150l."

This was a matter which needed no discussion, and the resolution was carried unanimously, as also was a motion regretting that, under the new regulations of the Board, the average grant has not been increased, and that the authority of the official register of teachers is not recognized. In spite of having an agency of its own, the meeting considered that all vacancies in endowed schools and other schools supported by public money should be advertised in the public press.

Without a dissentient vote the meeting recorded its dissatisfaction with the decision of the Board not to allow the governors of the Whitgift Grammar School (Croydon) to make any retiring allowance to the Rev. G. H. Huddleston on his being requested to resign after thirty-one years' satisfactory service as an assistant master in the school, beyond a payment equivalent to one term's salary as a solatium. The Whitgift School is wealthy, and the governors thought that the revenues could bear the charges; but the Board had refused, because it did not care to create a precedent.

Motions were also carried in favour of a direct representation of the A.M.A. on the Teachers' Registration Council, and of a Federation of Associations of Secondary Teachers which is to be formed around the existing College of Preceptors, and which will be able to express an authoritative opinion on matters connected with secondary education.

After lunch Dr. Rouse, a former hon. secretary of the Association, read a paper entitled 'A Plea for the Useless.' The gist of this was an ironic query as to which we can best do without, the useful or the useless. The problem of to-day is not how to keep our trade, but how to keep our souls alive. Compulsory Greek! An absurd phrase, as foolish as "compulsory happiness" or "compulsory beauty." "Of all the useless nations that ever cumbered the earth commend me to the Jews and the Greeks," said Dr. Rouse, pleading in a delightful vein of bantering humour for a proper valuation of the contributions of these two peoples to the world's history.

Mr. S. E. Winbolt, another former hon. secretary, proposed a vote of thanks, which was heartily accorded.

Next, Mr. A. A. Somerville (Eton College) moved:—

"That this meeting welcomes the report of the Cambridge University Syndicate on Studies and Examinations, especially the recommendation that candidates should be permitted to take one or two modern languages in place of a classical language."

The arguments adduced for the abolition not of Greek, but of compulsory Greek, were that the present requirements of the universities are ridiculous, and that our present system of teaching Greek is a failure.

Mr. F. Storr advocated "free trade" in the matter: let those who wish get their culture through Greek, but those who do not, get it in another way. We want to widen the entrances to our universities. This motion was carried by forty-nine to thirteen.

The meeting ended with a desultory and somewhat unsatisfactory discussion on the teaching of English with reference to the recent memorandum of the Board, and to a more thorough report on the subject by the Education Committee of the A.M.A.

Among others who addressed the members at the dinner in the evening were Mr. H. J. Mackinder and Prof. S. H. Butcher. The former urged teachers so to design the subjects of education that they may produce in the future a generation that would be able to "think imperially." This was a chance for teachers to stand forth as empire-makers. The latter illustrated the difficulties of the teaching profession, upon which such exacting demands are made by the public.

Literary Gossip.

MESSRS. LONGMAN have in the press 'Letters to "Ivy" from the first Earl of Dudley,' edited by Mr. S. H. Romilly. These are selected from a correspondence (long supposed to have been destroyed) which the Earl of Dudley, better known first as the Hon. John William Ward, and afterwards for a time as Viscount Dudley and Ward, kept up throughout his life with his greatest friend Mrs. Stewart, the second wife of Prof. Dugald Stewart, of Edinburgh. The letters range from 1801 to 1832, and contain many stories about Rogers, Byron, Canning, the Duke of Wellington, Lady Caroline Lamb, Madame de Staël, and, in fact, most of the leading men and women of the social, political, and literary world of the day.

THE same firm are publishing 'The Crisis of the Confederacy: a History of Gettysburg and the Wilderness,' by Capt. Cecil Battine. The book is an effort to produce an account which is as trustworthy as possible, and intelligible to the general reader. By the courtesy of the American War Department their map of the field of Gettysburg has been reproduced.

MR. FISHER UNWIN is about to issue a volume by Dr. Andrew Macphail, entitled 'Essays in Puritanism.' It contains a series of studies of Jonathan Edwards, John Winthrop, Margaret Fuller, Walt Whitman, and John Wesley.

THE third volume of 'The Cambridge Modern History' will be published on January 18th. The title, 'The Wars of Religion,' sufficiently indicates the period with which it deals. The editors announce that the 'History' will be supplemented by a volume of maps and another volume containing genealogical and other tables and a general index.

'BLOOMSBURY' is the name of Mr. C. F. Keary's forthcoming novel, which will be published next month by Mr. Nutt. The scene is laid almost exclusively in the quarter of London indicated by the title. But for contrast this microcosm is peopled with a great variety of intellectual types, suggestive of the sects and "isms" among which almost all societies are nowadays partitioned.

MR. FREDERIC VILLIERS, the war correspondent and artist, who has just returned from Port Arthur, is writing an account (which will be published by Messrs. Longman at the end of this month, illustrated by his original sketches) of his experiences with General Nogi's army before the great fortress. He will deal with all the vicissitudes of the indomitable besiegers, having been an eyewitness of the fighting night and day during the last three months. The book will be called 'Port Arthur: Three Months with the Besiegers: a Diurnal of Occurrences.'

MR. FRANCIS THOMPSON has composed a little treatise on "Brother Ass"—St. Francis of Assisi's nickname for the body—in relation to its burden, the soul. The volume, with its citations from orthodox spiritual physicians in their diagnosis of sin as a bodily disease, and in their resulting prescriptions, will be published by Messrs. Burns & Oates, with the title of 'Health and Holiness.'

THE Rev. Walter Hobhouse has resigned the editorship of The Guardian, to which he was appointed in 1900, and will retire at the beginning of April.

MR. J. L. GARVIN has somewhat suddenly undertaken the editorship of the extended Outlook. His articles on foreign politics have been largely quoted in Paris and Berlin; he is the acknowledged author of The Daily Telegraph papers on 'Fiscal Reform,' republished with an approving preface from Mr. Chamberlain. Most of Mr. Garvin's work, however, has been anonymous, including 'The Economics of Empire,' that much-discussed Supplement to The National Review. The notable articles signed "Calchas" in The Fortnightly Review, which have been variously attributed to Lord Rosebery, Sir R. Giffen, a member of the Russian Embassy, a British retired attaché, and others, are credited in the best-informed circles to Mr. Garvin.

THE London business of the Cambridge University Press will be transferred in the course of the present year to Fetter Lane, Fleet Street. In consequence of continued development, the Ave Maria Lane warehouse has become inconveniently small, and the large leasehold warehouse known as St. Dunstan's House, at present in the occupation of Messrs. Sampson Low & Co., has been purchased. It will be now possible to have showrooms where the publications of the Press—Bibles and Prayer Books, educational and miscellaneous works—can be inspected.

AMONG the articles in the February number of The Independent Review will be the following: 'How Long Halt Ye?' by Mr. G. L. Dickinson; 'The Poetical Element in Liberalism,' by Mr. G. K. Chesterton; 'Side-Lights on the Franciscans,' by Mr. G. G. Coulton; and 'The Churches and the Child,' by the Rev. J. O'Donovan. Mr. Arthur Sidgwick will contribute a review of Myers's 'Fragments of Prose and Poetry,' and Dr. Rashdall one of the recent 'Life' of Canon Liddon.

AN edition of B. Barnes's 'The Devil's Charter,' prepared by Mr. R. B. McKerrow, will be published shortly by Mr. Uystpruyst, of Louvain, for Prof. Bang's 'Materialien' for the study of early English drama. It is a curious and unequal play, and can hardly be reckoned worthy of the author of 'Parthenophil and Parthenophe'; but it is of considerable interest to students, on account of its relationship to Marlowe's 'Faustus,' by which it appears to have been in great measure inspired. Extracts from it appeared in Grosart's edition of Barnes's poems, but it has not previously been reprinted.

READERS of 'The Country Day by Day' in the Daily Mail during the past year will welcome the publication by Mr. Heinemann of these interesting notes, now considerably enlarged, in book form, by Mr. E. Kay Robinson. The author is the best of writers on nature, and his text is illustrated by his own photographs.

MESSRS. HARRISON & SONS, of 59, Pall Mall, will remove in a week or so to 45, Pall Mall, lately in the possession of Messrs. King & Co., bankers. They are leaving what once was a noted coffee-house in the eighteenth and early nineteenth centuries; later, the lower part was altered, and was tenanted by Mr. Olivier, bookseller, from whom Messrs. Harrison & Sons purchased the business. The Smyrna Coffee-house, as it was called, is full of associations with the wits and authors of the eighteenth century. Messrs. Harrison's new premises are next door to the Star and Garter, a famous clubhouse, where the first rules of the M.C.C. were drawn up.

D. M. writes from Philadelphia:—

"Mr. W. D. Howells, in his department, 'The Easy Chair,' in the December issue of Harper's Magazine, complains that one of the results of the International Copyright Law has been to deprive the American public of 'lots of good reading at the lowest price.' Again, he says, 'We have.....been deprived of the best English literature, which we had so cheap because we stole it.' But it is certain that not every current English book sustains Mr. Howells's contention. The third volume of Saintsbury's 'History of Criticism,' on the reverse of the title-page of which is the statement, 'Printed by William Blackwood & Sons, Edinburgh, Scotland,' is mailed by the American publishers for $3.70 net. The price of the book in England is 20s. net, so that an English buyer could import the book from America at a saving of fully 5s. We this side of the water have no protest to offer, but it would seem as though one might very well come from English book-buyers."

MR. J. M. HART writes from Cornell University concerning a communication from M. Marcel Schwob published by us on December 10th:—

"M. Schwob's objection to the use of the title 'The Children's Crusade,' by E. Everett-Green, is not well taken. That title was used thirty-four years ago by the Rev. George Zabriskie Gray in his work 'The Children's Crusade: an Episode of the Thirteenth Century,' New York, Hurd & Houghton, 1870, pp. xiii, 238. The Rev. Mr. Gray, afterwards Dean of the Protestant Episcopal Seminary in Cambridge (Massachusetts), though not a professed historian, was a scholar of wide reading and excellent judgment. A glance at the authorities cited by him, pp. xi-xiii, will show that he took his work seriously."

IN the February issue of Chambers's Journal Mr. Archibald S. Hurd will discuss 'The Revolution in the British Navy.' Dr. Dawson Turner writes with experience on the present position of 'The Motorist'; Mr. Harry J. Wilson on 'Industrial Accidents,' and Mrs. Sanders on 'Our Milk Supplies.' Mr. E. J. Prior, in a paper entitled 'In Condemned Cells,' describes a little-known prison in East London, connected by an underground passage with the Tower. Two articles of literary interest are 'A Memory of Frank Smedley,' and 'Author and Publisher,' a review of Mr. Marston's 'After Work.'

The Times announces the publication on January 20th, 21st, and 23rd, of nine chapters of an unpublished novel by Beaconsfield, written in his last days. It is added that it will not be available in any other form till the publication of Mr. Monypenny's official 'Life,' which may not be ready before the lapse of two years.

A CURIOUS mistake has lately been perpetrated by The Egyptian Gazette. On Prof. Petrie's departure some weeks back for the peninsula of Sinai, some admirer wrote to The Gazette announcing the fact, and adding that his paymaster was the Egypt Exploration Fund. The editor, who had apparently not read 'Methods and Aims in Archaeology,' turned this into a paragraph describing the Edwards Professor of Egyptology as a well-known mining expert, who was sent out by an "Egyptian Exploration Company" to dig for turquoises. Luckily Dr. Reisner, now at work at Gizeh for the University of California, chanced to see the paragraph, and at once wrote to the editor setting him right.

MR. H. A. LUDWIG DEGENER, who during some years managed for Messrs. Williams & Norgate their Oxford branch, has started as a publisher at 15, Hospitalstrasse, Leipsic. He intends to specialize in almanacs, technological works, and school-books. Further, he will devote his energies to the publication of German translations of remarkable English and French works. He is, for instance, the publisher of the German edition of 'The Prodigal Son,' and will issue translations of other works by Mr. Hall Caine in due course.

THE firm of Messrs. Wells Gardner, Darton & Co. has been converted into a limited company. The whole of the present issued capital will be held by the directors and their relations. The change has been made in order that Mr. Joseph William Darton, who has had for so long the sole control, should have some relief from the responsibilities of management. We hope that Mr. Darton may be spared for many years to enjoy the increased leisure to which his long services to his firm and the trade entitle him.

THE valuable summary of books which is produced yearly by The Publishers' Circular is just out. Juvenile works and other fiction reach 1,731 books, and with new editions 2,548 books—about the same number as last year; history and biography (653), arts, science, &c. (532), and travel (289), show an increase; poetry and the drama (407) is about the same as last year; but belles-lettres, essays, &c., show a decline, 220 as against 315; politics and trade (775) have gone up, of course. The grand total is 8,334, which is 47 less than last year.

Two lectures on 'The Japanese Spirit' will be delivered by Mr. Y. Okakura, of the Imperial University, Tokyo, at the London School of Economics, on Tuesday and Friday next. Admission may be obtained free on application to the Secretary of the School at Clare Market, W.C.

M. ERNEST JUDET, for many years a leading member of the staff of Le Petit Journal, has left that paper, and undertaken the direction of L'Éclair, a paper of very good literary quality. M. Guillaume Sabatier, who had so ably edited L'Éclair for the past eight years, retired from it on its recent change of proprietorship. L'Éclair is one of the few five-centime Paris papers which still offer a four-page sheet.

THE death, in her seventieth year, is announced of the popular novelist Ferdinande von Brackel, author of 'Die Tochter des Kunstretters,' 'Im Strom der Zeit,' &c.

WE are glad to see that University College, London, is taking an interest in Polish literature. 'Mickiewicz as Moral Teacher and Political Leader, 1834-1855,' is the title of a course of free lectures by Dr. Lutoslawski on Monday afternoons, beginning on January 23rd.

THE magnificent Marcian library in Venice is to be reopened this year. It contains over 100,000 volumes, and many most important MSS., among them a Vulgate of the eighth century, a copy of the 'Divina Commedia' with illustrations by Giotto, &c. The library was founded by the Greek Cardinal Bessarion, who fled to Venice before the Turks, and brought with him over a thousand codices, which he presented to that city.

SCIENCE

Through the Unknown Pamirs: the Second Danish Pamir Expedition, 1898-99. By O. Olufsen, Lieutenant Danish Army. (Heinemann.)

GEOGRAPHERS and explorers will easily recollect the interest taken in Lieut. Olufsen's first expedition to the Pamirs in 1896-7, when it was said that he had visited country till then untraversed by white men, and had discovered a primitive race of dwarfs, dwellers in caves, the owners of dwarf breeds of domestic animals. He travelled from Copenhagen, through Russia to Samarkand, and thence by "tarantas," round by Tashkent to Khojand, and along the route to Kashgar as far as Osh, which he made the base of operations. Here he equipped his expedition, and set forth in a southerly direction, crossing the Alai mountains, and passing by Kara Kul (a common name in these parts, meaning "black lake") to the Pamirski Post, a small Russian advanced fort; thence he proceeded to the Alichar Pamir, and the Yashil Lake, and, crossing the Khargosh Pass, entered what is called the Great Pamir. Here the less-known part of his route began, for he followed the Pamir river to its junction with the Abi-Panja, or Upper Oxus, and continued down the northern bank of that river as far as Kalai Wamar. The road is difficult by reason of sand-drifts and of many tributary streams or rivers from side valleys; consequently it is seldom used. Thence Olufsen returned to Osh by Kalai Wanj, Garm in Karategin, and the Alai range. He reported the people of Wakhan to be of short stature, mentioned many ruined forts said to have been built by the Siyáhposh Kafirs, and stated that the worst part of the route was between Ishkashim, at the bend of the Oxus, whence it flows north, and Garan.

This journey, it is explained, was of the nature of a reconnaissance for the second and more elaborate expedition, of which the book before us is the record. By the same route as that formerly chosen, Osh was reached on May 28th, 1898, and was left for the Pamirs on June 15th. Approximately, 128 days were devoted to the exploration of the Pamirs, Wakhan, and Garan, and about the same period was spent in winter quarters at Khorok, a place near the junction of the river Gund, which flows from the Yashil Lake, with the Abi-Panja, or Upper Oxus. Here

"we passed the time at our winter quarters.....in meteorological, botanical, zoological, linguistic, ethnographical, and anthropological examinations of the materials collected, and barred up by snow as we were, we only made one excursion towards the north, to Kalai Wamar, in the month of December."

Now as the expedition lasted from March 23rd, 1898, to November 22nd, 1899, a comparatively short portion of the time was spent in Wakhan and Garan, or, indeed, in the region of the Pamirs; more time was passed elsewhere, as, for example, in and about Samarkand, Bokhara, and Merv; round Khiva, Charjui, and Hazarasp to Baku on the Caspian Sea; and, finally, on a visit to Persia. Nevertheless, much interesting information has been collected, divided into various sections, and partly published in separate volumes, of which the present book is one. It is certainly attractive, and it is most creditable to the author that this can be said, as it is written in, to him, a foreign language. This matters less in ordinary description, for his countrymen as a rule find little difficulty in speaking or writing English; but it tells considerably in his presentment of Oriental names, some of which are much disguised to our eyes by the transliteration adopted.

The reader is transported to the banks of the Pamir river, which flows from what we used to call Lake Victoria, now more commonly called Sir i-Kul or Zorkul, and sees "the lovely deep valley with its flat-roofed houses built close together and surrounded by gardens, fields, and thick copse, along the banks of the arms of the river, and up the mountain terraces. He is now only ten kilometres from Vakhān. He is in the province of Vakhān, and before him he sees the majestic range of mountains known as the Hindu Kush. The river Pandsh, that flows below through the valley, is the main source of the Oxus or Amu Darya. That river is of unusual importance, for it is the boundary between the troops of Russia and the fierce hordes of Afghanistan. In the following pages I shall treat wholly of this part of Vakhān and of the provinces along the Pandsh, Ishkashim, and Garan, all lying in Russian territory."

The author discusses the question of the main source of the Oxus, and, following Lord Curzon of Kedleston, who is supported by Mr. Stein, author of 'The Sand-Buried Cities of Khotan,' states it to be the Ab i-Panja, which, as its name indicates, has five chief feeders and flows through the Panj or Panja valley; but recent information points to the glaciers of the Nicholas range as a more important source. Now much time and ingenuity have been spent in discussing what is or is not the true source of a river, often with small profit to any one, and the Oxus is no exception. All rivers have many sources unless we consider only the rain or snow which feeds them. One tributary is longer than another, but may or may not carry more water, whilst the discharge of each stream varies greatly according to circumstances. Hence, till minute surveys have been made of every valley drained, and infinite detail has been collected, so that average discharge over all seasons is known, it is premature and useless to say that one out of the many feeders is the main source. What we know is that the sources are in the area drained, and in the case of the Oxus its head catchment basins are singularly complicated. There is a perfect maze of valleys whose waters flow in different directions, yet ultimately passing west they form the Oxus. Take, for example, the northern and southern slopes of the Nicholas range. The former drain into the valley which contains Lake Victoria, whence the Pamir river flows south of west; the latter, east of the Burgotai Pass, drain into Lake Chakmaktin, out of which the Ak su flows in a north-easterly direction for some fifty miles or more, when it makes a great bend northwards, and, turning to the west, contributes its quota to the Oxus.

Stranger still, the drainage from the Burgotai Pass (marked Waran Pass on Lord Curzon's map) feeds at once the Ak su to the east and the Ab i-Panja to the west. The great divide, or watershed, of this part of the world is, however, that whence the water on one side reaches the Oxus, which is lost eventually in the Sea of Aral; whilst the water of the other side finds its way eastward, and under many names flows through Chinese Turkestan, disappearing finally, after constant conflict with the sand of the desert, in the shifting lakes and marshes known as Lob Nor.

Passing from the subject of the original source of the Oxus, the author describes in an interesting way the Ab i-Panja, its valley and tributaries; also the Hindu Kush, with its great peaks Nushau (query Mount Nysa=Nûra) and Tirach Mir, north of Chitral, "one of the most magnificent and most imposing glacial formations of the world." He saw the mountains of Badakshan, and longed to explore the mystical lake of Shiva, hidden in their recesses, and jealously guarded by the Afghans. He could not do so, but devoted his attention to Garan, with its holy fountains and geysers, and thus describes what he saw:—

"On a terrace of the rock below the place at which the eastern uppermost fountain issues, a small yard has been fenced about with a wooden paling; this yard encloses a number of little fountains, which bubble out of small holes only large enough to allow the passage of an ordinary lead pencil. This is the sanctuary of the nation, as is indicated by a small primitive altar beside the uppermost fountain, which pours down on the fenced-in square. The altar consists only of some natural little caves in the rock beside the source—on shelves in these caves are placed a small copper lamp, a small earthenware lamp, and a round black stone; above the altar is a white banner on a staff, and on the top of the staff is a hand with distended fingers, made of sheet iron—this hand has certainly, as will be shown later on, a symbolic significance, as it is often found carved in rocks and stones in Vakhān.....In the yard in front the natives say their prayers—kneeling down before the lamps, which are lit on special occasions, they cover their faces with their hands."

Sacrifices are made; the people bathe in the sulphurous water, and are healed of their diseases.

In turn, Lieut. Olufsen treats of the climate, the houses, trade, and agriculture of the country. He further examines carefully questions concerning the people, their customs and religion, this excellent book being brought to an end by Sören Hansen's chapter on the anthropology of the Tajiks of Shighnan and Wakhan.

The volume is well illustrated from photographs by the author. It is printed on "coated paper," which makes it heavy to hold, in spite of there being but 238 pages, inclusive of preface and index. It is a useful contribution to the already extensive literature of the Pamirs.

MODERN SCIENCE AND THEORY.

An Introduction to the Theory of Optics. By Arthur Schuster, F.R.S., Professor of Physics in the University of Manchester. (Arnold.)—There is probably no branch of physics on which it is so difficult to write a satisfactory text-book as optics. The importance assigned respectively to geometrical optics and the theory of optical instruments, to the theoretical and experimental treatment of interference and diffraction, to the older and the newer theories of the nature of light, must vary with the personal predilections of the author; the choice made by one is sure to be rejected by another. Hence the two standard text-books which held the field before the publication of Prof. Schuster's treatise differ widely in their scope. Preston's 'Light' is above all things experimental, Drude's 'Optics' eminently theoretical; the aim of the former is to present to the student an account of the phenomena to be observed and an explanation of them deduced from fundamental principles, the proof of which may be somewhat scanty; the latter pays but small attention to experiments and appliances, but shows how the entire science may be built up from the assumptions of the electronic theory which has been developed by the author.

Prof. Schuster seeks to combine the advantages of both forms of treatment. His first part is a condensed Preston, his second a condensed Drude. "The first part," he says,

"includes those portions which may be treated without the help of the equations of dynamics..... The mathematical treatment has been kept as simple as possible, elementary methods only being used..... The second part is intended to serve as an introduction to the higher parts of the subject."

Let us state at once that Prof. Schuster has been completely successful within the limits which he has laid down for himself. In no more than 340 pages he has managed to treat, and in admirable fashion, every topic of interest in physical optics which could possibly be dealt with by the methods to which he is confined. As an example of what a text-book for higher students should be, we may point out the chapter on 'Optical Instruments.' Of geometrical optics there is none—and, indeed, the study is only of importance to designers of instruments—but with the help of a few elementary properties of reflecting and refracting systems proved in an earlier chapter the author deals with all the efficiencies and deficiencies which are likely to be of interest to the physicist. No student could fail to understand this portion, no specialist could fail to derive instruction from it.

But we venture to think that Prof. Schuster is mistaken in his rejection of all but elementary methods in his first part. The book is not for elementary students, but for those who intend to take the subject seriously—for those, that is, who will never attain to success without some acquaintance with modern analysis. And the disadvantages are more direct than those involved in the discouragement given to the acquirement of mathematical knowledge. The paragraphs on Huyghens's principle, excellent as they are in their way, leave an impression of incompleteness, which is only removed by the study of some such treatment as is supplied in Drude's book. It is, indeed, pointed out that the proof given is not entirely rigid, but there is great temptation to the student to refrain from the trouble of pushing inquiries further into statements that are made without rigid proof.

Moreover, we doubt whether "elementary" methods are really easier than "advanced," if any but the simplest problems are to be attacked. Numerical results are both more tedious to reach and more liable to error by consideration of Fresnel Zones than by the use of Fresnel Integrals, and yet the latter are not mentioned. It is the same with Newton's 'Principia'—nothing is easier to read, but no methods are more difficult to apply, though according to conventional usage they would be classed as "elementary." It is not the less skilful operator that can afford to dispense with the most powerful instrument.

Many will differ also from the author's statement that the "study of physics must be based upon a knowledge of mechanics..... a study of the old elastic solid theory must precede the introduction of electromagnetic equations."

But what if, following our present tendency, we come to reduce mechanics to electricity—if we find it simpler to refer all phenomena to those properties of the ether which are summed up in the electro-magnetic equations? Surely it is a step in the wrong direction to attempt to refer these again to the laws of "gross" matter. The elastic solid theory is in no way more fundamental than the electro-magnetic; it only fails to account for the same number of phenomena.

The faults, however, are few here compared with the excellences, and many will see the latter where we have called attention to the former. We are delighted to find copious references to original authorities, and especially to Lord Rayleigh's works, which are almost unknown to students. The biographical notices of leaders of the science are likely to arouse an interest in their writings, but it might have been well to include more chronological references. We recommend the work heartily to all advanced students of physics, with only a hint of warning that the information should be supplemented from other sources. The type, printing, and general appearance are all that could be desired.

The Analytical Theory of Light. By James Walker. (Cambridge, University Press.)—This book is an attempt to "give an account of physical optics without having recourse to any hypothesis respecting the nature of the influence which constitutes light or the character of the medium in which it is propagated. From a few simple experimental facts it is shown that a stream of light may be represented by a periodically varying vector transverse to the direction of the beam, and on this result, with an appeal where necessary to experimental facts, the treatment of the subject is based."

Mr. Walker uses the term "physical optics" in the sense in which it is usually employed at the present time, but, by a strange perversion, the words have come to designate the only part of the theory of light which is not physical. Physics, fifty years ago an abbreviated synonym for applied mathematics, is now the name of an experimental science; mathematics is indispensable to its study, but only as providing deductions from hypotheses by which the truth of those hypotheses may be proved or disproved; intricate calculations, the results of which cannot be tested in the laboratory, may be of intense interest, but they belong to the sphere of the mathematician, not that of the physicist.

Mr. Walker's treatise consists in the application of the most powerful analytical methods to certain problems in three of the chief portions of physical optics—wave motion, diffraction, and propagation in crystalline media. The theory of optical instruments, an important branch of the subject, is left entirely unnoticed. Detailed criticism of a work so purely mathematical would be out of place in the present notice; we will merely assure those who are capable of appreciating it that they will find here a lucid exposition of the recent researches in this field of Sommerfeld, Lord Rayleigh, Prof. Schuster, and other prominent investigators, together with much that is original. The section dealing with diffraction is particularly elegant and complete.

But while it must be recognized that the book is a notable contribution to pure science, we may point out that it renders little aid to physics. One of the chief problems of that science is the investigation of "the nature of the influence that constitutes light," the discussion of which is specially excepted by the quotation we have given from the preface. Even when matters of physical interest would seem to come within the author's scope he has postponed their interest to purely mathematical discussions. That part of the theory of the diffraction grating which is of the greatest interest to those who have to make or use the instrument is rather scanty, while many pages are devoted to the determination of the intensity of the fringes formed by a straight edge to a degree of accuracy far exceeding that of our most perfect photometric appliances. The topics which occupy the greatest part of the attention of physicists—Michelson's study of the structure of spectral lines, Wood's investigations of dispersion, and Drude's wonderful applications of the electron theory—are frankly regarded by the author as irrelevant to his purpose.

On the other hand, the book suffers in some respects from the lingering traces of physics that are to be found in it. It would have been more satisfactory to state clearly the results in which truth was assumed, and to found on these the analytical structure. The references to experimental work are too brief to be clear to those previously ignorant, and are apt to lead to confusion between the starting-point and the goal of the investigation. There is some fear that the value of such works may be more than counterbalanced by their tendency to obscure the points at issue in modern physics. Mathematics applied to physics is a good servant, but a dangerous mistress.

The printing and general appearance of the volume form a specimen of the best work of the Cambridge University Press.

The Becquerel Rays and the Properties of Radium. By the Hon. R. J. Strutt. (Arnold.)—The interest in the new science of radio-activity has spread far beyond the small circle of those who have made a serious study of physics; it has extended to almost every educated man. But men of science, while jeering at the crude notions of the uninitiated, have done nothing to enlighten them. They have written papers and treatises for the benefit of their fellow-workers; they have written articles of a "semi-popular" nature, wholly unintelligible to any one who has not an elementary knowledge of physics, and full of platitude to any one who has; but they have left the laity to obtain their information from the irresponsible babblings of ignorant journalists.

Mr. Strutt has undertaken the task that others have left undone. One of the most prominent of the younger generation of physicists, with a considerable first-hand knowledge of the phenomena which he describes, he has deigned to write the book before us. His account of the Becquerel rays will be comprehensible to any one who has no deeper knowledge of electrical theory than is unavoidably acquired in a passage through the least scientific of schools; it may not abound in the sensational statements to be found in paragraphs on 'Recent Science' in daily journals, but the reader has the assurance that the facts are at once accurate and complete. If only a few more books of this type were written, there might be some hope of a general appreciation of the methods, aims, and results of science, which would go far to promote its study.

We may point out a few slight flaws, which will probably be corrected in a second edition. Thus an electroscope is mentioned on p. 6, but is not described until p. 28; the terms "electrode," "anode," "cathode," are not defined; but these are slight blots on a book for which no praise can be excessive.

Elements of the Mathematical Theory of Electricity and Magnetism. By J. J. Thomson. (Cambridge, University Press.)—We are sure that the third edition of Prof. Thomson's well-known text-book will meet with as warm a welcome as was accorded to its predecessors. The only change of importance that has been introduced is the inclusion of a chapter on the properties of moving electrified bodies. In view of the prominence which has been attained by this branch of electrical theory, owing to its intimate connexion with the phenomena of conduction in gases and radio-activity, no treatise, even if intended for elementary students, would be complete without some reference to it. In the same chapter the author expounds the notions of electrical mass and momentum in the ether. We will merely add that the treatment of the new matter is as lucid and suggestive as that of the old; no higher praise could be awarded.

SOCIETIES.

INSTITUTION OF CIVIL ENGINEERS.—Jan. 10.—Sir Guilford L. Molesworth, President, in the chair.—It was announced that 49 Associate Members had been transferred to the class of Members, and that 33 candidates had been admitted as Students. The ballot resulted in the election of Baron Strathcona and Mount Royal as an Honorary Member, of 7 Members, 37 Associate Members, and 3 Associates.

SOCIETY OF BIBLICAL ARCHEOLOGY.—Jan. 11.—Dr. Pinches read a paper on 'Nina and Nineveh.' After a short description of the contents of the early inscriptions bearing the names of Lugal-anda and Uru-ka-gina, with their predecessors (between 3500 and 4500 B.C.) and the interest attaching to some of the names of deities found therein, the author spoke of a small section of them referring to fish, seemingly offered to the goddesses Nina, Istar, and Bau, and probably likewise to the god Nin-Girsu. Nina has long been recognized by Assyriologists as the patron goddess of the city of Nina, in Babylonia, the group expressing which (a fish within the character for a receptacle or habitation, followed by the character for "place") is the same as that most frequently used for the Assyrian city of Nineveh; and the ideograph here described likewise expresses, with the prefix of divinity, the name of the goddess herself. The opinion of Prof. Jastrow (who has made a speciality of the religion of the Babylonians) that Nina and Istar, the goddess of the Assyrian Nineveh, were identical with each other, was quoted, and it was pointed out that his contention was greatly strengthened by a tablet in the possession of Mr. Harding Smith, in which offerings of fish were made to Istar (placing her as it were on a level with Nina) as well as by the fact that one of the non-Semitic names of Istar was Nin or Nina. Objections on the score of difference of parentage could be made, but these facts, added to the probability that the goddesses of Babylonia, like the gods, could all be identified with each other, might be held to override them. This portion of Babylonian mythology therefore suggests that the Assyrian Nineveh was a Babylonian foundation, originated probably by a colony from Nina, in South Babylonia. The early tablets recording gifts of fish to the fish-goddess Nina probably illustrate the reference in Herodotus to the Babylonian fish-eaters.

MEETINGS NEXT WEEK

- MON. Royal Academy, 4.—'Invention and Imagination,' Mr. G. Clausen.
— Bibliographical, 5.—'The English Book-trade before the Incorporation of the Stationers' Company,' Mr. E. Gordon Duff.
— London Institution, 5.—'History of International Arbitration,' Dr. W. Evans Darby.
— Surveyors' Institution, 8.—Papers by Mr. W. Menzies and Mr. A. K. Stenning on 'Urban and Rural District By-laws.'
- TUES. Royal Institution, 5.—'The Structure and Life of Animals,' Lecture 1., Prof. L. C. Miall.
— Colonial Institute, 8.—'Imperialism from an Australian Standpoint,' Mr. E. A. S. Harney.
— Institution of Civil Engineers, 8.—'The River Hooghly,' Mr. L. F. Vernon-Harcourt.
— Zoological, 8½.—'A Collection of Sipunculids made at Singapore and Malacca,' 'A Collection of Gephyrea from Zanzibar,' and 'The Sipunculids and Echinurids collected during the "Keat" Expedition to the Malay Peninsula,' Mr. W. F. Lankester; 'The Oral and Pharyngeal Denticles of Elasmobranchs,' Mr. A. D. Imms; 'A Contribution to the Anatomy of Chlamydosaurus and some other Agamidae,' and 'A Note on the Brain of Cynophthecus niger,' Mr. F. E. Beddard.
- WED. Chemical, 5½.—'Nitrogen Halogen Derivatives of the Spheronamides,' Parts I. and II., Mr. F. D. Chattaway; 'Electrolytic Oxidation of Aliphatic Aldehydes,' Mr. H. D. Law; and five other papers.
— Meteorological, 7½.—Annual Meeting; President's Address, 'The Connexion of Meteorology with other Sciences.'
— British Archaeological Association, 8.—'Norman Art and Architecture in Sicily,' Rev. H. A. C. Art.
— British Numismatic, 8.—'The Carolan Siege Pieces, 1642-9,' Dr. P. Neilson.
— Entomological, 8.—Annual Meeting; President's Address.
— Folk-lore, 8.—Annual Meeting; President's Address.
— Geological, 8.—'The Geology of Arenig Fawr and Moel Llyf-nant,' Mr. W. G. Fearnside.
— Microscopical, 8.—President's Address, 'What were the Carboniferous Ferns?'
— Society of Arts, 8.—'Wireless Telegraphy and War Correspondence,' Capt. Lionel James.
- THURS. Royal Academy, 4.—'Taste,' Mr. G. Clausen.
— Royal, 4½.
— Society of Arts, 4½.—'The Gates of Tibet,' Mr. D. W. Freshfield.
— Historical, 5.—'The Development of the Inclosure Movement in England,' Miss E. M. Leonard.
— Royal Institution, 5.—'The Religion of Shakespeare,' Mr. Churton Collins.
— London Institution, 6.—'Dyork,' Dr. E. Markham Lee.
— Linnean, 8.—Botanical Collecting,' Dr. A. Henry; 'The Cranial Osteology of the Families Osteoglossidae, Pseudotodus, and Phacelodidae,' Dr. W. G. Ridewood.
— Society of Antiquaries, 8½.—'The Tombs of Minos and Cnossus,' Mr. A. J. Evans.
- FRI. Institution of Mechanical Engineers, 8.—'Some Impressions of American Workshops,' Mr. A. J. Gimson; 'Waterworks Pumping Engines in the United States and Canada,' Mr. J. Barr; 'Some Features in the Design and Construction of American Planing Machines,' Mr. A. Kendrick, jun.; 'Engines at the Power Stations, and at the St. Louis Exhibition,' Mr. A. Saxon.

FRI. Royal Institution, 9.—'New Low-Temperature Phenomena,' Prof. Sir J. Dewar.
SAT. Royal Institution, 3.—'Wat Tyler in London,' Lecture I., Prof. C. Oman.

Science Gossip.

THE Council of the Geological Society of London will this year award its medals and funds as follows: The Wollaston Medal to Dr. J. J. H. Teall; the Murchison Medal to Mr. Edward John Dunn, of Melbourne; the Lyell Medal to Dr. Hans Reusch, Director of the Geological Survey of Norway; and the Bigsby Medal to Prof. J. W. Gregory. The Wollaston Fund is awarded to Mr. H. H. Arnold-Bemrose, the Murchison Fund to Mr. H. L. Bowman, and the Lyell Fund is divided between Mr. E. A. N. Arber and Mr. Walcot Gibson.

DR. GUSTAVE LE BON has put his well-known theories on the evolution of matter into the shape of a book, which will shortly be published in Paris. It is believed that an English translation has been arranged for.

THE safe arrival of the mission at Simla on the 9th inst. disposes of all previous rumours as to the progress of Capt. Rawling's expedition to Gartok, and no doubt an official report will be shortly issued. But it may be mentioned that the latest news to reach India of the progress of the mission had been consistently favourable for the prospects of the expedition. Several caravans returning to Lhasa passed it en route, and gave the party a very friendly greeting as well as some useful information. Winter had set in early in Western Tibet, but no doubt was felt as to the mission reaching Gartok. On the other hand, the Tibetan traders did not think that Capt. Rawling could attempt the passage of the Himalaya, whether he selected the route to Simla or that to Almora, before the spring. The result has shown the contrary.

THE Congress for Innere Medizin will be held at Wiesbaden, April 12th to 15th, under the presidency of Geheimrat E. b.

MR. LYNN has in the press (Sampson Low, Marston & Co.) new editions of his handy little books 'Remarkable Comets' and 'Remarkable Eclipses.' They will appear about the end of the present month and the latter will be of especial interest in view of the coming eclipse of the sun next August.

THE German Astronomical Society offers a prize of 50l for the most exact calculation of the next appearance of Halley's comet, based on the time of its appearance in 1885. The essays may be written in German, English, French, or Italian, and must be sent to the Astronomische Gesellschaft, Sternwarte, Leipsic, by December 31st, 1908.

A SIXTH satellite of Jupiter (stated to be not brighter than a star of the fourteenth magnitude) was discovered by Prof. Perrine at the Lick Observatory on the 5th inst. Like the ninth satellite of Saturn, it is at a much greater distance from its primary than the other satellites.

GIACOBINI's new comet (d, 1904) was observed at the Lick Observatory on the morning of the 20th ult., at Vienna on the 21st, and at Königsberg on the 22nd and 27th. Its orbit has been calculated by Herr Ebell, from which it appears that the perihelion passage took place on November 4th, at the distance from the sun of 1.89 in terms of the earth's mean distance. The comet will continue to approach the earth until about the 19th inst., when its distance from us will be about 2.21 on the same scale. Its apparent place is in the north-eastern part of the constellation Hercules, and it is moving towards the boundary between Lyra and Draco.

BORRELLY's new comet (e, 1904) was observed at Bamberg on the evening of the 1st inst., and at Vienna on that of the 2nd. It is described as round, with diameter of about 2', and nucleus not quite centrally situated. Several determinations of the elements of its orbit have been published; that of Dr. Strömgen gives the perihelion passage on the 1st inst., at the distance from the sun of 1.56 in terms of the earth's mean distance. That from the earth is now 1.24 on the same scale and increasing, so that the comet is becoming fainter.

THREE new small planets are announced as photographically discovered by Prof. Max Wolf at the Königstuhl Observatory, Heidelberg: two of these were detected on the 14th ult., and the third on the 27th. One which was discovered at the same place by Herr Dugan on September 20th, 1903, and numbered 516, has been named Amherstia; and another, detected by Prof. Wolf on April 20th, 1904, has received the designation Herculina.

Two new variable stars are also announced: var. 188, 1904, Draconis (probably of the Algol type), which was detected by Madame Ceraski whilst examining photographic plates taken by M. Blajko at the Moscow Observatory; and var. 189, 1904, Andromedæ, which was noted by Mr. Stanley Williams, of Hove, Brighton, and is, he remarks, evidently of long period.

THE 'Annuaire du Bureau des Longitudes' for 1905 has appeared. The astronomical section contains, besides other information, tables of the elements of variable stars, of stellar parallaxes, of double stars and proper motions, and an article by M. Gramont on stellar spectroscopy.

FINE ARTS

Porcelain. By Edward Dillon. "The Connoisseur's Library." (Methuen & Co.)

ONE of the most untimely and unfortunate interruptions recorded in literature was that when Bridget, instead of, as usual, acquiescing in the incidental remarks of her cousin, began the long, rambling reminiscence of their early life recorded in the essay on 'Old China.' It gives us, it is true, some slight glimpses of that devoted couple in their days of poverty, touching from the narration of their innocent shifts and schemes, as in the way the folio Beaumont and Fletcher was at last secured, and interesting from their shadowy pictures of old London playhouses and of suburban lanes which once were green. Yet, with all respect to the memory of the amiable and venerable interlocutrice, these personal recollections scarcely compensate us for what we have lost.

Elia was evidently in the vein, and at his best. The light, airy trifling with the "little, lawless, agate-tinctured grotesques" ornamenting the recent purchase—the set of "extraordinary old blue" cups and saucers—was, doubtless, the prelude to a dissertation on the bowls and beakers, or other more sumptuous pieces, which stood on the mantelshelf and sideboard of the cosy interior. He would probably also have illustrated his arguments by reference to choice specimens belonging to his friends, or which had caught his attention in the old country houses he tells us he sometimes visited. All this is lost. Lost also are the traditions, current in the days of his youth, and held by him as cherished memories, of the eighteenth-century appreciation and criticism of Chinese porcelain. For it was then that all the subtle qualities of the crowning artistic achievement of a super-subtle race were most keenly felt. Porcelain, it will be remembered, in its inception and throughout its long career, was made for the Chinese Court, than which, at least in old days, the world has, perhaps, seen none more refined and cultured. It was, therefore, only natural that the art lavished on these slender vases or storied bowls should receive its fullest recognition from the cultured class in the century when taste—only attained after the nurture of successive generations—was in the highest degree sensitive and acute, and when it had not suffered the inevitable degradation following its so-called diffusion.

Moreover, at the time referred to, although the Chinese had already begun to manufacture for the European market, their wares were not so garish in colour and design as those sent West during the last century, still less did they resemble the hard, cold, lifeless imitations of well-known types now being exported in shiploads. Hence, when Elia began his projected essay, he was in a far more favourable position to do justice to the theme than has fallen to the luck of succeeding writers. He had no misgivings as to the authenticity of the wares, and, consequently, no need to use the ever-recurring qualifying phrases of the modern historian. And even in the matter of the ancient history of the art, although the translations of Stanislas Julien, of Dr. Bushell, and Dr. Hirth had not then appeared, yet it is possible that at the old East India House, Elia may have met Orientals or servants of the Company who had made researches in the history of porcelain at the land of its invention. Altogether, he took pen in hand at the precise moment when the stars were most propitious. And then, what a pen served his bidding! Surely there was never another more germane to the matter, one that could have interpreted all these twists and twirls of ornamentation—painted quips and cranks—or could have revealed the secrets of the delicate tints and mysterious glazes of the famous porcelain of the great epochs. Who now, outside the Great Wall, can unravel for us the plots of the dramas being enacted by the "men with women's faces, and the women with still more womanish expression"? Who will tell us the old-world love tales, or translate for us those dainty pastorals "seen through the lucid atmosphere of fine Cathay"? It is only when we come to consider the matter from all sides that we are conscious of our immeasurable loss. Of a truth, dear Miss Bridget, silence is golden.

But if the world has missed a literary masterpiece, a succession of able writers have benevolently exerted their best efforts to supply our loss. The subject has been treated by them from many points of view and on various lines, usually with the result that some fresh light is thrown on its multi-form phases. The story has been told with concision by the late Sir Wollaston Franks, and all students of the art have admired his marvellous faculty of condensation. It has been discussed in many folio volumes by Dr. Bushell, and his readers have hesitated which to applaud the more, his learning or the splendid illustrations which almost place before our eyes the actual objects. The majority of the writers have, naturally, chosen a middle course, narrating the history with more or less fulness, and illustrating the examples of the different wares with such copiousness as they could command. But nearly all works on Chinese porcelain have this in common, that the historical notices appear to be copied the one from the other. It is so, not because the stage of finality has been reached, but because the writers are rarely acquainted with the Chinese language. Hence documentary research is not within their reach, their texts being limited to a few well-known translations, of which Stanislas Julien's 'King-te-chen Tao Lu' is the most important.

The special feature of the latest contribution to the literature of porcelain—that at the head of this notice—consists in the attention devoted to the scientific side of the subject. Mr. Edward Dillon's starting-point is the conviction of the need of "a thorough comprehension not only of the technical processes that are involved in the manufacture of porcelain, but of the physical and chemical nature of the substance itself."

He therefore devotes the first few chapters of his work to the description of the composition of the pastes, glazes, &c., together with an explanation of the technical procedure in use at the porcelain potteries; but in doing so he keeps well in view the class for whom he is writing. The connoisseur does not desire to study tables of analyses, nor does he care to be initiated into the secrets of the potter. Sufficient for him to know how his cherished vases were wrought and fashioned, and of what their substance is composed. All this he will find set forth in the volume before us with a clearness and precision to be acquired only after years of practical work in the laboratory. Knowledge of this kind need not detract from the artistic interest of the most refined examples of the art—it may even lead to the perception of hitherto unrecognized sources of delight. Respecting the historical notice of porcelain in China and the adjacent countries of Japan and Korea, we have not observed that any new facts have been added to what was known previously. So much of the story as has yet come to light is here carefully arranged, and if we cannot accept all the conclusions of the author, we fully recognize the difficulties attendant on the attempted solution of problems whereof the premises are as yet so uncertain. It should be stated that Mr. Dillon does not confine his work to an account of the porcelain of the Far East; he includes in it brief notices of the porcelain manufactories of Europe, both English and continental. It might, perhaps, have been more convenient if he had treated the Eastern and Western wares separately, or at least in two volumes.

Looking alone to China, we may ask whether the time has not come when, the compilation of these comprehensive treatises being for a while abandoned, the study of this branch of ceramic art might not be more surely advanced if the writers confined their publication to separate portions of its long history, seeking to make their illustration as complete as possible. In the present stage of the inquiry it is the illustration of the various wares which is especially needed. The reissue of the Franks Catalogue, with illustrations of all the examples described, would perhaps be too large an undertaking for a single volume; but if the Keeper of the Department at the British Museum where the collection is preserved could issue it in sections, he would render students of ceramic art for ever his debtors.

ART AND ARTISTS.

Francesco Guardi. By George A. Simonson. (Methuen & Co.)—Very little is known of Guardi. There is no reason to suppose that he had a commanding or vivid personality, and during his lifetime, indeed until recent years, his fame was so entirely overshadowed by that of his great master Canaletto, that hardly any contemporary notices of him are to be found. Casanova mentions him, it is true, but in such a way as to show that he was by no means famous. With such a dearth of material, we must be grateful for the additional details, few and uninteresting as they are, which Mr. Simonson has had the good fortune to discover. They amount, in the main, to a genealogical tree of the Guardi family, who were natives of the Val di Sole, in Tyrol; the baptismal certificates of Francesco Guardi and his sons, and an extract from the diary of Senator Gradenigo mentioning the exhibition by Guardi of two large views of Venice, which he had painted, by the aid of the camera lucida, to the order of an English patron; he calls Guardi a pupil of Canaletto.

Francesco Guardi, or Dei Guardi, as he sometimes called himself, for one of his ancestors had been ennobled, was of Austrian parentage, though the name suggests that the family was originally Italian; but, so far as we know, he spent nearly his whole life in Venice. He was born in 1712, and as early as 1719 his sister Cecilia was married to Tiepolo. Between 1750 and 1760 he married; between 1761 and 1763 he became a member of the Scuola dei Pittori; in 1782 he was painting for Pietro Edwards, and in 1793 he died. Such are virtually all the facts that can be gathered about the artist, and, well though it was to have them definitively recorded once for all, we scarcely think they justified expansion into so large a volume as Mr. Simonson's. It is, of course, filled out with a good deal of vague enthusiasm for the artist, and is accompanied by an attempted list of his works which does not in any way pretend to completeness.

The author advocates Guardi's claims in comparison with Canaletto's, with more warmth than knowledge, and his ideas of artistic methods do not give one much confidence in his judgment. The following passage will illustrate this. The author finds a striking similarity of composition between an etching of S. Giorgio by Canaletto and a picture at Treviso by Guardi. He says of the etching:—

"It is a curious instance of Canale's arbitrary way of transposing edifices. In the etching Canale has entirely reversed the actual positions of the buildings on the island, consisting of the campanile, dome, and façade of the church and houses beyond..... This etching by Canale, which partakes more of the character of an original composition than of a direct study from nature, Guardi must have seen somewhere, as the reproduction of his picture at the museum at Treviso, p. 26, proves..... One is driven to the conclusion that Guardi in this instance used the camera, which, as is well known, reverses the images of objects seen through it."

The only conclusion to be drawn from this passage is that Mr. Simonson has not yet realized that an etching does exactly what he here puts down to Canaletto's caprice. The etching in question is probably a straightforward rendering from nature, which, of course, becomes reversed in the printing. Guardi, if he made use of Canaletto's etching, which is likely enough, reversed it to the actual arrangement of the scene; but in doing this the camera lucida, which is the instrument we know him to have used, would have been of no use whatever, since it does not reverse the thing seen.

The book is written in a stilted and stiff style, with elaborate circumlocutions which suggest that the author was anxious to fill the requisite number of pages. It is illustrated with a number of reproductions from Guardi's works, some of which are good, while many are rather weak and vague in tone.

John N. Rhodes. By William Thorp. (Leeds, Jackson.)—The career of Rhodes, the Yorkshire painter, is associated with the history of one of those provincial schools of art which became common with the general diffusion of culture in England. That of Leeds, to which Rhodes belonged, and to which he gave a certain celebrity, had as its starting-point the tradition of skilled craftsmanship to which the potteries and the japanning trade had given rise. Joseph Rhodes, the father of John, and known as the "father of Yorkshire painting," was himself one of the skilled craftsmen employed in the imitation of Oriental lacquer. The end of the eighteenth century witnessed a great change in the general attitude of the provinces towards art. The foundation of the Royal Academy, and the diffusion by means of prints of a knowledge of the masterpieces of later Italian painting, induced a disproportioned ambition for the more conscious and elaborate expressions of the artistic sense. The minor crafts, which were at last beginning to flourish in England as they had long flourished on the Continent, were despised, and that fatal pre-eminence of picture-making which we now deplore was established. Men, fitted admirably by quickness of perception and skill of hand to succeed in the finer crafts, learnt laboriously to display their poverty of imagination and trivial interests in oil painting. Leeds might well give up its annual exhibitions for the encouragement of modern art, and return to the manufacture of its inimitable ware, or produce once more those fanciful imitations of Oriental lacquer which still delight us.

The history of John Rhodes illustrates the change of his time. The older generation of painters, rooted in the same traditions of good craftsmanship, maintained some standard of excellence; but the "Northern Society for the Encouragement of the Fine Arts," founded in 1809, with pompous letters of advice from Benjamin West, P.R.A., soon showed the way to the formation of the drawing - master style of the early Victorian epoch. All this may be gathered by one who reads between the lines of Mr. Thorp's little monograph, though he himself sets it out with becoming pride. The reproductions will, however, convince the reader of the sad results of this encouragement of the fine arts, and diffusion of useful knowledge. Rhodes was evidently excellently trained by his father, and had a strong specific talent for design; but he was in no sense a great artist, nor was he proof, as the older craftsmen would have been, against the growing vulgarity of taste. Landseer and the sentimental dog picture had already made their mark; and even from Etty, genuine artist though he was, Rhodes seems to have gathered what was least admirable. We find here the beginnings of that muddle-headed mixture of technical methods from which we still suffer, in a pen-drawing done to look like an etching, "a dainty bit of delicate drawing finely executed," no doubt with that abominable instrument, dear to the fancy stationer, known as an etching pen, but, we need scarcely add, absolutely worthless, as all such imitations of one process by another are bound to be. The pity of it is that Rhodes clearly had real talent, as one can see from a sepia sketch, plate viii., and a rather well-composed landscape, plate x. How long, one wonders, will it take England to realize that the movement of the early nineteenth century has landed us in a cul de sac, and that in proportion as art gets further from the roots of craftsmanship it is bound to wither? Such a book as this may unconsciously help to enlighten the public.

The Wallace Collection at Hertford House. By A. L. Baldry. (Goupil & Co.)—Yet another popular handbook on the Wallace Collection. It may be welcomed, however, for the number, though scarcely for the excellence, of its reproductions. Mr. Baldry has been able to dilute the catalogue into a sufficient accompaniment of text, and his power of echoing all, even the most contradictory, popular enthusiasms, fits him for the task. It seems to be a matter of indifference to him whether he writes of Meissonier or Rubens, Descamps or Rembrandt; for each he finds once more the familiar eulogistic phrase. It is fortunate, indeed, for such compilations that the catalogue under Mr. Claude Phillips's care corresponds so much more nearly than that of any other public collection with the results of recent research. We note that Mr. Baldry has not included in his book Mr. Claude Phillips's recent discovery of a genuine François Clouet in the collection. The mention of twenty Canalettos in the Wallace Collection will surprise those who know the difference between originals and school pieces.

THE WORK OF WATTS AT BURLINGTON HOUSE.

(First Notice.)

THERE is something pathetic in the inadequacy of words to do justice to certain great occasions. The exhibition of the work of Watts at Burlington House is one of them. In after years we may, perhaps, be able to define the achievement of Watts rather more clearly than we can do just now, when the memory of his living presence is still with us. But it is doubtful whether we shall ever again have a similar opportunity of examining and comparing so many of his pictures. Even if we do not give Watts a place in the British School by the side of Reynolds, his place is at least so high that an exhibition like this may rightly be termed historic.

Nothing, in our opinion, proves the loftiness of Watts's achievement more completely than the impossibility of comprehending this exhibition in one or two visits. In the case of a second-rate artist, half-an-hour is enough for separating the pictures (perhaps some ten or twelve) in which his talent has crystallized most perfectly from a general average of respectable mediocrity. A strong painter like Millais needs a little more time. But a single visit would still be enough to enable the eye to select the pictures which contained more than could be understood from a brief glance. When a really great master's work is exhibited, the proportion of pictures which must be seen again and again becomes so large that visit after visit is needed for the formation of any clear idea of the different phases of the painter's genius.

The collection now on view at Burlington House undoubtedly belongs to the last class. Even for those who have some acquaintance with the master's work the first impression of the exhibition will be one of sheer bewilderment. The mere variety of the subject-matter upon which Watts exercised his genius is in itself so great as to perplex the intelligence, which as the visitor moves round the galleries, has continually to turn from some impressive portrait to a remarkable landscape, and from the landscape to an elaborate allegory.

To the painter the exhibition is even more complex, because Watts, although his life was passed apart from the stir and stress of his time, as an artist was working continuously for seventy years during which the craft of painting in Europe was absolutely revolutionized. The unfinished portrait of himself on the screen in Gallery III. (No. 192) was painted only last year.

The earliest portrait of himself, at the age of seventeen (1), was painted in 1834, when Turner was in mid-career, and Watts's first picture at the Royal Academy, The Wounded Heron (38), appeared in the exhibition which contained Constable's 'Arundel Mill.'

It is only natural, during a period so long and so pregnant with change as that which elapsed between 1834 and 1904, that the artist's manner should have undergone considerable alteration, even if his ideals also did not suffer from the loss of artistic conscience which brings the work of Millais to a deplorable close. Watts was self-taught, and thus we find that during the first thirty years of his artistic career he followed a number of masters, learning something from each of them. After the year 1864 he seems to have finally settled upon the manner which suited his temper, his hand, and his ideals, and for the remaining forty years of his life he confined himself to the method which makes a work of his at once recognizable in any collection of modern pictures.

The present exhibition contains a long series of portraits which gives the student of Watts a unique opportunity of tracing in detail the various influences under which he fell during the years in which he was training himself for the great work of his life. We therefore take the opportunity of following briefly the course of this development before dealing with the pictures which belong to his full maturity.

In comparing Watts's early pictures with the contemporary drawings, a remarkable thing is evident. The pictures vary considerably in composition, colour, and treatment; the drawings never vary at all from youth to old age. All are conceived in the same spirit, almost all are carried out on the same method, and that method, curiously enough, though in its way careful, accurate, and fairly competent, has not a trace of the spirit, the invention, and the taste which make almost every one of the paintings the work of a great and original artist. The critics who have a poor opinion of Watts's technical merits might make out a very fair case for themselves on the evidence of the drawings. It seems to us more reasonable to think that Watts followed the advice of Reynolds, and drew habitually with the brush and not with the crayon. His drawings, considering the vast mass of his work, are singularly few, and in most cases would seem to be things done to please friends, without the serious purpose which he put into every piece of painting which came from his hands.

In the exhibition Watts's earliest efforts at portrait painting can fortunately be viewed together. Much of the breadth and simplicity of his later work appears in the very first of them—his own portrait at the age of seventeen (1), painted in 1834. The next four pictures (2-5), all painted in the thirties, show the predominating influence of the English school of portraiture. The two latest, Mrs. Charles Hamilton (2) and Richard Jarvis (5), both painted in 1839, differ curiously—the former catching not a little of the grace and refinement of Gainsborough, while the latter is tainted with the rather petty accomplishment of the followers of Lawrence. It proves at any rate that Watts at the age of twenty-two was a thoroughly equipped professional artist, and that the peculiarities of his later handling cannot be attributed to want of technical ability. The Children of General Charles Hamilton (7), painted some four years later, in 1843, shows the same thorough knowledge of the technical practices of the eighteenth century, blended with greatly increased breadth and refinement.

Then comes a great break. With the 300l. gained as a prize for his cartoon of 'Caracacus' Watts went abroad, first to Paris and then to Florence. The effect upon his art was immediate, as the portrait of Lady Dorothy Nevill (6), painted in 1844, indicates. The glowing contrasts of red and blue and the strongly defined forms show the impression made upon Watts by the art of Italy, though to us he may appear to have seen it through the spectacles of Eastlake. The curious Miss Marie Cassavetti in Turkish Dress (48), which might almost be mistaken for a Hoppner, apparently shows that Watts's colour-sense was developing before he left England, but it was not till he studied the Italian masters that he came to his full stature as a colourist.

By the year 1850, Watts had won a second Government prize, and was painting a fresco in the House of Lords. Dates seem to render it unlikely that he was able to see much of Alfred Stevens, who left London in 1847, the year in which Watts returned to it; but the masterly portrait of Demetrius Cassavetti (44), painted in 1849, resembles Stevens so closely that the likeness can hardly be a mere coincidence. In the Portrait of E. C. Ionides (45), painted about the same time, the similarity is almost equally striking. The large picture of The Sisters (43), dating from 1850, shows that he was also influenced by the earnest art of William Dyce, one of his companions in the fresco painting at the House of Lords. Three years later the fresco was finished, and Watts painted himself (9), with the red robes and cool coppery flesh-tints of Bronzino. The portraits of Miss Mary Fox, Countess of Ilchester (42), and Mary and Constantine Ionides (33), painted in or about 1857, show him still struggling towards nature and colour by means of Italian formulae, used, perhaps, with more daring than felicity.

It is evident that he found himself by returning during the next two years to the example of the great English painters of the eighteenth century. In the Miss Nassau Senior (32) and the Lady Margaret Beaumont (176) the influence of Reynolds and Gainsborough is incontestable. Gainsborough himself, indeed, could hardly have painted the lavender silk dress in the latter picture with more delightful science. The early portrait of Tennyson (189), also dated 1859, goes back still further to the example of Rembrandt.

In the noble portrait of Lady Lilford (15), dated 1860, the influence of England and Italy appears at last perfectly blended, and from that time forward Watts's progress is steady and sure. Perhaps some hint from a Rossetti water-colour may have inspired the Miss Prinsep (175), painted in the same year; the Choosing (74), dated 1864, a portrait, by the way, of Miss Ellen Terry, was certainly done under Pre-Raphaelite influence; while there remains a certain suggestion of Rossetti in the handling of the Countess Spencer (72), and in the glowing colour of the Countess Somers (183). Again, the pattern of the curtain in the exquisite Miss Edith Villiers, Countess of Lytton (19), recalls Bellini's 'St. Dominic,' which hung for years at South Kensington before being one of the glories of the Venetian Room at Trafalgar Square, and even Leighton is suggested more than once by the later portraits; but as a rule, after the year 1860, Watts's work is absolutely personal, and shows few and slight traces of external influences.

The date 1861 seems too early for the portrait of Motley (39), and more characteristic specimens of the painter's progress are afforded by the highly finished Sir William Bowman (58), and the striking, but not quite fortunate H. W. Phillips (163), belonging to the year 1865—pictures which prove that Watts's style was finally settled.

Next, in 1866, comes the masterly portrait of Joachim (27), the first of that long series of famous portraits which has made Watts a familiar name to thousands to whom his art could never appeal directly. The portraits of the years 1870 to 1875 are among the finest Watts ever produced. The John Stuart Mill (34), in the present exhibition, is not, however, the original picture, but a replica—a fact which perhaps accounts for a certain looseness in the handling. Mill consented to sit by the urgent wish of a friend, whose commission Watts accepted. Mill died on the day the portrait was sent home. Watts afterwards painted a replica, which he submitted to the owner of the original picture, in case he should prefer it to the version done from life. He, however, decided on keeping the first portrait, a decision with which the painter himself concurred. The wonderful visionary Burne-Jones (63), the handsome business like Millais (65), the romantic-looking Calderon (69), and the charming Lady Garragh (59) are all so well known and so justly famous as to need no detailed comment. The powerful portrait of Dean Liddell (168) is only one more proof of the complete grasp of his business which Watts possessed—a grasp so firm, and, on the whole, so consistent that it is unnecessary to add to the mass of existing criticism which deals with the portraiture of Watts's maturity, even if space permitted it.

Looking back over the whole series, we are amazed at the variety of design, feeling, and colour with which he treated generation after generation of his contemporaries, making out of each an independent original and beautiful work of art. What that variety means will be best understood by those who themselves have tried the difficult art of portrait painting. In the case of portraiture it is evident that Watts possessed a fertility of artistic resource unmatched in the whole English School except by Sir Joshua Reynolds; but portraiture was only a part, and not the largest part, of his life's work. His achievements in the painting of landscape and of allegorical subjects must be reserved for a future article.

Finz-Art Gossip.

WE are glad to notice that a new lectureship in the history of art has recently been instituted at University College, London, the lecturer being Mr. D. S. MacColl. During the past term Mr. MacColl delivered lectures on 'The History of Art from Hogarth to Constable.' He will continue his course in the present term on alternate Friday afternoons, beginning on January 13th, the subject of this course being 'English Art from Constable to the Present Time.'

THE Whistler Memorial Exhibition will open in the New Gallery on February 22nd, and continue till the end of March. A representative collection is expected. The French Government is lending 'The Mother' from the Luxembourg Gallery, and his Majesty the King has graciously contributed the Windsor collection of Whistler's etchings. The secretary of the exhibition asks for contributions from any owners of pictures, drawings, etchings, or lithographs by Whistler which have not been traced, and which may be lent for the occasion. He should be addressed at the New Gallery, Regent Street.

THE death is announced of Mr. George Aikman, who was born in Edinburgh in 1830, was trained to engraving and lithography, and since 1872 has been a painter of landscape. He was a contributor to The Art Journal and other periodicals, and made sketches of many old Edinburgh houses which have now disappeared. His father was an engraver and lithographer, and the son had an exceptional knowledge of engravers and engravings.

MESSRS. NEWNES will shortly publish a work by a Danish art critic, Dr. Th. Bierfreund, on 'Raphael's Years of Study.'

M. HENRI LÉOPOLD LÉVY, who died at his residence, 12, Boulevard de Clichy, Paris, on January 1st, was born at Clichy on September 23rd, 1840, and studied art under Cabanel, Picot, and Fromentin. He entered the École des Beaux-Arts on April 3rd, 1856, but did not exhibit at the Salon until 1865, when his 'Hécube retrouvant au bord de la Mer le Corps de son Fils Polydore' won him a medal. This picture is now in the museum at Roubaix. In 1867 his picture of 'Joas sauvé du Massacre des Petits-Fils d'Athalie' was purchased by the State, and two years afterwards he won a second medal with 'Roger enlevant Angélique.' He continued to exhibit big pictures of scenes from classical history up to the Salon of last year. His more ambitious works include 'Le Couronnement de Charlemagne,' which is at the Panthéon; 'Les Grands Hommes de la Bourgogne,' which is at Dijon; and 'Sarpédon,' which is with the much smaller work, 'Christ mort,' at the Luxembourg. He also painted many portraits, some of which were exhibited at the Salon.

M. RAYMOND GUIMBERTEAU, a native of Angoulême, where he died on January 2nd, was a well-known French sculptor. He studied under Cavelier and Barrias, and exhibited during several years a number of busts of distinguished persons; but his most remarkable work is his statue of Carnot at Chambéry.

ONE of Belgium's greatest sculptors has passed away in Juliaan Dillens, whose death is announced from Brussels at the early age of fifty-four. Some of the most important statues which ornament the public buildings of Brussels were due to him. The beautiful group representing Justice, in front of the Palais de Justice, and several of the statues on the façade of the Brussels Art Gallery, are among his most important works.

IN an account in The Times of January 2nd of the unveiling of a war memorial window in the south transept of Lichfield Cathedral on New Year's Eve is the significant statement that "the insertion of the window involved an alteration of the architectural style previously existing at the site chosen, a debased Perpendicular window being replaced by an Early English one," the work of Mr. John O. Scott, the cathedral architect. It is evident that the Dean and Chapter of Lichfield are still intent upon wiping out the architectural history of their church, and in particular that part of it which tells of the munificence and care of good Bishop Hacket.

THE International Archæological Congress will open on April 7th at Athens, under the presidency of the Crown Prince Constantine. Among the subjects for discussion is the pronunciation of Greek. Among the excursions, which are to begin on April 14th, are the following:—Delphi, Olympia, Mycenæ, Delos, Cnossus in Crete, and Rhodes.

MUSIC

BRITISH MUSIC.

CHORAL.

The Love that casteth out Fear. Sinfonia sacra, by C. H. H. Parry. Vocal Score. (Novello.)—This work, produced at the Gloucester Festival last year, seems almost like a protest against the elaborate scores and huge orchestras of modern composers. It may not be so intended; anyhow, it comes from the pen of one who has shown that he is master of polyphony. Music is not to be condemned because it is intricate, otherwise we should have to condemn Bach and Wagner; but simplicity, when the commonplace, as in the work under notice, is avoided, is by no means to be despised.—Ulysses, dramatic oratorio, words by the late Samuel Butler, music by Henry Festing Jones, Vocal Score (Weekes & Co.), is cleverly written in a style which recalls the past, but in a work which professes to be dramatic, music of this kind fails to make a very strong appeal. There are, however, some excellent numbers, such as the choruses "Great Circe" and "The charmed bowl," also the music of "The Sirens" in Part 3.—In Mucius Scevola (Mucius the Left-handed), dramatic cantata, the libretto is by F. G. Attenborough (Chrysabel), and the music by H. A. Harding (same publishers). The story of the brave Roman formed the subject of the libretto of a noted opera of which each of the acts was set by a different composer, the third and last by Handel. The subject is stirring, and the words of the work under notice are dignified. The music shows skill and dramatic instinct; like the 'Ulysses' mentioned above, it points to the past, but, even with old phraseology, the influence of modern music makes itself felt.—Queen Mab, by Josef Holbrooke, Op. 45 (Breitkopf & Härtel), is the vocal score of the work produced at the last Leeds Festival. The cleverness of the music can be seen, also the breadth of the concluding chorus, but without orchestral colouring much of the effect is naturally lost.—The words of The Song of the Amal, choral ballad (Novello), from Kingsley's 'Hypatia,' are set to grateful and picturesque strains by Mr. Percy Godfrey. This work won a prize at the Dover Musical Festival of 1904.

ORGAN MUSIC.

A SERIES of "Old English Organ Music," edited by J. E. West, and published by Novello, deserves the attention of organists. We may not be able to boast of a Buxtehude or a Bach, but the composers hitherto included in the scheme have something of merit to say which justifies a revival of their music. No. 1 has an Overture in C, by Thomas Adams, an organist of considerable note in the early part of last century. We find a directness in the music which gives it national character, also certain boldnesses of modulation which point to German influences, then making themselves felt. No. 2 is an Introduction and Fugue, by Dr. Benjamin Cooke, the pupil of Dr. Pepusch, a sound and effective piece of writing. Nos. 3-7 contain pieces by Dr. Greene, John Stanley, the blind organist, and Samuel Wesley, the Bach enthusiast.—In the series "Original Compositions for the Organ," published by the same firm, we note three numbers (Nos. 305-7) by E. H. Thorne, organist of St. Anne's, Soho: a Prelude and Fugue (double) in F sharp minor, Variations on Jeremiah Clark's tune 'St. Luke,' and a Fantasia in F. The composer's great admiration for Bach is well known, and of this, by his "Bach" organ recitals, and performances of the 'Matthew' and 'John' Passions, he has given signal proof; yet, although the influence of that master shows itself in certain figures and harmonic sequences, Mr. Thorne is no mere imitator. The Variations, though clever, are somewhat formal; the Fugues are skilfully written, and further they are not pedantic. There are traces of modern influence, which show that the composer is not wholly given up to the worship of one master. The following are from the same firm:—A Sonata in D Minor, by Alfred H. Allen, contains something more than sound workmanship, and the light Scherzo offers excellent contrast to the stately opening movement and the elaborate Finale. An attractive Rhapsodie on a Christmas Carol, and a Fantasia, by William Faulkes, deserve note; also a graceful Spring Song by Alfred Hollins, and a pleasing Pastoral Melody by John E. West.—A Prelude and Fugue, in a minor, and a Berceuse, by W. Wolstenholme (Alfred Lengnick), testify, the one to the composer's skill, the other to his power of inventing a melody which does not belie its name, and treating it in a simple, yet refined style.—A Canzonetta and a Moment Musical, by T. Haigh (Weekes), second and third numbers of a series of three pieces, are written in a smooth, pleasant style.

Musical Gossip.

AT the Congress of the Incorporated Society of Musicians held last week at Manchester, Mr. W. A. C. Cruickshank read a paper on 'The Progress of Music during the Nineteenth Century.' Dr. Prout, who opened the discussion, expressed the opinion that the art of melody was in danger of disappearing. Melody, he said, cannot be acquired, it is a gift; and if that gift is not so common as it once was, this is a misfortune which cannot be helped. Dr. Prout, however, added that if young composers did not write naturally, the stuff they produced was enough to make dead masters turn in their graves. He therefore evidently referred to composers who will not accept any natural musical thought, but deliberately seek by various artificial, though often clever devices, to make it appear original, an art which does not mend, but which mars nature.

A CATALOGUE of ancient and modern music, MSS., &c., from "The Henry Watson Music Library," exhibited in the Town Hall, Manchester, on the occasion of the conference mentioned in the preceding paragraph, has been published. Among the MSS. were an Antiphonarium of the fourteenth century, concertos of Mozart, and the organ part to anthems by Purcell and Blow, all in the handwriting of Henry Purcell. Of printed music and musical literature there were fine specimens of the sixteenth, seventeenth, and eighteenth centuries. Then there were complete editions of great composers, ancient and modern, in all 565 volumes; and, finally, various nineteenth-century publications.

IT is with deep regret that we record the death of Mr. Thomas William Taphouse, the Mayor of Oxford, last Sunday. He was born in 1838, and at the age of nineteen entered his father's musical instrument business. After that he practised as a pianoforte tuner. But from early life he was a musical enthusiast, and in the course of years had collected a very fine private musical library. He had also gathered materials for a 'History of Music and Musicians.' While cataloguing the library of Oriel College he came across two unknown compositions by Purcell—Funeral March for Queen Mary, "sounded before her chariot," and the Canzona "sounded in the Abbey after the Anthem." It was only last year that the University of Oxford conferred on Mr. Taphouse the honorary degree of Master of Arts. As a man he was deservedly held in highest esteem. He was kind-hearted, and in matters of research always ready to give friends the benefit of information drawn either from his well-stocked brain or valuable books.

MADAME LA GÉNÉRALE PARMENTIER, née Maria Milanollo, whose death we recently noted, has bequeathed her patrimony to be divided equally between the Conservatoires of Paris and Milan, as a modest income whence purses may be granted to pupils of stringed instruments.

THE Volodkovicz prize of 5,000 roubles, offered at Warsaw for the best opera, has been awarded to 'Maria,' libretto after Malczewski, music by Romain Statkovski.

THE death is announced at Salzburg of Baroness Berchthold zu Sonnenburg, the last surviving relative of Mozart. Maria Anna, the sister of the composer, married Johann Baptist Reichsfreiherrn v. Berchthold zu Sonnenburg, Hofrath of Salzburg, and Warden of St. Gilgen, who died in 1801. The widow lived at Salzburg with her children until her death, October 29th, 1829. She was born in 1751, and as a prodigy she accompanied her brother and father in their great tour, when they visited Paris and London.

'A BOOK OF SHAKESPEARE'S SONGS,' published by G. Schirmer, New York, contains ten settings: the old melody "The poor soul sat sighing by a sycamore tree," one by Morley, four by Dr. Arne, one by Haydn, two by Schubert, and Bishop's familiar "Bid me discourse." The volume is admirably got up, with delightful decorations by Edward Edwards.

CÉSAR FRANCK'S noble Prélude, Choral, et Fugue for the pianoforte has been scored for orchestra by M. Pierné, and performed under his direction at the Châtelet, Paris. The transcription is said to be remarkably fine.

Le Ménestrel of January 8th states that 'Pepita Jimenez,' an opera by Señor Albeniz, produced at Barcelona, January 6th, 1896, has just been given at La Monnaie in French, and with great success; and on the same evening another of his operas, entitled 'L'Ermitage Fleuri.'

PERFORMANCES NEXT WEEK.

|        |  |
|--------|--|
| SUN.   | Sunday Society Concert, 3.30, Queen's Hall.  |
|        | Sunday League, 7, Queen's Hall.  |
| MON.   | Sousa's Band, 3 and 8, Queen's Hall.   |
|        | Mr. Josef Holbrooke's Concert, 8, Salle Erard.                                     |
|        | Subscription Concert, 8.30, Æolian Hall.   |
| TUES.  | Sousa's Band, 3 and 8, Queen's Hall.   |
| WED.   | Sousa's Band, 3 and 8, Queen's Hall.   |
| THURS. | Mr. Harold Bauer's Pianoforte Recital, 3, Æolian Hall.                             |
|        | Sousa's Band, 3 and 8, Queen's Hall.   |
| FRI.   | Sousa's Band, 3 and 8, Queen's Hall.   |
| SAT.   | Chappell's Ballad Concert, 3, Queen's Hall.  |
|        | Mr. Harold Bauer's Second Pianoforte Recital, 3, Æolian Hall.                      |
|        | Mozart Society, 3, Portman Rooms.  |
|        | Miss Suggia and Mr. H. Jones's Cello and Pianoforte Recital, 3.30, Bechstein Hall. |
|        | Sousa's Band, 8, Queen's Hall.   |

DRAMA

The Works of William Shakespeare. Vol. I. (Stratford-on-Avon, the Shakespeare Head Press.)

MR. BULLEN has applied himself of late, much to our advantage, to the publication of a variorum edition of Beaumont and Fletcher, and now we owe to his enterprise and preparation "The Stratford Town Shakespeare," the first edition of the poet's complete works printed, bound, and published in his native town. The first volume, which has appeared, is produced

"at the Shakespeare Head Press, in the house (built in the reign of Henry VII.) where lived Shakespeare's neighbour and friend, Julius Shaw, one of the witnesses to his will."

There will be ten volumes in all: the edition is strictly limited; the paper is hand-made; there is to be a frontispiece to each volume (in that before us we find, as might be expected, the Droeshout portrait); the type is of luxurious size, set up on a page between eleven and twelve inches in height, and shows up with delightful clearness against the ample margin; and the whole is excellently bound in red with gold lettering, while it bears signs of being able to stand wear better than some elaborate editions of good repute. To the present reviewer "the spirit of place," as an admired modern essayist has phrased it, is much in this case, for he knew Stratford before it had become the haunt of modern notabilities, journalists, and sentimental travellers eager to fling, under Shakespeare's agis, their own personalities at an unsuspecting public. Shakespearean characters in humble life or life unadvertised were frequently encountered, and the local stupidity and shrewdness were recognized as they stand in the poet's pages. "The wag of all wags was a Warwickshire wag"; but we do not know that Warwickshire has done much by way of publishing his works, though we treasure an edition by an eighteenth-century vicar of Coventry with unusually sensible notes. Now Mr. Bullen's enterprise has started a fine edition, which fully deserves to rank with the best printed in our great cities.

No typographical excellence can make up for deficient care or lack of understanding in textual matters. Mr. Bullen is not only a scholar, but also a ripe and good one, whose work on the Elizabethans may be received with the confidence due to a very limited circle to-day. He has admitted conjectural emendations, though more sparingly than Dyce, and the result is highly satisfactory. The volume before us contains 'The Tempest,' 'The Two Gentlemen of Verona,' 'The Merry Wives of Windsor,' and 'Measure for Measure,' with the Epistle Dedicatory of Heminge and Condell, and other preliminary matter, including the commendatory verses in the Folios of 1623 and 1632. It is probable that no two students of Shakspeare agree as to the best text and meaning for every passage, but we have carefully examined 'The Tempest' as printed here, and can testify to the skill and judgment Mr. Bullen has brought to his work. We mention a few points. Gonzalo desires "long heath, broom, furze, anything," a judicious compromise between Hamner and the First Folio, which we approve, for we see no reason to read "ling," and we do not believe in the "browne firrs" of the First Folio. Furze is yellow in blossom, green when bloomless, and black when burnt. It is never brown in large tracts like fern. The printing of such words as "of" and "the," as in the early Folios, with the last letter cut off, is, we have pointed out before, often a valuable indication to the right metrical arrangement of a line. A good case of adherence to the First Folio is the line

A rotten carcase of a butt, not rigg'd.

In Act III. scene i.

Most busilless, when I do it is read, which ranks, according to the present reviewer's judgment, with "most busiliest" as the most likely solution of this difficult passage. At the end of the scene immediately preceding this (II. ii. 190), Caliban exclaims, "Freedom high-day! high-day, freedom!" We applaud this ancient novelty from the reading of the First Folio, instead of the usual "hey-day!" The fact is, as Prof. Skeat points out in his monumental 'Etymological Dictionary of the English Language' (second edition, p. 264), that there are two words now spelt "hey-day." One is the familiar interjection evidently cognate with the German "heida." The other stands for "high day," appears in the common phrase "hey-day of youth," and is glossed by the professor "frolicsome wildness." He adds that this is the sense in 'Hamlet' III. iv. 69, but not in the passage before us. We cannot see it. Why should not Caliban exclaim, "O Freedom, O frolicsome wildness"? His brief spell of treason and excitement included a good deal of both, thanks to Trinculo, Stephano, and their divine bottle.

There is little doubt that this handsome edition will be taken up in its entirety, but we hope that it will also be leisurely and carefully read. There has never been a time in which there were so many editions of Shakspeare sold; but there is singularly little evidence among our latter-day poets that Shakspeare is cherished, or among that large and respectable body which used to be called the mob, and now is generally styled the democracy, that he is read at all. But there is little doubt that he is shelved in company with the Bible.

THE WEEK.

NEW.—'The Scarlet Pimpernel,' a Romantic Comedy in Four Acts. By Oreszy-Barstow.

THE so-called romantic comedy with which the New Theatre has reopened under the management of Mr. Fred Terry and Miss Julia Neilson is but an indifferent specimen of melodrama. It has a quasi-historical basis, and deals with a period of some interest with which English historians have not very actively concerned themselves. Allowing for a little pardonable anachronism, we may indicate the period in question as that immediately succeeding the September massacres, when the English Government, which it had been vainly sought to placate, handed their passports to Talleyrand and Chauvelin, and insisted upon their immediate departure. That English gentlemen participated with the émigrés in the endeavour to provide means of escape for French aristocrats still in peril of their lives is possible enough, though we know of no historical basis for such a supposition. On the leader of a society of the kind, real or imaginary, has been bestowed the name—pretty and sentimental, but scarcely appropriate or significant—of "the Scarlet Pimpernel." So much success has attended his exertions that the Republican Government, finding, it must be conceived, some shrinkage in the number of its victims, makes a State matter of it, and sends over the Marquis de Chauvelin to ascertain and, if possible, capture the too vigilant conspirator. In discharge of this duty Chauvelin makes advances to Lady Blakeney, née Saint-Just, an actress of French birth, who has married an English baronet of far-reaching influence. In order to save an indiscreet and wholly uninteresting brother, to whom she is devoted, Lady Blakeney becomes a spy for Chauvelin, and discovers for him the identity of the Scarlet Pimpernel, who proves to be Sir Percy Blakeney, her own husband. Nothing is left for her, having thus embroiled matters, except to undo the evil she has wrought, a task which, in a fashion at once obscure and melodramatic, she accomplishes. In itself this idea is passable. The manner in which it is carried out is, however, inept, and the play has no merits other than that of leading up to scenes of State revels, in which the wife of a baronet of no particular position outshines all the nobility of a crowded and fashionable Court, while her husband enjoys an intimacy with the Prince Regent such as Fox himself, in his most favoured days, could scarcely have claimed. The whole as thus constituted is artifice, not art. Meanwhile, nothing in the acting compensates for the lack of interest or dramatic significance. Miss Julia Neilson minimizes the effects of her natural gifts by copying, apparently, the methods and modes of speech of the actresses who seek to obtain consideration by the display of personal allurements and social minauderies. Mr. Terry, who can act when he gives himself the trouble, meanwhile puts on an antic disposition, and seems a cross between Osric in 'Hamlet' and Sir Piercie Shafton in Scott's 'Monastery.' Other actors follow in the same line, and the performance shows how much the vulgarity of public taste can do to corrupt our stage. We fail in Lady Blakeney to trace a sign of the actress to whom we owe Queen Constance; and we think with a sigh, as we contemplate Sir Percy Blakeney, of performances by Mr. Terry we can recall at the Lyceum, the Comedy, and the Haymarket.

Dramatic Gossip.

IMMEDIATELY after the production of 'Much Ado about Nothing' Mr. Tree will begin rehearsals of 'Agatha,' by Mrs. Humphry Ward and Mr. Louis N. Parker. In the piece, which will be produced on a Monday evening in February, Mr. Tree himself will not appear, but the part of the heroine will be taken by Miss Viola Tree.

ON Wednesday Mr. Willard, with a company including Mr. Cooper Cliffe and Mr. J. R. Crauford, sailed for New York, where on the 23rd he will produce Wilson Barrett's 'Lucky Durham.'

ON the production at Terry's Theatre next Wednesday of 'Mrs. Dering's Divorce,' Mrs. Langtry will be supported by Miss Beatrice Ferrar, Mr. Leonard Boyne, Mr. Courteney Thorpe, Mr. Frank Hollins, and Mr. McGuckin. The piece in question, which is by Mr. Percy Fendall, was first produced at the Providence Opera-House, April 18th, 1903.

M. TARRIDE, well known both as an actor and as the husband of Mlle. Marthe Regnier, has been promoted to the post of director of the Odéon, formerly held by M. Antoine.

'DIE ZAPPENSTREICH' of Herr F. A. Beyerlein, the military drama which created a sensation on its production at the Lessing Theater, Berlin, on October 29th, 1903, was revived at the Great Queen Theatre on Wednesday evening.

AFTERNOON performances of 'Prunella' have been given during the week at the Court Theatre, but the evening representations have been abandoned.

FORTHCOMING novelties at the Comédie Française consist of 'Le Duel,' a three-act comedy by M. Henri Lavedan, the author of 'Le Marquis de Priola'; and 'La Conversion d'Alceste' of M. Georges Courbeline.

A NEW translation by M. Louis de Gramont of 'Romeo and Juliet' is in preparation for the Théâtre Antoine.

'SCARRON,' a five-act play in verse by M. Catulle Mendès, has been withdrawn by the author from the Théâtre Français, and will be produced, with M. Coquelin as the hero, at the Gaîté.

MISS ELIZABETH LEE writes:—

"May I point out that Lindau's drama, 'So ich dir.....,' was performed in London last year at the Royalty Theatre by the German Theatre, under the direction of Messrs. Andresen and Behrend?"

TO CORRESPONDENTS.—L. C.—E. S.—G. E. W.—C. P. P.—received.

F. J. S.—Unsuitable for us.

A. Le L.—Can be bought.

No notice can be taken of anonymous communications.

MESSRS. BELL'S NEW BOOKS.

MINIATURE ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE
post free on application.

THE ART GALLERIES OF EUROPE.

With numerous Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 6s. net each.

NEW VOLUME.

The ART of the LOUVRE. By Mary KNIGHT POTTER.

Previously published:

The ART of the VATICAN.

The ART of the PITTI PALACE.

BELL'S MINIATURE SERIES OF GREAT WRITERS.

Pott 8vo, illustrated, cloth, 1s. net; or in limp leather, with Photogravure Frontispiece, 2s. net.

NEW VOLUME.

DICKENS. By W. Teignmouth Shore.

MINIATURE SERIES OF MUSICIANS.

Pott 8vo, illustrated, cloth, 1s. net; or in limp leather, with Photogravure Frontispiece, 2s. net each.

NEW VOLUME.

ROSSINI. By W. A. Bevan.

LIFE AND LIGHT BOOKS.

Pott 8vo, in dainty bindings, 1s. net each.

NEW VOLUME.

SENECA. A Selection by H. C. SIDLEY.

The ODES of HORACE. The Latin

Text, with Conington's Verse Translation on opposite pages. 32mo, in limp leather, 2s. net.

The SATIRES and EPISTLES of HORACE. The Latin Text, with Conington's Verse Translation. 32mo, in limp leather, 2s. 6d. net.

"Here are two good things together. All lovers of Horace should get this book."—School World.

A CHEAPER EDITION OF WHEATLEY'S
PEPYS.

The DIARY of SAMUEL PEPYS,

M.A. F.R.S. Transcribed from the Shorthand MS. in the Pepysian Library, Magdalene College, Cambridge, by the Rev. MYNORS BRIGHT, M.A. With Lord BRAYBROOKE'S Notes. Edited, with Additions, by HENRY B. WHEATLEY, F.S.A. In 8 vols. Post 8vo, 5s. net each. [Vols. I. and II. now ready.]

* * This reprint contains the whole of the text of the Diary, and the Notes and Index, as given in the ten-volume edition, the volume entitled 'Pepysiana' only being omitted.

THE YORK LIBRARY.

A NEW SERIES OF REPRINTS ON THIN PAPER. Small 8vo, 2s. net in cloth, and 3s. net in leather.

NEW VOLUME.

EMERSON'S WORKS. Vol. IV.

Containing Miscellaneous Pieces.

Others to follow.

London: GEORGE BELL & SONS,
Portugal Street, Lincoln's Inn, W.C.

DUCKWORTH &amp; CO.'S EARLY ANNOUNCEMENTS, 1905.

COLLECTED ESSAYS BY THE LATE S. ARTHUR STRONG.

With Memoir by LORD BALCARRES.

WITH 12 ILLUSTRATIONS. Royal 8vo.

[February.]

A LIFE of WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE. By Dr. W. J. Rolfe. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

RUSSIAN LITERATURE. By Prince Kropotkin. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

BOOKS and THINGS. A Volume of Essays. By G. S. Street. Crown 8vo, 6s.

The GREY BRETHREN. By Michael Fairless, Author of 'The Roadmender.' Fcap. 8vo, 2s. 6d. net.
(Uniform with 'The Roadmender.')

AUGUSTE RODIN. By Camille Mauclair, Author of 'The Great French Painters,' 'French Impressionists.' With 36 Illustrations and Photogravure Frontispiece. Crown 4to, 10s. 6d. net.

DURER. By T. Sturge Moore. With many Illustrations. Pott 4to, 7s. 6d. net.

GIOTTO. By Basil de Selincourt. With many Illustrations. Pott 4to, 7s. 6d. net.

PISANELLO. By G. F. Hill. With many Illustrations. Pott 4to, 7s. 6d. net.

VELASQUEZ. By Auguste Breal, Author of 'Rembrandt.' 45 Illustrations. Cloth, 2s. net; leather, 2s. 6d. net. [The Popular Library of Art.]

NOW IN DEMAND.

G. F. WATTS. By G. K. Chesterton. 35 Illustrations. Cloth, 2s. net; leather, 2s. 6d. net.

FICTION.

PROGRESS. By R. B. Cunninghame-Graham. 6s.

GOSSIP. By Benjamin Swift, Author of 'In Piccadilly.' 6s.

The HOUSE of BARNKIRK. By Amy McLaren, Author of 'From a Davos Balcony.' 6s.

The VICISSITUDES of EVANGELINE. By Elinor Glyn, Author of 'The Visits of Elizabeth' and 'The Reflections of Ambrosine.' 6s.

A LITTLE UNION SCOUT. By Joel Chandler Harris. Illustrated. 3s. 6d.

The CHILD. By Karin Michellis. A Psychological Study of the Child Mind. Translated from the Swedish by JOHN NEILSON LAUVRIK. 3s. 6d.

IMPORTANT NEW BOOKS.

REVOLUTIONARY TYPES. By I. A. Taylor. With an Introduction by R. B. Cunninghame-Graham. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

"Miss Taylor has made living, breathing figures of all the dead she has touched, and in a manner enthusiastic yet grave has reminded us that in all lives of hope and endeavour there is a triumph more profound than can be measured by success."—Outlook.

FETICHISM in WEST AFRICA. By the Rev. R. Hamill Nassau, M.D. Illustrated. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

"Had not Dr. Nassau possessed these qualities, we might still be sharing the popular fallacy that fetich worship is a peculiarly insensate form of idolatry. It was from him that Miss Mary Kingsley drew her chapters on West African religions. The wealth of illustration on which each conclusion is based leads one to forget the remarkable penetration and insight with which he has probed the inner significance of what appeared to less sympathetic travellers as childish and unmeaning rites."—Times.

MEDIÆVAL ART. From the Peace of the Church to the Eve of the Renaissance, 312-1350. By W. R. LETHABY. With 66 Full-Page Plates and 124 Figures in the Text. Pott 4to, 8s. 6d. net.

NOW IN DEMAND EVERYWHERE.

The REMINISCENCES of an IRISH LAND AGENT. Being those of Samuel M. Hussey. Edited by HOME GORDON. With 2 Photogravure Portraits. Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d. net.

SECOND IMPRESSION AT PRESS.

The PURPLE LAND. Being the Narrative of one Richard Lamb's Adventures in the Banda Oriental, South America. By W. H. HUDSON, Author of 'Green Mansions.' Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE POEMS OF T. STURGE MOORE.—Square 8vo, paper, 1s. net.

From the TIMES Literary Supplement, September 30, 1901:—"One and all they are the work of a poet—a poet with a strong and thoughtful mind, a rich vocabulary, and a growing mastery over his thought and language."

I. The CENTAUR'S BOOTY.

II. The ROUT of the AMAZONS.

III. The GAZELLES, and other Poems.

IV. PAN'S PROPHECY.

V. To LEDA, and other Odes.

VI. THESEUS, and other Odes.

"This is a poet who has put into his art that fundamental brainwork of which Rossetti spoke. His pictures are beautiful and new.....We shall take this insight and this humour with us all day, and be the stronger for it."—Monthly Review.

London: DUCKWORTH &amp; CO. 3, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, W.C.

NOTES AND QUERIES.

GENERAL INDEXES.

THE FOLLOWING ARE STILL IN STOCK:—

|                                      | £. | s. | d. |
|--------------------------------------|----|----|----|
| GENERAL INDEX,FOURTH SERIES ...  | 3  | 3  | 0  |
| GENERAL INDEX,SIXTH SERIES ...   | 0  | 6  | 0  |
| GENERAL INDEX,SEVENTH SERIES ... | 0  | 6  | 0  |
| GENERAL INDEX,EIGHTH SERIES ...  | 0  | 6  | 0  |

For Copies by post an additional Three-pence is charged.

JOHN C. FRANCIS,
Notes and Queries Office,
11, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

TEACHERS' SCRIPTURAL LIBRARY.

Price Sixpence each net.

By W. T. LYNN, B.A. F.R.A.S.

1. BIBLE CHRONOLOGY and DICTIONARY; or, the Principal Events recorded in the Holy Scriptures, arranged under their probable respective dates, with a Dictionary giving an account of the places named, an Appendix on English Translations of the Bible, and Six Maps.
2. BRIEF LESSONS on the PARABLES and MIRACLES of OUR LORD. The First Part contains short expositions of the Parables, arranged according to Date; in the Second, the Miracles are treated under the heads of the Regions in which they were wrought. With Two Illustrations.

Published by Stoneman, 29, Paternoster Square, E.C.

"I'll note you in my book of memory."—SHAKESPEARE.

S E C C O T I N E

S E C C O T I N E

Regd.
Trade Mark.

S E C C O T I N E

Sticks everything.

FREE SAMPLE

From the Sole Proprietors:

M'CAW, STEVENSON & ORR, LIMITED, Belfast and London.

For Chaps and Chilblains

VINOLIA CREAM

affords instant relief.

1s. 1½d. and 1s. 9d. per Box.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

The best remedy for
ACIDITY of the STOMACH, HEADACHE, HEARTBURN,
GOUT,

And INDIGESTION.
And Safest Aperient for Delicate Constitutions,
Ladies, Children, and Infants.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

AUTHORIZED TO BE USED BY
BRITISH SUBJECTS.

THE NATIONAL FLAG,

BEING

THE UNION JACK.

COPIES OF

NOTES AND QUERIES

FOR JUNE 30, 1900,

Can still be had, containing an account of the Flag, with Coloured Illustration according to scale.

JOHN C. FRANCIS, Notes and Queries Office, Bream's Buildings, E.C.

CLIFFORD'S INN.

For view of CLIFFORD'S INN, taken in 1892, see

NOTES AND QUERIES, April 2, 1892.

The same Number also contains Sketches of the ROLLS CHAPEL, OLD SERJEANTS' INN, the GATEWAY, LINCOLN'S INN, &c.

Price 4½d., free by post, of

JOHN C. FRANCIS, Notes and Queries Office, Bream's Buildings, E.C.

NOW READY, price 10s. 6d. net.

THE NINTH SERIES
GENERAL INDEX

OF

NOTES AND QUERIES.

With Introduction by JOSEPH KNIGHT, F.S.A.

This Index is double the size of previous ones, as it contains, in addition to the usual Index of Subjects, the Names and Pseudonyms of Writers, with a list of their Contributions. The number of constant Contributors exceeds eleven hundred. The Publisher reserves the right of increasing the price of the volume at any time. The number printed is limited, and the type has been distributed.

Free by post, 10s. 11d.

JOHN C. FRANCIS, Notes and Queries Office, Bream's Buildings, E.C.

"LEARNED, CHATTY, USEFUL."—Athenæum.

"THAT DELIGHTFUL REPOSITORY OF FORGOTTEN LORE, 'NOTES AND QUERIES.'"

Edinburgh Review, October, 1880.

Every Saturday, of any Bookseller or Newsagent in England, price 4d.; or free by post to the Continent, 4½d.

NOTES AND QUERIES:

A MEDIUM OF INTERCOMMUNICATION FOR LITERARY MEN AND GENERAL READERS.

* * Subscription, 10s. 3d. for Six Months; 20s. 6d. for Twelve Months, including postage.

The NINTH SERIES of NOTES AND QUERIES, complete in 12 vols. (JANUARY, 1898, to DECEMBER, 1903), price 10s. 6d. each Volume, contains, in addition to a great variety of similar Notes and Replies, Articles of Interest on the following Subjects.

THIRD SELECTION.

BIBLIOGRAPHY and LITERARY HISTORY.

Translations of Galen—Books on Gaming—John Gilpin's Route to Edmonton—Mrs. Glasse—'Globe' Centenary—Goethe—Oliver Goldsmith—Thomas Gray—Greene's 'Frier Bacon and Frier Bongay'—Grub Street—A. H. Hallam's Publications—Harvey, Marston, Jonson, and Nashe—Hawker of Morwenstow—Heber's 'Racing Calendar'—George Herbert's Proverbs—Herrick—Heuskarian Rarity in the Bodleian—'Historical English Dictionary'—Hood's 'Comic Annual.'

BIOGRAPHY.

"The Starry Galileo"—Letters of German Notabilities—W. E. Gladstone—Sir Edmund Berry Godfrey—Duchess of Gordon—Duke of Grafton and Lord Thurlow—Thomas Guy's Will—Nell Gwyn—Serjeant Hawkins—Sir John Hawkwood—Sir Richard Hotham—Victor Hugo.

ECCLESIASTICAL MATTERS.

Genesis i. 1—Nameless Gravestones—Greek Church Vestments—Hagioscope or Oriel—Heretics Burnt—Hexham Priory and the Augustales—Holy Communion, Substitutes for Bread—Honest Epitaphs—Huxley on the Bible—'Hymns Ancient and Modern.'

FINE ARTS.

Gainsborough's lost 'Duchess'—Grinling Gibbons's Statue of James II.—Sir John Gilbert's Drawings in the 'London Journal'—Miss Gunning's Portraits—Haydon's Historical Pictures—Pictures by Sir G. Hayter—Hogarth—Holbein Portraits—Hoppner Portraits.

PHILOLOGY and GRAMMAR.

Caimacam or Kaimakam—Camelry—Cecil, its Pronunciation—Celtic Words in Anglo-Saxon Districts—Chaperon applied to Males—Chic recognized by the French Academy—Chi-ike—"Chink" of Woods—Comically—Corn-bote—Creak as a Verb—Crowdy-mutton—Deadfold—Dewsiers—"Different than"—Dive, Peculiar Meaning—Dude—Electrocute—English Accentuation—Ey in Place-names—Fashion in Language—Fearagurthok, Irish Word—Félibre—Filbert—Flapper, Anglo-Indian Slang—Irish "Flittings"—Floyd v. Lloyd—Folk or Folks—Foulrice—Frail—Gallant, its Varying Accent—Gallimaufry—Gambaleery—Gaul and Goal—Garage—Gavel and Shieling—Ghetto—Ghost-words—"Good afternoon"—Doubtful Grammar in A.V. and Prayer Book—Greek Pronunciation—Gutter-snipe—Gwyneth—Halsh—Hattock—Help with an Infinitive—Helpmate and Helpmeet—Henbane—Heron—High-faluting—Hooligan—Hopeful and Sanguine—Huish—Hullabaloo—Hurtling.

PROVERBS AND QUOTATIONS.

"Cambuscan bold"—"Carnage is God's daughter"—"Chalk on the door"—"Lug the coif"—"Comparisons are odious"—"Crow to pluck"—"Crying down credit"—"Cutting his stick"—"Whosups with the devil"—"Down to the ground"—"Dutch courage"—"Embarras des richesses"—"English take their pleasures sadly"—"Enjoy bad health"—"Fall below par"—"Farewell, vain world"—"Feggess after peace"—"Fert. Fert, Fert," on Italian Coins—"First catch your hare"—"Flea in the ear"—"Forgive, blest shade"—French Sermon in Proverbs—Familiar French Quotations—"God works wonders now and then"—"Gone to Jericho"—"Green grief to the Grahams"—"Grass widow"—Gratitude Defined—"Green-eyed monster"—"Heart of grace"—"Hook it"—"Hop the twig"—"Horse-marine."

SONGS, BALLADS, and NURSERY RIMES.

"Ask nothing more of me, sweet"—'Bailiff's Daughter of Islington'—'Beggars' Petition'—'Canadian Boat Song'—'Charlie is my Darling'—'Cherry Ripe'—'Comin' thro' the Rye'—'Dulce Domum'—"Gentle shepherd, tell me where"—"God bless the King!—I mean the Faith's defender"—"I dwelt in a city enchanted"—"I'll hang my harp on a willow tree"—"In the days when we went gipsying."

MISCELLANEOUS.

Acacia in Freemasonry—Adelaide Waistcoat—Adulation Extraordinary—Old Advertisements—Æolian Harp, its Construction—Albino Animals Sacrificed—Ale, Bottled, Burton, and "Lanted"—Anagrams on Various Subjects—Apostle Spoons—Athens, the City of the Violet Crown—Autographs, how to keep them—Bagman, for Commercial Traveller—Bank of England and Heberfield—First Lady Barrister—Birch-sap Wine—Ancient Boats Discovered—Bows and Arrows last used in War—Bread by Troy Weight—C.I.V. Nicknames—Originator of Christmas Cards—Beginning and End of Centuries—Clerks in Chancery—Chess Legend—Chimneys in Ancient Houses—Introduction of Chocolate—Twenty-four-hour Clocks—Convivial Clubs—Local Names for the Cowslip—Earliest Cricket Match—Death from Fright—Dutch Fleet captured by Cavalry—Standing Egg—Brewers' "Entire"—Earliest Envelopes—Epigrams and Epitaphs—Earthings Rejected—Feeding-Bottles First Used—Five o'Clock Tea—Flats in London—Flaying Alive—Franciscans v. Freemasons—Earliest Funeral Cards—Gas and Locomotive—Gates on Commons—Genius and Largo Families—Gentleman Porter—Germination of Seeds—Slang for Gin—Gipsy Wedding and Funeral—Golf and Pall-mall—Goths and Huns—Guillotine—Gun Reports—Hair Powder last Used—Hansom Cab, its Inventor—First Silk Hat in London.

MESSRS. METHUEN'S NEW BOOKS.

PARADISI in SOLE PARADISUS TERRESTRIS, or a GARDEN of ALL SORTS of PLEASANT FLOWERS. By JOHN PARKINSON. Folio, 4l. 4s. net.

Also an Edition of 20 Copies on Japanese vellum, 10l. 10s. net. The price of this book is now raised to 4l. 4s. net.

HYPNEROTOMACHIA POLIPHILI UBI HUMANA OMNIA NON NISI SOMNIUM ESSE DOCET ATQUE OBITER PLURIMA SCITU SANE QUAM DIGNA COMMORAT. An Edition limited to 350 Copies on Hand-made Paper. Folio, 3l. 3s. net.

A special Prospectus of this book may be obtained.

"For the first time, the famous 'Hypnerotomachia' is issued complete in facsimile. The work is in many respects unique. It is a notable product of the Aldine Press, and the masterpiece of Venetian book illustration. The present facsimile constitutes an unprecedented book to the scholar and the artist. No lover of fine works will be content without it. It will before long be only less scarce than the original."—Athenæum.

The MICROCOSM of LONDON; or, London in Miniature.

With 104 Illustrations in Colour by PUGIN and ROWLANDSON. In 3 vols. small 4to. 3l. 2s. net.

"Messrs. Methuen have done a service to the lovers of London by the issue of this reproduction of Ackermann's valuable work.... It makes a very handy and handsome set. The pictures are well copied, and the printing is clear and good."—Athenæum.

FRANCESCO GUARDI. By GEORGE A. SIMONSON. Imperial 4to. With 41 Plates. 2l. 2s. net. The Edition is limited to 400 Copies. A Prospectus, with Specimen Plate, may be obtained from the Publishers.

"Mr. Simonson has not spared himself the pains of research, and his book, with its many characteristic illustrations, is a worthy monument of one of the latest born of the artists who were among the glories of the Venetian Republic."—Standard.

"The book is not only a handsome art volume, but a valuable biography of one of the very last of the long line of Venetian Masters."—Birmingham Post.

ROYAL and HISTORIC GLOVES and ANCIENT SHOES.

Profusely illustrated in Colour and Half-Tone, and Described by W. B. REDFERN, Author of 'Ancient Wood and Iron Work in Cambridge,' &c. 4to. 2l. 2s. net. The Edition is limited to 250 Copies.

PORCELAIN. By EDWARD DILLON. With 19 Plates in Colour, 20 in Collotype, and 5 in Photogravure. Wide royal 8vo, 25s. net.

A Prospectus of this book may be obtained. [The Connoisseur's Library].

"It is a work of real value, and will be recognized as an authority. It has been written with knowledge and by one who has gone thoroughly into the subject."—Birmingham Post.

"The illustrations are things of beauty, joys for ever."—Punch.

PALIO and PONTE. A Book of Tuscan Games. By W. HEYWOOD. Illustrated, royal 8vo, 21s. net.

This work treats of the athletic sports of mediæval Italy, and especially of that ultimate survival of the old equestrian games, the Palio of Siena.

"Mr. Heywood's work has that rare combination of humour and erudition, and that even rarer blend of the critical with the enthusiastic faculty, which makes good and wise readers as it is followed from stave to stave. To love Italy, and to give her lovers, a man must be a classic, something of a pedant, and a humanist. The past lives in every angle of the road; the forms are so precise, the air so clear, that exact scholarship is of the essence of the contract; and yet one must be tender with the people, see in them the best thing in their country, be patient, be just, and yet be a lover. Italy has been well served before now by men of our race."—MAURICE HEWLETT.

"Mr. Heywood has every qualification for the task he has undertaken, through knowledge of the Italian language, Tuscan history, and mediæval customs, and the power of deftly handling his own speech."—Scotsman.

GASPARD de COLIGNY, ADMIRAL of FRANCE. By

A. W. WHITEHEAD. With many Illustrations and Maps. Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d. net.

"It is a good piece of writing, this book about Coligny. It is careful and judicious, and shows on not a single page the hasty dogmatism of youth. Especially valuable in Mr. Whitehead's book is his clever disentanglement of the complex threads which surround notorious incidents like the murder of Francis, Duke of Guise, and the great massacre of St. Bartholomew."—Daily Telegraph.

"We welcome this book, which gives evidence of great research, rewarded by the discovery of many new facts."—Bystander.

SELECT STATUTES, CASES, and CONSTITUTIONAL

DOCUMENTS, 1620-1832. Edited by C. GRANT ROBERTSON, M.A., Fellow of All Souls' College, Oxford. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

This volume is intended to supply the student of English Constitutional History with a selection of the leading Statutes, Cases, and Documents for the period from 1620 down to the great Reform Bill.

The NICOMACHEAN ETHICS of ARISTOTLE. Edited, with an Introduction and Notes, by JOHN BURNET, M.A., Professor of Greek at St. Andrews. Cheaper Issue. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

ENGLAND UNDER the STUARTS. By G. M. TREVELYAN,

Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge, Author of 'The Age of Wyclif.' With Maps and Plans. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

This is the Fifth Volume, though the first published, of the Six Volumes of a New HISTORY of ENGLAND (Edited by Prof. C. W. C. OMAN), from the earliest times down to the year 1815.

"Mr. George Trevelyan seems to us to have combined in a remarkable manner accuracy of research and a philosophic understanding of principles and movements with a power of graphic narrative. His characters are not casual notes to the text, but real personalities, clearly realized and firmly drawn. He has taken a century of English history, and, without overloading his book with detail, has contrived to give us the period in a series of dramatic pictures, with the movements of spiritual and intellectual change showing clear in the background."—Spectator.

A HISTORY of ROME: during the Later Republic

and the Early Principate. By A. H. J. GREENIDGE, M.A. In 6 vols. Vol. I. (133-101 B.C.). With Maps. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

A history of Rome from the period of Tiberius Gracchus to the accession of Vespasian. It is to be a general history of the period in the widest sense of the words. Social life, military history, politics, law, personal narrative, eventually literature, will all be represented. It is also to be a work of reference on a minute scale.

"The author has studied the whole history afresh in its original sources, and interpreted it with a breadth of culture, in terms intelligible and sympathetic to educated men of these times."—Scotsman.

RICHARD HURRELL FROUDE. By L. I. GUINEY.

Illustrated. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

"Miss Guiney's collection of contemporary studies includes almost everything that has been written about Froude by those who had the best opportunities of judging, and they present some highly interesting comparisons. The merit of this book is that it brings together, in convenient and compendious form, much which, when scattered over a variety of works, loses half its effect, and thus enables us to estimate Froude's character and career as a whole, and to fix his proper place in the movement of 1833."—Standard.

The LIFE of FATHER IGNATIUS, O.S.B. By the

BARONESS DE BERTOUCH. Illustrated. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

SECOND EDITION.

WITH KUROKI IN MANCHURIA. By FREDERICK

PALMER. With many Illustrations, demy 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

"Mr. Palmer's impetuosity and clan carry all before them. He is an impressionist. In chapter after chapter the tragic Manchurian orgy lives again; and the reader is hurried along in spite of himself."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"This is a series of word-pictures, instantaneous impressions of scenes at the front, and very vivid and interesting impressions they are."—Daily Mirror.

SCOTLAND in the TIME of QUEEN MARY. By P.

HUME BROWN, Fraser Professor of Ancient (Scottish) History at the University of Edinburgh. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

CELTIC ART. By J. ROMILLY ALLEN, F.S.A. With numerous Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

[The Antiquary's Books].

SIX GREAT SCHOOLMASTERS. By F. D. HOW. With

Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d.

The Masters are Hawtrey of Eton, Kennedy of Shrewsbury, Moberly of Winchester, Vaughan of Harrow, Temple of Rugby, Bradley of Marlborough. There are no previous memoirs of any except Dr. Hawtrey.

ENGLISH SEAMEN. By ROBERT SOUTHEY. Vol. II.

RICHARD HAWKINS, GRENVILLE, ESSEX, and RALEIGH. Crown 8vo, 6s.

The Second Volume of a well-known Series of Lives by Southey, the First Volume of which was published by Messrs. Methuen some years ago.

OLD GORGON GRAHAM. By G. H. LORIMER, Author of

'The Letters of a Self-made Merchant to his Son.' Crown 8vo, 6s. [January 26.]

This is a pendant to Mr. Lorimer's 'Letters of a Self-made Merchant,' a book which has had, both here and in America, an almost unprecedented success. In this book the father tells the story of his own rise with the same inimitable wit and racy wisdom.

MY DEVON YEAR. By EDEN PHILLPOTTS. With 38 Illustrations by J. LEY PETHYBRIDGE. Large crown 8vo, 6s.

"The charm of the book is that, choice as is the author's language, it produces no mere admiration for a well-chosen vocabulary, no sense of cleverly constructed phrases, but rather a simple, straightforward, wholesome pleasure in the thing described, a longing to be out again in the west-country lanes or on the moors."—Athenæum.

POEMS. By EMILY DICKINSON. First Series. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d. net.

This is the first issue in England of a very remarkable volume of poems. Miss Dickinson is a highly spiritual and mystical writer, and her poems have some of the flavour of William Blake.

ANECDOTES of SOLDIERS. Edited by J. H. SETTLE.

Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

This book contains over 1,500 stories of soldiers in peace and war.

The ADVENTURES of a POST CAPTAIN. By a NAVAL OFFICER. With 24 Coloured Plates by Mr. WILLIAMS. Fcap. 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

[The Illustrated Pocket Library].

GOD'S BOARD. By ARCHBISHOP BENSON. With a Preface

by Miss BENSON. Fcap. 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

SECOND EDITION.

The GETTING WELL of DOROTHY. By Mrs. W. K.

CLIFFORD. Author of 'Anyhow Stories.' Illustrated by GORDON BROWNE. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

"Altogether a delightful little book, made yet more attractive by Mr. Gordon Browne's very pretty drawings."—Spectator.

"A story of great charm. A chronicle of child-life written for children, which stands apart from the mass of such books by its brightness, refinement, and insight into the mind of a child."—Times.

A BOOK of REMEMBRANCE. By ELIZABETH GODFREY.

Fcap. 8vo, 2s. 6d. net.

BURNE-JONES. By FORTUNÉE DE LISLE. With 41 Illustrations. Demy 18mo, 2s. 6d. net.

[Little Books on Art].

WITH the SIMPLE-HEARTED. Little Homilies to Women in Country Places. By ELIZABETH WATERHOUSE, Author of 'A Little Book of Life and Death.' Fcap. 8vo, 2s. net.

THE FIRST NOVELS OF 1905.

The SECRET WOMAN. By EDEN PHILLPOTTS. Crown 8vo, 6s. [January 19.]

The MYSTERY of the MOAT. By ADELINE SERGEANT. Crown 8vo, 6s. [Ready.]

HE that EATETH BREAD with ME. By H. A. MITCHELL KEAYS. Crown 8vo, 6s. [Ready.]

HEART of MY HEART. By ELLIS MEREDITH. Crown 8vo, 6s. [Ready.]

The VIRGIN and the SCALES. By CONSTANCE COTTERELL. Crown 8vo, 6s. [January 19.]

METHUEN & CO. 36, Essex Street, Strand, W.C.

Editorial Communications should be addressed to "The Editor"—Advertisements and Business Letters to "The Publisher"—at the Office, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

Published Weekly by JOHN C. FRANCIS at Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C. and Printed by JOHN EDWARD FRANCIS, Athenæum Press, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

Agents for Scotland, Messrs. Bell & Bradburn and Mr. John Menzies, Edinburgh.—Saturday, January 14, 1905.

THE ATHENÆUM

Journal of English and Foreign Literature, Science, the Fine Arts, Music and the Drama.

No. 4030.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 21, 1905.

PRICE
THREEPENCE
REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, LONDON.

(University of London.)

LECTURES ON RECENT DISCOVERIES IN GREECE.

Prof. ERNEST GARDNER will give a COURSE of LECTURES on MONDAYS at 3 p.m., beginning on MONDAY, January 23. First Lecture open to the Public without payment or Ticket.

For Prospectus, &c., apply to

WALTER W. SETON, M.A., Acting Secretary.

G A L L E R I A.

FRENCH LITERARY SOCIETY: UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, READING. FRENCH COMPETITION FOR 1905 (ELEVENTH SESSION).

1. An EXHIBITION of the value of 5l. 5s. is given to an English Teacher of French, to enable the prize-winner to spend a fortnight in Paris, and attend the Holiday Courses of the Alliance Française.

2. SCHOOLS' COMPETITIONS, open to English Scholars of both sexes between the ages of 10 and 20, whether in schools or otherwise. The Prizes consist of Medals and Books given by the French Minister of Public Instruction, the French Ambassador at the Court of St. James's, the Alliance Française, and many other benefactors. Many Prizes are of the value of 1l., none of less value than 10s. 6d.

Candidates must send in their Names and Addresses before JANUARY 31, 1905. The Examinations will be held in MAY, 1905. For full particulars apply to M. A. V. SALMON, 54, Western Elm Avenue, Reading.

GRAFTON GALLERIES. — DURAND-RUEL

& SONS, of Paris. EXHIBITION of 315 PICTURES by Boudin, Cézanne, Degas, Manet, Monet, Morisot, Pissarro, Renoir, Sisley. — Grafton Street, Bond Street. Daily (till February 18th), 10 till 6. Admission One Shilling.

NEWSVENDORS' BENEVOLENT and PROVIDENT INSTITUTION.

Founded 1839.

Funds exceed 4,000l.

Office: Memorial Hall Buildings, 15, Farringdon Street, London, E.C.

Patron:

The Right Hon. the EARL of ROSEBURY, K.G.

President:

The LORD GLENESK.

Treasurer:

The LONDON and WESTMINSTER BANK, LIMITED.

A Donation of Ten Guineas constitutes a Vice-President and gives three votes for life at all elections. Each Donation of Three Guineas gives a vote at all elections for life. Every Annual Subscriber is entitled to one vote at all elections in respect of each Five Shillings so paid.

MEMBERSHIP.—Every Man and Woman throughout the United Kingdom, whether Publisher, Wholesaler, Retailer, Employer, or Employed, is entitled to become a Member of this Institution, and enjoy its benefits upon payment of Five Shillings annually, or Three Guineas for life, provided that he or she is engaged in the sale of Newspapers, and such members who thus contribute secure priority of consideration in the event of their needing aid from the Institution.

PENSIONS.—The Annuitants now number Thirty-six, the men receiving 25l. and the Women 20l. per annum each, and they include:—The "Royal Victoria Pension Fund," which was established in 1887 and enlarged in 1897, 1901, and 1902, perpetually commemorates the great advantages the News Trade enjoyed under the rule of Her late Majesty Queen Victoria, provides Pensions of 20l. a year each for Six Widows of Newsvendors.

The "Francis Fund" provides Pensions for One Man, 25l., and One Woman, 20l., and was specially subscribed in memory of the late John Francis, who died on April 6, 1882, and was for more than fifty years Publisher of the Athenæum. He took an active and leading part throughout the whole period of the agitation for the repeal of the various then existing "Taxes on Knowledge," and was for very many years a staunch supporter of this Institution.

The "Horace Marshall Pension Fund" is the gift of the late Mr. Horace Brooks Marshall. The employees of that firm have primary right of election to its benefits, but this privilege not having been exercised until 1904, the General Pensions of the Institution have had the full benefit arising from the interest on this investment from 1887 to 1903.

The "Herbert Lloyd Pension Fund" provides 25l. per annum for one man; and was established in 1903 in perpetual and grateful memory of Mr. Herbert Lloyd, who was a generous benefactor of this Institution, and who died May 12, 1899.

The "Hospital Pensions" consist of an annual contribution of 35l., whereby Sir Henry Charles Burdett and his co-directors generously enable the Committee to grant 20l. for One Year to a Man and 15l. for One Year to a Woman, under conditions laid down in Rule 8c.

W. WILKIE JONES, Secretary.

THE BOOKSELLERS' PROVIDENT INSTITUTION.

Founded 1837.

Patron—HER MAJESTY QUEEN ALEXANDRA.

Invested Capital 30,000l.

A UNIQUE INVESTMENT

Offered to London Booksellers and their Assistants.

A young man or woman of twenty-five can invest the sum of Twenty Guineas (or its equivalent by instalments), and obtain the right to participate in the following advantages:—

FIRST. Freedom from want in time of Adversity as long as need exists.

SECOND. Permanent Relief in Old Age.

THIRD. Medical advice by eminent Physicians and Surgeons.

FOURTH. A Cottage in the Country (Abbots Langley, Hertfordshire) for aged Members, with garden, produce, coal, and medical attendance free, in addition to an annuity.

FIFTH. A furnished house in the same Retreat at Abbots Langley for the free use of Members and their families for holidays or during convalescence.

SIXTH. A contribution towards Funeral expenses when it is needed.

SEVENTH. All these are available not for Members only, but also for their wives or widows and young children.

EIGHTH. The payment of the subscriptions confers an absolute right to these benefits in all cases of need.

For further information apply to the Secretary, Mr. GEORGE LARNER, 23, Paternoster Row, E.C.

EDUCATION.

Parents or Guardians desiring accurate information relative to the CHOICE of SCHOOLS for BOYS or GIRLS or

TUTORS in England or Abroad

are invited to call upon or send fully detailed particulars to

MESSRS. GABBITS, THRING & CO.,

who for more than thirty years have been closely in touch with the leading Educational Establishments.

Advice free of charge, is given by Mr. Thring, Nephew of the late

Head Master of Uppingham, 36, Sackville Street, London, W.

THE DOWNS SCHOOL, SEAFORD, SUSSEX.

Head Mistress—Miss LUCY ROBINSON, M.A. (late Second Mistress St. Felix School, Southwold). References: The Principal of Bedford College, London; The Master of Peterhouse, Cambridge.

ECCLESIASTIQUE CATHOLIQUE FRANÇAIS, habitant Ville du centre de la France, PRENDRAIT ETUDIANT desirant APPRENDRE LANGUE FRANÇAISE. — S'adresser à M. L'Abbé RABIER, Blois, France.

MISS LOUISA DREWRY will read PARADISE

LOST with her TEACHERS' CLASS THIS TERM. She gives Lectures, Readings, and Lessons as usual; Examines; and helps Students by Letter and in her Reading Society.—143, King Henry's Road, London, N.W.

RESIDENT PUPILS carefully PREPARED for PUBLIC SCHOOL, UNIVERSITY, or other EXAMINATIONS. Lovely country, bracing air. Moderate terms.—Apply RECTOR, Abberley, Stourport.

CITY of SHEFFIELD.

EDUCATION COMMITTEE.

KING EDWARD VII. SCHOOL AT SHEFFIELD.

HEAD MASTER REQUIRED.

The GOVERNORS of the FIRST-GRADE SECONDARY DAY SCHOOL (Classical and Modern, with Preparatory Department attached), about to be established in place of the Royal Grammar School and Wesley College, and to be called, by command of His Majesty, KING EDWARD VII. SCHOOL AT SHEFFIELD, invite applications for the position of HEAD MASTER. Salary to commence at 800l. per year, with House connected with the School. It is expected that the School will start with from 350 to 400 boys. Fees up to 16l. 16s. per annum. A general outline of the Scheme will be furnished to intending Candidates.

Firms of Application, which should be obtained on application to the undersigned, should be sent in not later than FEBRUARY 22, 1905, accompanied by 25 printed copies of Testimonials.

Personal canvassing will disqualify Candidates.

JNO. F. MOSS, Secretary.

Education Office, Sheffield.

MONTROSE ACADEMY.

HEAD MASTERSHIP OF THE MODERN LANGUAGES DEPARTMENT.

Owing to the resignation of the Head Master, who has been appointed to the Senior Modern Languages Mastership, Campbell College, Belfast, applications are invited for the post thus rendered vacant. Candidates must have resided abroad. Commencing salary at the rate of 180l. per annum.—Applications, together with recent Testimonials, should be lodged, as soon as possible, with the undersigned, from whom any further particulars may be obtained.

WM. ROSS, Clerk to the Burgh.

School Board, Montrose.

WELSH INTERMEDIATE EDUCATION ACT, 1889.

CENTRAL WELSH BOARD.

APPOINTMENT OF AN EXAMINER IN LATIN.

The EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE of the BOARD will shortly proceed to the appointment of an EXAMINER in LATIN.

Particulars relating to the appointment may be obtained from the undersigned not later than the 31st day of JANUARY, 1905.

OWEN OWEN, Chief Inspector.

Central Welsh Board, Cardiff, January 18, 1905.

THE SURVEYORS' INSTITUTION, 12, GREAT GEORGE STREET, WESTMINSTER.

The COUNCIL require a SECRETARY, and invite applications for the Office from Candidates between the ages of 28 and 40. Preference will be given to Candidates with a University Degree, or who have had other equivalent training.

Salary to commence at 600l. per annum.

Information as to the duties, and forms of application, can be obtained from the Honorary Secretary, PERCIVAL CURREY, 37, Norfolk Street, Strand, W.C.

Formal applications, by letter only, are to be sent in on or before FEBRUARY 15, 1905, addressed to PERCIVAL CURREY, Esq., Honorary Secretary to the Surveyors' Institution, 37, Norfolk Street, Strand, W.C., endorsed "Application for Secretaryship."

Testimonials must be recent, and not more than four will be received from any applicant.

Canvassing, either directly or indirectly, will be held to be a disqualification for appointment.

COUNTY BOROUGH of HUDDERSFIELD TECHNICAL COLLEGE.

Principal—J. F. HUDSON, M.A. B.Sc.

LADY REQUIRED to act as LIBRARY CLERK. Some experience of Library Work essential. Knowledge of Shorthand and Type-writing desirable. Salary 45l.—Apply not later than the 25th inst., stating age, and enclosing copies of not more than three recent Testimonials.

THOS THORP, Secretary.

HISTORIAN WANTED.—A YOUNG GRADUATE

(First or Second Class in Honour School of History) to ASSIST in REVISING an important WORK of REFERENCE, under the direction of its Editors. A good English style and a knowledge of French and German essential.—Apply, stating qualifications, to W. K., Box 973, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

AS ASSISTANT EDITOR, or in any similar capacity.—YOUNG OXFORD GRADUATE. Classical Honours, some experience Writing and Editing, occasional Contributor Weekly and Monthly Reviews, highest class, desires PERMANENT POSITION.—Address BAKER, Welling's, 102, Piccadilly, W.

ASSISTANT EDITORSHIP WANTED by a

GENTLEMAN. Has had great experience, and was four years Editor of a Colonial Daily. Special knowledge of Far East.—Address Box 963, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

LADY PROOF READER, of some experience,

wants SITUATION. In London preferred.—Apply, personally or by letter, J. E. F., Athenæum Press, Bream's Buildings, E.C.

Yearly Subscription, free by post, Inland, 15s. 3d.; Foreign, 18s. Entered at the New York Post Office as Second Class matter.

FRANCE.—The ATHENÆUM can be obtained at the following Railway Stations in France:—

AMIENS, ANTIBES, BEAULIEU-SUR-MER, BIARRITZ, BORDEAUX, BOULOGNE-SUR-MER, CALAIS, CANNES, DIJON, DUNKIRK, HAVRE, LILLE, LYONS, MARSEILLES, MENTONE, MONACO, NANTES, NICE, PARIS, PAU, SAINT RAPHAEL, TOURS, TOULON.

PARIS: W. H. SMITH & SON, 248, Rue de Rivoli; and at the GALIGNANI LIBRARY, 224, Rue de Rivoli.

SECRETARY, &c.—ENGLISHMAN, aged 28, fluent German, French, and Dutch, tactful, travelled, B.Sc. Victoria, seeks suitable position as SECRETARY, &c.—Letters to O 35, care Lee & Nightingale, Advertising Offices, Liverpool.

ADVERTISER desires post as LITERARY ADVISER to PUBLISHING FIRM. University Classical Honours Man.—Address A. H. S., Box 562, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

TO PUBLISHERS and LITERARY MEN.—Proof-Reading, Translations, Copying, Research. Accurate WORKER SEEKS EMPLOYMENT. Thorough Publishing experience gained in a high-class Firm.—Write H. W., 44, Chancery Lane, W.C.

PUBLISHING.—Late ADVERTISING MANAGER to well-known Publishers DESIRES POSITION in which his services and moderate capital could be advantageously employed. Replies treated in strict confidence. IDEAS, Box 974, care of Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

INDEXING by a very experienced Hand. Best Testimonials.—V. S., 61, Replingham Road, S.W.

TRANSLATION, REVISION, RESEARCH, REVIEWING, INDEXING, and other LITERARY WORK, or non-resident Secretaryship. Classics, French, German, Italian. Special Subjects, Mythology and Literature. Varied experience.—Miss SELBY, 53, Talbot Road, W.

LITERARY RESEARCH undertaken at the British Museum and elsewhere on moderate terms. Excellent Testimonials.—A. B., Box 910, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

INVESTMENT.—PUBLISHING FIRM has an opportunity of using to advantage some additional capital. Good Interest and Security offered.—Address INVESTMENT, care of Hart's Advertising Offices, Maltravers House, Arundel Street, Strand, W.C.

TYPE-WRITING.—MANUSCRIPTS, &c., carefully COPIED. One, Two, or more Copies supplied from 8d. per 1,000 words.—Miss FREEMAN, 59, Copleston Road, East Dulwich, S.E.

TYPE-WRITING.—The WEST KENSINGTON OFFICES. Authors' MSS., Translations, &c. Legal and General Copying. Circulars, &c. Duplicated. Usual terms. References. Established eleven years.—S. KES & SONS, 229, Hammersmith Road, W. (Private Address: 13, Wolverton Gardens, Hammersmith.)

TYPE-WRITING promptly and accurately done. Ten years' experience. Excellent references. 10d. per 1,000 words. Reduction for quantity.—Miss MASON, The Orchard, Cotterill Road, Surbiton, S.W.

AUTHORS' MSS., NOVELS, SERMONS, PLAYS, REVIEWS TYPE-WRITTEN accurately and promptly, 9d. per 1,000 words. References to well-known Writers.—M. STUART THIRLANK, Roxborough Road, Harrow.

TYPE-WRITING undertaken by highly educated Women (Classical Tripos; Cambridge Higher Local; Modern Languages). Research, Revision, Translation.—THE CAMBRIDGE TYPE-WRITING AGENCY, 10, Duke Street, Adelphi, W.C.

AUTHORS' MSS., SERMONS, PLAYS, ENVELOPES, CIRCULARS, and all kinds. TYPED at home. Remington, 9d. per 1,000. Good paper. Orders promptly executed.—M. L. 7, Vernon Road, Clapham.

TYPE-WRITING.—SERMONS, AUTHORS' MSS., &c., carefully and promptly executed. 8d. per 1,000 words, paper included.—Miss A. MASON, Strathairly, New Barn, Longfield, Kent.

THE AUTHOR'S AGENCY.—Established 1879. The interests of Authors capably represented. Agreements for Publishing arranged. MSS. placed with Publishers.—Terms and Testimonials on application to Mr. A. M. BARNES, 24, Paternoster Row.

MR. GEORGE LARNER, Accountant and Licensed Valuer to the Book-selling Publishing Newspaper, Printing, and Stationery Trades. Partnerships Arranged. Balance Sheets and Trading Accounts Prepared and Audited. All Business carried out under Mr. Larner's personal supervision.—28, 29 and 30, Paternoster Row, E.C. Secretary to the Booksellers' Provident Institution.

PRESS CUTTING S.

Special Departments for ART, SCIENCE, LITERATURE, COMMERCE and EDUCATION.

Terms from 5s. per 100

Send requirements and obtain quotation from the Press Cutting Agency, 1, Abchurch Lane, London, E.C.

PROPRIETORS of BOOK PUBLISHING,
Newspaper, or kindred concerns requiring active PARTNERS,
INVESTORS, or to SELL—Publishers' Readers, Editors, Managers, &c., seeking PARTNERSHIPS, sound INVESTMENTS, or to PURCHASE, write MANAGER, 20A, Yukon Road, Balham. (Established 1902.)

NEWSPAPER PROPERTIES

BOUGHT, SOLD, VALUED; and supplied with every requisite.
Write for THE COMPLETE JOURNALIST, sent post free.
The Imperial News Agency,
London: 2 and 4, Tudor Street, E.C.
America: 700-706, Fourteenth Street, N.W., Washington, D.C.

C. MITCHELL & CO., Agents for the Sale and Purchase of Newspaper Properties, undertake Valuations for Probate or Purchase, Investigations, and Audit of Accounts, &c. Card of Terms on application.
Mitchell House, 1 and 2, Snow Hill, Holborn Vindict, E.C.

ATHENÆUM PRESS.—JOHN EDWARD
FRANCIS, Printer of the Athenæum, Notes and Queries, &c., is prepared to SUBMIT ESTIMATES for all kinds of BOOK, NEWS, and PERIODICAL PRINTING.—13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

Catalogues.

THE INTERNATIONAL BOOK CIRCULAR,
No. 139, containing a Special Article, entitled "SOME CON-TEMPORARY FOREIGN CHEMISTS," by Dr. M. O. FORSTER, together with an exact Bibliography of their Publications, and a Double Plate of their Portraits. Specimen Copies gratis.—WILLIAMS &
NORGATE, Book Importers, 14, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, W.C.

MESSRS. HENRY YOUNG & SONS possess one of the LARGEST STOCKS of OLD and NEW BOOKS in GREAT BRITAIN, and they will be glad to hear from any one in search of Books out of print, as they can in many cases supply them at once.
ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE MONTHLY. Price 6d.
12, South Castle Street, Liverpool.

LEIGHTON'S

CATALOGUE of EARLY PRINTED and other
INTERESTING BOOKS, MANUSCRIPTS, and BINDINGS.
Part VII. R.—SHAKESPEARE, 160 Illustrations, price 2s. NEARLY READY.
Parts I.—VI., containing A—Q, with 890 Illustrations in Facsimile.
Price 15s. the 6 Parts.

J. & J. LEIGHTON, 40, Brewer Street, Golden Square, W.

H. H. PEACH, Antiquarian Bookseller, 37, Bel- voir Street, Leicester, issues CATALOGUES of MSS. and OLD BOOKS post free to Book Collectors. No. 9 contains Manuscripts Fourteenth and Eighteenth Centuries—Sanskrit Illuminated MS.—
Early Printing, &c.

CATALOGUE of FRENCH BOOKS, at greatly reduced prices. I. PHILOSOPHY. II. RELIGION. III. HIS-TORY. IV. POETRY. DRAMA. MUSIC. V. BEAUX-ARTS. VI.
GEOGRAPHY. VII. MILITARY. VIII. FICTION. IX. GENERAL
LITERATURE.
DULAU & CO. 37, Soho Square, London, W.

FIRST EDITIONS of MODERN AUTHORS, including Dickens, Thackeray, Lever, Ainsworth; Books illustrated by G. and R. Cruikshank, Phiz, Rowlandson, Leech, &c. The largest and choicest Collection offered for sale in the World. Catalogues issued and sent post free on application. Books Bought.—
WALTER T. SPENCER, 27, New Oxford Street, London, W.C.

CATALOGUE No. 42.—Drawings—Engravings—
Turner's Liber Studiorum—Lucas's Mezzotints after Constable—Engravings, Hogarth, Girtin—Etchings, Palmer, Whistler—Japanese Colour-Prints—Illustrated Books—Works by Ruskin. Post free, Sixpence. WM. WARD, 2, Church Terrace, Richmond, Surrey.

MATHEMATICAL BOOKS.—SECOND-HAND
CATALOGUE just ready.—GALLOWAY & PORTER, Booksellers, Cambridge.

PORTRAIT of GEORGE MEREDITH, after the celebrated Painting by G. F. WATTS, R.A., Engraved by W.
BISCOMBE GARDNER. Limited to 600 Artist's Proofs at One Guinea each. Size, 12 in. by 8 in.—Address W. BISCOMBE GARDNER, Hoathly, Hind Head, Surrey.

GEORGE CRUIKSHANK.

Collectors, Dealers, and Owners having Coloured
or Plain Caricatures, Etchings, Engravings,
Woodcuts (or Books containing same)

Done by GEORGE CRUIKSHANK

Which they wish to dispose of

Are requested to send Title, Publisher, Date,
Condition, and Price asked to

EDWIN H. WENDELL, Esq.,
500 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

MARLBOROUGH.—TO BE SOLD, WITH POSSESSION.—ANHOLME, on the London and Bath Road, within a mile of Marlborough College, with fine Views of the magnificently Timbered Slopes of Savernake Forest, a DETACHED FIREHOLD RESIDENCE, with Six Bedrooms, Dressing Room,
Three good Reception Rooms, and Domestic Offices. Stabling, Lodge, Gardener's Cottage, and other Out-buildings. Well-timbered Grounds, nearly Four Acres, bounded and intersected by the River Kennet.—
Solicitors, Messrs. KAYS & JONES, 37, Norfolk Street, W.C. Particulars of Mr. MARK JEANS, Marlborough.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS.—WINTER APART-
MENTS.—Comfortably Furnished Sitting-Room and One Bedroom. Pleasant and central. No others taken.—R. H., 66, Grove Hill Road, Tunbridge Wells.

INFORMATION to LIBRARIANS and COL-
LECTORS.—To SELL PRIVATELY, a fine COLLECTION of FRENCH BOOKS, Revolutionary Papers, Placards, Pamphlets on Louis XVI, Marie Antoinette, Robespierre, Napoléon, &c. All genuine and scarce. Fine opportunity at very moderate charge. Price 200l.—
Write to M. A. H., 9, Connaught Street, Hyde Park.

APARTMENTS.—SITTING-ROOM and BED-
ROOM. Would suit a Gentleman of Literary tastes seeking permanent quarters and who would value good attention, good cooking, and a quiet home. Terms very moderate for a permanency.—
1, Heathcote Street, Mecklenburg Square, W.C. References required.

Sales by Auction.

Manufacturer's Stock of Electric Light Fittings, also Wire,
&c.; Scientific Instruments and Apparatus, &c.

FRIDAY, January 27, at half-past 12 o'clock.

MR. J. C. STEVENS will OFFER, at his Rooms, 38, King Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C., by order of the Liquidator, a MANUFACTURER'S STOCK of ELECTRIC LIGHT FITTINGS, also Wire, Cable, &c.—Photographic Cameras and Lenses—Optical Lanterns and Slides—Cinematograph
Films—Microscopes, with all Accessories, also Eye-pieces and Parts—
Field and Astronomical Glasses—Surveying and Drawing Instruments —and a large quantity of valuable Miscellaneous Property.

On view day prior 2 to 5 and morning of Sale. Catalogues on application.

Curios.

MR. STEVENS'S NEXT SALE of CURIOSITIES from all Parts will take place on TUESDAY, January 31, at his Rooms, 38, King Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C. Further particulars in next Advertisement.

Rare and Valuable Books.

MESSRS. HODGSON & CO. will SELL by
AUCTION, at their Rooms, 115, Chancery Lane, W.C., on TUESDAY, January 24, and Two Following Days, at 1 o'clock
RARE and VALUABLE BOOKS, comprising Graves and Cronin's History of the Works of Sir Joshua Reynolds, 4 vols., Engravings from the Works of Sir Thomas Lawrence—Mrs. Frankau's J. R. Smith, and William and James Ward, with the Portfolios of Engravings—
Berenson's Florentine Painters, 2 vols.—Poster's Miniature Painters,
2 vols., Edition de Luxe, and other Modern Fine-Art Books—Gold's
Mammals of Australia, 3 vols. Original Subscriber's Copy—Meyrick's Ancient Armour, Plates in Gold and Colours, 3 vols.—Atkyns's
Gloucestershire, 1768—Enderbie's Cambria Triumphans, with Emblazoned Coats of Arms—Smith's History of Virginia, 1632—Barclay's Ship of Fools, 1570—A Collection of Incunabula, including Specimens from the Early Venetian Presses—an Illuminated Horæ, with full-page Miniatures and other MSS. on Vellum—Black-Letter Books and Books in Old Bindings—a Complete Set of the Huth Library 29 vols., Large Paper—Ooupil's Historical Monographs, Japanese Paper Copies—
Editions de Luxe of Fielding, Dickens, and Lytton, and other handsome Sets of Thackeray, Scott, Kipling, &c., several in fine bindings—Fgan's Life in London and other Books, with Coloured Plates—Standard Works in History, Travel, Biography, Philosophy, and Theology—
Journal of Botany, from 1863 to 1904, and other Scientific Serials, &c.

To be viewed and Catalogues had.

Miscellaneous Books.

MESSRS. HODGSON & CO. will SELL by
AUCTION, at their Rooms, 115, Chancery Lane, W.C., on TUESDAY, January 31, and Following Day, at 1 o'clock, MIS-CELLANEOUS BOOKS, including Smith's Catalogue Raisonné, complete in 9 vols.—Purlington Fine-Arts Club Catalogues of the Works of the Ferrara-Bologna and Netherlandish Schools—Perkins's Tuscan Sculptors, 2 vols.—Martin, Histoire de France, 25 vols. half-morocco—
Bakluyt's Voyages, Limited Edition, 12 vols. Scott's Waverley Novels, Border Edition, 48 vols.—Kipling's Works, Edition de Luxe, 22 vols., &c.

Catalogues on application.

Valuable Law Books, including the Library of R. H. DUN,
Esq., of Lincoln's Inn—Handsome Bookcases—Engravings, &c.

MESSRS. HODGSON & CO. will SELL by
AUCTION, at their Rooms, 115, Chancery Lane, W.C., on FRIDAY, February 3, at 1 o'clock, VALUABLE LAW BOOKS, comprising a Complete Set of the Law Reports to date—a Fine Set of the Law Times Reports, 68 vols.—Law Journal Reports from 1822 to 1897—
Encyclopedia of the Laws of England, 13 vols.—Modern Text-Books,
&c.; also large and handsome Mahogany and Oak Bookcases, and other
Furniture—Mahogany Cabinet, containing a Collection of Mineralogical Specimens—Portraits and Engravings.

Catalogues are preparing.

WILLIS'S ROOMS, KING STREET, ST. JAMES'S SQUARE, S.W.

A Library of about 4,000 Volumes of Books, formed by that well-known Collector ALEXANDER NESBITT, Esq.,
F.S.A., and removed from the residence, Oldlands, Sussex, in consequence of the Estate having been disposed of.

MESSRS. ROBINSON & FISHER are instructed to SELL, at their Rooms, as above, on WEDNESDAY, February 1, at 1 o'clock precisely, the LIBRARY, comprising a large quantity of General Literature. Works on Topography, Painting, Furniture, Artistic Decorations, Natural History, Science, Ancient and Modern Architecture, Poetry, Travel, &c.

May be viewed two days prior, and Catalogues had of W. SANDERS
FISKE, Esq., Solicitor, 10, Norfolk Street, Strand; and of the AU-CTIONEERS.

THE SECOND IMPRESSION WILL BE READY EARLY NEXT WEEK.

THE UNVEILING OF LHASA.

By EDMUND CANDLER.

With a large number of Illustrations and a Map. Demy 8vo, 15s. net.

Times.—"Precisely the kind of book which the ordinary reader wants."

Standard.—"Of interest from cover to cover."

Morning Post.—"This lively account of a highly remarkable undertaking, and of a land, a city, and a people of extraordinary interest."

St. James's Gazette.—"An extremely interesting story, as well as a record of events."

London: EDWARD ARNOLD, 41 and 43, Maddox Street, W.

The Library of Major-General JELF, C.M.G.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE
will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on WEDNESDAY, January 25, and Two Following
Days, at 1 o'clock precisely, the LIBRARY of Major-General JELF, C.M.G., late Governor of the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, including the Writings of Jesse, Walton—Historical and Poetical Literature—Curtis's Flora Londinensis—Shaw's Staffordshire—Works on Costume, &c.; the Property of the late Miss EMMA SEYMOUR, Wilton Street, S.W., comprising Froissart and Monstrelet's Chronicles—the Writings of Voltaire and Rousseau—Leslie's Life of Constable—Portraits in illustration of British Mezzotint Portraits, by J. Chaloner
Smith; the Library of CHARLES BOWEN, Esq., late of Streatham,
S.W., including Modern Literature—Poetry—Fiction—Standard Authors
—Sporting Books—Books of Prints—Antiquities, &c.; other Properties, containing Early Printed Books—Illuminated Horæ—Serial Publications—an interesting Collection of Tracts, many relating to America—
Herring's Portraits of the St. Leger Winners—Chaffers's Ceramic Gallery—Sussex Archaeological Collections, 1848-83—Works on Bibliography—the Studio, a Set—Works on Natural History, Botany, and other Scientific Subjects, Architecture, Archaeology, &c.

May be viewed two days prior. Catalogues may be had.

Engravings and Etchings, chiefly by the Old Masters.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE
will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on MONDAY, January 30, and Following Day, at 1 o'clock precisely, ENGRAVINGS and ETCHINGS, comprising Examples from the Works of Aldegraver, Beham, A. Dürer, and other Old Masters, the Property of HEDLEY PEEK, Esq., deceased; an extensive Collection of the Works of W. Hollar, the Property of a NOBLEMAN; Etchings by Rembrandt, including Two Impressions of 'The Three Trees'—Plates from Turner's 'Liber Studiorum,' 'England and Wales,' &c.—Engravings illustrating the History of the French Revolution, the Property of a NOBLEMAN—a few Framed Engravings, &c.

May be viewed two days prior. Catalogues may be had.

Valuable Books, including several small Private Libraries.

MESSRS. PUTTICK & SIMPSON will SELL by AUCTION at their Galleries, 47, Leicester Square, W.C., at the END of JANUARY, valuable BOOKS in all branches of Literature, including important Scientific Works, rare First Editions, &c.

MESSRS. CHRISTIE, MANSON & WOODS
respectfully give Notice that they will hold the Following SALES by AUCTION at their Great Rooms, King Street, St. James's Square, the Sales commencing at 1 o'clock precisely:—

On MONDAY, January 23, the REMAINING
WORKS of the late EDWIN HAYES, R.H.A. R.I.

On TUESDAY, January 24, ENGRAVINGS of the EARLY ENGLISH SCHOOL.

On WEDNESDAY, January 25, and THURSDAY,
January 26, the LIBRARY of the MOST. HON. the MARQUESS of ANGLESEY, from Beau Desert, Staffordshire.

On FRIDAY, January 27, COINS, OBJECTS of ART and VERTU, ARMS and ARMOUR, from numerous Sources.

On SATURDAY, January 28, IMPORTANT
PICTURES, the Property of Messrs. LAWRIE & CO., late of 159, New Bond Street, W. (by Order of Arthur F. Whitney, Esq., the Receiver appointed by the Court on the Dissolution of the Partnership).

LOCAL EXAMINATIONS in MUSIC, 1905.—
The Pianoforte Works selected by the Associated Board of the Royal Academy of Music and Royal College of Music form eleven Volumes of the Augener Edition. Net 1s. each. Specified List of Pieces gratis on application.

Augener, Ltd., 199, Regent Street, 6, New Burlington Street, W., and 22, Newgate Street, E.C.

TO SCHOOLS.—Suitable SELECTION PARCELS of MUSIC are sent on approval. Liberal Discount allowed.
Returns to be made at the end of the Term. Catalogues gratis.

"This energetic firm continues to issue every month novelties of interest and educational value."—Daily Telegraph.

Augener's School Department, 6, New Burlington Street, London.

THE TECHNIQUE of INDEXING. By MARY
PETHERBRIDGE, Nat. Sci. Tripos, Indexer of the East India Company's Records, the Drapers' Company's Records, the Warrington Corporation Records, &c. Price 5s. net.—Published by the Secretarial Bureau, 52a, Conduit Street, London, W.

JUST PUBLISHED, January 14, 1905. Price Two Guineas net.

Limited to 500 numbered Copies.

THE EIGHTEENTH CENTURY ARCHITEC-
TURE of BATH. By MOWBRAY A. GREEN, A.R.I.B.A. With 195 Full-Page Plates and 52 other Engravings, Views, Details, Plans, Sketches, and Facsimiles. Also Articles on Mrs. Piozzi, Bath Theatre, and Thomas Beach. 4to, pp. xvii-263, art linen, top edges gilt.
Bath: George Gregory, Bookseller to H. M. Queen Alexandra.

CHURCH of SACRÉ CŒUR, MONTMARTRE,
PARIS; Bromley Municipal Buildings—Second Premiated Design;
American Domestic Architecture: Sewers and Drains; Mr. Clausen's Lectures at the Royal Academy; Sir W. White on American Engineering Work; Smoke Abatement; Types of Concrete-Steel Structures (Student's Column), &c.—See the BUILDER of January 21 (4d.; by post, 4½d.). Through any Newsagent, or direct from the Publisher of the Builder, Catherine Street, London, W.C.

NOW READY.

THE QUARTERLY REVIEW.
No 402. JANUARY, 1905. 6s.

1. WILLIAM STUBBS, CHURCHMAN AND HISTORIAN.
2. HORACE WALPOLE and WILLIAM COWPER. By R. E. Prothero.
3. PROFIT-SHARING and CO-PARTNERSHIP.
4. The MAKING of the UNITED STATES.
5. POULTRY-KEEPING as a BUSINESS. By "Home Counties."
6. The TUDORS and the NAVY.
7. CANON AINGER. By Edith Schel.
8. The DIRECTION and METHOD of TEACHING.
9. MATTHEW ARNOLD. By the President of Magdalen.
10. TARIFFS and NATIONAL WELLBEING.
11. The WAR in the FAR EAST. With a Map.
12. The PRIME MINISTER'S DUTY.

John Murray, Albemarle Street, W.

LATEST PUBLICATIONS of the ZOOLOGICAL SOCIETY of LONDON.

The ZOOLOGICAL RECORD. Vol. XL. Being Records of Zoological Literature relating chiefly to the Year 1903. Edited by DAVID SHALP, F.R.S. Price to Fellows, 25s.; to the Public, 30s.

The several Sections of the Volume are now issued separately, and can be obtained at the Society's Office, 3, Hanover Square, W., where Communications concerning this Publication should be made only.

ABSTRACTS of the WILLS in REGISTER SOAME, 1620, in the PREROGATIVE COURT of CANTERBURY.
This Volume of over 600 Pages, now ready, contains concise but exhaustive Abstracts of every Will in the two volumes known as Register Soame, containing 1,366 Wills, with 40,000 References to Persons, and 10,000 to Places, all thoroughly indexed. The volume will be delivered at 6 dols., or 23s (carriage extra). All correspondence relative to the work may be addressed to the Editor, J. HENRY LEA, 14, Clifford's Inn, London, E.C. Subscriptions should be sent to N. C. NASH, Treasurer, New England Historic Genealogical Society, Somerset Street, Boston, Mass., U.S.A.

DAVID NUTT,

57-59, LONG ACRE.

NOW READY AT ALL BOOKSELLERS' AND CIRCULATING LIBRARIES.

DIVORCE. Being a Translation of 'Un Divorce.' By PAUL BOURGET, of the Académie Française. Crown 8vo, 416 pp. cloth, 6s.

* * A powerful indictment of divorce, and a vigorous defence of the religious ideal of marriage, cast in the form of a tragic story of present-day Paris.

FOR THE TERCENTENARY OF DON QUIXOTE

CERVANTES (Miguel De). El ingenioso Hidalgo Don Quixote de la Mancha. Primera edicion del texto restituido. Con Notas y una Introduccion por JAIME FITZMAURICE KELLY y JUAN ORMSBY. 2 vols. Royal 8vo. 1-98-99. Limited issue, sumptuously printed at the Constable Press on Hand-Made Paper. Half-bound, top gilt, 2l. 12s. 6d. net. A few Copies printed on Japanese vellum, 6l. 6s. net.

* * Mr. Kelly's Edition of 'Don Quixote' is the first which freed the text from the incorrections and interpolations which had disfigured it for over 250 years, and restored it to the form finally approved by Cervantes. Of this magnificent Edition, the masterpiece of the Constable Press, and one of the noblest Works ever produced in England, only a small stock remains. Only 30 more Copies can be offered at the price of 2l. 12s. 6d., after the sale of which the price will be raised to 3l. 3s.

JUST ISSUED.

FOLK-LORE.

TRANSACTIONS OF THE FOLK-LORE SOCIETY.

A Quarterly Review of Myth, Tradition, Institution, and Custom.

Vol. XV. No. 4. DECEMBER, 1904. 5s. net.

Contents.

The EUROPEAN SKY-GOD. II. ARTHUR BERNARD COOK.

NOTES from ARMENIA. J. RENDEL HARRIS.

COLLECTANEA: A Votive Offering from Korea. E. S. HARTLAND. With Plate IX. — Folk-lore of the Negroes of Jamaica.—Dairy Folk-lore, and other Notes from Meath and Tipperary. A. H. SINGLETON.

CORRESPONDENCE: Eggs in Witchcraft. EDWARD PEACOCK.—A Harvest Custom. H. W. UNDERDOWN.

REVIEWS: Baldwin Spencer and F. J. Gillen, 'The Northern Tribes of Central Australia.' E. SIDNEY HARTLAND.—Paul Sébillot, 'Le Folk-Lore de France.' E. SIDNEY HARTLAND.—W. Carew Hazlitt, 'Faints and Folk-lore.' CHARLOTTE S. BURNE.—'Anzeiger der Finnisch-Ugrischen Forschungen.'—J. Fitzgerald Lee, 'The Greater Exodus'—Walter Johnson and William Wright, 'Neolithic Man in North-East Surrey.'—Herbert M. White, 'Old Ingleborough Pamphlets' (No. 1).—John Nicholson, 'The Capital of the Yorkshire Wolds.'

INDEX.—TITLE and CONTENTS.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS.

THE CAMBRIDGE MODERN HISTORY.

Planned by the late LORD ACTON.

Edited by Dr. A. W. WARD, Dr. G. W. PROTHERO, and STANLEY LEATHES, M.A.

To be completed in 12 vols. royal 8vo, buckram, gilt top, 16s. net each.

TIMES on Vol. I.—"The opening volume of what promises to be one of the most important books of our time."

DAILY TELEGRAPH.—"This promises to be the standard modern history for long years to come."

NEW VOLUME NOW READY.

Vol. III. THE WARS OF RELIGION.

CONTENTS OF VOLUME III.

1. The Wars of Religion in France. By A. J. BUTLER, M.A.
2. French Humanism and Montaigne. By A. A. TILLEY, M.A.
3. The Catholic Reaction, and the Valois and Báthory Elections in Poland. By R. NISBET BAIN.
4. The Height of the Ottoman Power. By MORITZ BROSCHE, Ph.D.
5. The Empire under Ferdinand I. and Maximilian II. By A. W. WARD, Litt.D. LL.D. F.B.A.
6. The Revolt of the Netherlands. By the Rev. GEORGE EDMUNDSON, M.A.
7. William the Silent. By the Rev. GEORGE EDMUNDSON, M.A.
8. Mary Stewart. By the late THOMAS GRAVES LAW, M.A.
9. The Elizabethan Naval War with Spain. By J. K. LAUGHTON, M.A. Hon.D.Litt.Oxford.
10. The Last Years of Elizabeth. By SIDNEY LEE, Litt.D.
11. The Elizabethan Age of English Literature. By SIDNEY LEE, Litt.D.
12. Tuscany and Savoy. By E. ARMSTRONG, M.A.
13. Rome under Sixtus V. By COUNT UGO BALZANI, Hon.D.Litt.Oxford.
14. The End of the Italian Renaissance. By A. J. BUTLER, M.A.
15. Spain under Philip II. By MARTIN HUME, R.S.A.
16. Spain under Philip III. By MARTIN HUME, R.S.A.
17. Britain under James I. By the late Prof. S. R. GARDINER, D.C.L. LL.D. F.B.A.
18. Ireland to the Settlement of Ulster. By R. DUNLOP, M.A.
19. The Dutch Republic. By the Rev. G. EDMUNDSON, M.A.
20. Henry IV. of France. By STANLEY LEATHES, M.A.
21. The Empire under Rudolf II. By A. W. WARD, Litt.D. LL.D. F.B.A.
22. Political Thought in the Sixteenth Century. By the Rev. J. NEVILLE FIGGIS, M.A.

THE FOLLOWING VOLUMES ARE ALSO READY:—

Vol. I. The RENAISSANCE. Fourth Impression, 16s. net.

Vol. II. The REFORMATION. Second Impression, 16s. net.

Vol. VII. The UNITED STATES. Second Impression, 16s. net.

Vol. VIII. The FRENCH REVOLUTION. 16s. net.

TERMS TO SUBSCRIBERS.—Subscriptions will be received for the Complete Work at £7 10s. net, which may be either paid in advance or by payments of 12s. 6d. net for each Volume on publication.

A PROSPECTUS WILL BE SENT ON APPLICATION.

A COMPANION TO GREEK STUDIES.

Edited by LEONARD WHIBLEY, M.A., Fellow of Pembroke College, University Lecturer in Ancient History. Demy 8vo, with 5 Maps and 141 Illustrations, 18s. net.

The Contents include Chapters on Geography, Fauna, and Flora; History; Literature, Philosophy, and Science; Art, Mythology, and Religion; Public Antiquities; Private Antiquities; Criticism and Interpretation.

LIST OF CONTRIBUTORS.

T. CLIFFORD ALLBUTT, M.D. F.R.S.
R. D. ARCHER-HIND, Litt.D.
A. B. COOK, M.A.
F. WARRE CORNISH, M.A.
F. R. EARP, M.A.
H. J. EDWARDS, M.A.
LADY EVANS.
E. A. GARDNER, M.A.
P. GILES, M.A.
JAMES GOW, Litt.D.
J. RENDEL HARRIS, M.A.
Miss HARRISON.
R. D. HICKS, M.A.
HENRY JACKSON, Litt.D.
M. R. JAMES, Litt.D.
Sir RICHARD JEBB, Litt.D.

R. J. G. MAYOR, M.A.
The Late R. A. NEIL, M.A.
C. W. C. OMAN, M.A.
The Late F. C. PENROSE, Litt.D.
WILLIAM RIDGEWAY, M.A.
E. S. ROBERTS, M.A.
J. E. SANDYS, Litt.D.
A. H. SMITH, M.A.
H. F. TOZER, M.A. F.R.G.S.
H. B. TRISTRAM, LL.D. D.D. F.R.S.
A. W. VERRALL, Litt.D.
CHARLES WALDSTEIN, Litt.D.
LEONARD WHIBLEY, M.A.
A. S. WILKINS, Litt.D.
WILLIAM WYSE, M.A.

A PROSPECTUS WILL BE SENT ON APPLICATION.

London: Cambridge University Press Warehouse, Ave Maria Lane. C. F. CLAY, Manager.

NOW READY.

A SECRET AGENT IN PORT ARTHUR.

Being the Adventures of a Correspondent in Port Arthur and Manchuria.

By WILLIAM GREENER.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

Extracts from Reviews on day of publication.DAILY TELEGRAPH.—"A welcome contribution to the literature of the Far Eastern conflict."STANDARD.—"Interesting and picturesque."MORNING POST.—"His book contains many sketches of men and incidents which are certain to render it popular."DAILY CHRONICLE.—"Very admirable, vivid, and brightly told."MORNING LEADER.—"A valuable and exhilarating description.....Teems with high spirits, the best book on the struggle yet published."

NOW READY.

The RUSSO-JAPANESE CONFLICT.

By K. ASAKAWA, Professor of Philosophy at Dartmouth College. Illustrated with Portraits. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

LETTERS and RECOLLECTIONS of GENERAL LEE, 'The Idol of the South.' By Capt. ROBERT E. LEE. Illustrated. Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d. net.

FAR and NEAR. By John Bur-

ROUGH, Author of 'Green Fields,' 'Walt Whitman,' &amp;c. Crown 8vo, 5s. net.

BITS of GOSSIP. By Rebecca

HARDING DAVIS. Fcap. 8vo, 5s. net.

The CONCEPTION of IMMOR-

TALITY. By JOSIAH ROYCE, Professor of Philosophy at Harvard University. 2s. 6d. net.

JOHN of GAUNT. By Sydney

ARMITAGE-SMITH. Demy 8vo, 18s. net.

*"The depth of research.....displayed.....is scarcely more remarkable than the skill with which the results of that research have been applied.....No more important work on mediæval history has appeared during recent years."Athenæum."The scenes of contemporary history are drawn with a minuteness which has never been surpassed.....Reveals a wonderful completeness of research."Daily Chronicle."A remarkable achievement in historical research and analysis."Globe.WANDERINGS in the GREAT

FORESTS of BORNEO. By ODOARDO BECCARI. Translated by Dr. E. H. GIGLIOLI, C.M.Z.S., and Edited by F. H. H. GUILLEMARD, M.D. F.R.G.S., &amp;c. 18s. net.

*"The general naturalist will find the book packed with interesting information.....The intending traveller will pick up many valuable suggestions.....The botany of the tropical forest is described with greater knowledge than is usual in similar books."Nature.SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.

THIRD EDITION.

BROKE of COVENDEN. By J. C. SNAITH.IN the BISHOP'S CARRIAGE. By MIRIAM MICHELSON.The PRISONER of MADE-

MOISELLE. By CHARLES D. G. ROBERTS.

The BANDOLERO. By Paul Gwynne.PATHS of JUDGMENT. By Anne DOUGLAS SEDGWICK.The DIVINE FIRE. By May Sinclair.ARCHERS of the LONG BOW. By ARTHUR MOORE.

THIRD EDITION.

VERANILDA. By George Gissing.A JAPANESE NIGHTINGALE. By ONOTO WATANNA.

London: ARCHIBALD CONSTABLE &amp; CO., LTD., 16, James Street, Haymarket.

GEORGE PHILIP & SON'S LIST.*PHILIPS' COMPARATIVE SERIES OF LARGE SCHOOLROOM MAPS.

The great success that attended the publication of the 'Elementary Atlas of Comparative Geography' has induced the Publishers to produce a series of large Schoolroom Maps, based upon the same principle. It is an undoubted fact that the most serviceable Maps for class-teaching purposes are those that illustrate clearly, and at a glance, both Political and Physical features. This new series will be found to possess this combination, and, in addition, to form an extremely attractive decoration for the Schoolroom.

|                                 | ins.          | ins. | s.       |
|---------------------------------|---------------|------|----------|
| The World ...                   | Size 80 by 63 |      | Price 18 |
| Africa ...                      | 74            | 59   | 16       |
| South Africa ...                | 68            | 45   | 16       |
| England and Wales ...           | 80            | 63   | 18       |
| Ditto (Politically Coloured) 80 |               | 63   | 18       |
| Europe ...                      | 80            | 63   | 18       |
| North America ...               | 74            | 59   | 16       |

|                                     | ins.          | ins. | s.       |
|-------------------------------------|---------------|------|----------|
| New Zealand (North Island) ...      | Size 80 by 63 |      | Price 16 |
| Scotland ...                        | 80            | 63   | 18       |
| Ditto (Politically Coloured) 80     |               | 63   | 18       |
| British Isles, Asia—in preparation. |               |      |          |

Others to follow.A Series of Test Maps is also issued, uniform in size and price, but without names."There can be no hesitation in advising teachers to select this series of maps for their class-rooms."
*Geographical Teacher.PHILIPS' COMPARATIVE SERIES OF SCHOOL ATLASES.

These Atlases consist of entirely New Maps, and are intended to meet the requirements of Pupils in Higher Schools and other Students of Geography. They are not indiscriminate collections of maps and fragments of maps that have for years done duty in other Atlases, but are built up on a carefully considered system; and every map has been specially constructed to take its place in the general plan.

1. PHILIPS' MODERN SCHOOL*ATLAS of COMPARATIVE GEOGRAPHY. 64 beautiful Coloured Plates of Diagrams and Maps, with full Index. Size, 11½ by 9 inches. Strongly bound in cloth boards, price 3s. 6d."The maps are beautifully produced; the names full without being crowded."—*Educational Times.2. PHILIPS' ATLAS of COM-PARATIVE GEOGRAPHY for JUNIOR CLASSES. A Series of 40 Coloured Plates, containing over 90 Maps and Diagrams, with Index. Size, 11½ by 8½ inches. Price, strongly bound in limp cloth, 2s."Should greatly assist the rational teaching of geography."*—*School World.PHILIPS' PHYSICAL SCHOOL*GLOBE. Diameter, 19 inches; circumference, 4 feet 9 inches. Prices: 2l. 2s. net, 3l. 3s. net, and 4l. 4s. net, according to style of mounting."The best method of obtaining a true knowledge of the relation of the various land and water surfaces of the earth to one another, their relative dimensions, and their distribution in latitude and longitude, is by the use of a good terrestrial globe."—*School World.PHILIPS' ELEMENTARY CLASS-BOOK of PHYSICAL GEOGRAPHY. New Edition, Revised and Enlarged. By Prof. R. GREGORY, F.R.A.S. Crown 8vo, cloth cover, price 1s. 6d."A book often wanted to supplement the teaching of class geography."*—*Head Teacher.TIME CHART of the WORLD,showing Instant Time in 160 Important Cities. Patented by EDWARD COWELL. Folded in paper cover, price 6d. net. *[Just published.]PHILIPS' NEW COMMERCIAL*ARITHMETIC. An Elementary Commercial Arithmetic for Continuation and Commercial Classes. By POLLARD WILKINSON, B.A. B.Sc. F.R.A.S., Organizing Master, Ipswich Education Committee, and WILLIAM E. WATKINS, Ph.D., Chief Secretary to the East Suffolk County Education Committee. One important feature is the early introduction of decimals and the almost total exclusion of vulgar fractions. Special attention is given to the Metric System. 142 pages, cloth, price 1s. ANSWERS, paper cover, price 6d. net.The PAGEANT of the MONTHS.

A Series of 12 handsome Line Drawings by LEVINE HELMER, in which each Month is personified (Six by Boys, Six by Girls), illustrative of Verses by CHRISTINA G. ROSSETTI. A Masque for Little Children, suitable for Conversation Lessons, Entertainments, &amp;c. Size, 17 by 21 inches. The Set, in Wrapper, price 6s. net.

WOODWORK for SCHOOLS. By

F. F. LYDON. Containing 45 Plates and 56 Diagrams and Illustrations of Tools. Crown 4to, cloth boards, price 3s. 6d. net.

PHILIPS' LARGE-PRINT GLOBES.*SCHOOL EDITION, Coloured Physically.COMMERCIAL EDITION, Coloured Politically.

Diameter, 14 inches; circumference, 3 feet 6 inches.

Prices (either Colouring), 17s. 6d. net and 21s. net, according to style of mounting.

The PRACTICAL TEACHING of*GEOGRAPHY in SCHOOLS and COLLEGES. By ALEX. MORGAN, M.A. D.Sc. F.R.S.E. Third Edition. Containing 18 Charts and Diagrams. Price 6d. net.*"May do much towards hastening the reform which is already in progress almost everywhere."Secondary Education.PHILIPS' SECONDARY SCHOOL*REGISTER of ATTENDANCES.

No. I. FORM REGISTER. One Year. Sixty Names. Price 1s. 6d.

No. II. GRAND REGISTER. One Term. 300 Names. Cloth, price 2s. 6d.

No. III. GRAND REGISTER. One Term. 600 Names. Cloth, price 3s. 6d.

"Arranged so as to get the whole term's attendances into one line."—*School Manager.GEOMETRICAL THEOREMS

Practically Demonstrated by means of Dissected Models by THOROLD GOSSET. They can be used to render concrete such Geometrical Notices as Point-Straight, Line-Parallel, Triangle-Circle, Diameter. In Wooden Box, accompanied by Coloured Chart and Handbook, price 4s. net.

"Teachers of geometry should make a point of seeing these models."—*Educational Times.GEOMETRICAL DRAWINGS for*SCHOOLS. By F. F. LYDON. Crown 4to, cloth boards, price 3s. 6d. net.MODEL and BLACKBOARD DRAW-*ING. By F. F. LYDON. Crown 4to, cloth boards, price 3s. 6d. net.PHILIPS' AMBIDEXTROUS and*FREE-ARM BLACKBOARD DRAWING and DESIGN. By F. F. LYDON. Crown 4to, cloth, price 5s.

Illustrated List of Educational Publications sent gratis on application.

The London Geographical Institute:

GEORGE PHILIP &amp; SON, LIMITED, 32, Fleet Street, London.

SWAN SONNENSCHN & CO.

NOW READY.

THE SCHOOLMASTER'S YEAR-BOOK.

THIRD YEAR OF ISSUE. Greatly Enlarged, 1,118 pp. 5s. net.

TWO NEW VOLUMES OF THE SOCIAL SCIENCE SERIES.

THE HISTORY OF THE ENGLISH COMMON LAWS.

By J. S. NICHOLSON, M.A. D.Sc.
Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

THE PHILOSOPHERS AND THE FRENCH REVOLUTION.

By P. A. WADIA,
Professor of History and Political Economy, Gujarat College, Ahmedabad.
Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

JUST OUT.

VOL. I. OF

THE PRINCIPLES OF PHYSIOLOGICAL PSYCHOLOGY.

By Prof W. WUNDT.

A Translation of the Fifth and wholly Re-written (1902-3) German Edition by Prof. E. B. TITCHENER, M.A.

In 3 vols. Vol. I. with 156 Illustrations, demy 8vo, 12s.

A PHILOSOPHICAL INTRODUCTION TO ETHICS.

By W. R. BOYCE GIBSON.

Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. net.

"An admirable book."—Education.

"Mr. Gibson's book ought to be read, weighed and considered by all who are interested in the latest philosophical controversy."—Guardian.

THE GROWTH OF THE ENGLISH MANOR.

By Prof. P. VINOGRADOFF.

Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d.

A NEW EDITION OF PREMATURE BURIAL.

By WALTER R. HADWEN, M.D.

Being a New and Revised Edition of Mr. William Tebb and Col. Ed. Terry Vollum's Book.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE SOUND OF A VOICE THAT IS STILL.

Being Selections from the Writings of the late CLIFFORD HARRISON.

Selected and Arranged for daily use by A. G.

Pott 8vo, leather, 2s. net; cloth, 1s. 6d. net.

HINTS TO RECITERS.

By the late CLIFFORD HARRISON.

Pott 8vo, leather, 2s. 6d. net; cloth, 2s. net.

A NEW FIRST FRENCH READER AND WRITER.

By Prof. R. J. MORICH. Price 2s.

The publication of the 'First French Reader and Writer,' by Morich and Lyon, will be continued.

NEW COOKERY BOOK BY COL. KENNEY HERBERT ("Wyvern"). VEGETARIAN AND SIMPLE DIET.

Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

"Full of good things in the way of vegetarian recipes."—Daily Graphic.
"The book may serve to introduce people to many tasty dishes, which have the merit of giving a wider range of plain but pleasant fare."—Glasgow Herald.

NINTH EDITION, ENTIRELY REWRITTEN.

SCHOOL HYGIENE.

By A. NEWSHOLME, M.D. F.R.C.P., and W. C. C. PAKES, D.P.H.

With a Chapter on 'Eyesight,' by JAMES KERR, M.D.

311 pages, with 43 Illustrations, 3s.

AN INTRODUCTION TO THE REPUBLIC OF PLATO.

By WILLIAM BOYD, M.A. B.Sc. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. net.

A DICTIONARY OF BATTLES.

By T. B. HARBOTTLE,

Author of 'Dictionary of Quotations' (Classical), 'Dictionary of Historical Allusions,' &c.

Small demy 8vo, 7s. 6d.

FAMOUS SAYINGS AND THEIR AUTHORS.

By E. LATHAM, Author of 'Idiomatic Phrases' (French), &amp;c.

Small demy 8vo, 7s. 6d.

A NEW EDITION OF

FRANCES POWER COBBE'S AUTOBIOGRAPHY.

1 vol. crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

THE FOURTH DIMENSION.

By C. H. HINTON, Author of 'Scientific Romances,' &amp;c.

Illustrated. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d.

"Prof. Hinton has done well to attempt a treatise of moderate size, which shall at once be clear in method and free from the technicalities of the schools."—Pall Mall Gazette.

IMPORTANT TO OFFICERS AND STUDENTS OF MILITARY HISTORY.

NOW READY, the First Volume of the "Special Campaign Series," entitled

FROM SAARBRUCK TO PARIS.

By Lieut.-Col. SISSON PRATT.

With 10 Sketches and Maps. Crown 8vo, 5s. net.

"A clear and useful little work, plentifully supplied with maps."—Illustrated."A very valuable work."—United Service Magazine."The book before us is of great merit."—British Army.

READY SHORTLY.

VOL. II. OF

STUDENT'S TEXT-BOOK OF ZOOLOGY.

By ADAM SEDGWICK, M.A.,

Fellow and Lecturer of Trinity College, Cambridge.

Demy 8vo, 18s.

ARITHMETICAL EXAMPLES.

WITH ANSWERS.

By I. LOGAN, F.R.G.S.

Head Master of Ormond School for Boys, Dublin.

Crown 8vo, 1s.

SWAN SONNENSCHN &amp; CO., LIMITED, 25, High Street, Bloomsbury, W.C.

MR. NASH'S LIST.

NEW BOOK BY MAJOR MARTIN
HUME.

NOW READY.

Large crown 8vo, price 7s. 6d.

SPANISH INFLUENCE ON ENGLISH LITERATURE.

BY

MARTIN HUME,

Examiner in Spanish in the University of London.

MORNING POST. — "A fascinating book—fascinating, that is, for readers of literary tastes."

READY SHORTLY, demy 8vo, price 7s. 6d.

THE TRUTH ABOUT THE TSAR,
And the Present State of Russia.

By CARL JOUBERT,
Author of 'Russia as it Really Is.'

READY SHORTLY.

Demy 8vo, with Portraits, price 12s. 6d.

WITH THE RUSSIANS IN PEACE AND WAR.

Recollections of a Military Attaché.

By Col. the Hon. F. A. WELLESLEY,
Formerly British Military Attaché in Russia.

SECOND IMPRESSION NEXT WEEK.

Demy 8vo, 2 vols. price 24s. net.

THE PRIVATE LIFE OF TWO EMPERORS,

William II. of Germany and Francis Joseph of Austria.

POPULAR SIX-SHILLING NOVELS
SOPHY BUNCE.

By THOMAS COBB.
[Shortly.]

THE OTHER WORLD.

By F. FRANKFORT MOORE.

THE GOLDEN THREAD.

By TOM GALLON.

THE LETTERS WHICH NEVER REACHED HIM.

ANONYMOUS.
[Fifth Edition.]

London: EVELEIGH NASH, 32, Bedford Street.

ELLIOT STOCK'S
NEW BOOKS.

Tastefully printed, with broad margins, in large 4to size, with over 150 Photographic Illustrations, handsomely bound, with gilt top, price 21s. net.

NORMAN TYMPANA and LINTELS. With Figures or Symbolical Sculpture, still, or till recently, existing in the Churches of Great Britain, with an extended
Introduction and Description. By CHARLES
EDWARD KEYSER, M.A. F.S.A.

In crown 4to, cloth, fully illustrated with Portraits, &c., price 21s. net.

The GARRICK CLUB. By PERCY FITZGERALD, F.S.A. Author of 'The Life of Garrick,' 'Lives of the Kembles,' &c.

"Full of good stories, well illustrated, and especially rich in reminiscences of Thackeray."—Weekly Times.

"A volume full of delightful chat about notable people, while the numerous illustrations have an historical value."
Graphic.

SECOND EDITION.

In square crown 8vo, bound in art cloth,
price 5s. net.

SIX LECTURES on PAINTING.

Delivered to the Students of the Royal Academy of Arts in January, 1904. By GEORGE
CLAUSEN, A.R.A. R.W.S.

"We should doubt whether since the days of Reynolds's memorable discourses the students in the Royal Academy schools have ever listened to such stimulating and helpful guidance as Mr. Clausen has provided in these lectures."
Athenæum.

"A work that will be specially helpful to art students, and of wide general interest to lovers of pictures."—Standard.

In crown 8vo, tastefully bound, price 5s.

The LOVE LETTERS of a LADY of QUALITY of the SEVENTEETH CEN-TURY. With 2 Facsimile Portraits from Miniatures.

"Full of romantic interest."—Newcastle Daily Chronicle.

"A refined and artistic piece of work."
Aberdeen Free Press.

NEW NOVELS.

In crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s.

The SCHOOL of LIFE. A Study
in the Discipline of Circumstance. By SYBIL
M. ILES.

In crown 8vo, cloth, gilt lettered, price 6s.

LIFE'S PHASES. A Domestic
Story. By MARY ADAMS COLLINGS.

RECENTLY PUBLISHED NOVELS

In crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s.

MALCOLM ROSS: a Romance.

By ALEXANDER CRAIB, F.S.A., Author of 'America and the Americans,' &c.

"A clever and very pleasant book, which merits a very hearty welcome. This very interesting work will enhance the high literary reputation Mr. Craib already enjoys."
Staffordshire Journal.

"'Malcolm Ross' is a most delightful romance."
Observer.

In crown 8vo, bound in cloth, gilt lettered, price 6s.

A PARISH SCANDAL. By Mrs. CHARLES MARSHALL.

"Brightly and crisply told. Sure to amuse many readers, and to instruct others."—Sheffield Daily Independent.

"A distinctly original and powerful new novel."—Rock.

In crown 8vo, handsomely bound in cloth, price 6s.

The PRINCESS INEZ. By REGINALD ST. BARBE, Author of 'In Modern Spain,' &c.

"A very readable romance of love and vengeance, recalling in some respects the story of Sardou's Fedora.....
Evidently written by a man who knows his Spain and his Spaniards, and can compose of them a flamboyant and yet a plausible story."—Literary World.

ELLIOT STOCK

62, Paternoster Row, London, E.C.

THE LIBRARY.

A QUARTERLY MAGAZINE OF BIBLIOGRAPHY
AND LIBRARY LITERATURE.

EDITED BY

J. Y. W. MACALISTER

AND

ALFRED W. POLLARD,

IN COLLABORATION WITH

KONRAD BURGER, LEOPOLD DELISLE,
MELVILLE DEWEY, and RICHARD GARNETT.

A NEW VOLUME BEGINS
THIS MONTH.

Among the Contents for 1904 were Articles on

Robert Proctor, by Alfred Pollard; the Perceval Legend, by Jessie L. Weston; Tottel's Miscellany, by W. W. Greg; Notes from the first French Translation of the Vicar of Wakefield, by G. F. Barwick; the Musée Dobrée at Nantes, by R. S. Faber; Bad Books, by R. F. Cholmeley; Secret Printing
during the Civil War, by H. R.
Plomer; Letters of Henry Bradshaw to Officials at the British Museum; Public Utilization of Existing Libraries, by James Duff
Brown; a Cataloguing Bureau for Public Libraries, by Stanley Jast; Reviews of recent French and German Books, by Elizabeth Lee.

Printed at the Chiswick Press.

Single Numbers, 3s.;

Annual Subscription, 10s. 6d.

Bound Volumes, 12s.

A few Complete Sets still in print.

Published by

KEGAN PAUL, TRENCH, TRUBNER & CO.,
LTD., Dryden House, Gerrard Street, W.C.

MR. HEINEMANN'S NEW BOOKS.

JAPAN BY THE JAPANESE.

A Survey by its Highest Authorities, Edited by ALFRED STEAD. Third Impression. 20s. net.

"An autobiography of a nation."—St. James's Gazette.LIFE AND LETTERS AT BATH IN THE EIGHTEENTH CENTURY.

By A. BARBEAU. With a Preface by AUSTIN DOBSON, and many Illustrations. 15s. net.

"A work of intense interest and outstanding brilliancy."

Pall Mall Gazette.

THE STORY OF ART THROUGHOUT THE AGES.

AN ILLUSTRATED RECORD from the French of S. REINACH. Profusely illustrated. 10s. net.

"A valuable book, and one that should fill a definite and useful mission."—Morning Post.

FRENCH PROFILES.

STUDIES IN THE LITERATURE OF FRANCE. By EDMUND GOSSE. 7s. 6d.

This Book deals in a critical and attractive manner with some of the leading literary men of the day in France.

THE COUNTRY DAY BY DAY.

By E. KAY ROBINSON, Author of 'To-day with Nature.' With 24 Full-Page Illustrations. 6s.

A delightful chronicle of a country year. [Jan. 25.]

THE BELLE OF THE FIFTIES.

Being Memoirs of Mrs. Clay, of Alabama, covering Social and Political Life in Washington and the South, 1853-66. Gathered and Edited by ADA STERLING. With Portraits. 10s. 6d. net. [Jan. 25.]

This Book is full of the most entertaining Anecdotes of many of the notabilities of the Fifties—Social, Political, Musical, Literary, and Theatrical.

A HANDBOOK TO CHOPIN'S WORK.

By G. C. ASHTON JONSON. 6s.

[Jan. 27.]

This Handbook will be found indispensable to all Amateurs and Students as an aid to a systematic and thorough knowledge of Chopin's Works.

THE LAND OF THE BLESSED VIRGIN.

Impressions and Sketches in Andalusia. By W. SOMERSET MAUGHAM. With Frontispiece. 6s. [Jan. 27.]

THREE NEW NOVELS.—SIX SHILLINGS EACH.

MR. E. F. BENSON'S NEW NOVEL.

AN ACT IN A BACKWATER.

Mr. Benson tells a story of love and courtship in a quiet cathedral town. Readers of 'The Challoners' will not be disappointed in this very amusing book.

D I A N E.

By KATHARINE H. BROWN. With Frontispiece.

A Romantic Tale of the French Communistic Colony of Icaria at the abandoned Mormon settlement near Nauvoo.

ROBERT CAVELIER.

By W. D. ORCUTT. With many Illustrations.

A Romance of the Sieur de la Salle and his discovery of the Mississippi.

London: WM. HEINEMANN, 21, Bedford Street, W.C.

MESSRS. LONGMANS &amp; CO.'S LIST.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION.

THE
AMERICAN REVOLUTION.

By the Right Hon.

Sir GEORGE OTTO TREVELYAN, Bart.

CHEAP EDITION. With Portrait. Vols. I., II., III.

Crown 8vo, 5s. net each.

\ * Vol. I. of this Edition was issued as Part I. of the Original Edition. It has been largely Rearranged, carefully Revised, and in part Rewritten.*

A GARDENER'S YEAR.

By H. RIDER HAGGARD,

Author of 'A Farmer's Year,' &amp;c.

With 26 Illustrations, 8vo, 12s. 6d. net.

\ * This Work is not a Text-book, but a record kept throughout the year of the various operations carried on in a Norfolk garden of moderate size, in which a good many varieties of fruit-trees, flowers—including orchids—and vegetables are grown. It also treats incidentally of matters kindred to their cultivation.The Author hopes that it may please those readers to whom such things are of interest, and at the same time convey a certain amount of useful information which may help towards the establishment of a successful garden.*

The LAST LETTERS of AUBREY

BEARDSLEY. Edited by the Rev. JOHN GRAY, Priest of the Archdiocese of St. Andrews, Edinburgh. Crown 8vo, 5s. net.

HANDBOOKS FOR THE CLERGY.—New Vol.

Edited by ARTHUR W. ROBINSON, B.D., Vicar of Allhallows Barking by the Tower.

INTEMPERANCE. By the Right

Rev. HENRY HORACE PEREIRA, Bishop of Croydon. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. net.

BY THE DEAN OF WESTMINSTER.

SOME THOUGHTS on INSPIRA-

TION. Three Lectures in Westminster Abbey, together with an Address to Sunday-School Teachers on the Teaching of the Bible, and a Short List of Books recommended for further Study. Crown 8vo, sewed, 6d. net; cloth, 1s. net.

POPULAR EDITION.

ROMAN CATHOLIC CLAIMS. By

CHARLES GORE, D.D., Bishop Designate of Birmingham. Popular Edition, with New Preface. Crown 8vo, sewed, 6d. net.

THE EDINBURGH REVIEW.

No. 411. JANUARY, 1905.

Price 6s.

1. The REFORMATION in ENGLAND.
2. AUBREY DE VERE, POET.
3. The COLOUR QUESTION in the UNITED STATES.
4. The FALL of the DIRECTORY.
5. BISHOP CREIGHTON.
6. SWEDEN.
7. SPENSER in IRELAND.
8. HOMER and his COMMENTATORS: a Review of Modern Researches in the Prehistoric Mediterranean.
9. TYPHOONS and CYCLONES.
10. BURNIE-JONES.
11. The "GREAT CONSULT."

THE ENGLISH HISTORICAL REVIEW.

Edited by REGINALD L. POOLE, M.A. Ph.D.

Fellow of Magdalen College and Lecturer in Diplomatic in the University of Oxford.

JANUARY, 1905. Price 5s.

Contents.

Articles.

The AUTHENTICITY of the TWELVE TABLES.

By A. H. J. Greenidge, D.Litt.

RONCESVALLES. By the Right Hon. Sir Edward

Fry, D.C.L.

The NORTHERN QUESTION in 1717. By J. F.

Chance. Part I.

Notes and Documents.

The BATTLEFIELD of HASTINGS. By F. Baring.

The IRISH ABRIDGEMENT of the "EXPUGNATIO

HIBERNICA." By Whitley Stokes, C.S.I. D.C.L.

JAMES VI. and ROMÉ. By G. F. Warner, D.Litt.

And others.

Reviews of Books. Notices of Periodical Publications.

LONGMANS, GREEN &amp; CO.

39, Paternoster Row, London, E.C.

MACMILLAN &amp; CO.'S

LIST.

DIARY & LETTERS
OF MADAME D'ARBLAY

(1778-1849). As Edited by her Niece, CHARLOTTE BARRETT. With Preface and Notes by AUSTIN DOBSON. With Photogravure Portraits and other Sketches. In 6 vols. Vol. I, 1778 to June, 1781. Vol. II., 1781-86. 8vo, 10s. 6d. net each.

ENGLISH MEN OF LETTERS.
NEW SERIES.

THOMAS MOORE.

By STEPHEN GWYNN. Crown 8vo, gilt top, flat back, 2s. net.

GREAT LAWN TENNIS PLAYERS.

Their Methods Illustrated. By GEORGE W. BELDAM, Author of 'Great Golfers,' and P. A. VAILE, Author of 'Modern Lawn Tennis.' Illustrated by 229 Action-Photographs. Medium 8vo, 12s. 6d. net.

A fully illustrated Prospectus post free on application.

DON QUIXOTE.

Translated by SHELTON. In 3 vols. 8vo, 3s. 6d. net each; or Roxburgh binding, 5s. net each.

[Library of English Classics.]

POPULAR EDITION NOW READY.

THE GOLDEN TREASURY.

Selected from the Best Songs and Lyrical Poems in the English Language. Selected and Arranged with Notes by FRANCIS T. PALGRAVE. Pott 8vo, 1s. net.

MISCELLANEOUS ESSAYS AND ADDRESSES.

By HENRY SIDGWICK. 8vo, 10s. net.

MORNING POST.—"The essays are singularly lucid and sane, revealing a thoroughness of knowledge of the subjects discussed and an evenness of judgment which mark the author as on a level with the best minds of his time. No one can read them without wishing to know more of Sidgwick's work."

Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

COLONIES AND COLONIAL
FEDERATIONS.

By E. J. PAYNE, Fellow of University College, Oxford. With Map. [English Citizen Series.]

HARVARD LECTURES ON GREEK SUBJECTS.

By S. H. BUTCHER, Litt.D. LL.D., late Professor of Greek in the University of Edinburgh. Crown 8vo, 7s. net.

ACADEMY.—"These lectures are not only full of thought, they are also written, it is superfluous to say, in admirable English."

THE SECRET OF A GREAT INFLUENCE.

Notes on Bishop Westcott's Teaching. By Mrs. HORACE PORTER. With a Chapter on Bishop Westcott's Commentaries by the Rev. ARTHUR WESTCOTT. Crown 8vo, 3s. net.

SOCIOLOGICAL PAPERS.

By FRANCIS GALTON, E. WESTERMARCK, P. GEDDES, E. DURKHEIM, HAROLD H. MANN, and V. V. BRANFORD. With an Introductory Address by JAMES BRYCE, President of the Society. Super-royal 8vo, 10s. 6d.

MACMILLAN'S GUIDE BOOKS.
GUIDE TO EGYPT AND THE SUDAN.

Including a Description of the Route through Uganda to Mombasa. With 35 Maps and Plans. Third Edition. 5s. net.

GUIDE TO PALESTINE AND SYRIA.

With 13 Maps and 5 Plans. Third Edition. 5s. net.

GUIDE TO ITALY AND SICILY.

With 19 Maps and 36 Plans. Fifth Edition. 10s. net.

MACMILLAN & CO., LIMITED, London.

HURST & BLACKETT'S
JANUARY LIST.

NEW AND IMPORTANT WORK.

In 2 vols. royal 8vo, containing numerous Illustrations in Colour, Photogravure, and Half-Tone, several Maps, &c., price 27. 2s. net.

LHASA,
THE TIBET EXPEDITION,
1903-4.

By PERCEVAL LONDON,
Special Correspondent of the Times.

An illustrated Prospectus will be sent post free on application.

[Ready immediately.]

ANTARCTICA: Two Years amongst
the Ice of the South Pole. By Dr. OTTO
NORDENSKJÖLD. Illustrated by reproductions of over 200 Photographs specially taken for this Work. 1 vol. demy 8vo, price 18s. net.

[Ready immediately.]

TWENTY YEARS AGO. (Reminis-cences.) By EDMUND DOWNEY, Author of
'Through Green Glasses.' 1 vol. large crown
8vo, with numerous Portraits, price 6s. net.

[In January.]

The CHILD SLAVES of BRITAIN.

By ROBERT SHERARD, Author of 'The
White Slaves of England,' &c. 1 vol. large crown 8vo, illustrated, price 6s. net.

[In January.]

IN REMOTEST BAROTSELAND.

From the Victoria Falls to the Source of the Zambesi. By Col. COLIN HARDING, C.M.G.,
Acting Administrator for Barotseland. With over 50 Illustrations reproduced from Photographs taken on the Journey. 1 vol. demy
8vo, price 12s. 6d. net.

[In January.]

NEW AND POPULAR
NOVELS.

The MARRYING of SARAH GAR-
LAND. By Mrs. FINNEMORE, Author of
'Tally,' &c. In 1 vol. crown 8vo, price 6s.

The MARRIAGE YOKE. By
ARABELLA KENEALY, Author of 'Dr.
Janet of Harley Street,' 'Charming Renée,'
&c. In 1 vol. crown 8vo, price 6s.

The MAN at ODDS. By Ernest
RHYS, Author of 'Welsh Ballads,' 'The
Whistling Maid.' In 1 vol. crown 8vo, price 6s.

AFTER ALL. By Beatrice Whitby,
Author of 'The Awakening of Mary Fenwick,'
&c. In 1 vol. price 3s. 6d.

A VOICE from the VOID. By Helen
BODDINGTON, Author of 'The Awakening.'
In 1 vol. price 6s.

THAT LITTLE MARQUIS of
BRANDENBURG. By W. R. H. TROW-
BRIDGE, Author of 'An Inarticulate Genius,'
&c. In 1 vol. crown 8vo, price 6s.

AT the BACK of the WORLD. By
L. T. MEADE, Author of 'Rosebury,' 'The
Witch Maid,' &c. In 1 vol. crown 8vo, price 6s.

London: HURST & BLACKETT, LIMITED,
182, High Holborn, W.C.

"Possess his books."—TEMPEST, III. ii. 98.

Kindly ask for METHUEN'S POPULAR
NOVELS at your Library. Ask your Bookseller to show you the Books recently published by Messrs.
METHUEN, especially The ILLUSTRATED
POCKET LIBRARY, with Coloured Plates. All good Booksellers keep these Books. Messrs. METHUEN will send their Catalogue to any applicant.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

A GREAT ROMANCE IS READY.

THE SECRET WOMAN.

By EDEN PHILLPOTTS. Crown 8vo, 6s.

SECOND EDITION IN THE PRESS.

"It is an admirable novel, original in subject, thoughtful in development, with living characters whose motives and consciences are imagined and displayed with a knowledge of human nature unusual in modern fiction. His descriptions of the seasons on and around Dartmoor, where the story is laid, are charming word-pictures. He has the artist's eye for tone, for the exquisite contrasts of colour and form, the poetry of movement in trees and gorse and fern, in water and clouds; but he has also that science of nature which the artist rarely possesses, and he not only enjoys and suggests the sweet influences of woods and heaths and streams, sunsets and sunrises, moonlight and mist, but he understands the lives of these "inanimate" phenomena."—Morning Post.

"The plot of this, his latest book, which effectually lifts him among the three or four novelists of first rank to-day, is as simple as any Greek tragedy. Mr. Phillpotts works out a remarkably strong theme with astonishing skill and restraint. What the Greeks knew as 'anagkē,' or inexorable necessity, presides over the story; and its workings are handled with singular tenderness and insight. I do not hesitate to say that Mr. Phillpotts by this book lays claim to the mantle of Mr. Hardy, and he will wear that mantle worthily."—Daily Mail.

On January 26 will be published a New Book by the Author of 'The Letters of a Self-Made Merchant to his Son.'

OLD GORGON GRAHAM.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

And on the same day a New Novel, full of movement, incident, and acute observation, by PERCY WHITE, entitled

THE SYSTEM.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

ROYAL and HISTORIC GLOVES and ANCIENT SHOES. Profusely illustrated in Colour and Half-Tone, and Described by W. B.
REDFERN, Author of 'Ancient Wood and Iron Work in Cambridge,' &c. 4to, 2l. 2s. net. The edition is limited to 250 copies.

ENGLAND UNDER the STUARTS.
By G. M. TREVELYAN. With Maps and Plans.
Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

ENGLISH SEAMEN. By Robert
SOUTHEY. Vol. II.: Richard Hawkins, Granville,
Essex, and Raleigh. Crown 8vo, 6s.

POEMS. By Emily Dickinson. First
Series. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d. net.

This is the first issue in England of a very remarkable volume of poems. Miss Dickinson is a highly spiritual and mystical writer, and her poems have some of the flavour of William Blake.

METHUEN'S POPULAR NOVELS.

SIX SHILLINGS EACH.

HE THAT EATETH BREAD WITH ME.

H. A. M. KEAYS.

THE MYSTERY OF THE MOAT.

ADELINE SERGEANT.

HEART OF MY HEART.

ELLIS MEREDITH.

THE VIRGIN AND THE SCALES.

C. COTTERELL.

THE WEANS AT ROWALLAN.

K. FITZPATRICK.

SIXPENNY BOOKS.

Kindly ask at all Booksellers' and Newsagents' for METHUEN'S SIXPENNY NOVELS (the last one is ABANDONED, by W. CLARK RUSSELL), and the Complete Edition of the Novels of DUMAS (the last one is SYLVANDIRE).

Messrs. METHUEN are now publishing a series of long novels, bound in cloth, at One Shilling net. Several new volumes are now ready.

Kindly write for a Prospectus.

METHUEN & CO. 36, Essex Street, London, W.C.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 21, 1905.

CONTENTS.

|   |         |
|---|---------|
| GREAT ENGLISHMEN OF THE SEVENTEENTH CENTURY   | PAGE 73 |
| A NEW TRANSLATION OF THE GEORGICS...  | 74      |
| HENRY SIDGWICK'S MISCELLANEOUS ESSAYS ...   | 75      |
| PHILOSOPHY AND THE SCIENCES ...   | 77      |
| ESSAYS ...  | 78      |
| FORESTRY ...  | 79      |
| ENGLAND AND THE COLONIES ...  | 79      |
| YEAR-BOOKS ...  | 81      |
| OUR LIBRARY TABLE (The Downfall of Russia; The Moscow Expedition; Uganda's Katikoro in England; The Diary of a Church-goer; Chaucer; Dictionary of Battles; Christianity and History; Reprints) ... | 81-83   |
| LIST OF NEW BOOKS ...   | 83      |
| THE INCORPORATED ASSOCIATION OF HEAD MASTERS; PALIO AND PONTE; MOTHER GOOSE'S MELODIES; SILCHESTER; HYPNEROTOMACHIA POLIPHILI; THE HISTORY OF WEXFORD ...   | 83-85   |
| LITERARY GOSSIP ...   | 85      |
| SCIENCE—TABU AND TOTEMISM IN MADAGASCAR; SOCIETIES; MEETINGS NEXT WEEK; GOSSIP ...  | 85-88   |
| FINE ARTS—BOOKS ON FURNITURE; THE INTERNATIONAL SOCIETY OF PAINTERS, SCULPTORS, AND GRAVERS; THE 'ARIOSTO' IN THE NATIONAL GALLERY; FRANCESCO GUARDI; SALE; GOSSIP ...                              | 88-90   |
| MUSIC—GOSSIP; PERFORMANCES NEXT WEEK...   | 91      |
| DRAMA—A UNIQUE COPY OF THE FIRST EDITION OF SHAKESPEARE'S EARLIEST TRAGEDY; GOSSIP ...  | 91-92   |

LITERATURE

Great Englishmen of the Seventeenth Century.
By Sidney Lee. (Constable & Co.)

It is a pity that Mr. Lee's new book is bound like a school-prize. But for the gaudiness of its cover, it is a book that deserves a place in every library of what might be called useful books. It contains no original discoveries, no profound generalizations, no subtleties of criticism. But it gives the results of sound scholarship and sound common sense in a dry but pleasant way; it gives an acute and compact account of many of the main results of the Renaissance in England; it tells the average reader all he need know of the main facts connected with the careers of Shakspeare, Bacon, Spenser, Raleigh, Sidney, and Sir Thomas More. It includes a good index, an elaborate analysis of contents, and a very useful chronological table of the leading events in European culture, from the introduction of printing into England in 1477 to Bacon's death in 1626.

The main part of the book was given in America in the form of lectures, and some of the natural disadvantages of lecturing are to be seen in the leisurable truisms on colonizing which fill the first two pages of the paper on Raleigh. All that is said in these two pages could have been said in one sentence, and was to have been, no doubt, for Mr. Lee is rarely diffuse, but for the lecturer's fear of not being thoroughly understood by an audience which has no time to think over one sentence before another is at its ears. Good writing, as apart from effective writing, is wasted upon any audience, and the whole effort to convince the ear rather than the eye leads to a method of putting things which can hardly co-exist with any attention to the style of accomplished literature. Happily Mr. Lee is not tempted into over-emphasis; the defect of being a little too explanatory, a little too much of the schoolmaster at times, is much more pardonable.

Perhaps the best essays in the book are those on More and Bacon. In both we have the study of a life at variance with an intellect, and it is in the presentment of such mental problems, without prejudice and without partisanship, that Mr. Lee is at his best. The essay on More is the statement of an enigma which is, after all, not explained. But how admirable is the disentangling of knotted threads of fact and report! how orderly is the arrangement of "whatever is known and thought" of the matter! how helpfully are all the materials brought together for one's own judgment! It is even more difficult to be just to Bacon than to be just to More; but Mr. Lee is just to Bacon. He lays bare much of the framework of his mind, shows the structure of his intentions, and, again, leaves us with all the materials for judgment. Yet while he suggests by his grouping of facts, his comments by the way, the essential thing in Bacon's character, he does not anywhere say it in so many words. The essential thing in Bacon's character was that, in life and in thought alike, he was concerned only with the discovery or recognition of first principles, not with their application. It was sufficient to him to be wise: what did it matter to him if he or others lived wisely? He was not concerned with the drawing of corollaries. Again, he let himself be robbed by his servants, and refused to believe that Galileo had found out the motion of the earth; yet he instructed the world in wisdom and science—practical wisdom and practical science. He rang the bell, he said, that called the wits together; he sent the "merchants of light" on their journeys: what did it matter to him that he stayed at home while they went forth, and that he could stumble in broad daylight? "The mind is the man.....A man is but what he knoweth."

It need hardly be said that Mr. Lee has much to say that is interesting in his two papers on Shakspeare. In a time when "cranks" are listened to, and there is no Inquisition for fools, there is still some use in putting down once more, in Mr. Lee's orderly and convincing way, a few of the main facts about the life and contemporary reputation of Shakspeare. These main facts have never been more rationally interpreted or more clearly grouped. Mr. Lee still seems to think it probable that Shakspeare wrote "for gain, not glory." But he shows that he was a very bad lawyer and a very moderate scholar, with a strong preference for "cribs"; and he pricks a very pretty bubble, perhaps somewhat pompously, when he says:—

"But there was no likelihood that he sought at first hand in Greek poetry for gnomical reflections on the commonest vicissitudes of human life. Poets, who write quite independently of one another, often clothe such reflections in almost identical language."

That is very true, and one of the evident things that need affirming in these freakish times. One of Mr. Lee's allusions, in some excellent remarks on the influence of Italy upon Shakspeare, is perhaps a little inaccurate:—

"The mystery of Italian waterways excited Shakspeare's curiosity. The Italian word 'traghetto,' which is reserved in Venice for the anchorage of gondolas, Shakspeare transferred to his pages under the slightly disguised form of 'traject.'"

Now in the first place it is not certain, though very probable, that Rowe is right in reading conjecturally "traject" for the "Tranect" of the First Folio: "Vnto the Tranect, to the common Ferrie | Which trades to Venice"; and secondly Shakspeare, if he meant "traghetto," was right in translating it "ferry," which is its ordinary meaning in Venice to-day.

Mr. Lee's account of Spenser is valuable for its facts, and for its view of the position of literature and men of letters at the beginning of the reign of Elizabeth. It gives a fairly sympathetic account of Spenser as a poet, though it reduces his claims to consideration, as M. Jusserand has recently done. "For the most part," Mr. Lee tells us,

"the 'Amoretti' reproduces the hollow prettiness and cloying sweetness of French and Italian conceits with little of the English poet's distinctive charm."

It is only in a few of the sonnets, it is true, that we see Spenser wholly master of himself; yet those few sonnets should not be overlooked. In his account of the Spenserian stanza Mr. Lee is inaccurate. "The Spenserian stanza," he says,

"was ingeniously formed by adding an Alexandrine, a line in twelve syllables, to the eight ten-syllabled lines of the stanza which was popular in France under the name of 'chant royal,' and in Italy under the name of 'ottava rima.'"

But the "chant-royal" and "ottava rima" are two different metres, and the Spenserian stanza is not formed by adding an Alexandrine to either of them. "Ottava rima" is a stanza of eight lines, the first six lines rhyming together alternately, and the last two lines forming a couplet. It is best known in England as the metre of Byron's 'Don Juan.' The "chant-royal" is the name not of a stanza, but of a poem, which consists of five stanzas of eleven lines each, with an envoi of five, six, or seven lines. The stanzas are all constructed on the same rhymes, and these for the most part follow this order:—A B A B C C D D E D E. The finest "chant-royal" in English is Mr. Austin Dobson's admirable 'Dance of Death.' There exist, also, examples of the "chant-royal" in which the stanzas are of ten lines only, with the rhymes thus arranged:—A B A B B C C D E D. This, the less usual form, comes a little closer to the Spenserian stanza, but is by no means identical with it. Nor is there any reason to suppose that Spenser went further afield than the seven-line stanza of the 'Mirror for Magistrates' for the foundation of his experiment. For six lines the two metres are identical; then, just as he does in his handling of the sonnet, Spenser binds the whole stanza together by the insertion of a new rhyme, instead of ending it abruptly by an extraneous couplet.

Mr. Lee is perhaps more at home in writing about Raleigh than in writing about Spenser; and his narrative of the life of the great colonist, who did actually find the "realms of gold," though he left it for the nineteenth century to profit by them, is vivid and fascinating. Nor, though he does not speak of it at length, does he fail to do justice to the spontaneous and "exuberant" quality of Raleigh's verse. It is only in the case of Sidney that we find him giving, as it seems to us, a radically unjust estimate of the work of any of his six great Englishmen.

The account of Sidney's life is interesting; we see him in all his parts, each played, for its brief space, as if there were no other part to play, and each with the same "lovely and familiar gravity." We see him on all his public and private errands over Europe, actually meeting Ronsard in France and Tasso in Italy, bringing back personal gifts from those two great influences in poetry. Three million acres of undiscovered land in America are granted to him; but he has written his 'Arcadia,' not founded it, and he is to come no nearer to that dream of a world. All this part of the romance of his life Mr. Lee sees and realizes for us; he writes well on the 'Arcadia' and on the 'Apology for Poetry.' But his fixed idea comes in to hinder him from seeing what was most significant in Sidney's life and in his work—the sonnets of Astrophel to Stella, and the love of Sidney for Penelope Rich.

Mr. Lee's fixed idea is that poets are very prosaic people at heart, and that the Elizabethan poets in particular were persons rather lacking in emotion or imagination, who translated and adapted the poems of French and Italian writers with great ability. He has done good service to literary history by finding out the origins of many sonnets and lyrics, from Sidney to Barnes, which were sometimes translated and sometimes imitated by one after another of the Elizabethan lyrists and sonneteers. He has shown that some whole collections of sonnets (like Daniel's sonnets to Delia) can in no sense be taken as personal confessions. This is valuable, because there were many estimable critics and historians of our literature who could not see for themselves (what to an unbiassed reader seems self-evident) that there was nothing whatever personal in such sonnets—no genuine emotion, no thrill of literal reality. But where Mr. Lee allows his theory to blind his sight is in seeing no lyrical merit in a song of Lodge because it has come into life out of the soil of some Desportes graveyard; and in seeing neither personal poetry nor personal feeling in the sonnets and lyrics of Sidney because he was often content to express himself in conventional or borrowed language.

Mr. Lee speaks very positively about Astrophel's feelings for Stella—is certain that "passion did not enslave him," as indeed it probably did not until those mourning bells had rung out for Stella's marriage. "Genuine affairs of the heart," he considers,

"the uncontrollable fever of passion, could have only remote and shadowy concern with the misty idealism and hyperbolical fancies of which the sonnet had to be woven."

But where are we to find anything "remote and shadowy" in almost all of the lyrics and in all the best of the sonnets? Has Lamb, after all, written in vain? Lamb has said, with all his emphasis and all his unerring instinct:—

"They are full, material, and circumstantiated. Time and place appropriates every one of them. It is not a fever of passion wasting itself upon a thin diet of dainty words, but a transcendent passion pervading and illuminating action, pursuits, studies, feats of arms, the opinions of contemporaries, and his judgment of them."

There we have a simple statement of fact, if plain words have their meaning and poetical sincerity is distinguishable from "hyperbolical fancies." Like most writers, with the incomparable exception of Lamb, Mr. Lee has not grasped the extraordinary value and importance of Sidney as a poet, nor did even Lamb pause to remember that it is in Sidney that we find the true beginning in England of the novel, of literary criticism, of the sonnet, and of the lyric. What Sidney brought into English lyric poetry was an absolute directness of speech, coupled with a perfected beauty of phrase. Who had there been before him since Chaucer? We find in one or two pieces of Wyatt a certain blunt straightforwardness of speech which, at its best, becomes poetical speech, though never of a rare or subtly passionate quality. Surrey did something more with metre, but had less to say; and Sackville added dignity; but it was for Sidney to create a language of the passions for the daily use of English poetry. The best parts of the best sonnets of Sidney have a plain homely rapture which was a new thing in English, and which has remained permanent in the language ever since; the best parts of his best lyrics are for force and nobility of passion almost unique.

The Georgics of Virgil. Translated into English Verse by Lord Burghclere. (Murray.)

IN spite of the incomparable beauty which marks the 'Georgics,' and which led Addison so happily to detect in them "all the perfection that can be expected in a poem written by the greatest poet in the flower of his age," the less highly finished pastorals of Virgil's imitative youth, and the splendid but unequal and artificial epic of his later years, have attracted from English critics and translators infinitely more care than they have been willing to give to his earlier masterpiece. There is a certain mystery about the composition of the 'Georgics.' The profound emotion with which it was received in Rome, and the almost Augustan honours which were showered on its author by the Italian people, have perplexed the annotators. Perhaps Gibbon was right in detecting in it a politico-religious object, patent to the Roman public, but concealed from us. At any rate, something about its purpose seems beyond our conjecture, and the extraordinary brilliancy of its execution rather baffles a translator than attracts him. Adequately to reproduce in a modern language the majestic charm of the original is beyond human ambition. Perhaps if a poet could be created who combined the strength of Dryden and the conciseness of Pope with the romantic richness of Keats, something might be produced in English which would be, not the 'Georgics,' but a parallel to that divine set of poems.

For some years past it has been known that Lord Burghclere has had the courage to face what is perhaps as hard a task as any that a poet-translator could desire. He undertook it ten or twelve years ago, when, as Mr. Herbert Gardner, he was Minister of Agriculture in Gladstone's House of Commons. In 1899, if we remember right, some specimens of the present version were published in The Nineteenth Century. In 1900 the whole of books i. and ii. was issued in a privately printed edition. Other samples appeared in magazines. In 1903 the whole poem was privately printed. Now at length, after repeated revision, it is given complete to the public, and it has enjoyed during these five or six years the criticism of a number of eminent scholars. There has, therefore, been no undue haste in the completion of the work, and it may be said at once that Lord Burghclere's version, merely as a piece of accomplished labour, does the highest credit to his patience and his skill. There are two ways in which relative success in the rendering of a famous ancient poem may be achieved. The one is by examining each of the earlier versions, and making a cento of all the felicities. This was frankly done in the eighteenth century, and less honestly in the nineteenth. The other is by allowing no third figure to come between the old master and the modern translator, but producing the version freshly, as if it were that of an unhackneyed work.

It is the latter procedure which appears to have tempted Lord Burghclere, and his ear does not seem to be familiar with the phrases of any predecessor, not even of Dryden. His brief preface makes no mention of any earlier translations of the 'Georgics,' and with one or two exceptions there is none which he needed to fear. Our early poets were curiously insensible to the splendour and beauty of the Latin. The earliest English version with which we are acquainted, that of Abraham Fleming (1589), is simply grotesque. It was followed by those of May (1628), of Brinsley (1633), and of Ogilby (1649), whose translations agree in this only, that they are rarely exact, and never poetical. At length, in 1697, appeared the famous version of Virgil by Dryden, who had been helped, so far at least as the 'Georgics' was concerned, by the accomplished Knightly Chetwood, whose acquaintance with Italian scenery and husbandry was useful to Dryden, and to whom we owe the luminous criticism that in the 'Georgics' Virgil "shines in his meridian." To no part of his Virgilian task does Dryden seem to have given such close attention, and his version has been admired for more than two hundred years. In the eighteenth century the work was again essayed by John Martyn (1741), who had the advantage of being a practical botanist, and by Joseph Warton (1753). In the course of the nineteenth century no version of the 'Georgics' appeared which can be considered to have competed with Dryden's, since that enthusiastic and delicate critic of Latin literature, Mr. Mackail, did not venture beyond prose, and of Frederic Myers's rhymed translation only a few fragments were ever published. We must, however, mention the version published in 1890 by Mr. James Rhoades, a poet whose graceful work is too little known. Mr. Rhoades's 'Georgics,' to the neat and scholarly qualities of which we drew attention at the time, is carefully fashioned in Thomsonian blank verse, and keeps closely, if a little timidly, to the original.

It is with Dryden alone, however, that Lord Burghclere competes, and opinions will doubtless differ as to whether the Virgilian magnificence is more closely approached by Dryden's bold and stalwart couplets, or by Lord Burghclere's romantic blank verse. We are conscious of the attractive charm which familiarity gives to the translation which has so long been a British classic. But we confess that when we compare Dryden and Lord Burghclere side by side, we cannot say that the advantage is always with the former. It is unfortunate that Dryden has not expatiated in prose upon his view of the 'Georgics' as a poem. He seems to have accepted Addison's admirable essay as leaving him free to lavish compliments on "the natural unaffected modesty" of the Earl of Chesterfield, a subject which now leaves us cold indeed. It would have been interesting to know whether, under Knightly Chetwood's guidance, Dryden really perceived the technical finish and appreciated the splendid colour of the 'Georgics.' We may be excused if we fear that he did not; that he failed, for instance, in his manly vigour, to observe how it grates upon us to receive—

Nor must Bumastus his old honours lose,
In length and largeness like the dugs of cows, as an equivalent of tumidis, Bumaste, racemis.

The extreme variety of the 'Georgics,' and the rapid transitions of its style, give Dryden typical opportunities for the illustration of his easy strength; but they leave him, on other occasions, helpless before the elevation and beauty of his original.

In order to compare the new wine with the old, we may take almost at random a draught of each. We open Book II. :—

Hactenus arborum cultus et sidera cœli :
Nunc te, Baccche, canam, nec non silvestria tecum
Virgulta, et prolem tarde crescentis olivæ.
Huc, pater o Lenæe; tuis hic omnia plena
Muneribus; tibi pampineo gravidus autumnus
Floret ager, spumat plenius vindemia labris.
Huc, pater o Lenæe, veni, nudataque musto
Tinge novo mecum dereptis crura cothurnis.

Dryden translates :—

Thus far of tillage, and of heavenly signs :
Now sing, my Muse, the growth of generous vines,
The shady groves, the woodland progeny,
And the slow product of Minerva's tree.
Great father Bacchus! to my song repair;
For clustering grapes are thy peculiar care :
For thee, large bunches load the bending vine,
And the last blessings of the year are thine.
To thee his joys the jolly autumn owes,
When the fermenting juice the vat o'erflows.
Come, strip with me, my god! come drench all o'er
Thy limbs in must of wine, and drink at every pore.

And Lord Burghclere :—

So far of tillage and the sovereign stars.
Now be my song of Bacchus, nor forget
His bosky thickets and the fruit that decks
The tardy olive. Come, Lenæan! come,
Lord of the winepress. Father of the vine!
For now is Nature laden with thy boons,
And by thy bounty all the joyous earth
With grape-clad autumn teems, and brimming vats
Foam with the vintage. Come, Lenæan! come,
Lord of the winepress, Father of the vine!
Strip off thy buskins, bare thy comely feet
And plunge knee-deep into the purple must.

The first observation which the reader cannot fail to make is that Virgil compresses into eight lines what it takes Dryden and Lord Burghclere twelve to say. But we cannot regard this as a fault. The extreme conciseness and fulness of Virgil's hexameters must be a little watered to be agreeable to a modern reader. The danger of pouring Latin poetry into close moulds of English verse was exhibited once for all, in 1871, by Prof. Robinson Ellis's marvellous version of Catullus, where everything was given, line for line and word by word, with the result that the whole produced no effect whatever upon the unclassical mind. It is needful for criticism to recollect that what we demand in a translation is not a curiosity of scholarship, but a living poem. Perhaps it would be enough to say that Dryden's 'Georgics' is a poem of 1700 and Lord Burghclere's a poem of 1900, and that neither resembles a poem of 30 B.C. But we must go further than this. In the early part of the passages quoted above it seems to us that the living translator has several advantages denied to his predecessor. His romantic vocabulary is closer to our impression of Virgil than Dryden's "classic" vocabulary is. "The tardy olive" seems better than "the slow product of Minerva's tree," because when Virgil wishes to allude to a deity or a tradition no one knows so well as he how to do it, and Dryden may keep his Minerva to himself. Again, Lord Burghclere retains a rhetorical artifice, which Dryden impoverishes himself by throwing away, in his repetition, at the right interval, of the "Huc, pater o Lenæe." We are not so sure that we can applaud the expansion of this invocation which Lord Burghclere allows himself, although his line and a half are melodious and appropriate, and not, it seems to us, without a Virgilian savour. Neither poet has really reproduced, by a flash of genius, the enchanting Italian landscape of tibi pampineo gravidus autumnus floret ager, but the general harmony and colour of the whole passage Lord Burghclere seems to have seized more truly than Dryden. But if the modern translator excels in melody and tone, the final couplet exemplifies the advantage which the noble strength of Dryden enjoys upon occasion. Lord Burghclere's Lenæus touches the wine-vat delicately, and the juice is not allowed to spurt above his knee. He is one of those sad husbandmen spoken of by Jeremiah the prophet, who tread the grapes without shouting. But Dryden's god plunges into the must like a madman, dereptis crura cothurnis, and we hear his cry far off among the vineyards.

It is interesting to see how the new translator treats what is one of the most familiar of all fragments of antique poetry, Virgil's ironic recapitulation of the forms which luxury took in Rome :—

For thee, in truth,
No sumptuous palace with imperial gates
Pours from its countless halls morn after morn
A flood of courtiers; true, thou mayst not gloat,
With open mouth, o'er jamb and lintel pranked
With costly tortoise shell; nor gaze and gape
At tapstries wrought with strange conceits of gold,
Or statues moulded in Corinthian bronze;
Nor are thy snowy fleeces stained with dyes
Of Tyrian purple; nor thy limpid oil
Marred with the scent of cinnamon.

Dryden frankly confessed his "want of sufficient skill in gardening, agriculture, &c.," and the vagueness of many of his technical terms betrays it. This is a very serious flaw in the armour of a translator of the 'Georgics.' Here Lord Burghclere enjoys a great advantage, since he had made himself an authority on husbandry before he thought of translating Virgil.

His knowledge of processes, and his curiosity about them, carry him cheerfully over those large tracts of the poem where it seems as though nothing but the personal magic of Virgil could prevent the poetry from evaporating. He preserves his equanimity even in that long passage of the third book where, as a seventeenth-century critic pitifully complained, Virgil "seems to begin with cows, then proceeds to treat of horses, now returns to cows." We must not close this review without complimenting Lord Burghclere on the perseverance which, in the midst of the distractions of political life, has enabled him to carry through, with distinguished success, a task which few scholar-poets would venture to undertake.

Miscellaneous Essays. By Henry Sidgwick.
(Macmillan & Co.)

HENRY SIDGWICK was one of those writers who have a reputation out of all proportion to the number of their readers. Not every one, as he would have said himself, not every person even among the cultivated classes, is interested in ethics, or economics, or politics, considered as a severe and scientific study; while Sidgwick made no concessions, and published nothing designed merely to attract the general reader. Consequently, even among those whose duties brought them into almost daily contact with the Knightbridge Professor, still more in the whole academic world, of which he was one of the brightest ornaments, he was far more honoured than known, and very many were content to take on trust his reputation as the "cleverest man in Cambridge." For this reason we are especially grateful to Mrs. Sidgwick for the volume before us. It will not, we think, add greatly to the knowledge of the author's tastes and powers possessed by those familiar with his philosophical and other works; but it will most assuredly give a very fair impression of his characteristics to those who were previously unfamiliar with them at first hand. It will, moreover, serve as a sort of mirror of the Cambridge mind. Sidgwick was emphatically a Cambridge man. This book shows the type of mental attitude cultivated at that university, as expressed by an intellect of admirable acuteness, range, and subtlety. When the historian wants to contrast a Cambridge with an Oxford training, in the effects on the men who most thoroughly imbibe the spirit of either place, he could hardly do better than compare these essays with, say, Newman's 'Idea of a University,' or Froude's 'Short Studies,' or Matthew Arnold's 'Essays on Criticism.' We do not say all, but certainly many of the most prominent of Cambridge characteristics are found in these essays, both in their strength and (shall we say?) their limitations. As an expression of the personality of Henry Sidgwick the collection has interest and value; as an embodiment of the Cambridge spirit it has enduring significance for all who care about tracing intellectual tendencies. It is safe to say these pages could not have been written by an Oxonian. It may be said that they could not have been the production of any other Cambridge man. Yet their most prominent characteristics are common to them and other writings, while we must remember that only to a very few men is it given to imbibe the whole spirit of a place or a movement, and to express it in an abiding form.

It will be convenient to point out briefly these characteristics, and to illustrate them from the book before us. The attitude of mind which here finds expression is one which sets more value on method than results, and is more concerned to point out erroneous steps in reasoning than to arrive at correct conclusions. It is entirely detached and academic, except perhaps for an occasional note of bitterness in regard to the Church. It is sceptical, critical, calm.

As Sidgwick says of Clough:—

"He was made for a freethinker rather than a scientific inquirer. His skill lay in balancing assertions, comparing points of view, sifting gold from dross in the intellectual products presented to him, rejecting the rhetorical, defining the vague, paring away the exaggerative, reducing theory and argument to their simplest form, their 'lowest terms.'"

Some of the questions discussed in these essays, even at the time of the Professor's writing, were arousing strong feeling and personal excitement. There is no hint of that here. His dispassionate, inquiring habit of thought subjects the most confident assertions to severe analysis, and refutes the most plausible analogies with a scholastic distinguo. As he puts it:—

"The impulse to put together different lines of thought requires methodical restraint, because one of the most fruitful sources of error in philosophy has been over-hasty synthesis and combination without sufficient previous analysis of the elements combined."

It is natural that with this feeling the author should appear almost entirely without the passion for generalization, so characteristic of an age of half-knowledge and lady novelists. His mental energy seems almost entirely occupied in clearing away preliminary difficulties. And there is the same sense of disappointment in reading these essays a first time that often occurs to the student of his larger work. After being taken through an admirably subtle and convincing discussion, after seeing a douche of cold water poured on the enthusiast, and prophecy subjected to a series of explanations which deprive it of its charm, we find only a few paragraphs left for the statement of the author's views, and are left asking ourselves, "What does it all come to, except a serious diminution of the spell of some radiant hypothesis and a clear limitation of the conditions under which any theory can be useful?" A second reading, as a rule, dispels this impression, and we find that Sidgwick has really told us a great deal more than he thought in the preliminary work of removing obstacles—that all our notions are cleared and defined. Even so, however, it remains true that the mental attitude is one of timidity rather than confidence. It is so fearful of rash guidance that it leaves us sometimes without direction, and has such a conscientious horror of over-statement that it is apt to avoid statement altogether. This is a characteristic not only of Sidgwick, but also of the academic spirit as exhibited at Cambridge.

The best instance of method in this book is the thoroughgoing criticism of Mr. Benjamin Kidd's lucubrations. As an instance of masterly exposition of fallacies and detached judgment it is unrivalled. It is also extremely amusing—for instance, the following account of Mr. Kidd's marvellous exploits in the capacity of historian:—

"The historian will here learn, for example, that in Rome occupations connected with agriculture are 'regarded as unworthy of freemen,' and that 'the freemen of Rome could hardly be said to work; they fought and lived on the produce of fighting'; and he will wonder what manual of Roman history Mr. Kidd has been using, whether it left out the familiar story of Cincinnatus, whether it mentioned Cato, what account it gave of the struggle between patricians and plebeians, of the Licinio-Sextian laws, of the colonization system of Rome. Again, he will learn that in all the Greek city states 'the ruling classes had a single feature in common—their military origin—.....they represented the party which had imposed its rule by force on the rest of the community,' and he will perhaps envy the boldness of conjecture which has illuminated the history of (e.g.) Attica for the special benefit of Mr. Kidd. Passing to mediæval history, he will find that 'amongst all the Western peoples there has been a slow but sure restriction of the absolute power possessed under military rule by the hand of the State,' and will vainly try to divine what account of the feudal system has fallen under Mr. Kidd's notice. His perplexity will be at its height when he finds that, in spite of this absolute power of the military head of the State, Western Europe has become in the twelfth century a vast theocracy, in which 'the Church is omnipotent,' one result of which is that 'all the attainments of the Greek and Roman genius are buried out of sight'; and he will ask himself whether Mr. Kidd has really never heard of the throng of students to the teaching of jurisprudence at Bologna in the twelfth century, or whether he is under the impression that Irnerius and his successors lectured exclusively on the Canon Law."

This is effective as a criticism of what Sidgwick elsewhere describes as follows:—

"It is thus left for the biologist—or, rather, the amateur equipped with the latest and most controverted results of biological speculation—to rush in where the historian fears to tread, and tell us what history means."

In another essay Sidgwick subjects other sociological prophecies to an even more scathing criticism. After taking Comte's canons of a subject being a science—Consensus and Prevision—he considers the works of Comte, Spencer, and Schäffle, and shows us their attitude towards the future of religion:—

"Schäffle cannot comprehend that the place of the great Christian churches can be taken by anything but a purified form of Christianity; Spencer contemplates complacently the reduction of religious thought and sentiment to a perfectly indefinite consciousness of an Unknowable and the emotion that accompanies this peculiar intellectual exercise; while Comte has no doubt that the whole history of religion has been leading up to the worship of the great Being Humanity, personified domestically for each normal individual male by his nearest female relatives."

Or, again, with regard to social organization:—

"With equal confidence history is represented as leading up, now to the naïve and unqualified individualism of Spencer, now to the carefully guarded and elaborated socialism of Schäffle, now to Comte's dream of securing seven-roomed houses for all working men—with other comforts to correspond—solely by the impressive moral precepts of his philosophic priests."

We quote these passages not merely as instances of the acute and subtle mind which they express, but as evidence of the way in which the exact and careful juxtaposition of incongruous ideas can produce a ridiculous result. And this brings us to another point of this book, its style. The expression throughout is accurate; nothing is said more or less than is intended. There is no rapid and easy writing to carry either the reader or the writer away; no rhetoric to delude the mind; no use of epigram to give exaggerated point and emphasis to an unusual notion. We feel that Sidgwick expressed what he wanted, had nothing to say which he could not express, and had no desire to adorn his thought, or make it either more or less a matter of intellect than it was. Hence the style is lucid, subtle, stimulating, never unpleasant, now and again humorous; never brilliant, persuasive, or charming. The element of appeal is entirely absent. Sidgwick speaks of the lack of "sweetness and light" in Newman; how he came to this extraordinary judgment it is hard to say, unless through mere anti-ecclesiastical prejudice. We must confess to an entire failure to find any "sweetness" in these essays, and full though they are of light, they are without lightness, and their delicacy is purely intellectual. The hostile and unsympathetic criticism of Matthew Arnold at the beginning is the best expression of the author's defects. With all that Sidgwick has written of sane and weighty criticism, it may be doubted whether Arnold's contribution to English political thinking has not been more suggestive, more fruitful, and in the truest sense more profound than that of the author of 'The Elements of Politics.' Arnold certainly showed the English people "the defects of its qualities" more completely than any other writer of whom we are aware; while to the general intellectual life of the country his thought has made a deservedly greater appeal than the arid dialectics in which Sidgwick sometimes, at any rate, appears to waste his energies. At the same time, many of the criticisms on Arnold are just.

In the essay on Clough we have another aspect of the author. He was a literary critic of singular fineness and discernment. We do not know that, except Mr. Hutton's essay, there is anything that is so well worth reading on the subject as this admirable study.

After saying,—

"To us it seems that what poetry has to communicate is not ideas, but moods and feelings; if a feeling reaches sufficient intensity, whatever be its specific quality, it is adapted for a poetical form," he states that Clough becomes

"unpoetical chiefly when he becomes less eagerly intellectual, when he lapses for a moment into mild optimism, or any form of languid contentment; or when, like Wordsworth, he caresses a rather too trivial mood; very rarely when the depths of his mind are stirred. He is, then, pre-eminently a philosophic poet; communicator of moods that depend on profound and complex trains of reflection, abstract and highly refined speculations, subtle intellectual perceptions, and that cannot be felt unless these are properly apprehended. He is to a great extent a poet for thinkers; but he moves them not as a thinker, but as a poet."

Has there ever been a more admirable summary of the peculiar quality of Clough? Take, again, the following rather technical discussion of English hexameters. Clough, says Sidgwick, has not naturalized the metre:—

"He has given it ease, but not simplicity; he has not tried to give it simplicity, and therefore he has succeeded with it. All English hexameters written quite au sérieux seem to us to fail; the line ought to be unconscious of being a hexameter, and yet never is. But Clough's line is meant to be conscious of being a hexameter; it is always suggestive of the ancient serious hexameters, with a faint but deliberate air of burlesque; a wink implying that the bard is singing academically to an academical audience, and catering for their artificial tastes in versification."

We do not think this could be bettered; and we may leave the book here. It reveals a personality highly and predominantly intellectual, unwearied in detecting fallacies, subtle, and ever alert, with the power of expressing itself in clear, accurate, and not ungraceful language, but a little lacking in imaginative vigour; stronger in criticism than construction; not deficient in a certain humour, but entirely without magnetic quality; both intellectually and emotionally unsympathetic, with none of the zest or lightness which gives rest and variety to the reader's mind, and with neither the power nor the will to carry a reluctant opponent half way to the other side. We may conclude with one quotation, which illustrates the quaint and gentle humour of the Professor. In speaking of the evil of lecturing he says:—

"My remarks do not refer to the class of—so-called—academic students who require the discipline of schoolboys. It may be necessary to drive these latter into lecture-rooms in order to increase the chance of their obtaining the required instruction somehow. I say 'increase the chance,' because it is by no means certain that young people of this turn of mind will actually drink of the fountain of knowledge, even if they are led to it daily between 10 A.M. and 1 P.M. But the compulsion may, no doubt, increase the chance of their imbibing knowledge, since it is difficult to find amusement during a lecture which will distract one's attention completely from the lecturer, although I have known instances in which the difficulty has been overcome by patient ingenuity."

Philosophy as Scientia Scientiarum, and a History of Classifications of the Sciences.
By Robert Flint, D.D. (Blackwood & Sons.)

Forty years ago Dr. Flint was lecturing on the classification of the sciences as professor at St. Andrews; and he had already delivered himself of a paper on the same topic to a learned society at Glasgow University "when a mere youth," that is, presumably, when the last century was somewhere very near the half-way point. Thus he speaks out of the fulness of a ripe reflection. Unfortunately, however, he now appears chiefly in the character of chronicler of the opinions of others. Would that we had before us instead the long promised, but never accomplished work, in which his own views on the relations of the sciences to one another were to have been set forth! The present history, however, is introduced by a short essay on the scope of philosophy; and from this may be gathered something, though by no means all we could wish, as to the positive doctrine at the back of the critical handling of authorities.

To deal first with the body of the work, we take it that Dr. Flint would himself consider its value to lie not so much in what a logician might call its "intension" as in its "extension." Needless to say, we do not mean by this that the treatment is too lengthy, but, on the contrary, that it is far too short to do justice to the full meaning and purpose of the many classifiers of the sciences who come under review. For, as it turns out, their name is legion. Dr. Flint's reading has been remarkably wide, and amid the byways of continental literature he has lighted upon author upon author of whom, we warrant, the average British philosopher will never have so much as heard. Thus, even regarded in this one aspect, namely, as a contribution to the bibliography of the subject, the book is important. We note, however, that the references are provided in a somewhat casual manner, with the result that sometimes, as in the section on Bacon, no bibliographical information is forthcoming at all. Again, more care might have been taken to cite all the passages in which a given author has dealt with the relations of the sciences. Under Plato, for instance, we are referred to the 'Republic,' but not to the 'Politicus,' though in the latter the classifying interest is far more strongly marked. And so the account of Aristotle's views leaves out all the interesting things said in the 'Posterior Analytics' about the reasons why the sciences are and must be diverse. The fact seems to be that Dr. Flint has fallen between two stools. He could not bring himself merely to catalogue Schriftquellen, and he could not, on the other hand, manage an adequate examination of some four score authorities in a space of under three hundred—and those sufficiently discursive—pages. For his examination, if often spirited and suggestive, decidedly lacks thoroughness. Take as a case the comments appended to his sketch of the contents of the (unnamed) 'De Augmentis.' All we are told about the relation of Physics to Metaphysics in Bacon's scheme is that they are subdivisions of the speculative branch of the philosophy of nature, and that the one investigates "efficient causes and matter," the other "final causes and form." Thereafter follows the bewildering criticism:—

"This bringing together of Physics and Metaphysics as both parts of Natural Philosophy is an.....error which needs no refutation at the present day."

But surely the "error which needs no refutation" consists in supposing that by Metaphysics Bacon meant anything but a Physics that has reached what Mill would call the "explanatory" stage. That there is a "Metaphysics" (in the Aristotelian sense) which is not a part of Natural Philosophy, but the "common trunk" from which the latter diverges as a mere branch, Bacon fully recognizes; only he calls it First Philosophy. Now we dare not accuse Dr. Flint of ignorance of these matters, more especially as he elsewhere expounds the nature of Bacon's First Philosophy, though very obscurely. We prefer to believe that, if the thought at the back of his criticism were made explicit, it would be found consistent with a true view of the facts. Since, however, it is not made so explicit, what of the unfortunate student who puts himself unreservedly under Dr. Flint's guidance? We are convinced that he could extract no meaning at all from the shorthand account given of Bacon's First Philosophy, or Physics, or Metaphysics, and that if he got any meaning out of Dr. Flint's comment it would be one that was erroneous. And what is true of the section on Bacon is true of the book as a whole. Undue brevity renders it exceedingly liable to mislead any one who is not prepared at every turn to supplement its information from without.

Turning to the introductory essay, one is struck chiefly by its robust optimism. Philosophy, as scientia scientiarum, must and can bind the sciences into "a unity which is a reflection of the unity of nature and of the unity of that Supreme Reason which pervades all nature and originates all intelligence."

"The sciences.....cannot do without a queen. There may be a republic of letters, but the sciences cannot constitute a republic; they must be so connected as to form a unity: and the science which refers them to unity and shows that knowledge as a whole is a cosmos is the supreme science, the queen of the sciences. The want of practical recognition of this truth is one main cause of the intellectual anarchy of our times."

The assumption is that philosophy in its capacity of classifier of the sciences can determine their relations in an order having fixity and objectiveness, so that, for instance, it could "inform us at once what science was the natural antecedent of any other science, the condition of its intelligibility." But Dr. Flint has likewise to admit that "there is an infinitely vaster and more perfect knowledge than any to [sic] which man or any other or even all created beings can pretend to possess."

Is not this, however, to let in the thin end of the relativist wedge? We are aware that the absolutist somehow manages to reconcile the view that human experience as such is more or less fragmentary with a belief in the unalterable validity of its "categories" as laid down for all time in—but we are not sure which is the latest and sole authoritative edition of them! We fail to understand, however, how any juggling with bare categories will serve to achieve any one final organization of the sciences, seeing that these in their united capacities seek to deal with experience in nothing short of its manifold concreteness. Indeed, it is hard to conceive how any one fresh from the study of the actual history of this and that attempt to organize knowledge should fail to realize how essentially each relates to particular ends and particular opportunities. The world of knowledge is no Holy Roman Empire, but a number of more or less independent and mutually competing nations—to wit, "apperceptive systems"—various as the interests that maintain and dominate them are various. Each interest tends to assert a de jure sovereignty over things at large; but de facto it is limited by the effective competition of other no less vigorous and traditionally established interests. Dr. Flint is mildly surprised to find Dr. Haddon, as President of the Anthropological Institute, wanting to classify the philosophy of history as a sub-section of anthropology. But it is a natural desire from his special point of view, just as it is equally natural that from numberless other points of view the pretensions of the anthropologist should be derided as extravagant. Such conflict is, in short, both inevitable and salutary, for out of it each higher synthesis springs to life.

All this, however, we fear will only cause Dr. Flint to lament over "the intellectual anarchy of our times." But is the anarchy all on one side? How is it that Dr. Flint, with his wide knowledge and his gift of clear and forcible writing, leaves the reader with the impression that the history of the classifications of the sciences is little better than a howling wilderness? We believe it is because an ideal of objective system, conceived in abstraction from the processes that psychologically and socially determine its so-called self-revelation, is and must always be utterly worthless as an organon of explanation, of criticism, or of prediction.

ESSAYS.

Literary Portraits. By Charles Whibley. (Constable & Co.)—Mr. Whibley must be classed among the few discriminating critics of a day in which real sensitive criticism is as an oasis in a desert. It is not that fewer writers of taste exist to-day than formerly, but merely that their voices are drowned in a chorus of journalistic claptrap. It is a reviewer's privilege and pleasure, therefore, to call attention to such an illuminating book as this. The literary portraits are seven in number, and comprise Rabelais, Philippe de Comines, Holland the translator of Plutarch, Montaigne, Drummond of Hawthornden, Robert Burton, and Casanova. The Rabelais, if we mistake not, originally appeared as the introduction to Urquhart's translation in the "Tudor Translation" series. It is perhaps the most admirable brief appreciation of Rabelais and his classic translator that has appeared. Mr. Whibley is a confirmed Rabelaisian, and justly observes that you are either born so or the reverse. He says:—

"Foul as his book is in certain passages, it is never indecent. There are ten outbursts of laughter to every page; there is not a single smirk from beginning to end. Rabelais always drags away the veil with a strong hand; he does not leave his impropriety half covered, and so prompts his reader to a filthy curiosity. Indecent writers exist, without doubt, but Rabelais is not of the number; and we do not envy the mind of those 'squint-minded' fellows who could suffer harm from the study of this wholesome literature."

This conclusion is certainly open to question by those who have not been born Rabelaisians. But no one will dispute the excellent judgment passed on Urquhart, who was,

"in a sense, Rabelais reincarnate: yet Rabelais with his humour obscured by pedantry and his trick of ridicule turned to seriousness. Sir Thomas would not have laughed at the Limosin: he would have taken him to his heart as a brother, and it seems as though Shakespeare were a prophet when he drew Holofernes, who bears no resemblance to honest John Florio, yet throws his own shadow in front of Urquhart. Rabelais, in fact, had he known Urquhart, would have turned him to scorn, adding another masterpiece to his portrait gallery.....His slang bears no relation to the slang of Rabelais, yet in wealth and character it is unsurpassed. Now and again the English chafes against the restraint of the French, and, breaking all bounds, the synonyms of Urquhart rush and riot at their will. Each of Rabelais's lists seems to exhaust a branch of human knowledge; but Urquhart pounces upon them with gusto, and proves that his vocabulary is even richer than the Frenchman's."

Mr. Whibley's verdict on Holland is that he "remains the first translator of his age; and if the Bible is the Shakespeare of translation, then Philemon Holland is the ingenious Ben Jonson of a splendid craft."

One feels that in these portraits the critic has not only made a full call on all his scholarship and taste, but that he has delighted to do so. The work bears the mark of a frank satisfaction, and a frank faith in the writer's own judgments. It is at times a little superior, and at other times it rings somewhat hard; but nowhere is the exuberance of a satisfied taste wanting. The old scholar of whose library Mr. Whibley writes is Drummond—a library now in Edinburgh University—and we can see him taking down the books, examining them, gloating over them, and being stimulated to browse on his own wide knowledge. Mr. Whibley is in the truest sense a scholar and a man of taste. To be a scholar alone is not sufficient, for scholarship leads to the meticulous, and to certain arid qualities of mind, of which there is no trace in this volume. The level of performance here is singularly even and singularly high, and the book is a book for the library shelf, not a mere volume of essays to be read, returned, and forgotten.

Studies in Religion and Literature. By W. S. Lilly. (Chapman & Hall.)—Mr. Lilly is one of those magazine writers who are often interesting and seldom important. This volume is no exception. His study of Shakspeare's religion is attractive, but the subject hardly admits of demonstration. The long essay on Balzac is a really excellent analysis of that author's characteristics, and shows him well against the background of revolutionary France. The essay on Wiseman will inform those who have not read Mr. Ward's 'Life,' and will interest those who have; but it does not contain anything new. The essay on 'The Meaning of Tractarianism' is designed to show that Newman understood that meaning, and Pusey and Keble did not. It says the usual things that are in accordance with that view. It is a pity that Mr. Lilly adopts such a pontifical air in his utterances. He makes the reader suspect him of fallacy even where he reasons soundly, and of inaccuracy even where he is correct. Sometimes, however, he does need correction, and in one place we notice the astounding attribution to Pope of Dryden's famous lines:—

Great wits to madness sure are near allied, &c.

However, we admit that Mr. Lilly is not often so careless. His worst fault is an air of profundity which seems to have very little behind it.

In Portraits of the Seventeenth Century, by C. A. Sainte-Beuve (Putnam's Sons), Miss Katherine P. Wormeley has collected and translated in two well-printed and well-illustrated volumes twenty-nine of the famous critic's scattered studies in the literature and social history of the great age of France. The idea is so happy that we wonder Sainte-Beuve himself never thought of carrying it out. For the work constitutes a delightful picture of the most splendid of societies, in which the individual brilliancy of the renowned statesmen, beautiful ladies, courtly wits, and writers of genius who composed it was enhanced by a general distinction and urbanity in manners peculiar to their time. In her selection Miss Wormeley has confined herself to the 'Portraits Littéraires,' the 'Portraits de Femmes,' and the 'Causeries du Lundi.' Doudan, however, held that the best essays were to be found in the 'Nouveaux Lundis,' and we agree with him. In the first part of his career Sainte-Beuve was unrivalled in the art of criticism by any of his contemporaries, and he wrote, therefore, a little too easily, perhaps; but as he grew older his claim to pre-eminence was, in a manner, contested by two younger writers, the one with a singular faculty of sympathetic penetration and exceeding charm, the other with a remarkable comprehensiveness and an astonishing audacity of thought. Stimulated by the genius of Renan and Taine, Sainte-Beuve exerted his great powers to the full, adding to his precision of taste and fulness of knowledge much more vivacity and independence of judgment than he had before displayed. Still, even in his earlier articles, his gift for combining criticism with portraiture is finely exhibited, especially when he deals with the men and women of the seventeenth century; and although the finer shades of his style have not always been exactly rendered by Miss Wormeley, yet the translation, on the whole, is fairly good, and the two volumes, by reason of the unity in variety of their subject-matter, are an admirable example of the kind of work in which their author proved himself the greatest of critics. In one of the very few notes which the translator makes it is said that Littré "was charged with the duty of revising and enlarging the original dictionary" of the French Academy. If this means anything, it means something which is incorrect. The value of the work is impaired by the absence of a good index.

The Queen's Progress, and other Elizabethan Sketches. By Felix E. Schelling. (Werner Laurie.)—In the preparation of the more important works on the literature and criticism of the Elizabethan age which have occupied Dr. Schelling, he has strayed into bypaths, not important enough of themselves to merit a serious study, but each contributing something to throw a light on the men and manners of the day. It cannot be said that our author has made any startling discoveries, but he treats everything he touches lightly and gracefully, and has generally a distinct point of view. Laneham, Gascoigne, Greene, Henslowe, Jonson, follow one another through the pages. Perhaps Stukeley is the most impressive character presented, though we think Dr. Schelling might have done more with him. The essays on the stage are fresh to the average reader, though derived from well-known sources; and the chapter on Elizabethan song-books is, naturally, good. Virginals and harpsichords, by the way, did not develop into the modern or any other pianoforte. "John Hanay" (p. 177) is, of course, Patrick Hannay. The book is very nicely printed in a good old-faced type, with American spelling, and with a binding which is probably not so "attractively suggestive of the Elizabethan period" as the original American one. It is illustrated by some very good reproductions of portraits, real or fanciful. We can recommend it heartily as an interesting and accurate account of some of the lighter interests of the times of Elizabeth.

It is difficult to discover why Miss Repplier styles her book Compromises (Gay & Bird), but it is not difficult to see why she should have republished these pleasant essays on life and literature. Miss Repplier belongs to the company of engaging literary chatterers which Mr. Augustine Birrell adorns. She has always a point of view; she writes in an agreeable style; and she is well informed and has taste. The consequence is that you are carried along on the current of her allusive comment, encountering old and familiar faces by the way, pleased with your company, and tickled by the humours of a distinct individuality. No great thoughts are to be dug out of these essays, but great thoughts are rarely to be expected nowadays. It is surely sufficient if such ramblings are diversified with old ideas in new garments, with good common sense, which has been well called uncommon sense, and with excursions into the multifarious past. Miss Repplier has an old-time appreciation for the past which is very stimulating after the blatant modernity of some of her countrymen. She affects, too, English authors, in the full knowledge that as yet America has nothing "to show so fair." Here is a characteristic remark, albeit the author is not English, but French:—

"Nothing less than shipwreck on a desert island in company with Froissart's 'Chronicles' could give us leisure to peruse this glorious narrative, and it is useless to hope for such a happy combination of chances. We might, indeed, be wrecked—that is always a possibility—but the volume saved dripping from the deep would be 'Soldiers of Fortune' or 'Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch.'"

That gently acid touch of humour is the author's own, and pleases. There are many books on books in these days. We are surfeited with them. But if the ingenious writers wrote more in the vein of Miss Repplier we should welcome them.

Egomnet, by E. G. O. (Lane), presents the comments and meditations which have appeared under that title in the columns of The Academy and Literature. They will be welcomed in their new form by many of their former readers, and will doubtless gain fresh friends also, for they make a pleasant and companionable volume. They are but the desultory thoughts of one for whom in this world of life books are the chief interest and delight, and they do not pretend to be anything more. But they have the double merit of being sincere in themselves and of being simply and naturally set down—except, perhaps, for an occasional affectation such as the too frequent use of "an" for "if"—and in these days it is a relief to get a work that is free from brilliancy. Of course all the pieces are not equally good; indeed, some of them, such as the disquisition on paper-knives, and one or two others of the same style, might have been omitted with advantage, for after all it requires a great literary artist to carry off that kind of trifling successfully. The more directly personal musings are the best, and fortunately they form the bulk of the volume. They show plenty of common sense, much kindness, a genuine love of letters, and an individuality of taste which agreeably flavours such literary criticism as is attempted. Occasionally there are points at which the reader will be tempted to interpose a remonstrance, but it will never be a violent or bitter one. More frequently he is inclined to offer a suggestion or put a question—an impulse that bears witness to the successfully familiar character of the book. Thus, to take a random instance, when the writer states that he can find no case in which fiction has treated death from the truly personal point of view, one would like to remind him of Tolstoy, and ask him if that great writer has not succeeded in doing this once or twice.

A Fit of Happiness, and other Essays. By Cecil Gray. (Stock.)—Difficile est proprie communia dicere. To write in an individual, not to say original, way on such subjects as the power of assertion, the charm of secrecy, the uses of solitude, about which every one has views, is not an easy thing. On the whole, Mr. Gray succeeds in doing this, though some of these twenty-two essays, reprinted from The Spectator, which may have been effective enough on their first appearance, now seem a trifle thin. Doubtless Mr. Gray was not altogether a free agent in the choice of his matter, which is too exclusively ethical. We wish that he had ventured oftener into the domain of literature, as he has done with good effect in 'Shakspeare and the Celtic Spirit.' The best essays are, we think, the three called 'Contemporaries,'

'Castles in the Air,' and 'The Aura of a House.' In the first of these a novel idea is developed with considerable ingenuity, while the other two are written with more charm than Mr. Gray usually permits himself. A resolute optimism is noticeable throughout, but the reasons given are not always good ones—comfort and happiness, for example, being confused. The following passage from the essay on debt and debtors is a favourable sample of the author's wares:—

"It may be wrong to owe, but in our hearts we all think it is right to lend. Even if discretion prevents our doing it, we admire those who are less discreet. This sentiment on the part of the lender is a matter of intuitive morality, and somehow its existence divides the habitual debtor from the intentionally dishonest man. As a justification it is weak and vicarious, but it is the only defence we can make for him, and, poor as it is, it is perhaps as good as he deserves."

Mr. Gray is not often so vigorous and terse as this; but he is always sensible and genial. The printer is, no doubt, responsible for "animus furendi" on p. 155. In l. 4 on p. 74 "though" is a misprint for thou, and in l. 5 on p. 147 the word "will" is misplaced.

FORESTRY.

English Estate Forestry. By A. C. Forbes. (Arnold.)

Forestry. By Dr. Adam Schwappach, translated by Fraser Story. "Temple Primers." (Dent & Co.)

THESE two books—the one a good-sized and fairly costly work, and the other a shilling primer—afford evidence of the extensive and still extending interest that is taken in the scientific culture of trees. Mr. Forbes, who is now Lecturer on Forestry at the Durham College of Science, Newcastle-on-Tyne, and who was previously forester on the Marquis of Bath's Longleat estate, claims for his book that it contains the opinions and impressions of a practical forester on a few of the more important subjects connected with English estate forestry. He holds, rightly, that English forestry is sufficiently distinct from continental, and even from Scotch forestry, to entitle it to be regarded as a separate subject. Certainly, if carefully studied by our larger landowners or their agents, the question of tree planting and tree culture would be raised to a higher level. It is explained in the preface that this volume does not make any pretence of being a textbook, and the author modestly states that he thinks it will prove more suggestive than instructive. Nevertheless it will be found distinctly useful as a guide to the most profitable kinds of English timber trees and the introduction of exotics, as well as to thinning and pruning, and even selling, valuing, and measuring timber. Nor are its pages confined to growing for profit, for both sporting undergrowth and landscape effect are sympathetically treated, as well as park timber and avenues. The chapter which is most eminently suggestive is that in which 'The Prospects and Possibilities of English Forestry' are discussed. The chapter which needs some revision is that with which the book opens, or rather its first nine pages, which deal with prehistoric and early historic English forests. Perhaps it would be best to omit these pages altogether, for in such a book as this a few paragraphs on past times are unnecessary, and any one who trusts to Manwood, in these days of research in records, is sure to go astray. It is pleasant to find that Mr. Forbes thinks well of that handsome tree the Spanish or sweet chestnut, and offers excellent suggestions for its profitable cultivation. Might not the hornbeam, a hardy indigenous tree, at one time common in our forests, be revived with profit? It is not so much as named in these pages.

The second little book on forestry must be speedily dismissed. It would have been far better if Mr. Fraser Story had written his own primer on the subject instead of translating that of Dr. Schwappach. Nor is the translation thorough, for, as stated in the preface, some parts are omitted, some abridged, and some extended. Even in its redressed state this small book contains much which is altogether inapplicable to England. Dr. Schwappach has solid merits, like most Germans.

ENGLAND AND THE COLONIES.

MR. SIDNEY LOW's book The Governance of England (Fisher Unwin) is a most able and valuable production, marked, too, by unusual excellence of style. If we name points on which we have doubts as to whether Mr. Low is right, it is with the profound feeling that he has given great attention to a subject in which he evidently takes much interest, and the facts of which, so far as they are generally available, he has mastered. The main view of Mr. Low is that of Lord Salisbury and Mr. Balfour, that the power of the House of Commons is declining and must continue to decline, while that of the Cabinet, and especially of the inner Cabinet, is increasing. We think that it would be possible to construct a powerful argument in favour of the opposite view from the circumstances of Mr. Chamberlain's propaganda. That gentleman is now an independent member of the House of Commons. Yet the omnipotence of Cabinets has received a rude shock from his action since he left the Ministry, and there is ground for thinking that he is in some respects more powerful at this moment than the Cabinet, and more powerful than he was when a minister. But we do not wish to support by an isolated instance what may be, on the whole, a paradoxical view, and we admit that there is ample ground for the general doctrine of the present and late Prime Ministers, supported as it is in the work before us. Our author finds the first precedent for official admission by Parliament of the existence of the Cabinet in an amendment to the Address in 1900. Long before that time, of course, the new constitutional position of ministries had been fully explained and admitted in the House of Commons in statements of ex-ministers upon resignation and of Prime Ministers in reply; and before 1900 the constitution of the Defence Committee of the Cabinet in its first two forms had also been discussed in the House of Commons. Mr. Sidney Low follows the highest possible authorities in ascribing a special importance in connexion with the Cabinet to the Privy Council oath; but we think that it is clear that all this doctrine is one of many fictions, against some of which our author himself protests, and others of which he exposes in his pages. There are great numbers of persons in whose case the need for secrecy is far more serious than it is in the case of many a Cabinet Minister: the Government draftsman, for example; the Permanent Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs; the Secretary of the Treasury when managing the business of the House of Commons: all of them as a rule outside the Privy Council and free from the special obligation of the Privy Council oath. The private secretary of the present Prime Minister enjoys an amount of real power and of access to the secrets of the country greater than that of almost any other living Briton, and is not a Privy Councillor or bound by any oath. The traditions of English gentlemen are sufficient to cause secrecy to be preserved. So far as it is violated, harmlessly, it is by the free conversation of English ministers, who commonly reveal at dinner parties the secrets which, according to Mr. Low, they are sworn to keep, but who do so within the limits and under the reserve imposed by the history and the courtesies of English public life. It is a pardonable exaggeration, in which the vanity of distinguished politicians plays a part, to say, as Mr. Low does, that the Cabinet not only keeps "no records," but also is so conducted that it is "impossible even for its own members to say what it had done or refused to do at any meeting." He admits on the next page that Prime Ministers bring to Cabinet "notes of the business to be transacted." There is nothing to prevent their private secretaries adding to these notes a further minute in sending the Prime Minister's letter to the King. In several cases of ministerial resignations it has been clear not only that the Prime Minister was in possession of memoranda by which he knew generally what had passed on the occasion of any Cabinet, but also that individual ministers were pretty well informed upon the subject. Another small error, as we think it, concerns the fall of Liberal Ministries in 1885 and 1895. He goes so far as to tell his readers that these Ministries fell by their "own connivance." Mr. Morley has fully explained the circumstances of the fall of the Ministry of 1880 in 1885; and as for the statement made about 1895, that

"the Ministry, if they had chosen to muster their followers, could the next evening have reversed the snap vote of censure, taken on a side issue in a half-empty House," it is the notorious fact that the majority, including the Irish, had fallen to the figure of four, and that if an attempt had been made to reverse the Cordite division, four would have been the majority in a full House. Lord Rosebery naturally declined, in the circumstances, to "go on," as the phrase runs.

Mr. Sidney Low may perhaps be said to contradict himself with regard to the capacity of the House of Commons, although we are disposed to allow that his phrases may be reconciled by full consideration of the context. The subject is an interesting one, and we therefore note that he throws doubt in one passage on the capacity of members by expressing an opinion as to what would happen "if members were.....much more capable.....than is generally the case." A little later he speaks of the House as being composed of some "persons of exceptional capacity," and as regards the remainder almost entirely of "shrewd men of the world." In another part of his volume he alludes to a large portion of any Ministry as being not above the average of the House of Commons, on the ground that, "as a rule, one fairly well-educated and capable Englishman is as well able to perform the duties of a public department as another." This is the doctrine of the late Duke of Cambridge with regard to the officers of the British army. The important point is whether the decline in the power and the opportunities of members has caused any falling-off in their capabilities or in the attraction of the House of Commons for the best men. We have often expressed our concurrence in the view which was entertained by Gladstone, and is also entertained by the most considerable of his successors, that the average capacity of the House of Commons and the number of men in it of exceptional capacity have both of them continually risen and are still rising. In his list of great orators of the House of Commons Mr. Sidney Low includes Disraeli, and the explanation which might be given as to the extraordinary interest of Disraeli's speeches and the fascination of his character is cut off from him by his words as to "eloquence" and "great orator." Those who heard Disraeli upon unimportant occasions were always impressed by his marvellous skill of speech, but on every occasion which really needed oratory he made a conspicuous failure.

Of smaller points we note a tendency to what the French call "blessing," which leads, for example, to a double reference to Sir William Anson's book on the Constitution—a respectable production, but one as to which we imagine that neither that author nor his friends have any illusions—as a "great textbook." The statement that "The Defence Committee.....is not a Committee of the Cabinet" is a curious one. If what our author means is that there are many persons not members of the Cabinet who sit on it, the same is true of every "Cabinet Committee." Bills, for example, are always drafted by "Cabinet Committees" consisting of two or three Cabinet Ministers (sometimes only one or two), several permanent officials, several members of the Ministry not in the Cabinet, and one or two of the Government draftsmen. The meetings of Ministers to whom the Cabinet delegate the consideration for the Cabinet of special questions are not, as a rule, styled "Cabinet Committees." The careful reader of Mr. Morley's life of Gladstone will find that this was so in Gladstone's time in reference to Irish and other questions.

The portion of the book in which we most differ from Mr. Low is that concerning the House of Lords, for he writes elaborately about its value as "a revising and leisured" House, and of the need of the House of Commons, which "hustles" through Bills and sends them up to the Lords in evil shape, for a "revising hand," in a way which will make draftsmen and permanent officials shake their heads or smile. Moreover, he goes on to discuss at length schemes for the reform of the House of Lords which have not the remotest chance of adoption by either party in the State. Mr. Low likes facts and despises fiction, and we submit to him that on this particular point he has accepted fiction as against fact. It seems to the public, and even sometimes it is clear to Mr. Low, that when the Conservatives are in power the House of Lords is even more "hustled" than is the House of Commons; and that when the Liberals are in power the peers are more concerned to try how far they can go in getting rid of or mangling proposals of the Commons, with a view to damaging the Ministry and shortening its life, than in revising Bills. The Parish Councils Bill, as it is commonly though inaccurately called, which is named by Mr. Low, is a case in point. As for the revising powers of the House of Lords, it is to be noted that the Workmen's Compensation Act was so knocked about, though treated in a friendly fashion, by the House of Lords, that the worst flaws in it are those which were hastily introduced on the motion of independent peers—some of them, such is the irregularity of the proceedings of the Lords, on the third reading of the measure. With regard to the reform of the House of Lords, Mr. Low answers himself, for he points out that any sound reform would make the House of Lords far too strong. It is interesting to note that he gives his full adhesion to Mr. Balfour's view that a Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs will never again sit in the House of Commons. It is, however, a notorious fact that Sir Edward Grey does not share that view, and would be prepared, if asked—as he ought to be—to hold the Foreign Office in the House of Commons. We differ from our author in his inclusion of Alexander II. of Russia in the list of great kings who were both strong men and rightly beloved by their subjects. In conclusion, we may say that we find with interest that a Conservative journalist, as we think Mr. Low has been, is favourable to the creation of National Councils for the principal parts of the United Kingdom, including Ireland.

Colonies and Colonial Federations, by Mr. E. J. Payne (Macmillan), is a volume in "The English Citizen" series, which has been rewritten on a division of the earlier volume, which, including 'Dependencies,' gave most of its space to India. The writer was able, and his book is learned and generally accurate in the statement of facts. The policy recommended is apparently that of the present and late Secretaries of State for the Colonies, but is very different from the Free Trade policy which has hitherto prevailed in the Imperial counsels. As an example of the completeness of the volume we note the statement that the law which has to be applied by the Privy Council in appeals from Malta is "the old Sicilian feudal law, modified by the ordinances of the Order of St. John." The fact that Malta formed part of the kingdom of Sicily in its great days was brought home to Mr. Chamberlain if he visited the famous tombs of the Norman kings and emperors during his recent stay at Palermo; and a wreath was deposited in 1904 by the Maltese, who had objected to his dispatches, at the foot of the porphyry sarcophagus of the first king of Sicily by whom Malta was ruled. It is tied up in red and white, and bears an explanatory inscription. Mr. Payne states his general doctrines with a more sweeping optimism than is usual with those who know Australia. He dwells on the existence in the Empire of "a pervading and sustaining sense of cohesion," inspired in the several parts by "common interests" and "consciousness of the weight which their union gives them collectively in the affairs of the world." It is, of course, true that the majority of the British electorate follow the wise men who, with powerful arguments, teach this view. It is also the case that the British electorate followed George III. and Lord North when they preached the same doctrine before the revolt of the American colonies. But the majority of the Australian electorate no more agree in an opinion which to us seems self-evident than did the majority in the American colonies, even immediately after they had conquered Canada for us by their arms. We notice, by the way, a remark that "the loss of the United States at once produced.....the colonization of Australia." We are inclined, after perusal of the documents, to doubt the fact, though isolated utterances can be found to confirm the view expressed. There was no "colonization" of Australia till the convicts were sent to Botany Bay, a step taken for Home Office reasons. When our author names Shakespeare's view of the future, he tells us that it is expressed by his "Cranmer, who prophesies of new nations to be founded under the first sovereign of United Britain." But he should have explained that the "prophecy" followed the adoption by Elizabeth of the Imperial title, and of Queen of Virginia as a sub-title—a more important piece of evidence. Mr. Payne has some suggestions as to the establishment of a joint coaling station on an American island in the Pacific, "by arrangement with the States," on behalf of "the States, Japan, and Britain," after which he describes Japan as being "in permanent alliance" with ourselves. This is, indeed, extraordinarily wild "talk." The Japanese alliance is temporary: the Japanese statesmen would not easily consent to mortgage their future policy for all time. If they did, and Britain and Japan came to such an agreement, the consent of the Senate of the United States would be invited in vain to a surrender of American sovereignty. Besides all these improbabilities or impossibilities, the fleet is not anxious to increase the number of "coaling stations" such as Esquimaux and Wei-hai-wei, which the military authorities expect the fleet itself to defend. Another wild statement is that "Australasia" is, in the opinion of many, "the 'pick' of the Empire, if not of the globe." If these unknown many mean New Zealand, they should say so. If they mean Australia, they are ill-informed. Along with a vast amount of light land and almost rainless country there is a large tract of excellent country in Australia, which produces, indeed, the best wool in the world, but no one who knows the Argentina and Southern Brazil will compare Australia to those parts of South America in resources. Mr. Payne includes the people, but capital and labour in the Argentina are alike efficient.

YEAR-BOOKS.

The Schoolmaster's Year-Book and Directory, 1905. (Sonnenschein.)—This is the third annual issue of a book of reference that the educational profession and the press have by this time found to be indispensable. It is more accurate and bulky than in the previous two years, containing well over a thousand pages at a cheap price; but we agree with the editor that it is growing at an alarming rate, and that he has done well to resist the suggestion of a correspondent to insert the names of all professors and lecturers at universities and university colleges. The review of the educational year, which is contributed by various hands, is interesting, and contains everything of importance. We notice a trenchant though fair account of the refusal of the Board of Education to receive a joint deputation of the Head Masters' and Assistant Masters' Associations, in which it is said of the reply of Mr. Bruce in July, "Such a document can only create a feeling of stupor. The Board has not a word to say about the intrinsic importance of the questions raised." In dealing with the Secondary School regulations, while recognizing that they mark a great advance in the treatment of Secondary Schools by the Board, the writer asks, pertinently enough, whether it is not "an extraordinary thing that the official regulations for Secondary Schools should contain no reference to the official Register of Teachers." Among other subjects dealt with in the review are the navy entrance examination, the new army entrance examinations, and the study of Greek. Among the books of the year reviewed are Prof. H. E. Armstrong's 'Teaching of Scientific Method' and Prof. M. E. Sadler's 'Report of Secondary Education in Liverpool.' From the reviews of these we quote two sound remarks: "Prof. Armstrong is a writer who arouses in equal measure sympathy and opposition. He has the merits and the defects of an enthusiast"; and "It is much to Prof. Sadler's credit that, even in this stronghold of merchants, he gives expression to his high ideals of what secondary education in a great city should be." In the 'Schoolmasters' Directory' we notice one unfortunate mistake: the Rev. J. F. Cornish is entered as an assistant-master at Christ's Hospital, West Horsham. The fact is that he retired before the removal of the school, and there is now on the chapel walls a tablet recording his decease. With this single case of inaccuracy noticed, we congratulate the editor on the excellent way in which his work has been done.

The Public Schools Year-Book. (Same publishers.)—'The Public Schools Year-Book' is a well-recognized institution, containing many matters of interest to parents, boys, and schoolmasters, especially to the first. It has no tendency to be in the least democratic. Thus it notices only the Head Masters' Conference, to the exclusion of the Incorporated Associations of Head Masters and of Assistant Masters, and, with a few exceptions, the schools mentioned are only such as are connected with the Conference. Some new features in this issue are the list of entrance scholarship announcements for 1905, an account of the Medical Officers of Schools Association, and details of the common entrance examination adopted by certain public schools. We welcome a well-written chapter on public schools for girls. The map of the public schools is a happy idea, but might be enlarged with advantage. The public schools bibliography is interesting, though we could hardly expect it to be complete; we have noticed some obvious omissions. Among classical books of the year should certainly have been included Mr. Gilbert Murray's 'Hippolytus of Euripides' (Allen). The 'Year-Book' is an excellent and cheap publication.

Debrett's Peerage, Baronetage, and Knightage for 1905 (Dean) is out, and seems to us admirably complete and compact. The appendix contains some information as to addressing persons of title, His Majesty's household, &c., which is likely to be useful. Wherever we have tested the volume we have found it accurate and abreast of present information.

Dod's Peerage, Baronetage, and Knightage for 1905 (Whittaker) is on a smaller scale, but in its way decidedly useful. A section deserving commendation is that dealing with 'Sons, Daughters, &c., of Peers bearing Courtesy Titles,' for these are often confusing. Thus four peers and their children bear the name of Baring, and again of Drummond. Mistakes are more likely in such cases than in well-established names, such as Hamilton, Douglas, and Howard, which the ordinary man knows are represented over and over again in the peerage, and are therefore to be approached with due caution.

The Clergy Directory (Phillips) for the new year is before us. It is evident that great care has been taken to secure accuracy, and we congratulate the editor on the excellent results of his labours. Every entry that we have examined is absolutely without fault. It seems somewhat strange that the Church of England should remain without "any official Press organ," but private enterprise has certainly filled the gap in a way beyond cavil. The Parish Directory forms a useful gazetteer of local geography.

OUR LIBRARY TABLE.

We took up The Downfall of Russia: Behind the Scenes in the Realm of the Czar, by Hugo Ganz (Hodder & Stoughton), with a prejudice, caused by the title; but we have to say that, in spite of many drawbacks, it is an excellent volume, greatly to be commended to the general reader. There are many books on Russia which have been written with profound knowledge of the country. The German journalist whose work is before us apparently went there with no knowledge of the past history of Russia, and with little interest in it except through some smattering of the works of two or three of its great novelists. Starting fresh, as it were, he has produced a series of most vivid pictures, and the result is more like Russia than anything that we have seen. The physical appearance of the country, as well as its moral state, is admirably described. There is a sketch of St. Petersburg, "on a crisp winter day" in the height of the season, which is perfect; and in a very different sphere there are quotations of Tolstoy's conversations far more like Tolstoy than anything which, so far as we know, has yet been written. The writer's general conclusion may be summed up in words attributed to the greatest of Russian Tory officials and philosophers: "Autoeracy is good; but it involves an autoerat." Our German author is too much inclined to attach importance to the attitude of the University students. He leaves a funeral, with "the certainty that the coming generation is lost to the reactionary party." But such unanimity on the part of the young is no new phenomenon in Russia. It has always been so, and, as Tourguénief has shown, the student who lets himself be ridden over by the Cossacks often becomes ten years later a corrupt official. The assertion is repeatedly made in this volume that the massacre of the Jews at Kishineff was the act of the Government; but, while we are prepared to believe almost anything of the kind, the author has not perhaps the means of sifting the true from the false in a country where there is nothing but prejudice on both sides, and where there is neither a true public opinion nor the means by which it can be created. He is, too, in spite of his ability, ignorant of many facts which bear on continental government. He complains in his preface that Russia, as contrasted with other countries, knows "no privacy of the mails." In another passage he states that from time to time in Russia letters do not reach those to whom they are directed, or bear marks showing that "by a remarkable accident they were found open in the letter-box, and had to be officially sealed." We doubt whether in this particular Russia is behind France. The fact is that government in Russia is feeble, and that officials are careless, and while the theory in the two countries is the same, the actual practice is far more formidable in the Western republic. We note a good many curious little points of error, one of which we are unable to understand. There is an allusion to the remarkable articles "by Lanin" in The Fortnightly Review, as though they were new, "two years ago": the fact being that, great as was the sensation which they created at the time, especially because they were supposed to be written by a well-known Briton then residing in St. Petersburg, and to have received the "protection" of some great Russian official, they have been forgotten, while for many years past their supposed author has written admirably upon Russia over his own signature. There is a passage at the bottom of p. 120 which appears to give the exact reverse of the author's meaning. There are many which appear to be marred by imperfect translation, especially one which connects "salvation" with spitting. Proofs evidently have not been corrected; but, even after we had become aware by repeated evidence of this fact, we were stopped by the name of the painter "Mauel," till we reflected that Manet was the artist meant. "Night" for right and suchlike blunders are common throughout the book, while in the preface the name of the great Minister whose fall is expected as this notice is being penned is misspelt in extraordinary fashion. So is that of the chief Moscow church, in the first lines of the chapter upon the old capital. So, also, is that of the only surviving ex-President of the French Republic. The imperfection of the translation is also displayed in allusions to the thermometer, which will be taken by Englishmen to refer to their own, to which they are undoubtedly inapplicable: the only open question being whether, in fact, the German thermometer or the Centigrade is intended. Count Tolstoy is said to have suffered from repeated attacks of "typhus" in the year before the author's visit, though one such attack would, we imagine, have been sufficient to relieve the Holy Synod of all fears about their great opponent. Finally, we note among the many errors which we might point out the spelling of the word translated "small merchant" in three wholly different fashions within the compass of seven pages. All these errors, however, detract nothing from the value of the book, which we invite all those who are interested in Russia and who have no real knowledge of that country to peruse.

The Moscow Expedition. Extracted from Thiers's 'Histoire du Consulat et de l'Empire.' Edited by Hereford B. George. (Oxford, Clarendon Press.)—The writer has already conferred a benefit on students of the Napoleonic period by his work 'Napoleon's Invasion of Russia' (Fisher Unwin, 1899). The present volume has a certain interest as showing the divergences in point of view and treatment between what may be called "literary history" and the more scientific handling of materials characteristic of present scholarship. In his notes, which are full and careful, Mr. George is not sparing of censure of the French historian. Sometimes, perhaps, it is superfluous. When Thiers makes Napoleon before Borodino pause to contemplate "cette plaine, où allait se décider le sort du monde," he was merely writing in the grand style, and giving expression to what he conceived to be the Emperor's thoughts. It is surely needless to remind readers, as the editor does, that Borodino "decided, and could decide, nothing." On the other hand, some questions on which a good deal of evidence has been forthcoming since Thiers wrote his work are not dealt with in the notes so fully as might be wished. Among these we may specify those which relate to the burning of parts of Moscow, and the movements at and after the battle of Malojarslavetz, which had so great an influence on the issues of the campaign. There is also another explanation of Kutusof's wrong-headed moves at the Beresina which is perhaps more likely than that of persistent "duplicity." The recently published memoirs of Baron Löwenstern show that Russian officers formed a different estimate of Kutusof's conduct, however much they censured it in details.

On the whole, however, this volume deserves a cordial welcome. It is the first time that a competent authority has produced a careful and critical commentary on this portion of Thiers's work. The maps, taken from Mr. George's earlier volume, will assist a due comprehension of events; but we wish that the editor had added a short bibliography for the guidance of students.

Uganda's Katikiro in England. By Ham Mukasa. (Hutchinson & Co.)—This interesting volume has been translated into English by the request of some of those who, having met the Katikiro of Uganda during his visit to England in 1902, were anxious to know what impressions he had formed of this country, its institutions and people. The translation is the work of the Rev. Ernest Millar, who also edits it. The original work was written in Luganda by Ham Mukasa, the secretary of Apolo Kagwa, the Uganda Katikiro, or, as we should say, Prime Minister, who visited England for the purpose of attending the recent Coronation. The editor and translator explains that he has kept as closely as possible to the native idiom, and that he has purposely avoided the correction of various small errors, such as the confusion due to similar events taking place in different towns, because he thinks they add to the charm of the book. Mr. Millar is perfectly correct in this. The interest of the book owes much to these little misapprehensions, and to the unsophisticated naïveté of its authors. One says "of its authors," for the editor states that the book may be regarded as the joint work of the Katikiro and his secretary, since it was compiled from copious notes taken by the latter during the visit to England, and verified and arranged in consultation between them on their return to Uganda. Sir H. H. Johnston introduces the volume, and floors foreign objections upon one point. Ham Mukasa pays generous tributes of admiration in the matter of most things that he saw in Europe, but in some things he is a bit of a prig. He is very severe about European dancing, and finds the waltz "shameful." Sir H. H. Johnston points out that though there may be some vulgar buffoonery in the kitchen lancers, the official dance of Europe is, in Gilbertian phrase, "blameless." The same adjective could not be applied to the majority of dances known in Ham Mukasa's own country (or in any other part of Africa), the suggestions conveyed in which are anything but proper. Like most other African converts to Christianity, Ham Mukasa has a trick of dragging in Scriptural references to aid him in the discussion of secular matters. But he is a genial, kindly, and intelligent man, and one to whom European civilization has brought much that is good and improving. Needless to say he and his friend and chief, the Katikiro, found very much in England which astonished them. They have a phrase which expresses this astonishment well. They say of the Central London Railway, of St. Paul's, of the cold storage chamber on a steamer, and of other wonders, that "They make me just like a little child." Again, of many things we have grown to regard as simple, they say, "I cannot tell you all about these things, as there is nothing in our country to which I can compare them. The things of the Europeans are always amazing." During the passage from Africa the Katikiro was not happy:—

"The Katikiro soon also came below, and was very ill during the day with six different illnesses—cold, fever, sore throat, indigestion, gumboils, and headache—and I was very distressed about him, but he consented to eat a little food."

From other remarks, however, one gathers that most of the Katikiro's half-dozen "illnesses" would generally have been classed under the single phrase "sea-sickness." Of Naples the author says:—

"If one was to lose sight of one's friends for four minutes, one would be lost, as all the streets and all the houses are alike."

The reader, if he is a traveller, will recall the fact that in all remote and extremely foreign places he has found men and houses curiously alike and lacking in individual character. The Katikiro and his secretary visited the British Museum.

"This house of images, the British Museum, is very large indeed, about twenty times as large as the Namirembe Cathedral; you can understand the size of it when I tell you that when you walk about in it, it is just as if you were not in a house at all, and you think you are outside."

The visitors took a great fancy to a brother of Mr. Millar, who translated their book.

"After this we went home, and our friend Mr. Charles Millar said good-bye to us, after he had taught us an English saying, 'Buck up!' the meaning of which is 'Come back soon'; we learned it on that day, and liked him very much.... He laughs and jokes with people, and is very cheerful, and every day is the same as he was the day before. .... After we got back Captain Hobart took the Katikiro off to have dinner with him at half-past seven. Mr. Millar and I had dinner together before this, but the Katikiro did not eat with us, as he wished to leave a place in his inside for the dinner where he was going, and when he came back he told us of the many kinds of nice things he had eaten."

The book is both amusing and interesting.

THE anonymous author of The Diary of a Church-goer (Macmillan), who ranks himself, with reason, amongst the unorthodox, brings to his subject an intelligent reverence which may well set an example to many more obviously professing Christians. To begin with, he has a true conception of the meaning of worship, and the sentence, "When worship becomes an acted falsehood, it must at all costs cease," is the key-note to the profound sincerity underlying all his reflections, which, jotted down week by week, go to make the diary. The writer's views upon the Athanasian Creed, expressed with welcome lucidity, are shared by many Churchmen at the present day. Less sympathy will be felt for some of his conclusions upon the question of "What Christ thought of himself." These are unequal, and betray certain preconceived notions in the reading of the New Testament. He reiterates very clearly the arguments against belief in the miraculous birth, and lays some stress upon the fact that Christ's descent from David is referred to as coming "through Joseph," an obviously inconsistent detail, which has apparently attracted little attention from recent controversialists in the Church. It seems curious that a writer to whom the material side of the Christian faith is plainly repugnant should so little grasp the spirituality of St. Paul's nature as to affirm that the latter "looked for a speedy return of Christ as the Judge, in the lifetime of some of those whom he addressed," and dismiss Paul's faith and teaching as consequently vain. The book, which is the outcome of an intensely thoughtful and cultivated mind, can hardly fail to attract attention from other thinkers, both of the clergy and the laity. Neither does the author expend himself merely in criticism. There are passages concerning his own religious beliefs and experiences which should be helpful, even to those whose training and convictions must oblige them to differ most widely from his conclusions.

Chaucer, by the Rev. W. Tuckwell (Bell), is a good specimen of Messrs. Bell's "Miniature Series of Great Writers." While there is no lack of good elementary manuals of Chaucer study, none better than the 'Primer' which has served so long to introduce students to the poet, Mr. Tuckwell has fully justified his entry into the field by some novelties of treatment and by an appeal to a different class of readers. His book is unusually well adapted to reach the numerous persons who prefer to read about books, and to persuade them first that Chaucer is worth reading, and, secondly, that they can read him with a minimum of exertion. A very readable summary of Chaucer's work during the three periods of his career includes some selections, and even passages of the originals from which he translated, while his prose is compared, not unhappily, with that of Jeremy Taylor. Examples of the astrolabe, by the way, may be seen not only at Oxford and Cambridge, but also in the Mediæval Room at the British Museum. The chapter on the 'Canterbury Tales' gives an adequate summary of the poem and of its sources, though the ultimately Eastern origin of many of them, like the 'Franklin's Tale,' is not insisted on, and Mr. Tuckwell's criticism is sound and independent. A final chapter—'A Guide to the Reading of Chaucer'—offers a very useful presentation in brief of the grammatical and metrical points which must be noticed by a reader who wants to peruse Chaucer "with his feet on the fender and like a man of the world." From these Mr. Tuckwell proceeds to show how Henry Bradshaw and Ten Brink were simultaneously led to apply the rhyme test to Chaucer's works, and to throw out finally the spurious poems. He includes, by the way, in the list of these the 'Testament of Love,' which he is, of course, aware is in prose; but the general reader might be misled. Among the editions cited it is unfair to put the "Globe" Chaucer beside such works as the Aldine, for example. It should have had at least as prominent a position as Prof. Skeat's, over which it has some advantages. Some reproductions from manuscripts and from the Blake and Stothard drawings serve to illustrate this pleasant and useful introduction to our first modern English poet.

INDUSTRIOUS to the last, the late Mr. T. B. Harbottle had virtually finished at the time of his death a Dictionary of Battles (Sounenschein). Mr. P. H. Dalbiec, who has corrected the proofs and supplied the index, asks for critical indulgence, and the general disposition will be, no doubt, to comply with his representation. After careful revision the work may become useful enough in its modest way. At present it stands in some need of cross-references. Thus the battle of the 1st of June is to be discovered under neither "first" nor "June," but, after much search, under "Ushant." It must be pointed out, besides, that an engagement loses its significance when divorced from the campaign of which it forms a part. Thus the student is plunged straightway into the details of the Battle of the Boyne with no more general information than that it occurred during the "War of the Revolution." Killiecrankie, on the other hand, is referred to the "Jacobite Rising." The wars in which the Huguenots were concerned are persistently identified as the "Sixth Civil War," the "Eighth Civil War," and so forth, as if France alone had indulged in the luxury of internecine strife. Corinth (Corinthian War) and Jena (Campaign of Jena) are similar instances of uninformative definition. The facts, in short, are conveyed in too vague and brief a manner to help the serious reader of military history; but, as the book is comprehensively planned, it will be consulted with profit by that numerous class of persons which employs its leisure in guessing acrostics.

Christianity and History, by the Rev. J. N. Figgis (Finch & Co.), is an interesting essay of seventy pages or so, showing the importance of the former regarded as a factor in human culture, whatever views of religion are held. Mr. Figgis, who contributes one of the chapters to the volume of the Cambridge history, just out, on 'The Wars of Religion,' has considerable learning in mediæval thought and theory, and he is able to show in a vivid way, beyond most of the learned, what a large if unsuspected part in modern ideas is derived from the power which came into the legacy of Roman dominion. He is exceptionally broad-minded, introducing a Martian on his first page as an unbiassed spectator of the state of affairs to-day. The essay abounds in epigrammatic passages, but the sense occasionally has been obscured by deficient proof-reading, and the little volume is in need of revision—which, indeed, it deserves.

MESSRS. METHUEN send us Mr. Baring-Gould's Mrs. Curgenven of Curgenven and Miss Barlow's From the East unto the West in cloth at a shilling. The new series thus initiated is certainly a remarkable enterprise, for there is nothing that we can see to distinguish these books from those sold at a price more than three times as big.

VOLS. III. AND IV. have appeared of Mr. Wheatley's admirable edition of Pepys's Diary (Bell).

THE De La More Press send us a charming issue of Browning's Men and Women, in two volumes, an attractive addition to their series of "The King's Poets," which is by this time, or ought to be, a well-established success. A portrait of Browning figures in each volume.

MESSRS. ROUTLEDGE send us a long set of The Muses' Library, which is now transferred to them. The little volumes, published in blue with gold lettering, are of the same size as the series of "Poets and Poetry of the Nineteenth Century" we noticed last week, and they are wonderfully cheap at a shilling, for they contain an abundance not only of choice poetry, but also of choice editing. The modern bookbuyer certainly has great advantages over his predecessor of ten or fifteen years ago; for all the books best worth reading are to be had in an attractive form as well as at a price within the reach of all who care to read. If Messrs. Routledge keep up their recent reputation, they should establish a name for the best sort of popularity.

LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

ENGLISH.

Theology.

- Hancock (A.), The Sacrificial Life, cr. 8vo, 2/6 net.
Henderson (H. F.), The Religious Controversies of Scotland, 8vo, 4/6 net.
Mortimer (A. G.), The Last Discourses of our Lord, 5/ net.
Novum Testamentum, recensit I. Wordsworth, Part 2, Fasc. 1, 4to, sewed, 12/6.
Purchase (E. J.), The Pathway of the Tempted, cr. 8vo, 3/6.
Royal Standard of God's United Kingdom, cr. 8vo, 3/6.
Saint Peter Fourier, by L. Pingaud, translated by C. W. W., cr. 8vo, 3/.
Torrance (T.), The Development of the Christian, 3/ net.
Urban VIII., by W. N. Weech, cr. 8vo, 3/6 net.
Vawdrey (J. C.), The Meaning of the Doctrine of the Communion of Saints, cr. 8vo, 2/6 net.
Whitefield's Journals, edited by W. Wale, cr. 8vo, 3/6 net.

Law.

- Duckworth (L.), The Law of Partnership, 8vo, 3/6 net.
Robertson (W.) and Porter (C.), Sanitary Law and Practice, 8vo, 10/6 net.
Rothera (C. L.), The Licensing Act, 1904, with Rules Critically Examined and Explained, 8vo, 3/6 net.
Shaw's Local Government Manual, 1905, cr. 8vo, 7/6 net.

Fine Art and Archaeology.

- Arts and Crafts, Vol. 1, with Portfolio, 4to, 7/6 net.
Brownell (L. W.), Photography for the Sportsman Naturalist, cr. 8vo, 8/6 net.
Dürer (A.), Drawings, folio, 7/6 net.
Heaton (H. A.), The Brooches of many Nations, edited by J. P. Briscoe, imp. 8vo, 6/ net.
Jones (Sir Edward Burne-Jones), Drawings, folio, 7/6 net.
Nast (T.), his Period and his Pictures, by A. B. Paine, 8vo, 21/ net.
Tibet and Nepal, by A. H. S. Landor, 8vo, 20/ net.

Poetry and the Drama.

- Collingwood (W. G.), King William the Wanderer, an Old British Saga, 4to, 2/6 net.
Dante, La Divina Commedia, done into English by E. C. Lowe, 8vo, 7/6 net.
Nibelungen-lied (The), translated by G. H. Needler, 8/ net.
Scott (M.), A Robin's Song, and other Verses, 2/6 net.

History and Biography.

- Asakawa (K.), The Russo-Japanese Conflict, 8vo, 7/6 net.
Early Scottish Charters prior to A.D. 1153, collected by Sir A. C. Lawrie, 8vo, 10/ net.
Garrison (William Lloyd), A Short Biography of, by V. Tebertkoff and F. Holah, cr. 8vo, 2/6 net.
Grew (E. S.), War in the Far East, Vols. 1 and 2, roy. 8vo, each 7/6 net.
Jane (L. C.), The Coming of Parliament: England from 1350 to 1660, cr. 8vo, 5/.
Janssen (J.), History of the German People at the Close of the Middle Ages, Vols. 7 and 8, translated by A. M. Christie, 8vo, 25/.
Lee (R. E.), Recollections and Letters of General R. E. Lee, royal 8vo, 12/6 net.
Norton (G.), Studies in Montaigne; The Early Writings of Montaigne, 2 vols. cr. 8vo, 12/6 net.
Pastor (L.), Acta Inedita Historie Pontificum Romanorum, 8vo, 10/ net.
Pritchard (E. M.), Cardigan Priory in the Olden Days, imp. 8vo, 10/ net.
Stevenson (R. L.), a Record, an Estimate, and a Memorial, by A. H. Japp, cr. 8vo, 6/ net.

Geography and Travel.

- Candler (E.), The Unveiling of Lhasa, roy. 8vo, 15/ net.
Cook's Handbook for Egypt and the Sūdān, by E. A. W. Budge, cr. 8vo, 10/.
Millington (P.), To Lhasa at Last, cr. 8vo, 3/6 net.
Partridge (C.), Cross River Natives, 8vo, 12/6 net.

Sports and Pastimes.

- Green (P.), What I have Seen while Fishing, and How I have Caught my Fish, 8vo, 7/6 net.

Folk-lore.

- Owen (M. A.), Folk-lore of the Musquaki Indians of North America, 8vo, 10/6 net.

Philology.

- Whibley (L.), A Companion to Greek Studies, 18/ net.

Science.

- Ball (Sir R.), A Popular Guide to the Heavens, 4to, 15/ net.
Davison (C.), A Study of Recent Earthquakes, cr. 8vo, 6/.
Haggard (H. R.), A Gardener's Year, 8vo, 12/6 net.
Humphrey (J.), Materia Medica, 12mo, 5/ net.
Macfadden (M. and B.), Physical Culture for Babies, 4/6 net.
McKay (J. S.), The Preparation and After Treatment of Section Cases, 8vo, 15/ net.
Martin (A. J.), The Sewage Problem, cr. 8vo, 8/6 net.
Merrill (G. F.), A Treatise on Rocks, Rock Weathering, and Soils, 8vo, 17/ net.
Metcalf (M. M.), An Outline of the Theory of Organic Evolution, 8vo, 10/6 net.
North (S. H.), Oil Fuel, cr. 8vo, 5/ net.
Owens (E. W.), The A B C of Compass Adjustment, 5/ net.
Seouller (J.), The Law of Evolution, cr. 8vo, 3/6 net.
Thudicum (G.), Simple Methods of testing Sewage Effluents, 12mo, 2/6 net.
Weismann (A.), The Evolution Theory, translated by J. A. and M. R. Thomson, 2 vols. roy. 8vo, 32/ net.

Juvenile Books.

- Fenwick (E.), Victor the Chorister, cr. 8vo, 2/6.
To Fairyland on a Swing, by Enie, illustrated by A. Woodward, 8vo, 3/6 net.

General Literature.

- Aish (G.), Outcasts from Choice, cr. 8vo, 3/6.
Bennett (A.), Tales of the Five Towns, cr. 8vo, 6/.
Church Directory and Almanack, 1905, cr. 8vo, 3/ net.
Davis (Rebecca H.), Birs of Gossip, cr. 8vo, 5/ net.
Forbes (Lady H.), The Provincials, cr. 8vo, 6/.
Forster (R. H.), Strained Allegiance, cr. 8vo, 6/.
Harris (J. C.), A Little Union Scout, cr. 8vo, 3/6.
Harvey (C. H.), The Biology of British Politics, cr. 8vo, 2/6.
Hazell's Annual for 1905, cr. 8vo, 3/6 net.

- McSpadden (J. W.), Synopses of Dickens's Novels, 2/6 net.
Martial Career of Conghal, Clairingneach, edited by P. M. MacSweeney, 8vo, 10/6 net.
Meredith (E.), Heart of my Heart, cr. 8vo, 6/.
Murray (D.), Museums: their History and their Use, 3 vols. 8vo, 32/ net.
Orezy (Baroness), The Scarlet Pimpernel, cr. 8vo, 6/.
Payne (E. J.), Colonies and Colonial Federations, 3/6.
Porritt (N.), Religion and Health: their Mutual Relationship, cr. 8vo, 3/6.
Roberts (M.), Lady Penelope, cr. 8vo, 6/.
Walker (C. Forestier-), The Doll's Dance, cr. 8vo, 6/.
Yorke (C.), Olive Kinsella, cr. 8vo, 6/.

FOREIGN.

Theology.

- Barge (H.), Andreas Bodenstein v. Karlstadt, Part 1, 10m.
Soden (H. v.), Urchristliche Literaturgeschichte, 2m. 20.

Fine Art and Archaeology.

- Asselineau (C.), L'Enfer du Bibliophile: Pointes Sèches de L. Lebègue, 40fr.
Doigneau (A.), Nos Ancêtres Primitifs, 5fr.

Bibliography.

- Bédier (J.) et Roques (M.), Bibliographie des Travaux de Gaston Paris, 8fr.

History and Biography.

- Bourrilly (V. L.), Guillaume du Bellay, 1491-1543, 10fr.
Schoen (H.), Hermann Sudermann, 3fr. 50.
Strauss (M.), Le Seigneur des Mouches, 3fr. 50.

Geography and Travel.

- Castel (P.), Tébessa, 2 vols., 18fr.
Doumer (P.), L'Indo-Chine Française: Souvenirs, 10fr.

Philology.

- Mélanges de Philologie offerts à F. Brunot, 20fr.

General Literature.

- Comminges (Comte de), L'Élection Sentimentale, 3fr. 50.
Gavet (A.), La Destruction de la Patrie, 3fr.
Glesener (E.), Le Cœur de François Rémy, 3fr. 50.
Lemonnier (C.), Le Droit au Bonheur, 3fr. 50.
Opale, Princesse Helga, 3fr. 50.
Rochefoucauld (G. de la), L'Amant et le Médecin, 3fr. 50.
Sangnier (M.), L'Esprit Démocratique, 3fr. 50.
Strylenski (C.), Soirées du Stendhal Club, 3fr. 50.
Tinsau (L. de), La Valise Diplomatique, 3fr. 50.
Turique (J. B. de), Mon Papa, 3fr. 50.
Vignemal (H.), Double Jeu, 3fr. 50.
Wiat (H. C. de), La Cité Ardente, 3fr. 50.

THE INCORPORATED ASSOCIATION OF HEAD MASTERS.

THE annual meeting of the Incorporated Association of Head Masters was held on January 11th and 12th, at the Guildhall, the Rev. James Went (Leicester), the President, in the chair. The attendance was much larger and the proceedings were brisker than usual.

The President, in the course of his address, regretted that secondary education was limping languidly in the rear of elementary education, buildings and appliances which would not be tolerated for elementary schools being still considered sufficiently good for secondary education purposes. The indifference, however, to the welfare of secondary schools was now breaking down. Such schools would certainly have to be established without delay in many places. A number of endowed schools were situated in villages where they were not wanted. These would probably be removed to districts where they were needed. The experiment of educating pupil-teachers in secondary schools was interesting, and many of the larger education committees were giving it a fair trial. If the plan was not universally adopted it would be because the local committees were disinclined to spend money on training pupil-teachers who not improbably, when their training was over, would seek employment with some other authority. The cost of the training of pupil-teachers should be defrayed from the national Exchequer, but at present it was useless to hope for increased grants for this purpose. As to the new regulations for secondary schools—the most striking fact was the calm with which they had been received. The average grant under them would not much exceed 3*l.* per caput, the loss to schools of the A type being very serious. It was difficult to see why the Board of Education had pointedly ignored the University Local Examinations. They ought to be used as a part of the machinery for estimating the efficiency of the schools. Inspection was one thing, examination was another, and without an examination it was possible for even the ablest inspector to form wrong impressions. What was wanted was "freedom, variety, and elasticity." Nothing in the nature of a code ought to be imposed, but the recently issued regulations of the Board of Education with regard to English and Latin suggested that they were in danger of losing their freedom. He concluded by proposing a cordial vote of thanks to the outgoing President, Canon G. C. Bell.

Dr. W. H. D. Rouse (Cambridge) moved:—

"That this Association regards the new regulations for secondary schools with satisfaction in general, but regrets that the Board of Education does not provide for (a) the calculation of grants upon terminal attendance, (b) the recognition of (1) advanced courses to follow upon, and (2) of preparatory courses to precede the existing four-year course, and (c) ensuring comparative freedom of curricula to schools satisfying certain tests of a higher liberal education."

The resolution, with the exception of the portion relating to preparatory courses, which was omitted on the motion of Mr. Reith (Halifax), was carried, together with a rider moved by Mr. T. Varley (Winchester) protesting against the reduction of the grants hitherto available for schools of the A type, and a cryptic addition, moved by Mr. R. W. Hinton (West Hampstead), asking the Board of Education to provide for "an elastic percentage division of the whole school time when prescribing for groups of subjects, in place of the existing rigid minima of hours or periods in each week."

The Rev. R. D. Swallow dealt with the subject of school "leaving" certificates, and moved:—

"(1) That this Association desires (a) that all University authorities in England should co-operate in establishing a general system of school certificates; (b) that the Board of Education should appoint a board of control for the purpose of correlating the proposals of such authorities; (c) that there should be no classification of successful candidates, but that marks of distinction should be given in the several subjects to such pupils as are worthy of special notice; (d) that periodical inspection of a school should form a condition of the grant of certificates to its pupils, and that the report of such inspection should be taken into consideration by the examiners for certificates. (2) That the Association deprecates the division of the work between, and the system of dual marking by, external and internal examiners, provided always that the examining body takes sufficient measures to recognize the curriculum of the school examined and to set papers suitable thereto."

The resolutions were carried, with the exception of part c of the first, for which was substituted, by a very small majority, an amendment, moved by the Rev. H. A. Dalton (Felsted), asking for "a division of successful candidates into a first and second class" in addition to marks of distinction.

Canon Bell moved the adoption of the recommendations of a joint conference of head and assistant masters with regard to salaries, pensions, and notices to terminate appointments. Objections were raised on the ground that the Assistant Masters' Association were agitating for periodic automatic increases of salary, which should not require the assent of the head master, as arranged at the Conference. Ultimately it was by a majority decided to adopt the recommendations as passed by the Conference, and the Council was instructed to consider what further action could be taken. Canon Bell also explained what progress had been made with the proposed college of secondary teachers, and the Council was empowered to negotiate respecting conditions of federation.

The Rev. J. A. Nairn (Merchant Taylors') presented a report on the work of the Empire League, to which 350 schools are now affiliated.

The remainder of the first sitting was devoted to the discussion of the reconstitution of the Council. A vigorous opposition was offered to the proposal to elect four vice-presidents from among past presidents and past officers, on the ground that, inasmuch as four co-optative members are elected in addition, there was a danger that the Association would be ruled by men who were no longer acting head masters.

Though it was felt that the objectors were treated with unnecessary acrimony by the Secretary, the Rev. R. D. Swallow, the amended constitution was ultimately passed in toto.

At the second sitting the same gentleman opened a discussion on compulsory Greek at the Universities, and moved:—

"(1) That in the opinion of this Association it is desirable that the Universities should institute a twofold entrance examination (a) for candidates proceeding to degrees in art in general, as at present, with a higher standard in literary subjects; (b) for candidates proceeding to degrees in mathematics and science, with a modern language substituted for Greek. (2) That the provision for papers in English and history, and for the omission of Paley's 'Evidences' from the Cambridge Previous Examination, as laid down in the first report of the Cambridge Studies Syndicate, should be insisted upon in examinations under both (a) and (b) above. (3) That a new degree in mathematics and science should be instituted, differing in title from the degree in arts, but of precisely the same University standing."

He believed that the Cambridge Syndicate was appointed in consequence of an open letter from the Chancellor of the University, stating that unless the supposed mediæval character of the education afforded by the University were brought into more close connexion with modern thought, it would be impossible for him to secure financial aid for Cambridge at a time of great stress. He could conceive of nothing more mischievous than for the Universities to allow their schemes of education to be affected by the impressions and fancies of millionaires, whose judgment he mistrusted even more than the opinion of the man in the street. He acquitted the Syndicate of any charge of time-serving, but thought they might have been influenced by the atmospheric conditions in which they dealt with the matter. He had not the slightest doubt that if the report of the Syndicate became the law of the University, Greek would in ten years be dropped almost altogether in all but a few public schools. The work of the great revival of learning would be undone. Neither as a religious nation nor as a cultivated nation could we afford the proposed change.

Several amendments were proposed. Mr. W. F. Blaxter (Warminster) asked the meeting to support the Syndicate. The object of the resolutions was to detach from the opposition to compulsory Greek its most determined opponents by throwing a sop to science and mathematical men. The Rev. J. A. Nairn (Merchant Taylors') proposed that the Association should "strongly deprecate the proposal to provide an alternative to Greek in the case of students other than those proceeding to honours degrees in mathematics or science."

The Rev. A. F. Ruttly (Leatherhead) moved that

"it is not desirable that candidates proceeding to any degree at the older Universities should be allowed to substitute a modern language for Greek."

The Rev. Dr. W. H. Flecker (Cheltenham) thought that Greek should be compulsory on all candidates for honours, but not on passmen, and brought forward an amendment to that effect.

Before the voting took place Prebendary Moss (Shrewsbury) explained the attitude of the Head Masters' Conference. It was the view of that organization that the old universities should be as catholic in their teaching as they reasonably could, and that schools in which Greek was not taught should be brought into closer relations with them. There was no need, however, to introduce a change which would bring chaos into the classical schools. The Head Masters' Conference would do its utmost to thwart the scheme of the Cambridge Syndicate, as they believed it would drive Greek ultimately out of the schools. The amendments were all rejected, and the resolutions, with a slight addition to the first, to the effect that the examination in a modern language should include translation at sight, composition, and an oral test, were carried, the first two by a large, the third by a small, majority.

A brief debate took place on resolutions dealing with the education of intending pupil-teachers, and it was resolved (1) that this Association cordially approves of the proposal of the Board of Education that candidates for pupil-teacherships in public elementary schools should receive a substantial portion of their education in a public secondary school (moved by Mr. J. Hitchcock, Southend). (2) That this Association further considers it desirable that as many recruits as possible for pupil-teacherships should be obtained from the ranks of ordinary pupils of endowed secondary schools (on the proposition of the Rev. E. F. M. McCarthy, Birmingham). (3) That in order to effect the latter purpose, the salaries of assistant teachers in elementary schools should be considerably increased (on the motion of Mr. C. H. Gore, Hull).

A discussion on 'The Teaching of Geometry,' opened by Mr. Montague Jones, terminated the proceedings.

'PALIO AND PONTE.'

Perugia, January 9th, 1905.

THE notice of my 'Palio and Ponte,' which appeared in your issue of December 31st, has only just reached me; and I hasten to beg you to permit me to join issue with your reviewer on one or two of his statements.

In the first place, then, your reviewer makes me say what I never dreamed of saying. Speaking of the giuoco del ponte, he writes thus:—

"It is curious to read that well into the eighteenth century certain breaches of the rules were punished with 'two turns of the cord,' that is, in plain English, the rack."

The allusion is, I take it, to p. 124 of my book, where I state that, for a certain specified breach of the rules, the penalty was due tratti di fune. Now, to translate due tratti di fune, "two turns of the cord," not only begs the whole question, but contradicts by implication my subsequent comment: "The strappado was no joking matter."

I presume that no one who understands Italian, even passably, will dispute that, when the torture of the rope is in question, colla, corda, and fune are three interchangeable and synonymous terms. Indeed, it is quite impossible to deny this fact, unless it is desired to impugn the authority of the Della Cruscan. The verbs funire and cordare are, of course, non-existent; but there is a verb collare, which is thus defined: "Tormentare con fune, colle braccia legate dietro, sospendendo, e dando de' tratti." The expression tratto di corda or tratto di fune is defined as "Sorta di pena che si dava ai rei col lasciar scorrere senza punto di ritegno che è legato alla fune." This is clearly the strappado, not the rack.

If the dictionaries are not conclusive, let your reviewer read any old chronicle, e.g., Muratori, 'R. I. S.,' xv. 173, or (if he prefers documentary evidence) the documents published in the 'Arch. Stor. It.,' vol. x., touching the torture of Francesco Burlamacchi, who was "stripped, bound, and pulled up" by the rope—spogliato, legato, ed alsato.

A larger question is raised by your reviewer's ipse dixit that my remark that "at the dawn of the Communal era the institutions of Italy were soaked and permeated by feudalism" is "a statement which every student of Italian history will know to be absurdly exaggerated."

If the opinions of such eminent and well-known historians as Pasquale Villari, Francesco Lanzani, and Giuseppe Rondoni do not weigh with your reviewer, I can certainly never hope to convince him. I trust, however, that he will observe that my statement is qualified by the words "at the dawn of the Communal era." Will he deny, for example, that when the popolo of Milan first began the battle for freedom, Italy was entirely feudal? * How does he explain Prof. Villari's assertion that "a poco a poco la forma di tutta la società del Medio Evo divenne feudale," and that which follows? †

Personally, the longer I study the history of the mediæval communes, the more disposed I am to believe that the qualification above referred to was unnecessary. I do not, of course, deny that, as far as the internal life of the communes is concerned, feudalism died early; but, on the other hand, I maintain that they themselves became great feudatories, ‡ and that their relations with the seigniors and towns which they conquered remained almost purely feudal even to the end. Enough to prove this the records of the submissions (codici delle sommissioni, instrumentarii, &c.) contained among the archives of nearly every Italian city; while as M. A. Mignati has shown us, in her 'Sketches of the Historical Past of Italy,' feudalism, in its most revolting forms, existed in some parts of the Peninsula almost up to our own day.

Whether Franzese should be translated "Frank" or "French" is an old question between your reviewer and myself. Personally I prefer to be honest with the author I am translating, and not to make him say what he never said.

WILLIAM HEYWOOD.

* * Mr. Heywood's letter reaches us too late for our reviewer to see it in print, but he will reply next week.

'MOTHER GOOSE'S MELODY.'

In thanking you for your indulgent notice of this little book, will you allow me to state, in justice to the publisher, Mr. A. H. Bullen, that the facsimile is quite accurate, and that I am solely responsible for the error relating to the word "hent" in the Notes, p. 12? It arose from the fact that I was necessarily deprived of the use of the unique original while it was in the photographer's hands, and that in writing the 'Notes' I was compelled to make use of Isaiah Thomas's American issue, which I too hastily assumed to be an exact reprint of Newbery's edition. It seems, however, that in the case you note the word "hent" was misprinted "mend," and thus the mistake arose. I must make my apologies to Mother Goose for accusing her of error.

I may add that, since the book was published, I have come into possession of a copy of apparently the earliest extant edition of Robert Samber's translation of Perrault's 'Mother Goose's Tales.' The title-page, faced by the usual frontispiece, runs as follows:—

Histories, | or | Tales | of | Passed Times, | With
| Morals, | Written | In French by M. Perrault, |
And Englished by R. S. Gent. | The Fourth Edition,
Corrected. | With Cuts to every Tale. | London :
Printed for James Hodges, at the Looking- | Glass, facing St. Magnus Church, London- | Bridge. 1750.
[Price bound 1s. 6d.]

W. F. PRIDEAUX.

SILCHESTER.

4, Temple Road, Hornsey, N.

THE interesting communication from Mr. F. Haverfield on the subject of Henry of Huntingdon's dependence upon Geoffrey of Monmouth, which appeared in The Athenæum of April 6th, 1901, and which specially dealt with the equation of Cair Segeint with Silchester, has been happily followed up by an article on Silchester itself from the same pen in the current number of The English Historical Review. In this article Mr. Haverfield makes the statement that the Roman name of Silchester does not appear in twelfth-century literature; but I think this is an oversight, and I beg leave to suggest that "Galabes," which is mentioned three times by Geoffrey, is really the name that Mr. Haverfield seeks. It occurs twice in the Vaticination of Merlin, the prophet of Vortigern (VII. iii.), the second time in connexion with the rocks of the Gewisseans; and once in the 'Historia' proper (VIII. x.), where, again, we find the same people connected with it. I believe that "Galabes," word for word, is the celebrated Calleva, or Gallewa Atrebatum, as it is spelt and described in eighth, ninth, and tenth century MSS. of the 'Itinerarium Antonini Augusti,' Iter vii., edd. Pinder and Parthey, 1848, p. 228.

Arthur and Constantine are said to have been crowned at Silchester. Ambrose and Uthyr and Vortigern are reported to have been closely connected with Hampshire: the first-named fought a battle, according to Nennius, at Wallop, and it is said that he died at Winchester; while the last-named is said to have been "consul" of the Gewisseans (VI. vi.). Moreover, an Octavius, which is Galfridian Latin for "Eudaf," a British king whom the Welsh genealogists make out to be a near relative of the Constantine referred to just now, is said by Geoffrey to have been "dux" of the Gewisseans in the time of Gratian and Valentinian (V. viii.). The Gewisseans of Geoffrey are, of course, the "Giwoys" of the tenth-century 'Annales Cambriæ,' and the "Geguis" of the ninth-century 'Gesta Alfredi' of Asseri; and these forms correspond to the seventh and eighth century Geuissi or Geuisse of the Venerable Bede, who says: (Geuissi) "id est occidentales Saxones qui essent in Venta civitate" ('H. E.,' IV. xv. p. 236). But no scholar of the historical school of Freeman could, I presume, be brought to admit that any Saxons were settled peacefully in Britain before A.D. 449, nor that the Saxon shore was called so for any other reason than that it was the business of its Count to keep the Saxons off it.

A. ANSCOMBE.

'HYPNEROTOMACHIA POLIPHILI.'

January 5th, 1905.

MAY I call the attention of your reviewer to the account of this famous book and its author given in Fontanini's 'Biblioteca dell'Eloquenza Italiana'? My copy is the edition of 1803, containing Forcellini's preface and the notes and corrections of Apostolo Zeno. Reference to it shows that before 1750 nearly all the information contained in the review was well known. On some points it enables corrections to be made. Zeno personally ascertained that Francesco Colonna died July, 1527 (not 1525), and gives an extract from an inscription in a copy of the 'Hypnerotomachia' in the Library of the Dominicans at SS. Giovanni e Paolo to prove that the authorship was known during his lifetime. Fontanini had refused to believe that Francesco could have been a Dominican friar in Venice, and Zeno refutes him with much warmth. Zeno also asserts that Lionardo Crasso, who bore the expense of publication, was settled in Venice, where he had the title of protonotario, and in 1514 received an annual grant of 200 ducats, to be levied on confiscated goods, in recognition of his services during a rebellion. There does not seem any evidence that Crasso proved himself "an eminent patron of art and letters" in any other case than the publication of the 'Hypnerotomachia.'

As to the derivation of "Poliphilus," Zeno attributes that from πολύφιλος (which he accentuates correctly) to Bernardo Moneta. It is quite obvious that the derivation can only be accepted on the assumption that Francesco's Greek was shaky. It should be πολύφιλος. The derivation from πολύφιλος, even though it involves the use of i instead of y (cp. Ippolita = Hippolyta), is much more probable.

In conclusion, I should like to ask whether the spacing of the colophon and title are correct.

I have not the original before me, but Fontanini reads in the colophon "amore lorulis" as two words, presumably in apposition, and "sane quamdigna" in the title. It is difficult to accept amorelorulis, but there can be no doubt that sanequam is the correct reading.

W. C. F. ANDERSON.

* * According to the spacing the Latin given above might in each case represent one word or two.

'THE HISTORY OF WEXFORD.'

IN what Dr. Perceval Wright states concerning the prospectus of the fourth volume of Capt. Hore's 'History of Wexford' he is quite correct; but he does not do justice to the reason which he has had given him for the rise in the price of the book—viz., that this volume is almost twice the size of the others, and costs more than twice as much to produce. The fourth volume could have been issued, justifiably, in two parts, at 20s. each; but it has been considered, in the interests of uniformity and of the subscribers' tastes, better to issue it as one thick volume, with the price doubled. A statement to this effect has been issued to the subscribers, who have accepted it as reasonable.

ELLIOT STOCK.

Literary Gossip.

WE are authorized to state that the whole of the shares which the late Lord Hardwicke held in The Saturday Review, carrying with them a controlling interest, have been acquired by Mr. Gervase Beckett (who is the principal holder) and Mr. Harold Hodge. We are glad to learn that no change is contemplated in the general policy of the Review. Various developments are expected, but it will retain its traditionally independent and critical tone.

The Cornhill Magazine for February includes an account of 'The Lungs of the House of Commons,' by Mr. H. W. Lucy. Mr. Maurice Church, in 'A Russian Napoleon,' recounts the career of Suvóroff. Mr. F. T. Bullen contributes a second West Indian article on 'Kingston, Jamaica'; while Judge Prowse describes life in 'Old-Time Newfoundland.' 'Climbing the (Joint-Stock) Tree,' by George Yard, deals with the chances offered to young men by modern commercial conditions. In 'Some Recollections of Active Service,' Major-General T. Maunsell gives his experiences in the Crimea. Mr. W. A. Shenstone, F.R.S., writes 'On Weighing Atoms,' and L. H. contributes some verse on 'Sylvester Eve.'

MR. ALFRED NOYES has a poem in the February Blackwood entitled 'Nelson's Year.' The number also contains an article on 'The Marriage Bond.' Among other contributions are 'The War in the Far East,' by "O"; 'A Study of the Russo-Japanese War: The Land Campaign,' by Chasseur; 'The Rawhide,' by Mr. Edward Stewart White; and 'Mrs. John Hunter, the Surgeon's Wife,' by Flora Masson.

AMONG Mr. Murray's new announcements are 'The Military Life of H.R.H. the Duke of Cambridge,' by Col. Willoughby Verner, assisted by Capt. Erasmus D. Parker; 'Further Memories of the Whig Party (1807-21),' by the third Lord Holland, edited by Lord Stavordale; and 'Memories,' by the Rev. Frederick Meyrick, of life at Oxford, on the Continent, and elsewhere. In 'Notes from a Diary (1896-1901),' Sir * Compare Lanzani, 'Storia dei Comuni Italiani dalle Origini al 1313,' and especially lib. ii. cap. ii.

† 'I primi due secoli della Storia di Firenze' (second edition), vol. i. p. 27.

‡ See Rondoni, 'Sena Vetus,' p. 2, and Lanzani, op. cit., p. 91.

M. E. Grant-Duff will continue his store of reflections and good stories; and the 'Hatzfeldt Letters,' written by Count Paul Hatzfeldt to his wife from the Prussian headquarters, 1870-1, and translated from the French by Mr. J. L. Bashford, are sure to attract attention.

SEVERAL recent essays and magazine articles on Magna Charta emphasize the fact that no commentary on the Great Charter has appeared since 1829, when Richard Thomson, in his 'Historical Essay,' made the first serious attempt to bring up to date the commentary contained in Coke's 'Second Institute.' Messrs. MacLehose & Sons will publish early next month for Dr. W. S. McKechnie, of Glasgow University, a work which claims to fill this gap in historical literature. His book, 'Magna Carta: a Commentary on the Great Charter of John,' has been several years in preparation, and will comprise an exhaustive commentary on the sixty-three chapters of the Charter, preceded by an introduction which treats of its historical antecedents and consequences, and contains an analysis of its contents, with an account of various versions and editions.

MR. J. A. STEWART, Whyte's Professor of Moral Philosophy at Oxford, will publish shortly, with Messrs. Macmillan & Co., a translation of the 'Myths' of Plato, with introductory and other observations.

THE same firm have in hand for early publication an historical novel by Mr. Alfred T. Sheppard, entitled 'The Red Cravat.' The scene is laid in Prussia and Saxony during the reign of Frederick William I., the master of the Potsdam giants. The hero and heroine are English, but some of the characters were prominent figures in their day at the Prussian Court.

THE Walter Scott Publishing Company are issuing the new novel which Victoria Cross is advertising. It is a story of Anglo-Pathan love and life in India, and the heroine is an English officer's daughter. The book will be called 'Life of my Heart,' and will be out on February 14th.

MR. HORACE VACHELL, the author of 'Brothers,' has just completed a new novel dealing exclusively with school life. The scene is laid at Harrow, and the title of the novel is 'The Hill.' It will be published by Mr. Murray in the course of a few weeks.

MRS. ELIZABETH ROBINS PENNELL writes concerning our notice of 'My Cookery Books' last week:—

"Even your amiable reviewer leaves me reluctant to take from my first Apicius its 'pride of place.' The happy bibliophile who owned my copy before it came into my possession may have been a little too optimistic when he gave the date as 'about 1486.' But Vicaire describes this edition from the press of Bernardinus de Vitalibus as in all likelihood earlier than the Milan edition of 1498, and in this Vicaire is only accepting the opinion of Brunet. With these two authorities, to whom Panzer and Hain were not unknown, I would not venture to disagree. So I must still value this edition as the earliest cookery book in my collection—earlier than my 1498 Apicius, the first published with a date. 'Sheets' in the description of it, of course, should have been leaves, an error overlooked in the proofs, which I regret the more because my book was issued by Messrs. Houghton & Mifflin in a very limited edition, and will not be reprinted, so that I shall have no chance to correct it."

THE sensational articles in a Paris journal on the alleged designs of the Japanese in Indo-China are palpably intended to revive the theory of a Yellow Peril. Viscount Hayashi, when asked his opinion on the matter, told an interviewer that it had been very aptly called "the Yellow Peril Bogey." The credit of originating this telling phrase belongs to Sir James Knowles, who gave this title to the article Mr. Demetrius Boulger contributed to The Nineteenth Century of January, 1904.

LAST month over 200,000 of Dickens's books were sold in England, and "The Dickens Fellowship," which has now more than 6,000 members, is publishing this month a new magazine, The Dickensian, which is to be devoted solely to the novelist and his works. Mr. B. W. Matz, to whom it may fairly be said that the Fellowship owes its existence, is the editor. The first number will contain an article by Mr. Percy Fitzgerald on 'Scott and Dickens,' and another on 'F. G. Kitton,' by Mr. Arthur Waugh. The Dickensian will appear monthly, and cost threepence.

THE British Academy are celebrating the tercentenary of 'Don Quixote' by a meeting next Wednesday, at which Mr. Fitzmaurice-Kelly will deliver an address on 'Cervantes in England.'

Temple Bar for February will contain a paper on 'Wordsworth in Somerset,' by Miss Esther H. Moorhouse. Mr. Robert Bowman describes 'Some Russian Types and Scenes'; the Rev. S. C. Watkins contributes a sonnet on 'Winter Sunshine'; and Mrs. Edmund Gosse analyzes 'The Pleasures of Ignorance.'

THE February number of Macmillan's Magazine contains an article on the humours of travel, 'From Tangier to Morocco'; Mr. Frederick Payler criticizes the proposal of the Lord Chief Justice to increase the number of judges, and so relieve the congestion of business at the Law Courts; the Rev. William Greswell writes on 'The Study of Colonial History at Oxford,' with special reference to the recent endowment by Mr. Beit; Dr. W. H. S. Aubrey on 'The Modern Trade of Politics,' and Mr. Martin Hardie on 'Art and the Athlete'; while 'Sainte-Beuve' is discussed by Mr. H. C. Macdowall.

WE are sorry to notice the death of Mr. Charles John Clay on Monday last, aged seventy-seven. Mr. Clay had been associated for many years with the Cambridge University Press. He was senior member of the firm that bears his name, and was the University printer from 1854 to 1894. He took his degree as third classic at Trinity College, Cambridge, in 1850, and did good service in connexion with the municipal life of the town. His geniality endeared him to many friends, and the younger generation looked up to him as a model of the old school.

FROM Vienna the death is reported of Miss Emily Gerard (Madame de Laszowski) in her fifty-sixth year. She was Scotch by descent, and going to Tyrol to study, married an Austrian. She is, perhaps, not so well known in the literary world as her sister

Miss Dorothea Gerard, with whom she collaborated successfully in 'Reata' and other novels; but she was herself a capable novelist, with an excellent gift for telling a story. She described such a marriage as her own in 'A Foreigner' (1896), and her studies of international society were always of interest. She also wrote a good deal on German literature.

THE extensive library of the Marquis of Anglesey, removed from Beau-Desert, Staffordshire, and to be sold at Messrs. Christie's on Wednesday and Thursday next, contains the books usually to be found in a country gentleman's library formed during the earlier part of the last century. There are few rare books, and probably the section which will attract most attention is the series of lots of late seventeenth and early eighteenth century plays. They are bound up in eight volumes, each comprising from eight to ten plays; the majority of the plays are first editions, in which form many of them are rare. Some of the volumes of military history and costume are scarce.

The Literary World of Boston, which has been published for thirty years as a fortnightly, has now been taken over by the Critic Company of New York, and merged with The Critic, now a monthly periodical, but itself originally issued every other week.

AMONGST the contents of The Critic during 1905 will be three papers by Miss Elizabeth R. Chapman, embodying her 'Talks with Tennyson,' and some unpublished letters from Chopin, translated from the French and edited by the Marquise de St. Maurice.

THE editorial staff of the Frankfurter Zeitung has suffered a heavy loss by the death, in his thirty-ninth year, of Friedrich Wellmann. He joined the staff of the paper in 1897, and his thorough knowledge of the political conditions of South Germany soon led to his appointment as one of the editors. He was a thorough democrat, and took a deep interest in the condition of the working classes, so that his premature death is widely regretted.

BJÖRNSSON, who is at present residing at Rome, is completing a large novel.

ONE of the best German private libraries, which was the property of the well-known "Goethe-forscher," Herr Michael Bernays, has been sold to Chicago for 600,000 dols.

SCIENCE

Tabou et Totemisme à Madagascar. Par Arnold van Gennep. (Paris, Leroux.)

M. ARNOLD VAN GENNEP has written a very diligent, conscientious, and cautious work on what is reported about the institution of tabu in Madagascar, and about possible traces of totemism in that island. As the natives are "in a very advanced stage of social evolution," totemism is about the last thing we can expect to find in Madagascar. They have kings, nobles, middle class (roturiers), and slaves, and their clans are reported to be endogamous, while descent is reckoned in the male line. Even some of their vices, if correctly reported, are such as real savages cannot possibly practise. Tabus, or fady, "rule the court, the camp, the grove," and M. van Gennep produces a vast collection of cases of fady. Many, peculiar to noble houses, exactly correspond to the geasas of Irish kings in 'The Book of Rights,' or to the tabus on the Sinclairs and other Scotch families not to wear green, not to cross the Ord on a Tuesday, and so forth. Scores are just such superstitions as The Spectator found in a country family—not to open an umbrella within doors, and that kind of world-wide nonsense. Some involve civil penalties. For leaning on another man's bed, says Mr. Little, the Bara pays an ox, or is shot; also for stepping over a man who is lying on the ground, or for drinking out of his cup. There are things that a man will risk doing if he thinks he has hasina enough: that is power, answering to mana or wakan. Contagion, tehina, and hasina are the basis of many tabus.

Tabus connected with animals and plants are common, and such tabus are part of totemism. But whether they are survivals of totemism or germs of totemism (which surely cannot arise in "a very advanced stage of social evolution"!), or whether they are wholly unconnected with totemism, M. van Gennep does not decide. Various myths, of no historical value as evidence, are in circulation to explain the tabus concerning animals.

Thus the creature may be styled the parent or brother of the human group which holds him fady. This is the most common totemic myth; but groups are not shown to be usually named after their fady animal, or to marry only outside their group; they have no special word answering to "totem" for such animals; these creatures are not their protectors; there are no initiatory totemic rites, and no blazons of the totemic animal. Still, there is a myth of descent from the beast, or, by way of early rationalism, from a man metamorphosed into that bestial form, while another myth speaks of reincarnation of dead ancestors in that shape, or, as in North-West America among advanced tribes, the animal has merely done a good turn to a member of the family to whom he is fady. Similar myths occur among genuine totemists, especially the fable of descent from the animal; and this looks like a survival of totemism, though M. van Gennep justly objects to the modern abuse of that term. The facts about the existence of exogamy do not seem to have been closely studied, and we can only say that if the people were once true totemists, the traces thereof are indistinct. M. van Gennep, like Dr. E. B. Tylor, uses "totem" only in the sense of the hereditary name-giving animal or other object of the kin, not confusing it with the nyarong, nagual, yunbeai, or other protective object of the individual, or with the object for which magical societies work magic. He does not see how, on what he gives as Mr. Frazer's theory, a primal habit of doing magic for an animal (as the totem animal or other object among the Arunta) could lead to belief in a connexion of kinship with or descent from the thing.

M. van Gennep says that Mr. Haddon derives totemic names from such surnames as "Eaters of Turtle," and that his theory is "reprise par A. Lang" in 'Social Origins.' On consulting that work, we find that the author says, "It is conceivable that fishers might come to be called Crab-men or Lobster-men by their neighbours." He does not say "Crab-Eaters" or "Lobster-Eaters." He "does not think that the derivation of totem names from special articles of food can ever have been common..... Kindreds, to be sure, are now named, not from what they eat, but from what they do not eat," and he adds that Mr. Haddon's theory leaves it dark why a man who eats turtle (among other things) may not marry a woman who partakes of the same delicacy, while he doubts whether men of one group, at such a very early period, would barter their turtle for some one else's kangaroo, and so come to be called "the Turtle men." M. van Gennep can hardly have understood the passages in which these and other criticisms of Mr. Haddon's theory are offered, though, of course, it is not impossible that men might be called kangaroo men from an animal which they pursued with special skill. Dr. Howitt finds that individuals among the Yuni tribe "receive names like Bunjil-barlajan (platypus), from their skill in spearing that animal" ('Native Tribes of South-East Australia,' p. 738).

We must again recommend M. van Gennep's excellent work, replete with statements and references, and marked by critical acuteness and common sense.

SOCIETIES.

GEOLOGICAL.—Jan. 4.—Dr. J. E. Marr, President, in the chair.—Mr. O. H. Evans and Dr. A. Wolle-mann were elected Fellows.—Messrs. H. W. Monckton and H. Bauerman were elected auditors of the Society's accounts for the preceding year.—The following communications were read: 'The Marine Beds in the Coal-Measures of North Staffordshire,' by Mr. J. T. Stobbs, with notes on their paleontology by Dr. Wheelton Hind, and 'The Geology of Cyprus,' by Mr. C. V. Bellamy, with contributions by Mr. A. J. Jukes-Browne.

SOCIETY OF ANTIQUARIES.—Jan. 12.—Lord Avebury, President, in the chair.—This being an evening appointed for the election of Fellows, no papers were read. Mr. J. Bilson exhibited and presented an illuminated roll of arms, containing 439 shields, executed apparently about 1530.—Dr. Fowler exhibited and presented a mediæval English pax of latten or bronze of a date circa 1500.—Mr. Brownlow R. C. Tower exhibited a number of objects in pottery, iron, &c., found in a hole in the tower of Ellesmere Church, Salop.—Mrs. Peyton Mackeson, through Mr. E. E. Street, exhibited a two-handled leather mug of the eighteenth century, inscribed "God speede the Plow and Mistress and Master Plowman Cowman Dayman and Tasker. God save the King."—The following were elected Fellows: Archdeacon Barber and Messrs. E. S. M. Perowne, C. R. Haines, J. C. Bridge, Mus. Doc., W. F. Irvine, R. Jones, M.D., H. Sands, W. H. Brierley, H. Thackeray Turner, W. R. Lethaby, W. H. Wing, V. B. Crowther-Beynon, Joshua J. Foster, and P. B. Ficklin.

ENTOMOLOGICAL.—Jan. 18.—Annual Meeting.—Prof. E. B. Poulton, President, in the chair.—After an abstract of the Treasurer's accounts, showing a good balance in the Society's favour, had been read by one of the auditors, Mr. Herbert Goss, one of the secretaries, read the Report of the Council.—It was announced that the following had been elected officers and Council for the session 1905-6: President, Mr. F. Merrifield; Treasurer, Mr. A. H. Jones; Secretaries, Mr. H. Rowland-Brown and Commander J. J. Walker; Librarian, Mr. G. C. Champion; other Members of Council, Mr. G. J. Arrow, Lieut. Col. C. Bingham, Dr. T. A. Chapman, Mr. J. E. Collin, Dr. F. A. Dixey, Mr. H. H. C. J. Druce, Mr. H. Goss, Mr. W. J. Lucas, Prof. E. B. Poulton, Mr. L. B. Prout, Mr. E. Saunders, and Col. J. W. Yerbury.—The President referred to the loss sustained by the Society by the deaths of the Treasurer, Mr. R. McLachlan, Mr. C. G. Barrett, and other entomologists. He then delivered an address, in which he discussed the part played by the study of insects in the great controversy on the question, "Are acquired characters hereditary?" He argued that the decision whether Lamarck's theory of the causes of evolution is or is not founded on a mistaken assumption largely depends upon evidence supplied by the insect world, and finally concluded that the whole body of facts strongly supports Weismann's conclusions. At the end of his address the President urged that the study of insects is essential for the elucidation of problems of the widest interest and the deepest significance.

METEOROLOGICAL.—Jan. 18.—Annual Meeting.—Capt. D. Wilson-Barker, President, in the chair.—The Council in their Report referred to the honour which the Prince of Wales had conferred upon the Society by consenting to become its Patron. The work in connexion with the exploration of the upper atmosphere had been continued. During the summer the Admiralty placed at the disposal of the Kite Committee H.M.S. Seahorse for the purpose of carrying on the kite observations off Crinan under the direction of Mr. Dines. The average height attained was about one mile.—The President delivered an address on 'The Connexion of Meteorology with other Sciences.'—Mr. Richard Bentley was elected President for the ensuing year.

PHILOLOGICAL.—Jan. 13.—Prof. I. Gollancz in the chair.—Mr. Hessels read a paper on 'Mediæval Latin and Anglo-Saxon Glossaries.' He showed that those who alphabetized the glosses occasionally entered glosses twice or three times in their collections, first in their correct form, and a second or third time corruptly. For instance, the Leiden Glossary (which he is editing for the Syndics of the Cambridge University Press) has in ch. xxx. "apologus, excusationes," the lemma (=ἀπολογία) being taken from the 'Catal. Hieron.,' ch. lxxxii. This appears in the Corpus, Epinal, and Erfurt Glossaries correctly as apologias, but again as apolytyas in Corpus, and as apothias in Erfurt. Glosses were very often altered, either in the process of copying, or with the object of simplifying or shortening them. The Leiden Glossary has in ch. xxxv. "lanionibus qui herbices uel porcos incidunt membratim et uendunt." For this the Corpus Glossary has "lanioses [for laniones] qui herbices incidunt," and Epinal and Erfurt "laniones, qui herbices incidunt uel porcos." In ch. xliii. the Leiden Glossary has "lima, qua limatur ferrum, fil." This is shortened to "lima, fil." in Corpus, whose editor or copyist no doubt considered fil sufficient to make his compatriots understand the meaning of lima. This gloss appears neither in Epinal nor in Erfurt. The word hegitisse, which occurs in ch. xliii. of the Leiden Glossary as a gloss to "Eumenides, filie noctis," deserves, perhaps, to be treated more fully in the 'Oxford Dictionary,' which under hag, sb., says that "hegge is found early in 13th cent., hagge once in 11th cent., but that otherwise the word is not known till the 16th cent., which is usually conjectured to be a shortened form of O.E. hægtisse, hachtisse, hægtes, hægtis, hægtes, fury, witch, hag." It seems desirable to have the first appearance of this A.-S. word traced, and its subsequent history, up to and concurrently with the time when the shortened form hegge, hagge, makes its appearance. The Leiden Glossary, in which the form hegitisse is found, is as old as the end of the eighth century; hægtisse occurs six times in English glossaries whose date is somewhat uncertain, but which are later, it seems, than the Leiden Glossary. In ch. xlvii. the Leiden Glossary has arpa (=Gr. ἀρπη, a bird of prey), glossed by arngus, for which Corpus has carngot, Epin. carngat, Erf. arngcup, and arngcat, carngat in Wright-Wülcker's glossaries, and as carngcup it glosses cultur in Wright-Wülcker, and asapa (perhaps for arpa) in the Corpus Glossary. The first part of the word (arn, carn, &c.) means an eagle, and as such glosses aquila in Wright-Wülcker's vocabularies; it appears in the 'Oxford Dict.' under cne. Of the second part of the compound (gous, geot, geat, geup, geap), the final s (if it be not the remainder of an original γῆς) may be a corruption for p, so that geus=geup, geap, which, however, could not be the same as geap of Bosworth-Toller's Dict., which means shrewd, cunning, and it is doubtful whether it is a corruption of geat, geot, a goat. But geap (cunning, shrewd) seems to be found in gippare, which glosses cael-lentiores in the Leiden Glossary (ch. xlviii.) dealing with words excerpted from Cassianus. The form excellentiores does not occur in Cassianus, and there is a fair presumption that excellentiores (cibi) was the word intended to be glossed, though the glossator might have had excellentiores in his mind. If gippare is really meant to gloss excell., it would be the same as the comparat. gappre, applied to the serpent in the A.-S. translation of Gen. iii. 1, which, with an unlikt, would be written gippre, gippre. In ch. xvii. of the Leiden

Glossary tyrf-haga, which glosses ligones, is not to be read as tyrf-haga (an enclosed space covered with turf), as the second part clearly=D. and Germ. egge, a hoe, mattock, and the Leiden gloss, therefore=ligones, meottucas (mettocas, metocas) of Corpus, Epinal, and Erfurt. The 'Oxford Dict.' under earwig gives, as the earliest instance of the word, a quotation from Ælfric's Glossary (in Wright-Wülcker's vocabularies, circa 1000), but it is in the Leiden (xlvi. 86, eruigga), Corpus (A891, earwigga), Epinal (2A25, earuigga), and Erfurt (340, 12, aeruica) glossaries, and is, therefore, as old at least as the end of the eighth century.—Dr. Oelsner's paper at the next meeting will be on 'Early French Manuals for English Use.'

INSTITUTION OF CIVIL ENGINEERS. — Jan 17.—Sir Guilford L. Molesworth, President, in the chair.—The paper read was 'The River Hooghly,' by Mr. L. F. Vernon-Harcourt.

MATHEMATICAL.—Jan. 12.—Prof. A. R. Forsyth, President, in the chair.—Mr. O. Glauert was elected a Member.—Messrs. J. H. Jeans and H. W. Chapman were admitted into the Society.—The following papers were communicated: 'Basic Generalizations of Well-known Analytic Functions,' by the Rev. F. H. Jackson, — 'Current Flow in Rectangular Conductors,' by Mr. H. Fletcher Moulton, — 'On the Kinematics and Dynamics of a Granular Medium in Normal Piling,' by Mr. J. H. Jeans, — 'Generational Relations for the Abstract Group simply isomorphic with the Group  $LF[2, p]$ ,' by Dr. W. H. Bussey, — 'On Alternants and Continuous Groups,' by Dr. H. F. Baker, — 'A Generalization of Legendre's Polynomial,' by Mr. H. Bateman, — and 'Isogonal Transformation and the Diameter Transformation,' by Mr. H. L. Trachtenberg.

MEETINGS NEXT WEEK.

- MON. London Institution, 5.—'Architecture from Egypt to Rome,' Mr. Hugh Stannus.
— Surveyors' Institution, 7.—Junior Meeting.
— Society of Arts, 8.—'Reservoir, Stylographic, and Fountain Pens,' Lecture I., Mr. J. P. Maginnis. (Cantor Lectures)
— Geographical, 8½.—'The Great Zimbabwe and other Ancient Ruins in Rhodesia,' Mr. R. N. Hall.
TUES. Society of Arts, 4½.—'British Commercial Prospects in the Far East,' Mr. Byron Brennan.
— Royal Institution, 5.—'The Structure and Life of Animals,' Lecture II., Prof. L. C. Miall.
— Institution of Civil Engineers, 8.—'Notes on the Working of the Shone System of Sewerage at Karachi,' Mr. J. P. Brunton; 'The Sewerage of Douglas, Isle of Man,' Messrs. E. H. Stevenson and E. K. Burstall.
WED. British Academy, 5.—'Cervantes in England,' Mr. J. Fitzmaurice-Kelly.
— Society of Arts, 8.—'London Electric Railways,' Hon. R. P. Porter.
— Dante, 8½.—'The Better Waters of Purgatorio,' Mr. E. Wilberforce.
THURS. Royal, 4½.
— Royal Institution, 5.—'The Philosophy and Significance of "The Tempest,"' Prof. Churton Collins.
— London Institution, 6.—'Our American Cousins,' Dr. W. H. S. Aubrey.
— Institution of Electrical Engineers, 8.—Discussion on 'Fuel Economy in Steam Power Plants.'
— Society of Antiquaries, 8½.—'The Ancient British Currency,' Mr. Reginald A. Smith; 'Palaeolithic Implements from the Terrace Gravels of the River Arun and the Western Rother,' Mr. R. Garraway Rice.
FRI. Physical, 5.—'Action of a Magnetic Field on the Discharge through a Gas,' Dr. R. S. Willows; 'Action of Radium on the Electric Spark,' Dr. R. S. Willows and Mr. J. Peck; 'The Slow Stretch in India-rubber, Glass, and Metal Wires when subjected to a Constant Pull,' Mr. P. Phillips; 'Determination of Young's Modulus for Glass,' Mr. C. A. Bell; 'Some Methods for studying the Viscosity of Solids,' Dr. Boris Weinberg.
— Institution of Civil Engineers, 8.—'Concrete-making on the Admiralty Harbour Works, Dover,' Mr. T. L. Matthews. (Students' Meeting.)
— Royal Institution, 9.—'The Life-History of the Emperor Penguin,' Mr. E. A. Wilson.
SAT. Mathematical Association, 3.—Annual Meeting. 'Models and their Use,' Mr. E. M. Langley; 'The New Geometry,' Mr. W. H. Wagstaff; 'Should Greek be compulsory for Mathematics at Cambridge?' Mr. A. W. Siddons.
— Royal Institution, 3.—'Wat Tyler in London,' Lecture II., Prof. C. Oman.

Science Gossip.

MR. MURRAY announces an important 'Account of the Rothamsted Experiments,' by Dr. A. D. Hall, the author of an excellent book on 'The Soil.' Another useful book by an expert will be 'The Inventor's Guide,' by Mr. James Roberts.

THE Clarendon Press will publish immediately a volume of high interest, with six collotypes, six lithographic charts, and other illustrations, 'The Ancient Races of the Thebaid.' This represents an anthropometrical study of the inhabitants of Upper Egypt from the earliest prehistoric times to the Mohammedan conquest, based upon the examination of over 1,500 crania, by Prof. Arthur Thomson and Mr. D. Randall-Maciver, who represent expert views on human anatomy and Egyptology respectively.

THE death is announced in his sixty-second year of the distinguished geologist Albert von Reinach, the author of a number of important works on geology.

Two new small planets were photographed on the 1st and 2nd inst. by Prof. Max Wolf at the Königstuhl Observatory, Heidelberg.

FINE ARTS

BOOKS ON FURNITURE.

English Furniture Designers of the Eighteenth Century. By Constance Simon. (A. H. Bullen.)

The Furniture Styles. By Herbert E. Binstead. (A. H. Botwright.)

A History of English Furniture. Part II. By Percy Macquoid. (Lawrence & Bullen.)

THE continuing interest in old furniture brings an increasing number of books on the subject, and if we are not well informed, as to English styles at least, it is certainly our own fault. As a rule, the value of these books is proportionate merely to the number and choice of illustrations. There remains very little to say about the history of furniture, which, after all, is a modern auxiliary of life. As treated by these critics and historians, it is barely three hundred years old, and the more interesting portion of its history is confined to one century. But inasmuch as it is not given to every one to possess good specimens of what is known as "the antique," the chief point in books of this sort must be, as we have said, the reproductions. Miss Simon has been at pains to secure very good examples of the period she covers, which is professedly the eighteenth century, but in reality starts from William and Mary. She has chosen not to reproduce "any fanciful designs from the illustrated catalogues issued by eighteenth-century cabinet-makers, but.....to give illustrations of pieces that were actually made, and are to-day the cherished possessions.....of time-honoured families or discriminating collectors."

This policy justifies itself in the better satisfaction of the reader's eyes. That most of the illustrations here appear for the first time is also an advantage, and in particular, by the courtesy of Lord Harewood, the author has been enabled to present some handsome examples of the Adams' work. Miss Simon divides the period under consideration into five epochs, beginning with the Queen Anne school (1689-1730), following with the Chippendale school (1730-1770), the Adam school (1760-1790), the Hepplewhite school (1785-1795), and the Sheraton school (1790-1806). This division is at least more natural than Mr. Percy Macquoid's separation into epochs according to the use of certain woods—as the age of oak, the age of walnut, the age of mahogany, and so on. It is not possible, however, to discover much method in Miss Simon's work. Her information is faithful and in detail, but it is disjecta membra. A consideration of some of her admirable illustrations will make it clear to the student how easily Chippendale was evolved out of the Queen Anne conditions. The importance of the influence of the Adam brothers is here rightly insisted on. They affected the furniture almost as much as the decoration of their day, and helped to resist, or delay, the trend towards rococo, which later devoured the taste of the Empire period.

The biographical facts of the various designers have been carefully sifted, and Miss Simon claims to have gleaned many new ones, concerning the Chippendales and Hepplewhite in particular. Her book forms a convenient guide to those interested in designers or designs of the period. It closes with the customary hints to amateur collectors, which may protect them from fraud and blunder.

Mr. Binstead's book suffers from the character of its illustrations. His aim, he tells us, has been to "provide a popular guide to the recognized styles in furniture." The usual "furniture book" is undoubtedly too expensive to be popular, but it is to be questioned if his method of illustration will commend itself. The value of photographs in this particular sphere is undeniable. Mr. Binstead's pictures are sketchily drawn, and necessarily lack the completeness and detail of a photographic reproduction. Still they are well enough for the purpose, and should suffice, taken with the author's comments, to give readers a knowledge of the subject. Mr. Binstead has the courage to speak up on behalf of l'Art Nouveau, and deprecates Mr. Frampton's jocular remark, "I do not exactly know what it means. I believe it is made on the Continent, and used by parents and others to frighten naughty children."

Some of Mr. Binstead's illustrations suggest that Mr. Frampton was not so far out. But Mr. Binstead is staunch in his defence. We will only say that in this respect modern English art and craft work vastly surpasses any work accomplished on the Continent, where no rule of design save extravagance and the unexpected seems to obtain. The pictures in this book are a sufficient condemnation of l'Art Nouveau, and despite Mr. Binstead's prophecy that "many of the critics will yet come to see the error of their ways, and live to bow before the spirit of l'Art Nouveau as a modern chastening influence, the Zeitgeist come to carry the art of former days to a higher level," we remain unconvinced. The movement may certainly be described as "chastening," if Mr. Frampton's remarks do not quite apply. Mr. Binstead is mistaken in supposing that our modern English movement has any relation to the foreign school.

The second part of Mr. Macquoid's elaborate 'History of English Furniture' confirms the impression made by the first. It is extremely difficult to get any adequate idea of the treatment of the subject from this publication in sections. But we may once more affirm that no better illustrations have been published. To gaze on these presentments of chair, table, and cabinet is to spy every detail of their work as though they were actually before us. Mr. Macquoid is still treating of oak, and his examples have been diligently and intelligently sought. They are unusually rare. His writing is full of knowledge, and pleasantly excursive.

THE INTERNATIONAL SOCIETY OF PAINTERS, SCULPTORS AND GRAVERS.

THE exhibition of the International Society at the New Gallery, combining as it does so many phases of modern and ultra-modern art, is an annual visitor of no little interest. In comparison, the older body of secessionists in this country—the New English Art Club—must appear sober, small, nay, almost narrow, while all other London exhibitions will seem personal or provincial.

As usual, the exhibition everywhere shows signs of tremendous effort and energy. France, America, and Germany, Italy, Spain, and Scandinavia, as in former years, have contributed liberally of their most daring and original talent to strengthen still further a group of Scotch, Irish, and English painters, which, as artistic groups go, already deserved to be called strong. The individual artists have followed the example of their nations in their determination to be represented in a striking way, and since the Society is hampered by no conditions of medium or tradition, each exhibitor has been left absolute freedom.

The result is difficult to comprehend at once. The first impression derived is one of unusual variety and excellence; a second view alters this favourable prejudice almost to weariness and disfavour; a retrospect halts half-way between the two opinions. The greater part of the pictures exhibited are undoubtedly able. They are painted by men who understand their business, even if we may question their taste. There is, of course, the proportion of inefficient work which cannot be avoided in any exhibition selected and arranged by a committee of human beings who possess friends, but the incapables are tactfully hung, for the most part, where they do not catch the eye unless one is rash enough to mount to the balcony.

This general level of technical accomplishment is perhaps responsible for the favourable impression which a first glance at the show affords. Unlike the two other large London exhibitions of modern pictures, the International is not a place in which the eye has to search for the needle of ability in a haystack of ineptitude. At the same time this general level of accomplishment is accountable for the succeeding reaction. The mind becomes accustomed to the fairly high standard of professional skill, till skill ceases to seem skilful, and originality, however daring, becomes trite and tiresome. The show, in fact, is just a little dull, because it is so uniformly clever and noisy and energetic.

Looking back on the exhibition afterwards, we recognize that this last verdict is as unjust as was the first impression. Several notable works remain forcibly stamped on the memory when the brilliant cosmopolitan babel of the majority has become dim and faint in the distance. These deep and sincere voices could with difficulty be heard where the crowd was all so talented and so shrill. Away from it they can be appreciated more justly. The visitor who goes to the exhibition at the New Gallery to find out what is being done on the Continent must plunge into the crowd and discover friends where he can. He will meet with many justly well-known names, with several striking personalities and a few strong ones, but only here and there will he come across a complete and balanced artistic faculty. The bulk of his acquaintances will be accomplished professional painters, who talk just a little too loud.

Yet the visitor who wishes to see some fine works of art will be rewarded for his pains, if he can but once rid himself of these importunate acquaintances. What, for instance, could be more gigantic in conception than M. Rodin's marble in the Central Hall, La Main de Dieu? The very idea almost makes one hesitate; it seems to belong to the realm of poetry, of music almost, rather than to the most definite, formal, and material of all the arts. Yet, under whatever image we figure the idea in our minds—whether it be the Potter moulding the Clay, the Demiurge fashioning the World, Jehovah creating Man—M. Rodin's expression of it is undeniably adequate. From a foundation of rough, unsculptured marble the mighty hand shoots up; huge, omnipotent, and infinitely sensitive, so that under its touch the formless rock is already shaping into living beauty. Yet all the while the sculptor, while transcending the bounds hitherto set upon his art, has not been false to its fundamental principles, but has preserved the grace of the general forms and masses, so that the hand of God does its work with no strange or abrupt gesture, but rises from the ground like some noble flower, whose petals, but half unfolded, are pregnant with the mystery of new-born human life.

Such a noble and exceptional work of art dwarfs all the other sculpture (not to mention the pictures) in the Gallery, so that we can do no more than recommend the excellent work of Messrs. J. H. M. Furse, R. F. Wells, Alexander Oppler, George Frampton, and H. Glicenstein. The jewellery and silverwork of Mr. J. Paul Cooper also deserve a word of praise, for, besides being based upon good models, they display more pleasure in delicate workmanship than the modern craftsman usually seems to possess.

No picture has the same relative prominence as M. Rodin's sculpture. Mr. James Pryde's Guildhall (No. 170) is admirably designed, and coloured in a scheme faintly recalling that of Guardi. Mr. William Strang's two pictures (177 and 180) show all his usual power, while M. Carolus Duran (187) and M. Blanche (195) are both clever. But the cleverness of M. Blanche lacks the slight element of advertisement which M. Duran (whose portrait is an admirable early work) gives way to in his choice of the frame. Mr. C. H. Shannon's Gipsy Family (196) is undoubtedly one of the best pictures in the show. The academic mind, perhaps, may regret the absence of some portion of the liquid brushwork which makes Mr. Shannon's portraits rank among the best pieces of painting of the English School, but the gain in luminosity more than compensates for the sacrifice, since without it we should have lost the airiness of the exquisite glimpse of sunlit woodland sloping up behind the figures, and perhaps some richness of colour, too. The Swanage of Mr. Charles Conder (199) is another fine piece of colour, and the two paintings by Miss C. Halford (200 and 210) have a pleasant, though quieter harmony of their own. A good winter landscape by M. Thaulow (202); a clever piece of still life by Z. Zakarian (203); the careful, archaistic Eva (221), by Mrs. B. Dorph; Mr. Nicholson's Café at Dieppe (225), a quiet and well-arranged little example of Mr. Peppercorn (231), a landscape by Mr. Oliver Hall (237), and A Turkish Funeral (241), by Mr. Bauer, have also merit in their different ways. Mr. Hall is evidently making an effort to master the technique of Gainsborough and Corot, but as yet has not compassed the breadth and luminosity of his originals. The impressive Descent from the Cross of Mr. Charles Ricketts (232) is grandly designed, and conceived in a fine harmony of brown and ashen grey; but the picture does not entirely satisfy the mind, perhaps because the figures are too equally subordinated to the disposition of the masses.

The North Room contains little that deserves notice for exceptional merit. The snow scene by M. Clarenbach (265); two pictures by Mr. Mark Fisher (277 and 293), of which the latter is the more compactly designed; a clever flower piece by M. Arthur Chaplin (296), two brilliant colour fantasies by Mr. Hornel (304 and 307), and a good portrait by Mr. Lavery (308) show to some advantage, even among works by painters like Zorn, Carrière, and Raffaelli.

The South Room, devoted to drawings in colour and black and white, contains a good deal that is worth seeing. The well-known drawings of Vierge (1-11) are miracles of penmanship, but a good deal of the other work in the room has a more lasting interest. We might instance the drawings of Mr. E. J. Sullivan (12-20) and the etchings of Mr. Bauer (44-47) in black and white; and in colour the prints of M. Thaulow (118-122), of Mr. Allen W. Seaby (130 and 133 are the best), of Mr. William Nicholson, and the delightful fans of Mr. Charles Conder (157-160). The last of these, The Canary Fan, is a perfect specimen of a harmony in yellow. It would be unfair, too, not to mention the wood engravings of Mr. Henry Wolf (21-31) and Mr. Cole (79-82, 95-98), which justify by their excellence the perversion of wood engraving from its original purpose. Of all the prints, No. 80, after the little picture in the National Gallery, is perhaps the most desirable. In it Mr. Cole obtains the richness of a fine mezzotint with a suggestion of cool, transparent air, which even mezzotint cannot reach without exaggerating the contrasts of tone. Hardly less perfect is the Ulysses defying Polyphemus (82).

It is impossible in a single notice to do justice to the taste and ingenuity displayed in many of the other works exhibited in this room. A word must be added upon the excellent collection of prints after Frederick Sandys—prints far more satisfying and emphatic than his crayon portraits, or than most of his smooth, hard oil-paintings. One of the pencil drawings, at any rate, A Study of Trees (168), rivals the famous lemon tree of Leighton in delicacy, and should not be missed, however strongly the visitor may be assailed by the other attractions of the exhibition.

The untitled and unnumbered comic drawings lent by the proprietors of Simplicissimus are almost the only things which make an ascent to the balcony endurable.

THE 'ARIOSTO' IN THE NATIONAL GALLERY.

Now that several English experts have expressed their opinion on the subject of the new 30,000l. picture recently bought for the National Gallery, it might be well to summarize these views and see how far they agree with the official or popular designation of the picture as the "Portrait of Ariosto by Titian."

Two problems arise. (1) Is the portrait that of Ariosto? (2) Is it painted by Titian? On the first point Mr. Claude Phillips publishes, in the current number of The Art Journal, a carefully reasoned judgment that the portrait is that of the Barbarigo gentleman mentioned by Vasari as having been painted by Titian at the age of eighteen. In this he adopts my own view, published some five years ago, when the picture yet hung at Cobham Hall.*

Mr. Roger Fry, in The Burlington Magazine for November, comes to a negative decision that it cannot be either Ariosto or Barbarigo, founding, however, his objection to the latter identification chiefly on a previous article written by Mr. Claude Phillips, which that writer now modifies in The Art Journal, as quoted above. On the other hand, Sir Walter Armstrong puts it forward as his opinion that the portrait is that of Ariosto.† The material for comparison with authenticated likenesses of the poet is opportunely published by Mr. Roger Fry in The Burlington Magazine for November, and confirms me so far in my previous belief that it is not Ariosto.

We arrive, then, at this result—that three out of four modern English writers who have specially studied the question agree that it is not Ariosto, and two out of the three think that it is Barbarigo. As, however, this identification is somewhat dependent on the answer to the second question—Is it painted by Titian?—it is necessary to pass on at once to this consideration.

No writer, so far as I am aware, had raised this question previously to myself in 1900, when I claimed Giorgione for the author. "It may be," I wrote,

"that Titian felt justified in adding his signature on the plea of something he did to it in after years; but, explain this as we may, the important point to recognize is that, in all essential particulars, the 'Ariosto' is the creation not of Titian, but of Giorgione."

So the matter rested till the picture was bought—always, of course, as a Titian—and Mr. Roger Fry was then the first to consider the question carefully from this point of view. His decision is thus given‡:—

"It seems to me that Mr. Cook's theory is not altogether impossible. But I should say that in any case the share of Titian, both in the painting and the final fusion of the whole into the precious and rare colour-harmony which we now enjoy, is larger than Mr. Cook suggests."

Then comes Mr. Claude Phillips, in the current number of The Art Journal, bravely maintaining the traditional view that Titian, and not Giorgione, is the painter. Sir Walter Armstrong merely alludes to the alternative view, without apparently deciding which to favour.§

Perhaps I may be allowed to record my present opinion, which has been somewhat * Vide 'Giorgione' (Bell's "Great Masters" Series), p. 70.

† Portfolio monograph on the 'Peel Collection,' 1905, p. 24.

‡ Burlington Magazine, Nov., 1901, p. 107.

§ Portfolio, 1905, p. 25.

modified by later study of the intricate question of Titian's real age. For here, as I believe, lies the key to the solution. Let me, then, state my firm conviction that Titian was born not in 1477, as commonly supposed, but some twelve years later—i.e., about 1489.* Now, assuming (with Mr. Claude Phillips) that the style of painting in our new picture points to the years 1505-8, we see that Titian was sixteen to nineteen years old at the time, and I quite agree too young to have achieved such a splendid result. Nevertheless there is the signature TITIANVS, the authenticity of which is indisputable. But, as has been often pointed out, this form came into use first about 1520, for in his earlier time the painter invariably put TICIANS. The conclusion is inevitable. Titian signed a picture about 1520 that had been painted 1505-8 by some one else. Who? and why? Here comes in Mr. Roger Fry's analysis,† which convinces him that two hands have been at work—Giorgione's (following my opinion) and Titian's. But why should Titian finish Giorgione's work? and why should he sign it thus?

The explanation is perfectly simple. Giorgione was cut off by the plague at the early age of thirty-three, just at the height of his career, and it is quite natural to assume that he left behind him a good deal of work in various states of incompleteness. Now we know that the young Titian was associated with his master Giorgione on the frescoes at the Fondaco de' Tedeschi in 1508, and history has always connected the two young artists in the closest bonds of fellowship. What more likely than that Titian should have acted, so to speak, as Giorgione's artistic executor? And proof of this is forthcoming in the statement of the "Anonimo" that Titian finished Giorgione's 'Venus' (now at Dresden), and that he retouched a Pietà (not identified). The same authority also tells us that Giorgione's 'Three Philosophers' (or rather, Æneas, Evander, and Pallas, now at Vienna) was finished by Sebastiano del Piombo, Titian's fellow-pupil. These instances go to show, in my opinion, that there must have been a number of unfinished canvases on the easel at the date of Giorgione's unexpected death, and that the two young assistants, Titian and Sebastiano, aged respectively twenty-one and twenty-five, took over these works for ultimate completion. I say ultimate, because, as a matter of fact, Sebastiano departed almost immediately for Rome, where he remained many years, and Titian was certainly away from Venice a good part of 1511, painting his frescoes in Padua. It is infinitely probable, therefore, that some of Giorgione's pictures remained unfinished for some years, even as late as 1520, when Titian came to sign himself TITIANVS. Such I believe to be the case with the 'Ariosto.' Begun about 1507 by Giorgione, and left unfinished at his death in 1510, it was completed some ten years later by Titian (at the age of thirty-one). As to the respective share of each in the result, I am quite of Mr. Roger Fry's opinion that Giorgione painted the head, and that the conception of the whole thing is his, and that Titian painted the superb sleeve and put on those finishing touches which would justify him in putting his signature to it. The history of the Crespi 'Schiavona' (or, as I prefer to call it, the 'Portrait of Caterina Cornaro') is precisely the same, and the signature TITIANVS. to be explained in the same way.‡ And I go further, and state my opinion that, signature or no, there is a category of such joint productions by Giorgione and Titian, invariably ascribed by force of circumstances to the latter, and that herein lies the clue to the oft-recurring problem, Giorgione or Titian?*

We now see how significantly Vasari's words read when he states that Titian took the portrait of his friend, one of the Barbarigo family, and that it would have been taken for Giorgione's work if Titian had not signed his name on it. Naturally, and that, as Mr. Claude Phillips suggests, may have been the very reason why Titian did put his name on it.

I conclude, therefore, that we have in our new picture the very portrait mentioned by Vasari, viz., 'A Gentleman of the Barbarigo Family,' that it was painted by Giorgione about 1507, and finished by Titian about 1520, when the signature was added, as duly seen and recorded by Vasari, some twenty-five years later. That Giorgione's share in its inception had already been forgotten is nothing strange when we see Vasari, in his second edition of 1568, actually registering the 'Christ dragged to Calvary' (in S. Rocco in Venice) under Titian's name, when in his first edition of 1550 he had rightly ascribed it to Giorgione.

One word more. The whole of this period of Venetian art will have to be carefully reconsidered by art historians on the basis of Titian's birth falling not in 1477, but in 1489, and on the assumption of a Giorgione-cum-Titian authorship of a good many famous paintings now exclusively assigned to Titian. Until these data are accepted, our knowledge of this period will remain in the state of confusion and uncertainty which at present characterizes all writings on the subject.†

HERBERT COOK.

P.S.—I am glad to notice that Sir Edward Poynter has only this week removed the "Palma" label from the other National Gallery portrait that used to be called also 'Ariosto.' The reattribution to Titian is a step in the right direction, as it brings us nearer to Giorgione, whom I still believe to be the real author. Another fine 'Ariosto' ascribed to Giorgione belongs to Sir William Guise, at Elmore, Gloucestershire, but appears to me a rather later painting, possibly by Giorgione's pupil Torbido.

FRANCESCO GUARDI.

129, Queen's Gate, S.W.

YOUR reviewer, in the notice of my book last week, has, I venture to think, betrayed "more warmth than knowledge" in dealing with my ideas of artistic methods.

In his attempt to disprove my statement that Guardi, in his picture of S. Giorgio at Treviso, has reversed the subject of his master's etching by means of the camera ottica, he writes:—

"Guardi, if he made use of Canaletto's etching, which is likely enough, reversed it to the actual arrangement of the scene, but in doing this the camera lucida, which is the instrument we know him to have used, would have been of no use whatever, since it does not reverse the thing seen."

It is possible nowadays to make a camera with two reflections which does not reverse the thing seen, but any camera with a single reflection only, such as Guardi used, necessarily reverses the picture.

It would interest me to know on what authority (I have consulted a high scientific authority on the subject) your reviewer has made the bold assertion that the camera lucida which Guardi used did not reverse the thing seen.

GEORGE A. SIMONSON.

* ** Our reviewer is at present out of reach, but will, we hope, reply later.

* Dr. Gronau has already hinted at this solution in the vexed question of the Pitti 'Concert.'

† I need only cite the varied chronology of Titian's earliest works as given by such competent writers as Crowe and Cavalcaselle, Morelli, Lafenestre, Claude Phillips, and Gronau.

SALE.

MESSRS. CHRISTIE sold on the 14th inst. the following pictures: Gainsborough, Mrs. Seeley, 157*l.* N. Maes, Portrait of a Girl, in mauve dress, 126*l.* Morland, Children, Dog, and Sheep, 126*l.* F. Hals, A Fisher-Girl carrying a Tub of Fish on her Head, 357*l.*

Fine-Art Gossip.

TO-DAY is the private view of 'Records and Reflections,' an exhibition at the Fine-Art Society's rooms of water-colour drawings of English landscape by Mr. Newton Benett.

MESSRS. MAURICE AND EDWARD DETMOLD, Mr. Sydney Lee, Mr. Harold Percival, Mr. Nathaniel Sparks, and Mrs. Anna Lea Merritt have been elected Associates of the Royal Society of Painter-Etchers and Engravers.

MR. HOLMAN HUNT's long-expected history of the Pre-Raphaelite movement is now completed, and its announcement may be expected shortly. It is cast in an autobiographical form, and may be expected to arouse some controversy.

THE death in his seventy-seventh year is announced from Zurich of the animal and landscape painter Rudolph Koller, many of whose paintings are in the museums of Zurich, Bale, Geneva, Dresden, &c. He was a very close observer of nature, and the studies he has left behind him show the care which he brought to his subject. His colouring was remarkably good.

THE death is also reported of M. Alexandre Vimont, one of the numerous pupils of Eugène Delacroix, at the age of eighty-two. M. Vimont's career was administrative as well as artistic. He first exhibited at the Salon of 1846, when he showed an engraving of Jovenot's 'Descent from the Cross,' and occasionally sent to succeeding exhibitions studies of heads and various other subjects. In 1866 he organized for the city of Paris various "cours de dessin," which were for a time highly successful; he again started similar classes soon after the Franco-German war. After holding various civil appointments, he was nominated, in 1879, Prefect of Cantal, and in 1882 Prefect of Ariège. In 1897 he was appointed to the direction of the École Germain-Pilon, from which post he retired in 1901. He was born at Issy (Seine) in 1822.

AMONG the many minor art sales at the Hôtel Drouot during the last few days, only one lot sold at a noteworthy price. This, which was in Collection G., of objects of art from Tibet, was a statue of Chinese origin of the goddess Kouan-Yin in pâte dorée. It realized the large sum of 33,000 francs.

THE British School at Rome held its first open meeting of the present year on the afternoon of Monday, January 9th. It was attended by Italian and foreign archaeologists, and by English residents in Rome. The Director (Mr. H. Stuart Jones) read a paper upon 'The Bas-reliefs in the Villa Borghese attributed to the Arch of Claudius' (the arch referred to being that erected in the Via Lata in honour of his victories in Britain). He showed that archaeologists had hitherto been mistaken in treating a mere conjecture as to their provenance as an ascertained fact, and had thus been led to various expedients in adapting them to what was supposed to be their proper place in the history of art. They were, he stated, as a matter of fact (as Winckelmann had perceived long ago), works of the time of Trajan, which probably at one time adorned his Forum. In the sixteenth century they were in the church at S. Martina, not very far from their ancient place, in company with those which are now in the Palazzo dei Conservatori, and are attributed to an arch of Marcus Aurelius, of which nothing else is known. The Conservatori were, however, unsuccessful in their attempt to purchase the reliefs of which.

* The reasons for this assertion, together with Dr. Gronau's arguments on the other side, are fully stated in the appendix to the second edition of my 'Giorgione,' to which I must refer the reader.

† Burlington Magazine, November, 1904.

‡ The signature must be read thus, and not as single letters T. V. (Titianus Vecellio). This was rightly pointed out by a writer in The Times, October 24th, 1901.

we are speaking, and they passed into the collection of the sculptor Giambattista della Porta, which seems to have been acquired en bloc by the Borghese family early in the seventeenth century, and in the inventory of which they are to be found. Mr. A. J. B. Wace, student of the School, followed with a paper on royal portrait heads of the Hellenistic period, in which he set himself to disprove several of the current identifications as resting on insufficient study of the coin types, and to determine an unknown portrait in the Museo delle Terme as that of Antiochus VI. of Syria.

MUSIC

Musical Gossip.

THE fifth Broadwood Concert at the Æolian Hall last Thursday week was devoted, so far as instrumental music was concerned, to classical masters—Corelli, Bach, Mozart, and Schumann. The first was represented by a Suite in G, clear in form and stately in character, except for the soft, sweet Pastorale at the close. Corelli may be old-fashioned, but the contrast between his simple music and much restless, intricate modern music is indeed striking. The work was performed by a small chamber orchestra under the intelligent direction of Mr. Charles Williams. Bach's Concerto for two claviers in C minor was given, with two pianofortes instead of harpsichords; the notes were neatly played by the Misses Ada Wright and Ada Thomas, but the music was interpreted in cold, formal manner. Sir Walter Parratt played Schumann's Canon in B minor, originally written for pedal pianoforte, but the effect was not good. He afterwards played the same composer's Fugue on the Name of Bach, Op. 60, No. 6, with masterly skill. Bach's cantata "Ich habe genug," written for bass voice, was sung by Mr. J. Campbell McInnes, but there was not perfect understanding between the vocalists and the accompanying instruments; moreover, the pianoforte was used in place of the organ as announced. Mr. McInnes sang later in the evening some modern songs with much success.

At one of the Curtius Club concerts at the Bechstein Hall last Saturday an orchestra, composed of forty-five members of the London Symphony Orchestra, gave an admirable performance of Mozart's Symphony in C, the so-called 'Jupiter,' under the direction of Mr. René Ortmans. Miss Evelyn Stuart gave a neat, clever rendering of the solo part of Chopin's E minor Concerto; but it needs something more to make one forget that the music is not interesting. She also played, and with success, Cyril Scott's 'Dagobah,' and Claude Debussy's Toccata in C sharp minor.

HERR WEINGARTNER has long railed at Brahms, but, like Benedick, he finds that the appetite can alter: he recants much of what he has said and written about that composer. He has had the courage of his changed opinion, and written an article in the Allgemeine Musik-Zeitung entitled 'Brahms, ein Meister der Instrumentation.' He once joined in the cry of the Philistines that Brahms's orchestral music did not "sound well"; some thereby meaning that it was not sufficiently Tristanesque, others that it was thoroughly bad. Herr Weingartner now praises it, yet somewhat detracts from that praise by afterwards stating that "Brahms looks backwards rather than forwards, even in his instrumentation." And, again, he qualifies his praise of the composer by referring to him as merely "a connecting link between the great masters of the past and the hoped-for great ones of future days." It is, however, interesting to find a man of his standing modifying his opinions, and paying a generous but well-deserved compliment to Steinbach, who, by his intelligent conducting, has "greatly helped to a clearer understanding of Brahms."

AN interesting article, signed E. D. Rendall, entitled 'Is Handel's St. John Passion Genuine?' appears in the January number of The Monthly Journal of the International Musical Society. The writer attributes it to some Keiser or Telemann of the period, and adds, "Nothing short of the most convincing historical evidence could persuade me that it is a work of Handel's"; and that statement is strengthened by various excerpts given in the article, to which many more could easily have been added. It is curious to note that of the various manuscripts (the autograph has not been found) used for the publication of the work by the German Handel Society, one is said to be partly in the handwriting of J. S. Bach.

DR. RICHARD STRAUSS'S 'Heldenleben' was announced to be given at the Symphonien Concert of February 25th under the direction of Mr. Henry J. Wood. The directors of the Queen's Hall, however, have succeeded, after protracted negotiations, in arranging for the first performance in England of the composer's 'Sinfonia Domestica,' produced at the Carnegie Hall, New York, on March 21st, 1904. Many performances of the work have been given in Germany, and various have been the opinions expressed, so that the production here will excite no small curiosity. The music, like that of all Strauss's later works, is very difficult, and Mr. Wood has fixed numerous sectional rehearsals. At New York there were ten, and five full rehearsals.

WE also note that Liszt's 'Faust' Symphony will be performed at the following Symphony Concert on March 11th. This, a work of great interest, and representative of the composer at his best, has not been heard in London for many years.

THE Concert Club has been founded to give concerts at the Bechstein Hall on Sunday afternoons. The first short season commences tomorrow, and will terminate on March 12th. The programmes will be devoted alternately to orchestral and chamber music. The musical director is Señor Arbos, conductor of the Madrid Philharmonic Concerts, and for the orchestral concerts there will be a band of forty-five picked players, and much modern music will therefore be excluded. Mozart's 'Jupiter' Symphony, performed in that hall last Saturday, proved, as already mentioned, most successful, and Wagner's 'Siegfried' Idyl, in the programme for to-morrow, is safe. Señor Arbos, however, will, of course, show due discretion in his selection of music. The object of the club is not to make a profit, but merely to pay its way; hence the subscription has been fixed as low as possible. Any surplus at the end of the present season will be devoted to the improvement of the concerts.

MR. E. H. THORNE began his usual series of Bach organ recitals at St. Anne's Church, Soho, last Saturday afternoon. The programmes include preludes and fugues, choral preludes, sonatas, and, for the first time at these recitals, the first four numbers of Bach's 'Art of Fugue,' the great and learned work written, probably, the year before the composer's death. At the seventh and last recital (February 25th) Mr. Thorne will play the six-part Ricercare, from 'The Musical Offering,' on a theme given to Bach by Frederick the Great.

THE adjudicators in the Ricordi British opera competition, mentioned in The Athenæum of January 7th, will be Mr. Joseph Bennett, M. Massenet, Dr. Richter, and Signor Tito Ricordi. Competitors must send in a short summary of the libretti selected by them before June 30th next, and the music of those which satisfy the judges must be delivered to Messrs. Ricordi, 265, Regent Street, by December 31st, 1906. The prize work will be produced during the Covent Garden opera season of 1907. The composer must be British born, but the librettist may be of any nationality.

THE two orchestral concerts at Queen's Hall on February 2nd and 7th, under Herr Steinbach, are being given by Miss Maud MacCarthy herself, who, as announced, will be heard in the Beethoven and Brahms violin concertos, one at each concert.

M. MASSENET's new opera, 'Chérubin,' will be produced during the forthcoming season at Monte Carlo, with Mesdames Mary Garden, Marguerite Carré, and Lina Cavalieri, and M. Renaud in the principal rôles. Also Mascagni will conduct his new opera 'L'Amica.'

PERFORMANCES NEXT WEEK.

|        |   |
|--------|---|
| SUN.   | Sunday Society Concert, 3.30, Queen's Hall.               |
| —      | Sunday League, 7, Queen's Hall.                           |
| MON.   | Mr. Clement Harvey's Pianoforte Recital, 8, Queen's Hall. |
| —      | Subscription Popular Concert, 8.30, Æolian Hall.          |
| TUES.  | Mr. Harold Bauer's Pianoforte Recital, 3, Æolian Hall.    |
| —      | Cathie Quartet, 8, Æolian Hall.                           |
| WED.   | Mr. Boris Hambourg's Cello Recital, 3, Bechstein Hall.    |
| THURS. | London Symphony Concert, 3, Queen's Hall.                 |
| —      | Royal Choral Society, 8, Albert Hall.                     |
| —      | Broadwood Concert, 8.30, Æolian Hall.                     |
| FRI.   | London Ballad Concert, 3, Queen's Hall.                   |
| SAT.   | Symphony Concert, 3, Queen's Hall.                        |
| —      | Mr. Gordon Woodhouse's Concert, 3, Bechstein Hall.        |
| —      | Albani Concert, 3, Crystal Palace.                        |

DRAMA

A UNIQUE COPY OF THE FIRST EDITION OF SHAKSPEARE'S EARLIEST TRAGEDY.

Lund, Sweden.

SOME weeks ago a Swedish gentleman read in the newspapers about the high price paid for an English Bible which had once belonged to Shakspeare. The notice naturally brought to his mind a little old English book of poor appearance which he had inherited from his father. Curious to know the value of this book, he applied for information to the University Library of Lund. The book proved to be a copy of 'Titus Andronicus,' London, 1594, in 4to, an edition which is mentioned by Gerard Langbaine in his 'An Account of the English Dramatic Poets,' Oxford, 1691, p. 464, but of which from that time no copy seems to have been known to exist. The copy is in a good condition; the only defect is on leaf B2, where the bottom corner has been torn away, with the result that the letter s and half of u in the catchword Marcus, p. B2r., and seven letters, p. B2v. (viz., Pa in "Patricians," Lor in "Lord," and An in "And"), have disappeared.

A peculiarity is that the first signature has only three leaves, viz., the title-page, A3, and (not signed) A4; but as the title-page and leaf A3 are united, A4 being single, the missing leaf, if one is missing, probably was a blank leaf before the title-page, and cannot easily have been a leaf A2, containing a lost prologue or dedication, or an "address to the gentlemen readers."

The often quoted passage in Langbaine's 'Account' runs thus: "Titus Andronicus his Lamentable Tragedy. This Play was first printed 4<sup>to</sup>, Lond., 1594, and acted by the Earls of Derby, Pembroke, and Essex, their Servants." That "Essex" is here a misprint for Sussex has been pointed out by Fleay ('A Chronicle History,' 1885, p. 114) and Halliwell-Phillipps ('Outlines,' ninth ed. ii. 261). The misprint is Langbaine's own, and is not found in the original edition of 1594.

The title of this edition is:—

THE MOST LAMENTABLE ROMAN TRAGEDIE OF TITUS ANDRONICUS: AS IT WAS PLAID BY THE RIGHT HONOURABLE THE EARLE OF PEMBROKE, EARLE OF DEVONSHIRE, AND EARLE OF SUSSEX, THEIR SERVANTS. [Here is a printer's sign with the motto: "Avt nunc avt nunquam."] London, Printed by Iohn Danter, and are to be sold by Edward White & Thomas Millington, at the little North doore of Paules at the signe of the Gunne. 1594.

The fact that White & Millington were already concerned with the first impression of 'Titus Andronicus' is of some interest as throwing light upon their further relations with this tragedy (cp. Halliwell-Phillipps, 'Outlines,' ii. 261, and A. B. Grosart in Englische Studien, xxii. p. 394).

The text is substantially the same as that of the quarto 1600. In the latter some misprints have been corrected and some new ones added. Now and then, but rarely, one word has been exchanged for another (e.g., V. ii. 7, 1594, "humors"; 1600, "fits"). But on the whole the differences are very slight, and even in spelling both texts show a remarkable agreement. It cannot be doubted that the quarto of 1594 is the original of the edition of 1600. In the last scene two passages have undergone a more radical revision, viz., II. 92-7 and 164-9; and the last four lines in the edition of 1600 are an addition.

To illustrate the relation between the two impressions I reproduce the first twenty-two and the last twelve lines of the quarto of 1594, giving in notes all the divergences of the later edition. In both editions s is often printed as a long letter, but only special instances are noted below.

ACT I. SC. I. (1594).

Enter the Tribunes and Senators aloft: And then enter Saturninus and his followers at one doore,<sup>a</sup> and Bassianus<sup>b</sup> and his followers, with Drums and Trumpets.

Saturninus.

Noble Patricians,<sup>c</sup> Patrons of my Right,<sup>d</sup>
Defend the iustice of my cause with armes.
And Countreimen my loving followers,
Plead my successiue Title with your swords:
I am his first borne sonne, that was the last
That ware the Imperiall Diademe of Rome,
Then let my Fathers honours liue in me.<sup>e</sup>
Nor wrong mine age with this indignitie,<sup>f</sup>

Bassianus.<sup>g</sup>

Romaines, friends, followers, fauourers of my Right,<sup>h</sup>
If euer Bassianus Cesar's sonne,
Vvere gracious<sup>i</sup> in the eyes of Royall Rome,
Keepe then this passage to the Capitoll,
And suffer not dishonour to approach,
The Imperiall seate to vertue, consecrate //
To iustice, continence, and Nobilitie<sup>k</sup>:
But let desert in pure election shine,
And Romaines fight for freedome in youre<sup>l</sup> choice.

ACT V. SC. III. (1594).

Luce<sup>m</sup> Some loving friends conuay the Emperour hence.

And giue him buriall in his fathers<sup>n</sup> graue,
My Father and Lavinia<sup>o</sup> shall forthwith<sup>p</sup>
Be closed in our housholds monument,<sup>q</sup>
As for that raiuous tiger Tamora,<sup>r</sup>
No funerall right, nor man in mourning weede,<sup>s</sup>
No mournfull<sup>t</sup> bell shall ring her buriall<sup>u</sup>
But throw her forth to beasts and birds to pray,
Her life was beastlie<sup>v</sup> and deuoid of pittie,<sup>w</sup>
And being dead let birds on her take pittie.<sup>x</sup>

Exeunt.<sup>y</sup>

Finis the Tragedie of Titus Andronicus.<sup>z</sup>

The history of the book can be traced back with certainty for a little more than a hundred years, the earliest known owner being Charles Robson, an accountant in Stockholm (b. 1735, d. 1794). The family probably came to Sweden from Scotland with his great-grandfather, Christian Robson or Robsahm (born about 1615), but it is hardly likely that the book was already owned by the family.

EVOLD LUNGGREN.

<sup>a</sup> 1600, doore.

<sup>b</sup> In 1594 the ss of "Bassianus" are both long letters; in 1604 the first s is long, and the second short.

<sup>c</sup> 1600, Patricians.

<sup>d</sup> 1600, right.

<sup>e</sup> 1600, mee.

<sup>f</sup> 1600, full point instead of comma.

<sup>g</sup> 1600, the same difference as in note <sup>b</sup>.

<sup>h</sup> 1600, Bassianus Cesar's, with the different s just noted.

<sup>i</sup> 1600, Were gracious.

<sup>j</sup> 1600, royall.

<sup>k</sup> 1600, Nobilitie.

<sup>l</sup> 1600, your.

<sup>m</sup> 1600, Lucius.

<sup>n</sup> 1600, Fathers.

<sup>o</sup> 1600, Lavinia.

<sup>p</sup> 1600, without comma.

<sup>q</sup> 1600, colon instead of comma.

<sup>r</sup> 1600, hainous Tiger Tamora.

<sup>s</sup> 1600, weede.

<sup>t</sup> 1600, mournfull.

<sup>u</sup> 1600, full point after "buriall."

<sup>v</sup> 1600, beastly.

<sup>w</sup> 1600, pittie.

<sup>x</sup> 1600, And being so, shall haue like want of pittie.

See iustice done on Aron that damn'd Moore.

By whom our heauie haps had their beginning:

Than afterwards to order well the state,

That like euents may nere it ruate.

<sup>y</sup> Not in the ed. of 1600.

<sup>z</sup> 1600, FINIS.

Dramatic Gossip.

FINDING, as was to be anticipated, the task of producing two Shakspearean pieces on the same day virtually impossible, Mr. Tree has extended his proposed Shakspearean festival to cover a fortnight instead of a week. He will then give weekly three afternoon and three evening representations. The following plays are promised: 'Hamlet,' 'Richard II.,' 'The Merry Wives of Windsor,' 'Twelfth Night,' 'Julius Caesar,' 'As You Like It,' 'Much Ado about Nothing,' and 'The Tempest,' with a novelty in the shape of 'Othello' or 'Macbeth.' 'King John,' it is observable, is absent from the list, as are 'The Midsummer Night's Dream' and the 'First Part of King Henry IV.'

MR. ALEXANDER will not, it is announced, appear in the forthcoming production of 'Mollentrave on Women,' but will return subsequently to the stage in 'John Chilcote, M.P.'

THIS evening witnesses the revival at the Imperial of 'King Henry V.,' and the appearance at the Avenue of the Russian company in 'The Chosen People' of Eugen Tschirikoff.

SIR HENRY IRVING will begin next week at Portsmouth his spring farewell tour, in the course of which he will be seen, for the last time in each place he visits, in 'Becket,' 'The Merchant of Venice,' 'The Lyons Mail,' 'The Bells,' and 'Waterloo.'

MISS ELLIS JEFFREYS will appear during the spring in New York, with an English company, in Mr. Cosmo Gordon Lennox's adaptation 'The Prince Consort.' Mr. Alfred Sutro has undertaken to supply her with a new play by the close of the year.

MR. PHILIP CARR proposes to open a repertory theatre in London in connexion with the Royalty, for the management of which he has recently been responsible. He contemplates reviving 'The Middleman,' 'The Palace of Truth,' 'The Lady of Lyons,' &c., and producing a translation of 'Le Gendre de M. Poirier.'

'GREAT FRIENDS,' a three-act comedy of Mr. G. S. Street, will be produced by the Stage Society at the Court Theatre on the afternoons of the 30th and 31st inst. Miss Gertrude Kingston, Miss Dorothy Grimston, Mr. Dawson Millward, and Mr. Philip Leslie will take part in the performances.

THE reappearance as a dramatist of M. Jules Lemaitre will be welcomed outside France, where it created something of a sensation. 'La Massière,' his latest novelty, produced at the Renaissance on January 11th, is a work in four acts, the interest in which is sentimental, though a portion of the treatment is satirical. A massière is a species of monitress in an art academy. By winning the love of the professor she creates some jealousy in the mind of his wife, and by marrying her son she creates a tumult in his breast. Mlle. Marthe Brandès was admirable as the heroine, M. Guitry was the professor, and Madame Judic his jealous wife.

A CHARGE has been brought against M. Henry Bernstein of having in his 'Bercail' appropriated the plot of the Russian play 'Les Chânes.' M. Urbain Gohier, to whom the accusation is due, brought a similar charge against MM. Brioux and Sigaux, the authors of 'Deserteuse.'

AMONG artists whose appearance is to be expected at His Majesty's during the coming season are Madame Bernhardt, M. Coquelin, and M. Antoine.

MR. HEINEMANN will publish shortly Mr. Pinero's much-discussed play 'A Wife without a Smile.' Its appearance in book form is eagerly looked for.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.—J. A. R.—T. A.—R. P. S.—O. M. H.—W. F. P. S.—R. S.—F. G.—received.

B. M.—Certainly.

H. S. N.—Of no interest to us.

A. H. A.—Many thanks.

No notice can be taken of anonymous communications.

MESSRS. BELL'S NEW BOOKS.

MINIATURE ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE
post free on application.

BELL'S MINIATURE SERIES OF GREAT WRITERS.

Pott 8vo, illustrated, cloth, 1s. net; or in limp leather, with Photogravure Frontispiece, 2s. net.

NEW VOLUME.

DICKENS. By W. Teignmouth Shore.

MINIATURE SERIES OF MUSICIANS.

Pott 8vo, illustrated, cloth, 1s. net; or in limp leather, with Photogravure Frontispiece 2s. net each.

NEW VOLUME.

ROSSINI. By W. A. Bevan.

LIFE AND LIGHT BOOKS.

Pott 8vo, in dainty bindings, 1s. net each.

NEW VOLUME.

SENECA. A Selection by H. C. SIDLEY.

NOW READY.

ELEMENTARY ALGEBRA. By W. M. BAKER, M.A., and A. A. BOURNE, M.A. TEACHERS' EDITION, with the Answers to each Set of Examples printed opposite to them. 2 Parts, 5s. net each.

A CHEAPER EDITION OF WHEATLEY'S
PEPYS.

The DIARY of SAMUEL PEPYS.

M.A. F.R.S. Transcribed from the Shorthand MS. in the Pepysian Library, Magdalene College, Cambridge, by the Rev. MYNORS BRIGHT, M.A. With Lord BRAYBROOKE'S Notes. Edited, with Additions, by HENRY B. WHEATLEY, F.S.A. In 8 vols. Post 8vo., 5s. net each.

[Vols. I.—V. now ready; Vol. VI. January 25.]

* * This reprint contains the whole of the text of the Diary, and the Notes and Index, as given in the ten-volume edition, the volume entitled 'Pepysiana' only being omitted.

"Mr. Wheatley has easily distanced all previous editors, both in the completeness of his matter and his annotations, and there is little doubt that this new classic edition of a classic will be a great success."—Athenæum.

THE YORK LIBRARY.

A NEW SERIES OF REPRINTS ON THIN PAPER.
Small 8vo, 2s. net in cloth, and 3s. net in leather.

NEW VOLUMES.

EMERSON'S WORKS. Edited and

Collated by GEORGE SAMPSON. Vol. IV.
Containing Miscellaneous Pieces.

CERVANTES' DON QUIXOTE.

Mottoux's Translation, Revised. With Lockhart's Life and Notes. 2 vols.

COLERIDGE'S TABLE TALK and

OMNIANA. Arranged and Edited by T. ASHE, B.A.

[Ready January 25.]

Others to follow.

London: GEORGE BELL & SONS,
Portugal Street, Lincoln's Inn, W.C.

CASSELL & COMPANY'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

NEXT WEEK WILL BE PUBLISHED.

THE OTHER SIDE OF THE LANTERN.

BY

SIR FREDERICK TREVES, Bart., G.C.V.O., &c.

With Photogravure Frontispiece and 39 Full-Page Plates from Photographs by the Author. 12s. net.

MONCURE CONWAY.

"THESE TWO VOLUMES STAND OUT LIKE TWIN GEMS FROM THE RUBBISH HEAP OF BIOGRAPHICAL WORKS WITH WHICH THIS GENERATION IS CONFRONTED," SAYS 'THE DAILY CHRONICLE' OF 'THE AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF MONCURE CONWAY.' JUST PUBLISHED IN TWO VOLUMES, 30s. NET.

ADMIRAL FREMANTLE.

"A BOOK WHICH WILL FASCINATE CIVILIANS, AND SHOULD BE IN THE HANDS OF EVERY NAVAL OFFICER," SAYS 'THE DAILY TELEGRAPH' CONCERNING 'THE NAVY AS I HAVE KNOWN IT.' BY ADMIRAL SIR E. R. FREMANTLE, C.M.G. JUST PUBLISHED, 16s. NET.

MAJOR ARTHUR GRIFFITHS.

"THERE IS NOT A DULL LINE. ITS CONTENTS HAVE A WEIRD FASCINATION," SAYS 'THE STANDARD,' REFERRING TO 'FIFTY YEARS OF PUBLIC SERVICE.' BY MAJOR ARTHUR GRIFFITHS. JUST PUBLISHED, 18s. NET.

MISS McCAUL.

"A LIVING AND SPEAKING PICTURE OF JAPAN AND THE JAPANESE," SAYS 'THE MORNING POST,' IN REVIEWING 'UNDER THE CARE OF THE JAPANESE WAR OFFICE.' BY ETHEL McCAUL. JUST PUBLISHED, 6s.

THE NEW CYCLOPÆDIA.

"AFTER CAREFUL EXAMINATION WE MAY SAY THAT IT ENDORSES ITS CLAIM TO BE 'CONCISE AND COMPREHENSIVE,' THE SUMMARIES ARE JUDICIOUSLY DONE, AND NEW FEATURES IN SCIENCE ARE NOTED," IS THE COMMENT OF 'THE ATHENÆUM' ON 'CASSELL'S CABINET CYCLOPÆDIA.' JUST PUBLISHED, 12s. 6d. NET.

PHYSICAL REGENERATION.

"AN EXHAUSTIVE AND THOROUGHLY UP-TO-DATE COMPENDIUM OF PHYSICAL CULTURE," REMARKS 'THE ILLUSTRATED SPORTING AND DRAMATIC NEWS' RESPECTING 'CASSELL'S PHYSICAL EDUCATOR.' BY EUSTACE MILES, M.A. JUST PUBLISHED, 9s.

THE LATEST ON COOKERY.

"IT IS A MONUMENTAL WORK, AND DESERVES TO BE CHRISTENED THE LIDDELL AND SCOTT OF THE KITCHEN," SAYS 'THE ST. JAMES'S GAZETTE' IN APPRECIATION OF 'CASSELL'S NEW DICTIONARY OF COOKERY.' WITH BEAUTIFUL COLOURED PLATES AND ABOUT 1,000 RECIPES. JUST PUBLISHED, 12s. 6d.

ON JANUARY 27 WILL BE PUBLISHED THE FIRST WEEKLY PART, price 6d. net, of

THE EMPIRE EDITION OF

CASSELL'S HISTORY OF ENGLAND.

SPECIAL FEATURES OF THIS NEW ISSUE.

Rembrandt Photogravure Plates, expressly prepared for this Edition from Famous Paintings by Eminent Artists.
Additional Plates in Colour, and a Series of specially prepared Coloured Maps.

CASSELL & COMPANY, LIMITED, La Belle Sauvage, London, and all Booksellers.

DIGBY, LONG &amp; CO.'S NEW LIST.

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE ADVENTURES OF A
NAVAL OFFICER.

By Capt. CHARLES HUNTER, R.N.
 Edited by Sir SPENSER ST. JOHN, G.C.M.G.
 In crown 8vo, cloth gilt, price 6s.

NEW SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.

The DOLL'S DANCE. By C. Forestier
 WALKER, Author of 'The Chameleon,' &c.

The LUCK of BELLE BARTON. By
 G. W. APPLETON, Author of 'François the Valet.'
 With 6 Full-Page Illustrations by C. KEMP TEBBY.
Scotsman—"An exciting bit of fiction."

The REDEMPTION of DAMIAN
 GIER. By WINEFRIDE TRAFFORD TAUNTON,
 Author of 'Silent Dominion,' &c.

Morning Advertiser—"An absorbing story. The authoress has already made a name for herself as a clever writer, but she has surpassed herself in the present instance....A book which will not easily be forgotten."

CELIA'S FORTUNE.

By ADELINE SERGEANT.

Times—"A well-told story."
Scotsman—"Celia is a sweet and lovable heroine."
Pall Mall Gazette—"A very human and interesting group of characters."
Vanity Fair—"A good novel."
Outlook—"The novel shows Miss Sergeant's power at its ripest."
Manchester Courier—"Well written, and full of vigorous interest."

IMPRUDENT PRUE. By Adam Ascue.
Glasgow Herald—"A very clever book, which is an immense relief from everyday fiction."

FAVOURS FROM FRANCE.

By SARAH TYTLER.

World—"A charming story."

In crown 8vo, cloth gilt, price 7s. 6d. net.

The DIVINA COMMEDIA of DANTE.

Translated into English Verse by C. POTTER.

Aberdeen Press—"This translation has led us to read again the great poem of Dante. It is a translation to be read with pleasure and profit. The verse in English has music and rhythm, it glides easily along, and it bears with it the meaning of the poet in such a measure that the English reader may readily grasp it."
Liverpool Courier—"Mr. Potter's translation is well written and pleasant to read."

London: DIGBY, LONG &amp; CO. 18, Bouverie St., E.C.

NATIONAL PROVIDENT
INSTITUTION

[Estab.] FOR MUTUAL LIFE ASSURANCE. [1835.]

|                          |     |     |             |
|--------------------------|-----|-----|-------------|
| Accumulated Fund over    | ... | ... | £6,000,000  |
| Paid in Claims more than | ... | ... | £12,400,000 |

PROFITS.

These are divided every five years solely amongst the Assured. At the 1902 Division a Cash Profit of £761,602 was apportioned amongst the members, being considerably more than one-third of the amount paid in premiums during the previous five years.

ENDOWMENT-ASSURANCE

Policies are issued, combining Life Assurance at minimum cost with provision for old age, and are singularly advantageous.

L. F. HOVIL,

Actuary and Secretary.

48, Gracechurch Street, London, E.C.

Applications for Agencies invited.

In Chaps and Chilblains

VINOLIA CREAM

affords instant relief.

1s. 1½d. and 1s. 9d. per Box.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

The best remedy for
 ACIDITY of the STOMACH, HEARTBURN,
 HEADACHE, GOUT,

And INDIGESTION.
 And Safest Aperient for Delicate Constitutions,
 Ladies, Children, and Infants.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

AUTHORIZED TO BE USED BY BRITISH SUBJECTS.

THE NATIONAL FLAG,

BEING

THE UNION JACK.

COPIES OF

NOTES AND QUERIES

FOR JUNE 30, 1900,

Can still be had, containing an account of the Flag, with Coloured Illustration according to scale.

JOHN C. FRANCIS, Notes and Queries Office, Bream's Buildings, E.C.

CLIFFORD'S INN.

For view of CLIFFORD'S INN, taken in 1892, see

NOTES AND QUERIES, April 2, 1892.

The same Number also contains Sketches of the ROLLS CHAPEL, OLD SERJEANTS' INN, the GATEWAY, LINCOLN'S INN, &c.

Price 4½d., free by post, of

JOHN C. FRANCIS, Notes and Queries Office, Bream's Buildings, E.C.

NOW READY, price 10s. 6d. net.

THE NINTH SERIES
GENERAL INDEX

OF

NOTES AND QUERIES.

With Introduction by JOSEPH KNIGHT, F.S.A.

This Index is double the size of previous ones, as it contains, in addition to the usual Index of Subjects, the Names and Pseudonyms of Writers, with a list of their Contributions. The number of constant Contributors exceeds eleven hundred.
 The Publisher reserves the right of increasing the price of the volume at any time. The number printed is limited, and the type has been distributed.

Free by post, 10s. 11d.

JOHN C. FRANCIS, Notes and Queries Office, Bream's Buildings, E.C.

TENTH EDITION, price Two Shillings.

C E L E S T I A L M O T I O N S :

A Handy Book of Astronomy.

Tenth Edition. With 3 Plates.

By W. T. LYNN, B.A. F.R.A.S.

"Well known as one of our best introductions to astronomy."—Guardian.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON &amp; CO., LIMITED, St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, E.C.

SIXTH EDITION, fcap. 8vo, cloth, price Sixpence.

REMARKABLE ECLIPSES :

A Sketch of the most interesting Circumstances connected with the Observation of Solar and Lunar Eclipses, both in Ancient and Modern Times.

By W. T. LYNN, B.A. F.R.A.S.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON &amp; CO., LIMITED, St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, E.C.

THIRD EDITION, Revised to 1904, fcap. 8vo, cloth, price Sixpence.

ASTRONOMY FOR THE YOUNG.

By W. T. LYNN, B.A. F.R.A.S.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON &amp; CO., LIMITED, St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, E.C.

ELEVENTH EDITION JUST OUT, price Sixpence, cloth.

REMARKABLE COMETS :

A Brief Survey of the most interesting Facts in the History of Cometary Astronomy.

By W. T. LYNN, B.A. F.R.A.S.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON &amp; CO., LIMITED, St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, E.C.

SECOND EDITION, fcap. 8vo, price Fourpence,

NEW TESTAMENT CHRONOLOGY :

The Principal Events Recorded in the New Testament, Arranged under their Probable Respective Dates.

By WILLIAM THYNNE LYNN, B.A. F.R.A.S.,

Associate of King's College, London ; Lay Reader in the Diocese of Rochester.

Author of 'Celestial Motions,' 'Remarkable Comets,' 'Remarkable Eclipses,' 'Astronomy for the Young,' &amp;c.

London: SAMUEL BAGSTER &amp; SONS, LIMITED, 15, Paternoster Row.

In 2 vols. crown 8vo, with 2 Portraits, 24s.

JOHN FRANCIS AND THE 'ATHENÆUM.'

A LITERARY CHRONICLE OF HALF A CENTURY.

By JOHN C. FRANCIS.

MACMILLAN &amp; CO., LIMITED, London.

BLACKIE & SON'S LIST.*THE CELTIC REVIVAL.

JUST READY.

The MYTHOLOGY of the BRITISH ISLAND. An Introduction to the Celtic Myth, Legend, Poetry, and Romance. By CHARLES SQUIRE. Demy 8vo, cloth extra, price 12s. 6d. net."Mr. Squire's exposition is very clear, judicious, and interesting.....The book is replete with curious information."—Fall Mall Gazette.The LITERATURE of the CELTS.

Its History and Romance. By MAGNUS MACLEAN, M.A. D.Sc. 416 pp. demy 8vo, cloth extra, 7s. 6d. net.

"Mr. Maclean is an enthusiastic Celt.....He has wide acquaintance with his subject, and a still wider acquaintance with the critical and other literatures which that has called forth. We cannot overpraise his account of the MSS., their writers, their discoverers, and their editors."—Daily Chronicle.The LITERATURE of the HIGH-*LANDS. By MAGNUS MACLEAN, M.A. D.Sc., Author of 'The Literature of the Celts.' Demy 8vo, cloth extra, 7s. 6d. net.Contents:—Highland Literature—Alexander Macdonald and the Jacobite Bards—Duncan Ban Macintyre and the Poets of Nature—Macpherson and his Ossian—Rob Donn and the Elegiac, Amatory, and Satiric Poets—Dugald Buchanan and the Religious Poets and Hymn Writers—Gaelic Proverbs—English Renderings of Gaelic Poetry and their Authors—The Gaelic Bards of the Nineteenth Century—The Literature of Travel and of History—Index of Names. "All things considered, this work, which is bright, well written, and well arranged, is an admirable and trustworthy text-book of its subject."—Spectator.

A NEW AND IMPORTANT WORK ON JAPAN.

DAI NIPPON: the Britain of the East.

A Study in National Evolution. By Dr. HENRY DYER. Demy 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d. net.

"An intelligent description of some of the most marked features in the political and economic conditions of the Empire of Japan as it now is."—Times."The many topics on which Dr. Dyer learnedly discourses. We recommend every one who desires to gain a just view of the present position and future prospects of Japan to read his most instructive and interesting work."—Academy and Literature.THE*RED LETTER LIBRARY.

A SERIES OF SELECTIONS FROM THE Great Masters of English Literature.

Limp leather, gilt top, 2s. 6d. net; cloth, gilt top, 1s. 6d. net.

Messrs. BLACKIE &amp; SON, Limited, have much pleasure in announcing that they have made a number of important additions to THE RED LETTER LIBRARY. Price 1s. 6d. net, cloth, gilt top; 2s. 6d. net, leather, gilt top.

LORD TENNYSON: In Memoriam.

Introduction by ALICE MEYNELL.

LORD BYRON: Select Poems. Introduction by ARTHUR SYMONS.GEORGE HERBERT: Select Poems. Introduction by his Grace the ARCHBISHOP of ARMAGH.BOSWELL: Johnson's Table Talk (Selections from the Life of Johnson). Edited, with an Introduction, by W. A. LEWIS BETTANY.COLERIDGE: Select Poems. Introduction by Mrs. MEYNELL.

OTHER VOLUMES IN PREPARATION.

Complete List on application.

THE RED LETTER SHAKESPEARE.

Edited by EDMUND K. CHAMBERS.

A New Edition of Shakespeare's Plays, in Single Volumes, for the General Reader. Text printed in Red and Black.

The following Volumes are now ready.

The MERCHANT OF VENICE.*The TEMPEST.*MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM.

OTHER VOLUMES TO BE ISSUED IMMEDIATELY.

In cloth, 1s. net; in limp leather, 1s. 6d. net.

Messrs. BLACKIE &amp; SON, Limited, will be pleased to send a set of their Illustrated Catalogues and Prospectuses, containing particulars of "The Red Letter Library," "Great Novelist" Series, "Standard Two-Shilling Library," Children's Books, and General Literature, POST FREE.

London:

BLACKIE &amp; SON, LIMITED, 50, Old Bailey, F.C.

THE SEQUEL TO 'SHE.'

THE GRAND NEW SERIAL,

'AYESHA,'

THE RETURN OF 'SHE.'

By H. RIDER HAGGARD,

NOW APPEARING MONTHLY IN

THE SEQUEL
TO 'SHE.'

THE WINDSOR MAGAZINE.

The FEBRUARY Number contains, in addition,

THE FASCINATING ROMANTIC SERIES:—

"IF YOUTH BUT KNEW." No. III. The Burgrave's Farewell.

By AGNES and EGERTON CASTLE.

THE PICTURES OF STANHOPE FORBES, A.R.A.

Beautiful Reproductions Printed on Art Paper.

A STRIKINGLY ILLUSTRATED ARTICLE ON

THE SEA POWER OF OUR RAILWAYS.

Telling of the Magnitude of the Marine Undertakings of the Leading Companies.

MANY OTHER ATTRACTIVE STORIES AND ARTICLES.

THE WINDSOR MAGAZINE.

FEBRUARY, 6d.

FORTHCOMING NOVELS.

At Six Shillings.

- By E. PHILLIPS OPPENHEIM.
The Master Mummer.
- By A. W. MARCHMONT.
A Courier of Fortune.
- By Sir WM. MAGNAY, Bart.
A Prince of Lovers.
- By HAMILTON DRUMMOND.
The King's Scapegoat.
- By ORME AGNUS.
The Root.
- By ARCHIBALD C. GUNTER.
Phil Conway.
- By COULSON KERNAHAN.
The Jackal.
- By HEADON HILL.
Millions of Mischief.
- By FREDERIC S. ISHAM.
The Strollers.
- By F. M. WHITE.
The Crimson Blind.

At Six Shillings—Continued.

- By M. P. SHIEL.
The Yellow Wave.
- By HARRIS BURLAND.
Doctor Silex.
- By GILBERT WINTLE.
Strange Partners.
- By HOWELL SCRATTON.
The Fortuna Filly.
- By MARK ASHTON.
The Head of Gold.
- By A. WILSON-BARRETT.
The Silver Pin.
- By G. MACCUTCHEN.
The Sherrods.
- By AMBROSE PRATT.
Vigorous Daunt: Billionaire.
- At Five Shillings.
- By GUY BOOTHBY.
A Crime of the Under Seas.

At Three Shillings and Sixpence.

- By JOSEPH HOCKING.
Roger Trewinion.
- By LAWRENCE L. LYNCH.
The Danger Line.
- By BURFORD DELANNOY.
Dead Man's Rooms.
- By NORMAN SILVER.
Held Apart.
- By A. M. DIEHL.
The Love of her Life.
- By HARRY GOLDING.
The Money Hunger.
- By JOHN K. LEYS.
The Houseboat Mystery.
- By T. R. THRELFALL.
Long Live Love.
- By EDITH C. KENYON.
Sir Claude Mannerley.
- By T. W. HANSHEW.
The Great Ruby.

WARD, LOCK & CO., LIMITED, Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

THE ATHENÆUM

Journal of English and Foreign Literature, Science, the Fine Arts, Music and the Drama.

No. 4031.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 28, 1905.

PRICE
THREEPENCE
REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER

ROYAL INSTITUTION of GREAT BRITAIN, ALBEMARLE STREET, PICCADILLY, W.

THURSDAY NEXT, February 2, at 5 o'clock, Prof. W. SCHLICH, Ph.D. C.I.E.F.R.S., F.R.S., F.L.S.P., will give TWO LECTURES on 'Forestry in the British Empire.' Half-a-Guinea the Course.

SATURDAY, February 4, at 3 o'clock, Sir ALEXANDER C. MACKENZIE, Mus. Doc. D.C.L. LL.D., will give THREE LECTURES on 'The Bohemian School of Music,' with Musical Illustrations. Half-a-Guinea.

Subscription to all Courses in the Season, Two Guineas.

SCHOOL of SOCIOLOGY and SOCIAL ECONOMICS.

LENT TERM. Mr. E. J. URWICK, M.A., will give COURSES of EIGHT LECTURES at CANTON HALL, WESTMINSTER, on TUESDAYS, at 11.30 a.m., beginning January 31, on 'INDUSTRY and SOCIAL LIFE'; on FRIDAYS, at 4.30 p.m., beginning February 3, on 'SOCIOLOGICAL APPLICATIONS of ETHICS and PSYCHOLOGY.' Ticket for either Course, 6s. 6d.; single admission, 1s. Particulars of Classes to be held by Miss E. A. Pearson, Miss P. Plater, and Mr. Urwick on application to the Hon. Sec., Mrs. G. F. Hill, 10, Kensington Mansions, S.W.

ETCHINGS by WHISTLER, S. HADEN,

MERYON, SAMUEL PALMER, &c., Messrs. Ernest Brown & Phillips of the Leicester Galleries, Leicester Square, will purchase for cash examples by these Artists, either singly or in collections.

FRENCH MASTERS.—DURAND-RUEL & SONS,

of Paris.—EXHIBITION of 315 PICTURES by BODIN, GÉZANNE, DEGAS, MANET, MONET, MORISOT, PISSARRO, RENOIR, SISLEY.—GRAFTON GALLERIES, Grafton Street, Bond Street, DAILY (till February 18), 10-6. Admission 1s.

OLD-FASHIONED WHIST CLUB can ELECT

a FEW GOOD PLAYERS. Subscription, Half-a-Guinea. Moderate points only. No Bridge.—Address Box 976, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

NEWSVENDORS' BENEVOLENT and PROVIDENT INSTITUTION.

Founded 1839.

Funds exceed 4,000l.

Office: Memorial Hall Buildings, 16, Farringdon Street, London, E.C.

Patron:

The Right Hon. the EARL of ROSBERY, K.G.

President:

The LORD GLENESK.

Treasurer:

The LONDON and WESTMINSTER BANK, LIMITED.

A Donation of Ten Guineas constitutes a Vice-President and gives three votes for life at all elections. Each Donation of Three Guineas gives a vote at all elections for life. Every Annual Subscriber is entitled to one vote at all elections in respect of each Five Shillings so paid.

MEMBERSHIP.—Every Man and Woman throughout the United Kingdom, whether Publisher, Wholesaler, Retailer, Employer, or Employee, is entitled to become a Member of this Institution, and enjoy its benefits upon payment of Five Shillings annually, or Three Guineas for life, provided that he or she is engaged in the sale of Newspapers, and such members who thus contribute secure priority of consideration in the event of their needing aid from the Institution.

PENSIONS.—The Annuitants now number thirty-six, the men receiving 25l. and the women 20l. per annum each, and they include:—The 'Royal Victoria Pension Fund,' which was established in 1887 and enlarged in 1897, 1901, and 1902, perpetually commemorates the great advantages the News Trade enjoyed under the rule of Her late Majesty Queen Victoria, provides Pensions of 20l. a year each for Six Widows of Newsvendors.

The 'Francis Fund' provides Pensions for One Man, 25l., and One Woman, 20l., and was specially subscribed in memory of the late John Francis, who died on April 6, 1882, and was for more than fifty years Publisher of the Athenæum. He took an active and leading part throughout the whole period of the agitation for the repeal of the various then existing 'Taxes on Knowledge,' and was for very many years a staunch supporter of this Institution.

The 'Horace Marshall Pension Fund' is the gift of the late Mr. Horace Brooks Marshall. The employees of that firm have primary right of election to its benefits, but this privilege not having been exercised until 1904, the General Pensions of the Institution have had the full benefit arising from the interest on this investment from 1887 to 1903.

The 'Herbert Lloyd Pension Fund' provides 25l. per annum for one man; and was established in 1903 in perpetual and grateful memory of Mr. Herbert Lloyd, who was a generous benefactor of this Institution, and who died May 12, 1899.

The 'Hospital Pensions' consist of an annual contribution of 35l., whereby Sir Henry Charles Burdett and his co-directors generously enable the Committee to grant 20l. for One Year to a Man and 15l. for One Year to a Woman, under conditions laid down in Rule 8c.

W. WILKIE JONES, Secretary.

THE BOOKSELLERS' PROVIDENT INSTITUTION.

Founded 1837.

Patron—HER MAJESTY QUEEN ALEXANDRA.

Invested Capital 30,000l.

A UNIQUE INVESTMENT

Offered to London Booksellers and their Assistants.

A young man or woman of twenty-five can invest the sum of Twenty Guineas (or its equivalent by instalments), and obtain the right to participate in the following advantages:—

FIRST. Freedom from want in time of Adversity as long as need exists.

SECOND. Permanent Relief in Old Age.

THIRD. Medical advice by eminent Physicians and Surgeons.

FOURTH. A Cottage in the Country (Abbots Langley, Hertfordshire) for aged Members, with garden produce, coal, and medical attendance free, in addition to an annuity.

FIFTH. A furnished house in the same Retreat at Abbots Langley for the free use of Members and their families for holidays or during convalescence.

SIXTH. A contribution towards Funeral expenses when it is needed.

SEVENTH. All these are available not for Members only, but also for their wives or widows and young children.

EIGHTH. The payment of the subscriptions confers an absolute right to these benefits in all cases of need.

For further information apply to the Secretary, Mr. GEORGE LARNER, 23, Paternoster Row, E.C.

ECCLÉSIASTIQUE CATHOLIQUE FRANÇAIS,

habitant Ville du centre de la France. PRENDRAIT ÉTUDIANT désirant APPRENDRE LANGUE FRANÇAISE.—S'adresser à M. L'ABBÉ RADIER, Blois, France.

HANOVER.—PARENTS wishing to send a SON

to HANOVER to LEARN GERMAN will find a suitable place in the Family of a Master where he will hear nothing but German spoken and receive every care and attention. Good reference.—Prof. GRANN, Hildesheimerstrasse 25, Hanover, Germany.

EDUCATION.

Parents or Guardians desiring accurate information relative to the CHOICE of SCHOOLS for BOYS or GIRLS or TUTOR in England or Abroad are invited to call upon or send fully detailed particulars to MESSRS. GABBITAS, THRING & CO.,

who for more than thirty years have been closely in touch with the leading Educational Establishments.

Advice, free of charge, is given by Mr. Thring, Nephew of the 1st Head Master of Uppingham, 36, Sackville Street, London, W.

CITY of SHEFFIELD.

EDUCATION COMMITTEE.

KING EDWARD VII. SCHOOL AT SHEFFIELD.

HEAD MASTER REQUIRED.

The GOVERNORS of the FIRST-GRADE SECONDARY DAY SCHOOL (Classical and Modern, with Preparatory Department attached), about to be established in place of the Royal Grammar School and Wesley College, and to be called, by command of His Majesty, KING EDWARD VII. SCHOOL AT SHEFFIELD, invite applications for the position of HEAD MASTER. Salary to commence at 800l. per year, with House connected with the School. It is expected that the School will start with from 350 to 400 boys. Fees up to 16l. 16s. per annum. A general outline of the Scheme will be furnished to intending Candidates.

Forms of Application, which should be obtained on application to the undersigned, should be sent in not later than FEBRUARY 22, 1905, accompanied by 25 printed copies of Testimonials.

Personal canvassing will disqualify Candidates.

JNO. F. MOSS, Secretary.

Education Office, Sheffield.

WELSH INTERMEDIATE EDUCATION ACT, 1889.

CENTRAL WELSH BOARD.

APPOINTMENT of an EXAMINER in LATIN.

The EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE of the BOARD will shortly proceed to the appointment of an EXAMINER in LATIN.

Particulars relating to the appointment may be obtained from the undersigned not later than the 31st day of JANUARY, 1905.

OWEN OWEN, Chief Inspector.

Central Welsh Board, Cardiff, January 18, 1905.

DIOCESAN TRAINING COLLEGE, YORK.

VICE-PRINCIPAL REQUIRED for NEXT TERM. Must be in Holy Orders, Unmarried, and a good Teacher and Disciplinarian. Salary to begin with 2000l. per annum, along with Board, Residence, and Washing. Applications, with Three Testimonials only, to be sent to

J. T. WARE, Esq.

6, New Street, York.

THE SURVEYORS' INSTITUTION,

12, GREAT GEORGE STREET, WESTMINSTER.

The COUNCIL require a SECRETARY, and invite applications for the Office from Candidates between the ages of 28 and 40. Preference will be given to Candidates with a University Degree, or who have had other equivalent training.

Salary to commence at 600l. per annum.

Information as to the duties, and forms of application, can be obtained from the Honorary Secretary, PERIVALL CURRY, 37, Norfolk Street, Strand, W.C.

Formal applications, by letter only, are to be sent in on or before FEBRUARY 15, 1905, addressed to PERIVALL CURRY, Esq., Honorary Secretary to the Surveyors' Institution, 37, Norfolk Street, Strand, W.C., endorsed 'Application for Secretaryship.'

Testimonials must be recent, and not more than four will be received from any applicant.

Canvassing, either directly or indirectly, will be held to be a disqualification for appointment.

CITY of HULL.

EDUCATION COMMITTEE.

The above COMMITTEE require the services of an ASSISTANT ART TEACHER at the MUNICIPAL SCHOOL of ART, who will be required to devote the whole of his time to the service of the Committee. Salary 55l. per annum.

Applications, stating age, qualifications, and experience, accompanied by copies of three recent Testimonials, must be sent to Mr. J. H. Parkyn, A.R.C.A., Head Master, School of Art, Albion Street, Hull, on or before FEBRUARY 28, 1905.

Canvassing will be considered a disqualification.

J. T. RILEY, Secretary of Education.

Education Offices, Albion Street, Hull, January 23, 1905.

METROPOLITAN BOROUGH of FINSBURY.

CHIEF LIBRARIAN WANTED, to enter upon duty as soon as possible. Must be thoroughly versed in Modern Library Methods, and have at least five years' experience of exact Classification (Adjustable, Decimal, or Expansive systems) in a Public Library. Salary to commence at 200l. increasing by annual increments of 15l. to 275l. Applications, accompanied by not more than three recent Testimonials, to be lodged with the undersigned at the Clerkenwell Public Library, Finsbury, London, E.C., not later than Monday, FEBRUARY 13, 1905, at 5 p.m., endorsed on outside 'Librarianship.' Canvassing of any kind will be regarded as a disqualification.

JAMES DUFF BROWN.

Clerk to the Public Libraries Committee.

AUTHOR and JOURNALIST of established reputation, forcible and versatile Leader-Writer, and energetic Organiser, is OPEN to CONTRIBUTE SIGNED ARTICLES, to which his name would lend additional value, or would undertake the Editorship for which he is qualified by considerable experience of new or existing Magazine or Journal.—H., S. Leitch Road, Kew, Surrey.

Yearly Subscription, free by post, Inland, 15s. 3d.; Foreign, 18s. Entered at the New York Post Office as Second Class matter.

FRANCE.—The ATHENÆUM can be obtained at the following Railway Stations in France:—

AMIENS, ANTIBES, BEAULIEU-SUR-MER, BIARRITZ, BORDEAUX, BOULOGNE-SUR-MER, CALAIS, CANNES, DIJON, DUNKIRK, HAVRE, LILLE, LYONS, MARSEILLES, MENTONE, MONACO, NANTES, NICE, PARIS, PAU, SAINT RAFAEL, TOURS, TOULON.

PARIS: W. H. SMITH & SON, 248, Rue de Rivoli; and at the GALIGNANI LIBRARY, 224, Rue de Rivoli.

ASSISTANT EDITORSHIP WANTED by a

GENTLEMAN. Has had great experience, and was four years Editor of a Colonial Daily. Special knowledge of Far East.—Address Box 963, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

ADVERTISER desires post as LITERARY

ADVISER to PUBLISHING FIRM. University Classical Honours Man.—Address A. H. S. Box 962, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

PROOFS to CORRECT, REPORTING WORK.

or any kind of Descriptive Writing undertaken by experienced JOURNALIST.—Address SON-ENROU, 10, Arlington Street, New North Road, Islington, N.

ADVERTISER, young and energetic, desires

RE-ENGAGEMENT as PUBLISHER'S REPRESENTATIVE. Suburbs and Country. Excellent references.—Address Box 175, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

INDEXING by a very experienced Hand. High-class Work only undertaken. Best Testimonials.—V. S., 61, Regentlingham Road, S.W.

TRANSLATION, REVISION, RESEARCH,

REVIEWING, INDEXING, and other LITERARY WORK, or non-resident Secretaryship. Classics, French, German, Italian. Special Subjects, Mythology and Literature. Varied experience.—MISS SELBY, 53, Talbot Road, W.

LITERARY RESEARCH undertaken at the British Museum and elsewhere on moderate terms. Excellent Testimonials.—A. B., Box 910, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

LADY PROOF READER, of some experience,

wants SITUATION. In London preferred.—Apply, personally or by letter, J. E. F., Athenæum Press, Bream's Buildings, E.C.

TYPE-WRITING.—Mrs. KATE REILLY,

'thoroughly trustworthy when any confidential work is required,' has opened another Copying Office at 76 REGENT STREET, W. MSS. received by post accurately and quickly COPIED. Experienced in all kinds of Professional Work. (Established at Whitcomb House in 1901.)

TYPE-WRITER.—AUTHORS' PLAYS, MSS.,

&c., of every description. Carbon and other Copies. MS. from Dictation quickly and accurately.—Miss E. M. TIGER, 5, Naitland Park Road, Haverstock Hill, N.W. Established 1884.

TYPE-WRITING.—The WEST KENSINGTON

OFFICES. Authors MSS., Translations, &c. Legal and General Copying. Circulars, &c., duplicated. Usual terms. References. Established twelve years.—S. ARS & SONS, 229, Hammersmith Road, W. (Private Address: 13, Wolverton Gardens, Hammersmith.)

SHORTHAND and TYPE-WRITING.—

Authors' MSS., Plays, Sermons, Reports, &c., 10d. per 1000. Legal and General Copying. Accuracy and Despatch guaranteed.—Miss N. E. ROSS, 8, Westover Road, Wardsworth Common, London, S.W.

TYPE-WRITING promptly and accurately done.

Ten years' experience. Excellent references. 15d. per 1000 words. Reduction for quantity.—Miss MISTON, The Orchard, Cottrell Road, Surbiton S.W.

TYPE-WRITING undertaken by highly educated

Women (Classical Tripos; Cambridge Higher Local; Modern Languages). Research, Revision, Translation.—THE CAMBRIDGE TYPE-WRITING AGENCY, 10, Duke Street, Adelphi, W.C.

AUTHORS' MSS., SERMONS, PLAYS, ENVE-

LOPES, CIRCULARS, and all kinds. TYPED at home. Kensington 15d. per 1000. Good paper. Orders promptly executed.—M. L., 7, Vernon Road, Clapham.

TYPE-WRITING.—SERMONS, AUTHORS' MSS.,

&c., carefully and promptly executed. 8d. per 1000 words, paper included.—Miss A. Moss, Strathclyde New Barn Longfield Kent.

TYPE-WRITING.—MSS., SCIENTIFIC, and of all Descriptive, &c. COPIED. Special attention to work requiring care. Dictation Rooms. Short and long type writing. Usual Terms.—Misses D. B. and L. I. 1018, Donington House, 50, Norfolk Street, Strand, London.

THE AUTHOR'S AGENCY.—Established 1879.

The interests of Authors capably represented. Agreements for Publishing arranged. MSS. placed with Publishers.—Terms and Testimonials on application to Mr. A. M. J. JONES, 54, Paternoster Row.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY,

74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON,

Invite Inquiries from those seeking

PERMANENT PHOTOGRAPHIC REPRODUCTIONS

OF THE HIGHEST POSSIBLE EXCELLENCE.

THE COMPANY'S PROCESSES—

Autotype Solar (Carbon).

Autotype Mechanical (Collotype).

Auto-Gravure (Copperplate Engraving).

ARE EMPLOYED BY—

The Trustees of the British Museum.

The Local Government Board.

Many Learned Societies, Leading Publishers, and Artists of Repute.

Examples of Work may be inspected and all information obtained at—

THE AUTOTYPE FINE-ART GALLERY,

74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.

MR. GEORGE LARNER, Accountant and Licensed Valuer to the Bookselling, Publishing, Newspaper, Printing, and Stationery Trades. Partnerships Arranged. Balance Sheets and Trading Accounts Prepared and Audited. All Business carried out under Mr. Lerner's personal supervision.—28, 29, and 30, Paternoster Row, E.C., Secretary to the Booksellers' Provident Institution.

NEWSPAPER PROPERTIES

BOUGHT, SOLD, VALUED; and supplied with every requisite. Write for THE COMPLETE JOURNALIST, sent post free. The Imperial News Agency, London: 2 and 4, Tudor Street, E.C. America: 700-706, Fourteenth Street, N.W., Washington, D.C.

C MITCHELL & CO., Agents for the Sale and Purchase of Newspaper Properties, undertake Valuations for Probate or Purchase, Investigations, and Audit of Accounts, &c. Card of Terms on application. Mitchell House, 1 and 2, Snow Hill, Holborn Viaduct, E.C.

ATHENÆUM PRESS.—JOHN EDWARD FRANCIS, Printer of the Athenæum, Notes and Queries, &c., is prepared to SUBMIT ESTIMATES for all kinds of BOOK, NEWS, and PERIODICAL PRINTING.—13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

Catalogues.

MESSRS. HENRY YOUNG & SONS possess one of the LARGEST STOCKS of OLD and NEW BOOKS in GREAT BRITAIN, and they will be glad to hear from any one in search of Books out of print, as they can in many cases supply them at once.

ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE MONTHLY. Price 6d. 12, South Castle Street, Liverpool.

H. H. PEACH, Antiquarian Bookseller, 37, Belvoir Street, Leicester, issues CATALOGUES of MSS. and OLD BOOKS post free to Book Collectors. No. 9 contains Manuscripts Fourteenth and Eighteenth Centuries—Sanskrit Illuminated MS.—Early Printing, &c.

CATALOGUE No. 42.—Drawings—Engravings—Turner's Liber Studiorum—Lucas's Mezzotints after Constable—Engravings, Hogarth, Girtin—Etchings, Palmer, Whistler—Japanese Colour-Prints—Illustrated Books—Works by Ruskin. Post free, Sixpence. Wm. Ward, 2, Church Terrace, Richmond, Surrey.

THE INTERNATIONAL BOOK CIRCULAR, No. 139, containing a Special Article, entitled 'SOME CONTEMPORARY FOREIGN CHEMISTS,' by Dr. M. O. FORSTER, together with an exact Bibliography of their Publications, and a Double Plate of their Portraits. Specimen Copies gratis.—WILLIAMS & NORGATE, Book Importers, 14, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, W.C.

GEOGRAPHICAL BOOKS.

CATALOGUE, containing De Bry's Collection of Voyages, 1590-1619; Hakluyt's Navigations, first edition, 1589, and second edition, 1593; Blaeu's Atlas, 1664; Cook's Voyages, 1773-1781; Linschoten's Voyages, 1598; Olans Magnus, 1555; Munster's Cosmographia, 1552, and other Geographical Works in fine condition as described, post free on application.—JAMES MACLEOD & SONS, Booksellers to the University, 61, St. Vincent Street, Glasgow.

LEIGHTON'S

CATALOGUE of EARLY PRINTED and other INTERESTING BOOKS, MANUSCRIPTS, and BINDINGS.

Part VII. R.—SHAKESPEARE, 160 Illustrations, price 2s. NEARLY READY.

Parts I.—VI., containing A—Q, with 890 Illustrations in Facsimile. Price 15s. the 6 Parts.

J. & J. LEIGHTON, 40, Brewer Street, Golden Square, W.

INCUNABULA TYPOGRAPHICA.

CATALOGUE of 1,500 BOOKS PRINTED before A.D. 1500 (by 400 Printers in 90 different Cities), for sale at prices affixed. 232 pp. with 80 Facsimiles. To be had post free.

JACQUES ROSENTHAL, Bookseller, 10, Karl Str., Munich, Bavaria.

CATALOGUE (36) of OLD and RARE BOOKS and MANUSCRIPTS. Illuminated MSS.—fine Bindings—Early Printed Books—Autograph Letters, &c. With 57 Facsimiles. For sale at prices affixed. To be had post free.

Copy with 10 extra Plates, price 1s. JACQUES ROSENTHAL, Bookseller, 10, Karl Str., Munich, Bavaria.

FOLLOWING of CHRIST.

I am always open to Purchase for Cash, Highest Prices given:—TREATISE of ye IMITACION and FOLWYNGE ye BLESSED LYFE of CRIST. London, Wynkin de Worde, 1501.

London, Richard Tynson, 1503, 1504, 1517. The Imitation (following) of Christ, Translated in Cornish, Kentish, Manx, Scotch, and other Dialects.

Early Editions of the Imitation of Christ, and Translations in all Languages.

JACQUES ROSENTHAL, Bookseller, 10, Karl Str., Munich, Bavaria.

PORTRAIT of GEORGE MEREDITH, after the celebrated Painting by G. F. WATTS, R.A., Engraved by W. BISCOMBE GARDNER. Limited to 600 Artist's Proofs at One Guinea each. Size, 12 in. by 8 1/2 in.—Address W. BISCOMBE GARDNER, Hoathly, Hind Head, Surrey.

GEORGE CRUIKSHANK.

Collectors, Dealers, and Owners having Coloured or Plain Caricatures, Etchings, Engravings, Woodcuts (or Books containing same)

Done by GEORGE CRUIKSHANK

Which they wish to dispose of

Are requested to send Title, Publisher, Date, Condition, and Price asked to

EDWIN H. WENDELL, Esq.,

500 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

MARLBOROUGH.—TO BE SOLD, WITH POSSESSION.—AXHOLME, in the London and Bath Road, within a mile of Marlborough College, with fine Views of the magnificently Timbered Slopes of Savernake Forest, a DETACHED FREEHOLD RESIDENCE, with Six Bedrooms, Dressing Room, Three good Reception Rooms, and Domestic Offices. Stabling, Lodge, Gardener's Cottage, and other Out-buildings. Well-timbered Grounds, nearly Four Acres, bounded and intersected by the River Kennet.—Solicitors, Messrs KAYS & JONES, 37, Norfolk Street, W.C. Particulars of Mr. MARK JEANS, Marlborough.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS.—WINTER APARTMENTS.—Comfortably Furnished Sitting-Room and One Bedroom. Pleasant and central. No others taken.—R.H., 66, Grove Hill Road, Tunbridge Wells.

INFORMATION to LIBRARIANS and COLLECTORS.—To sell PRIVATELY, a fine COLLECTION of FRENCH BOOKS, Revolutionary Papers, Placards, Pamphlets on Louis XVI, Marie Antoinette, Robespierre, Napoleon, &c. All genuine and scarce. Fine opportunity at very moderate charge. Price 200l.—Write to M. A. H., 9, Connaught Street, Hyde Park.

Sales by Auction.

FRIDAY, February 3, at half-past 12 o'clock. Extensive Sale of valuable Miscellaneous Property.

MR. J. C. STEVENS will OFFER, at his Rooms, 38, King Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C., SCIENTIFIC, SURVEYING, DRAWING, and other Instruments—Microscopes and Microscopic Slides, and Objectives—Photographic Lenses by best Makers—and all kinds of Photographic Apparatus—Field and Astronomical Telescopes—Electrical Goods and Apparatus—Optical Lanterns and Slides—Cinematograph Apparatus and Films—Chinese and Japanese Porcelain—and Ivory Carvings and Bronzes and other Art Objects—and many other Lots of valuable Property.

On view day prior 2 to 5 and morning of Sale. Catalogues on application.

Curiosities.

MR. STEVENS'S NEXT SALE of CURIOS will take place on TUESDAY, January 31, and will include CARVED IVORY FIGURES—Cloisonné Ware—Satsuma—Bronzes and Metal Wares from China and Japan—Native Weapons and Curios from all Parts of the World—and the usual Miscellaneous Assortment.

Catalogues on application to Mr. J. C. STEVENS, 38, King Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C.

MR. J. C. STEVENS, Auctioneer and Valuer, 38, King Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C., begs to announce that SALES are held at his Rooms regularly for the DISPOSAL OF ANTIQUE FURNITURE, WORKS OF ART, SILVER PLATE, JEWELLERY, BOOKS, COINS, PICTURES and ENGRAVINGS, SCIENTIFIC INSTRUMENTS, and all kinds of MISCELLANEOUS PROPERTY.

Valuations for all purposes.

Terms and all particulars on application.

Engravings and Etchings, chiefly by the Old Masters.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on MONDAY, January 30, and Following Day, at 1 o'clock precisely, ENGRAVINGS and ETCHINGS, comprising Examples from the Works of Aldegraver, Beham, A. Dürer, and other Old Masters, the Property of HEDLEY PEEK, Esq., deceased; an extensive Collection of the Works of W. Hollar, the Property of a NOBLEMAN; Etchings by Rembrandt, including 'Two Impressions of 'The Three Trees'—Plates from Turner's 'Liber Studiorum,' 'England and Wales,' &c.; Engravings illustrating the History of the French Revolution, the Property of a NOBLEMAN—a few Framed Engravings, &c.

May be viewed. Catalogues may be had.

The Collection of Coins and Medals of the late A. H. SKELTON, Esq., and other Properties, including an Officer's Indian Mutiny Victoria Cross.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on THURSDAY, February 2, and Following Day, at 1 o'clock precisely, the COLLECTION of GREEK, ROMAN, ENGLISH, and FOREIGN COINS, &c., the Property of the late AUGUSTUS HENRY SKELTON, Esq.; a small COLLECTION of ENGLISH GOLD and SILVER COINS, &c., the Property of the late HUMPHREY WOOD, Esq., and other Properties, containing Greek, Roman, Early British, Anglo-Saxon, English and Foreign Coins, Medals, and Tokens, and including a Gold Presentation Watch and Group of Seven Decorations presented to Sir Alexander Armstrong, R.N.M.D. K.C.B., and an Indian Mutiny Victoria Cross and Medal awarded to Lieut. H. C. I. Jarrett (afterwards Colonel), 26th Bengal N.I.—Coin Cabinets, and Numismatic Works.

May be viewed two days prior. Catalogues may be had.

Valuable Law Books, including the Library of R. H. DUN, Esq., of Lincoln's Inn—Handsome Oak and Mahogany Bookcases, &c.

MESSRS. HODGSON & CO. will SELL by AUCTION, at their Rooms, 115, Chancery Lane, W.C., on FRIDAY, February 3, at 1 o'clock, VALUABLE LAW BOOKS, comprising the above Library and other Properties, including a Complete Set of the Law Reports to 1901, noted up, 323 vols. half—the Law Journal Reports, from the Commencement in 1822 to 1897, 200 vols.—a Fine Set of the Law Times Reports, from 1870 to 1905, 68 vols.—Encyclopædia of the Laws of England, 13 vols.—Campbell's Ruling Cases, 26 vols.—useful Modern Text-Books, also handsome Oak and Mahogany Glazed Bookcases—Sheraton Sideboard and other Furniture—Mahogany Cabinet, containing a Collection of Mineralogical Specimens—a Binocular Microscope by Baker—Portraits—Engravings, &c.

To be viewed, and Catalogues had.

Miscellaneous Books, including the Library of the late G. A. F. RIDOUTT, removed from Portsmouth.

MESSRS. HODGSON & CO. will SELL by AUCTION, at their Rooms, 115, Chancery Lane, W.C., on TUESDAY, February 7, and Two Following Days, at 1 o'clock, MISCELLANEOUS BOOKS, including the above Library and other Properties, comprising Smith's Catalogue Raisonné, 9 vols.—Burlington Fine-Arts Club Catalogues of the Works of the Ferrarabologna and Netherlandish Schools—Perkins's Tuscan Sculptors—Early Printed Books—Books relating to America—Hakluyt's Voyages, Limited Edition, 12 vols.—Scott's Waverley Novels, Edinburgh Edition, 48 vols.—Kipling's Works, Edition de Luxe, 22 vols.—The Kilmecott Press Keats—First Editions of Modern Authors—Crelighton's History of the Papacy, 5 vols., and other Standard Historical and Theological Works—Early Editions of the Bible—The Writings of Bunyan and Keach, &c.

Catalogues are preparing.

MESSRS. CHRISTIE, MANSON & WOODS respectfully give Notice that they will hold the Following SALES by AUCTION at their Great Rooms, King Street, St. James's Square, the Sales commencing at 1 o'clock precisely:—

On MONDAY, January 30, CARVED and other FRAMES, the Property of Messrs. LAWRIE & CO., late of 159, New Bond Street, W., and OLD PICTURES, the Property of a Gentleman, and others.

On THURSDAY, February 2, MODERN ETCHINGS and ENGRAVINGS.

On FRIDAY, February 3, OBJECTS of ART and VERTU, PORCELAIN, and DECORATIVE FURNITURE, from numerous Sources.

On SATURDAY, February 4, MODERN PICTURES and DRAWINGS of the late H. L. MICHOLLS, Esq., and others.

WILLIS'S ROOMS, KING STREET, ST. JAMES'S SQUARE, S.W.

A Library of about 4,000 Volumes of Books, formed by that well-known Collector ALEXANDER NESBITT, Esq., F.S.A., and removed from the residence, Oldlands, Sussex, in consequence of the Estate having been disposed of.

MESSRS. ROBINSON & FISHER are instructed to SELL, at their Rooms, as above, on WEDNESDAY, February 1, at 1 o'clock precisely, the LIBRARY, comprising a large quantity of General Literature—Works on Topography, Painting, Furniture, Artistic Decorations, Natural History, Science, Ancient and Modern Architecture, Poetry, Travel, &c.

May be viewed two days prior, and Catalogues had of W. SANDERS FISKE, Esq., Solicitor, 10, Norfolk Street, Strand; and of the AUCTIONEERS.

THE FORTNIGHTLY REVIEW.

Contents. FEBRUARY, 1905.

'KING LEAR' in PARIS. By Maurice Maeterlinck.

SUGGESTIONS for a NEW POLITICAL PARTY. By Dr. J. Beattie Crozier.

PORT ARTHUR—and AFTER. By Alfred Stead.

The PSYCHOLOGY of DISRAELI. By Horace B. Samuel.

'PACIFIC PENETRATION' and POLICE: the Morocco Question. By J. Hall Richardson.

The GERMAN TROUBLES in S.W. AFRICA. By Dr. Louis Elkind.

GREEK at the UNIVERSITIES. By Prof. J. Churton Collins.

THE CASE of WEI-HAI-WEI. By David Fraser.

The LAST of the FRENCH MARSHALS. By Major Arthur Griffiths.

The RED VIRGIN of MONTMARTRE. By Edith Sellers.

KITCHEN COMEDIES. By Mrs. John Lane.

EMIGRATION: an International Affair. By J. D. Whelpley.

FRENCH LIFE and the FRENCH STAGE. By John F. Macdonald.

TIME'S ABSTRACT and BRIEF CHRONICLE. III. By G. K. Chesterton.

A MODERN UTOPIA. Chaps. 6-7. By H. G. Wells.

Supplementary Article:—

IS RUSSIA on the EVE of a REVOLUTION? By Dr. A. S. Rappoport.

London: Chapman & Hall, Limited.

LONGMAN'S MAGAZINE.

FEBRUARY. Price SIXPENCE.

HAY FEVER. Chaps. 4-5. By Walter Herries Pollock and Guy C. Pollock.

DARKY, the BOUNDARY DOG. By James Buckland.

HAMPSTEAD REVISITED. By Prof. Sully.

DIANA: a Study. By Florence Hayllar.

NERA'S SONG. By Eva Gore-Booth.

SEVENTY YEARS AGO. By George Bourne.

WILD WHEAT. Chaps. 3-5. By M. E. Francis (Mrs. Francois Blundell).

AT the SIGN of the SHIP. By Andrew Lang.

Longmans, Green &amp; Co. 39, Paternoster Row, London. E.C.

THE CORNHILL MAGAZINE

For FEBRUARY. Price One Shilling.

Contents.

ROSE of the WORLD. Book II. Chaps. 16-18. By Agnes and Egerton Castle.

The LUNGS of the HOUSE of COMMONS. By Henry W. Lucy.

A RUSSIAN NAPOLEON. By Maurice Church.

KINGSTON, JAMAICA. By Frank T. Bullen.

OLD-TIME NEWFOUNDLAND. By His Honour Judge Prowse.

CLIMBING the (JOINT-STOCK) TREE. By George Yard.

ON WEIGHING ATOMS. By W. A. Shenstone, F.R.S.

SYLVESTER EVE. By L. H.

SOME RECOLLECTIONS of ACTIVE SERVICE. By Major-General T. Maunsell, C.B.

The TWO HALVES. By W. H. Rainsford.

The KING'S REVOKE. Chaps. 3-5. By Mrs. Margaret L. Woods.
London: Smith, Elder & Co. 15, Waterloo Place.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE SCHOOL, HAMPSTEAD (selected design); Students' Drawings for the Institute Prizes; Mr. Clausen's Lectures at the Royal Academy; European Architecture in India (Institute of Architects); Memorials of E. Burne-Jones; Interior, York Minster; Sketches among the English Cathedrals; Types of Concrete-Steel Structures (Student's Column) &c.—See the BUILDERS of January 28 (4d.); by post, 4½d. Through any Newsagent, or direct from the Publisher of the Builder, Catherine Street, London, W.C.

EBENEZER PROUT'S WORKS on MUSIC.

Bound, each net 5s.

HARMONY: its Theory and Practice. NEW EDITION, Revised and largely Rewritten.

ANALYTICAL KEY to the EXERCISES in the Same, net 3s.

COUNTERPOINT: Strict and Free. Eighth Edition.

DOUBLE COUNTERPOINT and CANON. Third Edition.

FUGUE. Fourth Edition.

FUGAL ANALYSIS. Third Edition.

MUSICAL FORM. Fifth Edition.

APPLIED FORMS. Fourth Edition.

The ORCHESTRA. 2 vols.

Augener, Limited, 199, Regent Street, W., and 22, Newgate Street, E.C.

AN INDEX to CHANGES of NAME, effected by Statute, Royal Licence, &c. By W. P. W. PHILLIMORE and E. A. FRY. With Introduction on the Law of Change of Name by W. P. W. PHILLIMORE. This Index relates to about 15,000 Families. Only 350 Copies printed. Price One Guinea net. To those subscribing before January 31 the price is 15s. net; carriage 6d. extra.

HERALDS' COATS of ARMS, regarded from a Legal Aspect. By W. P. W. PHILLIMORE, M.A., B.C.L. Price 1s. net (by post, 1s. 1d.).

This pamphlet deals fully with the attempts of various writers, notably in the Ancestor, to justify, under the guise of "Prescription," the use of bogus coats of arms. The Appendix contains the leading Statutes and Cases.

PEDIGREE WORK. A Guide to the Genealogist in Searching Records and Compiling and Printing Family Histories and Pedigrees. With New Date-Book. By W. P. W. PHILLIMORE. Price 1s. net (by post, 1s. 1d.).

PHILLIMORE'S PARISH REGISTER SERIES. For Subscribers only. Price 10s. 6d. net each Volume. Edition limited to 150 Copies.

In this Series have been printed upwards of Fifty Volumes for the following Counties: CORNWALL, SOMERSET, DORSET, HANTS, GLOUCESTER, WORCESTER, WARWICK, HUCKS, NOTTS, NORFOLK, LONDON, LINCOLN, DERBY, comprising many Hundred Parishes.

Phillimore &amp; Co. 124, Chancery Lane.

SUPPLEMENT to HAIN and COPINGER'S REPERTORIUM BIBL. NOW READY.—PROF. DR. DIETRICH REICHLING.

APPENDICES ad HAINII COPINGERI REPERTORIUM BIBLIOGRAPHICUM. PART I. Very important Bibliographical Item, containing a full description of 800 Incunabula, of which 265 are entirely unknown to Hain and Copinger. 206 pp. 8vo, price 10s.

Jacques Rosenthal, Bookseller, 10, Karl Str., Munich, Bavaria.

THE TECHNIQUE of INDEXING. By MARY PETHERBRIDGE, Nat. Sci. Tripos, Indexer of the East India Company's Records, the Drapers' Company's Records, the Warrington Corporation Records, &c. Price 5s. net.—Published by the Secretariat Bureau, 52a, Conduit Street, London, W.

JUST PUBLISHED, January 11, 1905. Price Two Guineas net. Limited to 500 numbered Copies.

THE EIGHTEENTH CENTURY ARCHITECTURE of BATH. By MOWBRAY A. GREEN, A.R.C.B.A. With 195 Full-Page Plates and 52 other Engravings, Views, Details, Plans, Sketches, and Facsimiles. Also Articles on Mrs. Piozzi, Bath Theatre, and Thomas Beach. 4to, pp. xvii-263, art. linen, top edges gilt. Bath: George Gregory, Bookseller to H. M. Queen Alexandra.

TENTH EDITION, price Two Shillings.

CELESTIAL MOTIONS: a Handy Book of Astronomy. Tenth Edition. With 3 Plates. By W. T. LYNN, B.A., F.R.A.S.

"Well known as one of our best introductions to astronomy."

Guardian.

Sampson Low, Marston &amp; Co., Limited, St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, E.C.

MR. HEINEMANN'S
NEW BOOKS.LIFE & LETTERS AT BATH
IN THE 18TH CENTURY.

By A. BARBEAU. With a Preface by AUSTIN DOBSON, and many Illustrations. 15s. net.

"A work of intense interest and outstanding brilliancy."—Pall Mall Gazette.

FRENCH PROFILES.

Studies in the Literature of France. By EDMUND GOSSE. 7s. 6d.

"There is no book of recent English criticism which bears so clearly the impress alike of the scholar and the man of the world, and which combines so wide a tolerance and so genial a humanity with so much earnestness and a real enthusiasm for literary excellence."—Standard.

A BELLE OF THE FIFTIES.

Being Memoirs of Mrs. Clay of Alabama, covering Social and Political Life in Washington and the South, 1853-66. Edited by ADA STERLING. With many Portraits. 10s. 6d. net.

THE COUNTRY DAY BY DAY.

By E. KAY ROBINSON. Illustrated. 6s.

A delightful chronicle of a country year.

A HANDBOOK TO CHOPIN'S WORKS.

By G. C. ASHTON JONSON. 6s.

This Handbook will be found indispensable to all Amateurs and Students.

THE LAND OF THE BLESSED VIRGIN.

Impressions and Sketches in Andalusia. By W. SOMERSET MAUGHAM. Frontispiece. 6s. net.

NEW SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.

MR. E. F. BENSON'S NEW NOVEL.

AN ACT IN A BACKWATER.

Author of 'The Challoners,' &amp;c.

A most amusing story of life and courtship in a quiet cathedral town.

If you want a true and realistic description of Russian life, read
OLIVE LATHAM.

By E. L. VOYNICH.

"Mrs. Voynich gives realistic pictures of life in St. Petersburg, and in the lonely districts of Russia"—Daily Telegraph.

THE PRODIGAL SON.

HALL CAINE.

PAM.

BARONESS VON HUTTEN.

DIANE.

KATHARINE H. BROWN.

ROBERT CAVELIER.

W. D. ORCUTT.

THE TRANSGRESSION OF
ANDREW VANE.

G. W. CARRYL.

THE EAGLE'S SHADOW.

J. B. CABELL.

London:

WM. HEINEMANN, 21, Bedford Street, W.C.

MR. MURRAY'S
NEW BOOKS.

TWO NEW WORKS BY

BLISS CARMAN,

Author of 'The Pipes of Pan,' 'Songs of the Sea Children,' &c.

SONGS FROM A NORTHERN GARDEN.

Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. net.

THE FRIENDSHIP OF ART.

With Portrait. Large crown 8vo, 6s.

NEW SIX-SHILLING NOVEL.

FRECKLES.

By GENE STRATTON-PORTER, Author of 'The Song of the Cardinal.' With Decorations by E. STETSON CRAWFORD.

A CHEAP EDITION.

THE LIFE OF JOHN NICHOLSON,

Soldier and Administrator. By Capt. LIONEL J. TROTTER. With Portrait and 3 Maps. Large crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. net.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION.

RECENT EXCAVATIONS IN THE ROMAN FORUM, 1898-1905.

By (Mrs.) E. BURTON-BROWN. Illustrations and Plans. Fcap. 8vo, 2s. net. [Just out.]

THE GREEK THINKERS.

A History of Ancient Philosophy. By Prof. THEODOR GOMPEH, of Vienna University. Hon. LL.D. Dublin, Ph.D. Königsberg, &c. Vols. II. and III. SOCRATES, the SOCRATICS and PLATO. Translated by G. G. BERRY, M.A., Balliol College, Oxford. Demy 8vo, 14s. net each volume. Vol. I. already published, price 14s. net.

NEW EDITION.

HANDBOOK—INDIA, BURMA,
AND CEYLON.

Fifth Edition. With 73 Maps and Plans. Crown 8vo, 20s.

THE MONTHLY REVIEW.

Edited by CHARLES HANBURY-WILLIAMS.

No. 53. FEBRUARY, 1905. 2s. 6d. net.

Contents.

The SIEGE of PORT ARTHUR. Richard Barry.

The HUNGARIAN CRISIS. Count Albert Apponyi (Leader of the Opposition in the Hungarian Parliament).

The HON. WHITELOW REID. G. Monroe Royce.

The PAPAL MEDALS of the ITALIAN RENAISSANCE. Earl Egerton of Tatton. Illustrated.

NIHILISM. Alexei.

LIVING LEGENDS of the FIANNA. Lady Gregory.

WHAT IS an ELEMENT? Sir William Ramsay, K.C.B., F.R.S.

The WARSHIP of EMPIRE. L. Cope Cornford.

COUNTER-REFORMATION PLOTS and PLOTTERS. G. W. P.

COAL for RUSSIA. T. Baty, D.C.L., LL.M.

RELIGIOUS INSTRUCTION in PRIMARY SCHOOLS. The Rev. Edward Hickersthott Otley.

The HYPOCRITE. Alfred W. Rees.

ON THE LINE.

BRAJEU. Chaps. 5-8. H. C. Failey.

JOHN MURRAY, Albemarle Street, W.

MACMILLAN &amp; CO.'S

LIST.

ENGLISH MEN OF LETTERS.

NEW SERIES.

Crown 8vo, gilt tops, flat backs, 2s. net each.

THOMAS MOORE.

By STEPHEN GWYNN.

SYDNEY SMITH.

By GEORGE W. E. RUSSELL.

[Ready Feb. 1.]

A BOOK OF WIT AND HUMOUR.

THE WORKS OF
ARTHUR CLEMENT HILTON

(Of Marlborough and Cambridge). Author of 'The Light Green.' With 2 Illustrations, together with HIS LIFE AND LETTERS, by Sir ROBERT EDGUMBE. Fcap. 8vo, 5s. net; vellum, gilt top, 12s. 6d. net.

Athenæum—"This record of a bright short life was well worth making, and Sir Robert Edgumbe has told us with modesty and grace just what we wanted to know. A parodist, classic at his best, and long since promoted to that rank by the dignity of frequent misquotation."Speaker—"Will be welcome."Spectator—"We have always had a special affection for the irresistible audacity of 'The May Exam.' We have nothing but congratulations to offer Sir Robert Edgumbe on his pious act of homage to the memory of his friend and contemporary A. C. Hilton. To a collection of Hilton's Cambridge brilliant jeu d'esprit he has added a number of other pieces."Scotsman—"Sunny collection."Daily Chronicle—"The champagne of parody... a born humourist." Pall Mall Gazette—"Wit on the wings of metre. Highly remarkable. Sir Robert Edgumbe's memoir is a model of affectionate and tributary sympathy. There are parodies brilliant enough to persuade one almost that the same hand wrote the parent and the parasite. There are things in this delightful little book that will live among the best examples of English wit."

MISCELLANEOUS ESSAYS AND ADDRESSES.

By HENRY SIDGWICK. 8vo, 10s. net.

Morning Post—"The essays are singularly lucid and sane, revealing a thoroughness of knowledge of the subjects discussed, and an evenness of judgment which mark the author as on a level with the best minds of his time. No one can read them without wishing to know more of Sidgwick's work."

POPULAR EDITION NOW READY.

THE GOLDEN TREASURY.

Selected from the Best Songs and Lyrical Poems in the English Language. Selected and Arranged with Notes by FRANCIS T. PALGRAVE. Pott 8vo, 1s. net.

THIRD EDITION NOW READY.

THE BOOK OF THE ROSE.

By Rev. A. FOSTER-MELLIAR, M.A., Rector of Spronghton, Suffolk. Third Edition. With Illustrations. Crown 8vo, gilt top, 6s.

FEBRUARY NUMBERS NOW READY.

THE CENTURY MAGAZINE.

Illustrated. Price 1s. 4d. Annual Subscription, 15s.

The FEBRUARY Number contains:—

IMPRESSIONS of the GERMAN EMPEROR. By Andrew D. White. With Portraits

DEATH, the ANGEL FRIEND. In Memoriam—G. F. WATTS, R.A. By H. D. Rawnsley.

SANDY. A Story. By Alice Hegan Rice, Author of 'Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch.' III. Illustrated.

And numerous other Stories and Articles of general interest.

ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE FOR CHILDREN.

ST. NICHOLAS.

Price 1s. Annual Subscription, 12s.

The FEBRUARY Number contains:—

The PRACTICAL BOY. Fourth Paper: Household Conveniences. By Joseph H. Adams

PINKEY PERKINS. "JUST A BOY." Serial Story. By Captain H. Hammond.

QUEEN XIXI of IX; or, the STORY of the MAGIC CLOAK. By L. Frank Baum. Serial Story.

And numerous other Stories for the Young.

JANUARY NUMBER JUST PUBLISHED.

THE ## JEWISH QUARTERLY REVIEW.

Edited by I. ABRAHAM and C. G. MONTEFIORE.

3s. 6d. Annual Subscription, post free, 11s.

Contents:—An Ancient Illuminated Hebrew MS. at the British Museum. With facsimile. By the Rev. G. Margolouth.—The Arabic Portion of the Cairo Genizah at Cambridge. Eighth Article. By Dr. H. Hirschfeld.—The Jews and the English Law. By H. S. O. Henriques.—The Alphabet of Ben Sira. By the Rev. Dr. C. Taylor.—The Cosmopolitan Aspect of the Hebrew Wisdom. By the Rev. Dr. John Skinner.—Genizah Studies. IV. By Prof. Louis Ginzberg.—The Itinerary of Benjamin of Tudela. Continued. By Marcus N. Adler.—The Reform Movement in Judaism. Fourth Article. By the Rev. Dr. David Philipson.—Allgemeine Einleitung in die Jüdische Literatur des Mittelalters. Continued from Vol. XVII p. 162. By Prof. M. Steinschneider.—Die Jüdischen Apostel. By Dr. Samuel Krauss.—Jüdisch-Arabisches. By Prof. Siegmund Fraenkel.—The High Priest's Procession. By Dr. Samuel Poznanski.—Zu Meiner Notiz über 'Das Gebetbuch nach jemenischem Ritus' (oben, pp. 189-92). By Dr. Samuel Poznanski.—Note on J. Q. R., XVII. 163. By Dr. H. Hirschfeld.—Critical Notice: Prof. J. Freudenthal's 'Life of Spinoza,' by the Rev. A. Wolf, M.A.

MACMILLAN &amp; CO., LIMITED, London.

HURST &amp; BLACKETT'S

LIST.

NEW AND IMPORTANT WORK.

READY IMMEDIATELY.

In 2 vols. royal 8vo.

With numerous beautiful Illustrations in Colour from Paintings by Countess Helena Gleichen and the Author, Photogravures, and Half-Tones.

With Portraits of Lord Curzon and Col. Sir Francis Younghusband, K.C.S.I.,

7 Maps, and in a specially designed Cover, buckram gilt.

Price £2 2s.

L H A S A.

An Account of the Country and People of Central Tibet, and of the Progress of the Mission sent there by the English Government in the Year 1903-4.

Written, with the help of all the principal persons of the Mission,

BY

PERCEVAL LANDON,

Special Correspondent of the Times.

With an Introduction by

Col. Sir FRANCIS YOUNGHUSBAND, K.C.S.I.

An Illustrated Prospectus sent free on application.

DR. OTTO NORDENSKJOLD'S
GREAT WORK ON THE SOUTH
POLAR REGIONS.

READY IMMEDIATELY.

In 1 vol. medium 8vo.

Illustrated by over 250 Reproductions of Photographs taken especially for this Work, 4 Coloured Plates from Paintings, and 3 Maps.

Price 18s. net.

ANTARCTICA.

Two Years Amongst the Ice of the South Pole.

BY

Dr. OTTO NORDENSKJOLD.

London: HURST & BLACKETT, LIMITED,
182, High Holborn, W.C.

T. FISHER UNWIN'S

LIST.

LADY JEAN:

The Romance of the Great Douglas Cause. By PERCY FITZGERALD, F.S.A. With Photogravure Frontispiece and 12 other Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 12s. net.

ESSAYS IN PURITANISM.

Appreciations of Walt Whitman, John Wesley, Margaret Fuller, Jonathan Edwards, and John Winthrop. By ANDREW MACPHAIL. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE COMING OF PARLIAMENT (1350-1660).

By L. CECIL JANE. With a Map and 50 Illustrations. Large crown 8vo ("Story of the Nations"), 5s.

SECOND IMPRESSION.

THE STORY OF MY STRUGGLES.

The Memoirs of Arminius Vambéry, C.V.O. With Photogravure and other Illustrations. 2 vols. Demy 8vo, cloth, 21s. net.

NEW EDITION.

THE GOVERNANCE OF ENGLAND.

By SIDNEY LOW, M.A. 7s. 6d. net.

REVISED EDITION.

RUSSIA.

By W. R. MORFILL, M.A. With 60 Illustrations and Maps. With Supplementary Chapter and Revised to Date. ("Story of the Nations.") Large crown 8vo, 5s.

BIRDS I HAVE KNOWN.

By ARTHUR H. BEAVAN. Fully illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

THE YOUTH OF
WASHINGTON.

Told in the Form of an Autobiography. By S. WEIR MITCHELL. Crown 8vo, 6s.

NOTABLE 6s. NOVELS.

MAJOR WEIR.

By K. L. MONTGOMERY.

THE CANON IN RESIDENCE.

By VICTOR L. WHITECHURCH.

A SONG OF A SINGLE NOTE.

By AMELIA E. BARR.

THREE DUKES.

By G. YSTRIDDE.

TROOPER PETER HALKET
OF MASHONALAND.

By OLIVE SCHREINER. New Edition. Cloth boards, 1s. net.

T. FISHER UNWIN, Paternoster Square.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 28, 1905.

CONTENTS.

|   |         |
|---|---------|
| FROM THE MONARCHY TO THE REPUBLIC IN FRANCE   | PAGE    |
| SIX GREAT SCHOOLMASTERS ... ..  | 101     |
| THE HUNGRY FORTIES... ..  | 102     |
| THE GARRICK CLUB ... ..   | 103     |
| REMAINS OF T. G. LAW ... ..   | 104     |
| NEW NOVELS (The Secret Woman; A Song of a Single Note; Some Loves and a Life; Aubrey Ellison; He that Eateth Bread with Me; The Mysterious Miss Cass; The Face in the Flashlight; L'Amant et le Médecin) ... ..   | 105-107 |
| RECENT AMERICAN SPORTING LITERATURE ... ..  | 107     |
| OUR LIBRARY TABLE (Olia; A Secret Agent in Port Arthur; The Biology of British Politics; The Unemployed; Revolutionary Types; L'Almanach des Sports; Sir Thomas More; Romance of the Feudal Chateaux; Adventures of a Post Captain; The Young Gardener's Kalendar; Guide to Italy and Sicily; The Technique of Indexing; Classical Echoes in Tennyson; The Upper Norwood Athenæum) ... .. | 108-110 |
| LIST OF NEW BOOKS ... ..  | 111     |
| W. FRASER RAE; BRITISH MUSEUM READING-ROOM; THE TRUSTWORTHINESS OF THE ST. ALBANS CHRONICON ANGLIE, 1328-88; WORDSWORTHIANA; POPE'S ESSAY ON MAN; PALIO AND PONTE; MR. H. F. COX ... ..   | 111-113 |
| LITERARY GOSSIP ... ..  | 113     |
| SCIENCE—THE CAMBRIDGE NATURAL HISTORY; ANTHROPOLOGICAL NOTES; SOCIETIES; MEETINGS NEXT WEEK; GOSSIP ... ..  | 114-116 |
| FINE ARTS—VERROCCHIO; SCOTTISH PEWTER-WARE AND PEWTERERS; SCOTLAND ILLUSTRATED; G. F. WATTS AT BURLINGTON HOUSE; ARCHEOLOGICAL NOTES; G. H. BOUGHTON, R.A.; THE ARIOSTO IN THE NATIONAL GALLERY; SALES; GOSSIP ... ..   | 116-121 |
| MUSIC—HADOW ON THE VIENNESE PERIOD; GOSSIP; PERFORMANCES NEXT WEEK ... ..   | 121-123 |
| DRAMA—MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING; THE CHOSEN PEOPLE; MRS. DERING'S DIVORCE; KING HENRY V; THE ARDEN SHAKESPEARE; GOSSIP ... ..  | 123-124 |
| MISCELLANEA—THE LAIRDS OF FIFE ... ..   | 124     |

LITERATURE

From the Monarchy to the Republic in France, 1788-1792. By Sophia H. MacLehose. (Glasgow, MacLehose & Sons.)

WE were prepared, from our recollection of the author's previous work, 'The Last Days of the French Monarchy,' to expect much from the present volume—and the anticipation has been in a large measure fulfilled. The same qualities of careful scholarship and unpretentious exposition are shown; and the choice of illustrations, always admirably reproduced, is again seen to be governed rather by a desire to vivify the text for the genuine student than to please the eye of the casual reader. That the book has not quite the freshness of its predecessor is due rather to the subject than its treatment. Not to mention Carlyle and the Bohn version of Mignet's striking, if not wholly impartial history of the Revolution, the English reader has had the subject treated for him in Mr. Morse Stephens's unfinished work, and, more recently, in a volume of the "Cambridge Modern History," both of which have been utilized by Miss MacLehose. But, with the exception of the second (perhaps the best short history), and a meritorious little volume—designed, we believe, for University Extension students—published some years ago, this is the only book we know which treats the subject adequately within moderate compass. Moreover Mignet was too much under the influence of the revolutionary legend to be an altogether trustworthy guide, and the present work is at once more exact in its methods and careful in its conclusions than the manual referred to. On the whole, we do not think that any one who wished for an introduction to the best and most recent French authorities on the subject could do better than begin with this work.

For that part of the revolutionary history which she has treated—the scope of the volume is from the promulgation of the decision to convoke the States-General to the fall of the monarchy on August 10th, 1792—Miss MacLehose was well advised in confining her narrative to Versailles and Paris. Should she decide to extend her researches to the fall of Robespierre or the foundation of the Consulate, she will scarcely be able to avoid dealing with the departments, since, in its later stages, a not unimportant aspect of the Revolution was the attempt of these last to shake off the tyranny of the capital. But until the outbreak of the Royalist risings in the west and south, and the struggle between the Jacobins and the Girondins, Paris was substantially France, and the history of its doings is that of the Revolution. Whether equal wisdom is shown in a somewhat severe avoidance of the personal and biographic element may be questioned; but it can be contended that Carlyle and Mr. Morse Stephens have done more than enough in this direction, and that the extensive use made of the periodical and pamphlet literature of the Revolution by the present author is at once less hackneyed and no less genuinely illuminative than, say, Mr. Belloc's biographic coruscations. This is, at least, a very useful feature of Miss MacLehose's book, and helps not a little to give life to the dry bones of constitutional history which she treats so fully. Not that she has by any means neglected other sources, having made notable use, in particular, of the researches of M. Aulard, M. Albert Sorel, and Ritter von Arneth, in addition to older authorities. Her alertness in availing herself of the latest obtainable information is shown not only by references to the "Cambridge Modern History," but also by the citation from a recent number of the Revue des Deux Mondes of the lately discovered tribute of Louis XVIII. to his injured sister-in-law Marie Antoinette. She has even been able to add something new on her own account, in the shape of quotations from the unpublished letters of a Lancashire lady, Mrs. Edward Standish, who was in Paris in 1791-2. One of these contains evidence of the curious tranquillity which prevailed in many circles before the 10th of August, the calm before the storm so soon to be raised by Danton and the Commune. There should surely be some mention of these in the index, though the author has shown rare restraint in making but a sparing use of this unprinted material.

Although in all essential respects impartial, Miss MacLehose does not conceal her sympathies. She acquits the so-called "Comité Autrichien" of unpatriotic motives, but expresses a doubt as to the wisdom of their patriotism, and while admitting, somewhat grudgingly, "the extravagance, self-love, and tyrannical proceedings of the Jacobins," proceeds to point out that "there were among them true-hearted citizens who believed, and not without provocation, that Monarchy as personified by Louis XVI. reduced government to an insoluble problem."

She concedes an intelligible policy to the king and queen during the last year of their reign, and cites words used by Marie Antoinette herself which prove that this policy did not contemplate triumph at the expense of France; but she scarcely shows any perception of the truth that the king was more logical than his opponents in taking his stand upon the Constitution of 1791, and was clearly justified in taking measures for the protection of his personal liberty. Had the Assembly dethroned him after the flight to Varennes its action would have been more than defensible; its members put themselves in the wrong by allowing themselves to be terrorized by the sections, and by permitting the king to be persecuted for the legitimate exercise of the few powers he had left. To speak of the insurrectionary movement planned by Danton and Barbaroux as "a bloodless revolution" which was "disappointed by events" comes perilously near special pleading. Every one knew what these Marseillais, whom "respectable Paris wished to see the last of," came to do, and how they would do it was hardly a secret. Again, we cannot allow the validity of the term "Democrat" as applicable to Republicans alone, and used as here to distinguish them from "Constitutionalists," or upholders of a monarchy which was one in scarcely more than name, so liberal were its institutions. When the Constitution of 1791 is declared to have been "not a democratic constitution," what is meant, apparently, is that it was not based upon bare manhood suffrage. In the same sense the English Constitution of to-day might be held to be "built up for the bourgeoisie"; yet few would be found to maintain that it was not in spirit truly democratic.

Generally speaking, however, we repeat that our author is as judicious in her commentary as she is accurate in her text. Her exposition of principles is usually as faithful as her narrative of facts. It is not a serious inaccuracy to place the death of Mirabeau on April 3rd, instead of April 2nd, especially as the date is correctly given in the chronological table at the beginning of the book. But the statement that Marie Antoinette died in 1794 is a serious slip, which we should hardly have expected; and the inclusion of "Belgium" (the Austrian Netherlands) as among "the Powers" unwilling to act against revolutionary France is sadly misleading to the careful student both of language and history. There are a few misprints and uncorrected errata, such as "Recollections" for 'Souvenirs de Dumont sur Mirabeau,' and "Bancal d'Issart" for Bancal des Isserte, both of which are printed correctly in the Bibliography or Index. "Visably" (p. 310) is a curious piece of orthography; and we do not like the phrases "all summer," "all autumn."

We may finish our notice by one or two quotations. The normal attitude of Louis XVI. during the Revolution is thus admirably indicated:—

"On July 16th an order was signed by the comité permanent at Paris, and by Lafayette, as commander of the milice bourgeoise, for the demolition of the Bastille. The fortress was one of the King's most famous prisons, but he was not consulted. A little later he was told that the order had been given. 'This is too much,' he said, in sudden indignation; then added in a different tone, 'but since it is considered necessary, let it be.' An angry protest, the initiative left to others, an impotent acquiescence—this was how the Father of the Country met and coped with a great revolution!"

Our next extract exhibits one of the author's rare descriptive passages. This was how Marie Antoinette bore herself at the most critical period of the Parisian irruption into Versailles. The hostile mob was shouting for the queen to show herself on the balcony of the château:—

"For a moment Marie Antoinette hesitated. 'Madame,' said Lafayette, 'the people will not be pacified unless you go.' 'Then,' replied the Queen, 'I hesitate no longer,' and taking her children by the hand, she advanced towards the window of the chambre de parade. The people saw the children, and thought it a ruse by which the Queen meant to save herself. 'No children!' they cried. Marie Antoinette's proud spirit rose; thrusting back the children, she stepped out upon the balcony, and instinctively crossing her arms over her breast as she looked on the menacing crowd below, stood erect and motionless, face to face with the men and women who had sought her life. Now was their opportunity, but no shot was fired; instead there was a hush, a movement in the crowd, a shout of 'Vive la reine!' Her fearlessness and her queenliness had prevailed. Marie Antoinette lingered for a moment; Lafayette joined her, and, bending on one knee, kissed her hand, and the shouts broke forth anew. Then the Queen turned and went in, and for the first time tears rose in her eyes. 'They will force us to go to Paris,' she said, and taking the little Dauphin in her arms, she covered him with kisses and with tears."

We would fain have transcribed, also, Miss MacLehose's description of the first fête of the Federation, when Louis swore to the Constitution in presence of three hundred thousand of his subjects in the Champ de Mars—a scene less familiar, probably, to most readers than the one we have just glanced at. But enough has been set down to give a taste of the writer's quality. We would only add of the illustrations that vignettes and medals flank the initial capitals of each chapter; that there is an excellently clear full-page portrait of Mirabeau and a coloured reduced facsimile of an assignat; as well as a picture of Varennes, taken from a sketch by Miss Louisa MacLehose, which shows the house in which the royal fugitives are supposed to have been detained.

Six Great Schoolmasters. By F. D. How. (Methuen & Co.)

MR. HOW'S book on six great schoolmasters who worked between 1835 and 1865 is interesting reading as well for the general public as for those engaged in teaching. He gives us well-proportioned sketches of Hawtrey, of Eton; Moberly, of Winchester; Kennedy, of Shrewsbury; Vaughan, of Harrow; Temple, of Rugby; and Bradley, of Marlborough; and, while dealing with the men and their work, he shows how the two great influences of those times—the life of Arnold and public opinion—gradually brought about an extraordinary improvement in public-school life. Sometimes as the result of direct statement, sometimes by reading between the lines, we are able to appreciate the great progress made in those thirty years in curriculum, the relations of masters and boys, domestic arrangements, school games, punishments, and religious influence. The writer evidently knows the public-school spirit, and writes with a nice combination of well-balanced judgment and enthusiasm. He does not hide the failings of these great men: the portrait of Moberly is that of a thoroughly human head master. On the other hand, his culminating eulogy on his own head master, Bradley, while not blind to faults, is a highly stimulating study of character. These six essays are excellent pabulum for schoolmasters, who will get from their perusal far more nourishment than from many a current manual of formal pedagogy.

Here are six men, all highly distinguished in a most exacting profession; but how widely different the causes of their success! Hawtrey, an omnivorous reader and keen student, set himself to refine his Etonians; Moberly, himself more ecclesiastic than schoolmaster, turned out Christians rather than scholars; Kennedy, second to none as an enthusiast for classical lore and poetry, made his appeal as a great teacher of scholarship; Vaughan impressed his boys mainly by his religious teaching; Temple raised the standard of his school, and diffused a broader intellectual interest among Rugbeians; and Bradley's restless vitality exercised on Marlburians, in the words of Dean Stanley, a "constant, stimulating, provoking, and advancing pressure." Such widely different methods of appeal should help to keep before the minds of modern educators a fact which the new enthusiasm for the professional training of teachers is apt to obscure, namely, that it is the essential character of the man that makes 90 per cent. of the teacher.

It is interesting to read that it was Hawtrey who introduced at Eton the system of marks, which did not make its appearance at Rugby till the time of Temple. Hawtrey was a kind-hearted man, who had his way largely by appealing to a boy's sense of delicacy; he was "the ugliest man in England and the most agreeable." Of these sketches, to our mind the first is the least successful: possibly a dearth of other material accounts for a certain amount of uninteresting personal detail. And when we come to Moberly we do not yet find Mr. How at his best: he is conscientious, but somewhat dull, and has not yet warmed to his work as in his four later studies. Winchester life must have been calculated to kill or cure in those days of chapel at 6 A.M., and breakfast about 10. In this essay, as in the others, Mr. How naturally makes use of the evidence given before the Royal Commission on Public Schools, which reported in 1864, and in particular quotes Moberly's views as to prefects, to whom he seems to have allowed excessive authority. For the rest, Moberly revelled in Pindar, and introduced—most strange anomaly—a mathematical master! The genius and extraordinary personality of Kennedy, interesting us as they do with a series of amazing contrasts, seem to bring fresh life into Mr. How's pages, and from here to the end is nothing flat or unprofitable. Kennedy was the only schoolboy who ever won the Porson Prize. Under him the curriculum at Shrewsbury was composed almost entirely of classics, relieved by a small amount of divinity (and that somewhat perfunctorily taught), and some French, which he introduced as a regular school subject. The list of the academic successes of his pupils is unparalleled, and explained not so much by any secrets of method as by his own personal fire and enthusiasm. "He believed," writes a pupil,

"with all his heart, and his pupils could not but believe with him, that classical scholarship was a living and enduring interest, worthy of a man's best energies."

Yet the state of the boarding-houses at Shrewsbury under his rule was far from satisfactory. This is a telling portrait; and not less so is that of Vaughan, in whose rule of fifteen years the numbers at Harrow rose from 69 in 1844 to 466 in 1859.

And yet "as a house master Dr. Vaughan was not a success." Who, however, can wonder that a mere man is not a success in all the various capacities in which he is condemned to work as a head master of a public school? "He taught scholarship, and nothing but scholarship of the strictest kind"; that is, his sixth for some three years read Latin and Greek books and little else. And herein he presents a marked contrast to Temple, who set himself at Rugby to foster in his boys an interest in as many things as possible. Vaughan, too, was a man who could neither run nor laugh outright; Temple could jump hurdles and roar with merriment. Vaughan leaves the impression of a classic, a religious calm; Temple, that of a man at many points of like passions with ourselves. Mr. How clears away several misconceptions of his Rugby mastership, and brings out as his main traits his self-dependence and simplicity. Behind that simplicity lay strength, and behind the strength kindness and gentleness. To us it appears that Temple was as great a head master as any of the six here portrayed, and certainly in two points his influence would be welcome at the present day. The first is his method of teaching. If classics are still to hold their own, teachers will have to lay aside much of the exact, analytical, precise method, the method of a Bradley spending an hour on some ten lines of Virgil, and adopt more of Temple's synthetic, relative, and associative teaching. How many sixth forms would be better for a Temple lecturing on historical and political subjects, on Aristotle, Blackstone's 'Commentaries,' and Tocqueville's 'Democracy in America'! The other point is his reasonable fear "of outrunning the religious feeling of the boys." We are thankful for school chapels, but many a school would benefit by attention to Temple's dictum:—

"I do not think the diminution of religious zeal an evil; I think much of it unhealthy. What I want is a quiet sense of duty."

Bradley's mental vitality endeared him to three generations of Marlborough boys. His teaching, unlike that of Temple, was of the minute and intensive order. This "restless little man" had the rare and invaluable power of inspiring both fear and affection, and this fact alone would entitle him to the affectionate eulogy with which Mr. How concludes his interesting book.

The Hungry Forties. With an Introduction by Mrs. Cobden Unwin. (Fisher Unwin.)

THE exciting cause of this volume is polemical. It occupies a niche in that immense collection of statistic and descriptive writing which has accompanied the whirlwind of the fiscal controversy. But the interest of this particular compilation extends far deeper than any pamphlet dealing with ephemeral politics. 'Life under the Bread Tax' is the sub-title; the book is composed of testimonies, loosely thrown together, of the conditions of life in England in the silent depths of society during the bitter days of the long peace between Waterloo and the Alma. The record is of personal memories: men and women, most of them well over eighty, some far in the nineties, have been persuaded to recount to an easier generation something of the bleak, starved life of their early days, before they vanish from the scene.

The result is a series of tiny vignette pictures of a vanished England. Something of the element which a modern historian has called "the poetry of time" is woven into all these artless testimonies. The records are printed just as they have been received, with strange spelling and grammar, often with a conspicuous difficulty of utterance. But we find simplicity and truth stamped on them all: that elemental simplicity which so often distinguishes the speech of the "common people," who have spent their lives in facing reality. In all also, as Mr. "Brougham Villars" notes in a final chapter, is a moral indignation which is not generally found in modern politics. These ancients, some in a serene old age, some still in poverty, a few actually in the workhouse, can see nothing in the revival of Protectionist propaganda but a deliberate attempt to bring back the bitter days which they thought had gone for ever. With quavering voices and passion at times almost inarticulate, they utter their warnings and protests, beseeching the men of the newer time, who seem to them unaccountably languid, to rouse their energies into a determined effort to prevent this (in their view) great wrong being done in England. "It is difficult now to make the young people understand it," sadly writes one. "If it comes they will be worse off than the older generations. Every word I have written, Sir, is true." "I can assure you that, when I think of those times," says another, "a large lump rises in my throat, and yet to-day there are men doing all they can to bring back those days." "May God prevent a return to such wickedness!" cries a third, "and in His great mercy spare the nation such a trial. It shall be my daily prayer."

Few such direct testimonies exist of the real nature of "the condition of the people problem" in early Victorian England, and some at least of the stories of this book should become incorporated in any fresh history of the English people of the nineteenth century. What would not historians give to-day for similar records of other past times, not, as in those left us, from the mouths of the aristocracy or a learned class, but from that lowest stratum of society which is hardly represented in literature; the prose accompaniments of popular ballads or songs of revolt of past ages! The England here depicted is the England of a riotous manufacturing supremacy — the England which had just shaken off the incubus of the old Poor Law, in which the revelations of the Factory Commission still remained unchecked — the England of 'Chartism' and 'Yeast,' and the Oxford movement and the Anti-Corn Law League. Its characteristics are stamped for ever in 'Past and Present'; Carlyle's apocalyptic vision had pierced through the shams of society, "prating and jargoning" down to the bed-rock tragedy of the life of the common people. To-day the lightning and the thunder, the overhanging gloom, the fierce and passionate prophecies of a coming destruction, would appear more rational and intelligible if there was incorporated with that fiery evangel some of the pictures sketched in 'The Hungry Forties.'

For pictures here are presented of an unforgettable sort: pictures especially of rural England, the hard, servile life under a cloudy sky, in the wind and rain, with hope appearing not anywhere at all. One will show the bread riots, rows of men chained together marching through the streets of Nottingham, Nottingham Castle in flames. Another exhibits a mother glean- ing in the fields "to keep us alive," with "the steward (the farmer's nephew) riding into the field and beating my mother with his riding whip, and shouted her out of the field." There is no redress but the "wild justice" of riots and rick-burning.

"In conclusion, Sir, I can safely say," complains a third,

"dureing the first 18 years of my life my belly had not been properly filled 18 time since I was weaned from my mother's breast. Scores and scores of times have I sat under the hedghrows and cried, and told God how good I would be if He only sent me bread."

The "two nations" of 'Sybil' are entirely divided. On the one side are the country society and the Established Church, to whom the revolting peasant is a thing uncouth and hideous, to whom always there is present the terror of a Jacquerie. A learned judge, addressing the grand jury at the Winchester Assizes, declared the labouring population was "vicious to a man." On the other are the unorganized smouldering fires of indignation and hunger, with the Dissenting chapels as tiny centres of resistance and the towns as alone the golden hope of escape for rural England. "The delekit children were soon kiled," is one entry. The boys are seen "scraping away the snow with our hands to pull the turnips." "I don't think there was a month whilst I was out on the farm but one or more of our men was in Taunton lock-up: they were like hungry wolves." On Sunday the "hungry wolves" are marshalled to learn docility and their future punishments:—

"The farmhands had to sit in an end galera in Church, and the man that had charge of them was armed with a long goard, such as we used to drive the bullocks at plough, and every now and then you would here the sound throughout the church of the strokes of the rod on some of their backs: and if they rebelled they were put in the stocks just outside the church door for every one to geer at as they left the church."

Such were some of the visions which to Carlyle in London made Sydney Smith's "guffawing" seem futile and vain; "through these thin cobwebs Death and Eternity sate glaring." These visions winged that declaration (so astonishing to the culture of his time) that "in no time since the beginnings of society was the lot of these same dumb millions of toilers so utterly unbearable as it is in the days now passing over us." "These letters," says Mr. Brougham Villars in this volume, "read like the records of a besieged city. Upon the whole, we are convinced our country has never passed through so terrible a time before or since." From the beginning of the French war until the repeal of the Corn Laws the country was in a state of semi-siege. "During the whole of that time an underfed people had to buy every article of clothing at the cost of further severe privation in feeding." These pages, he concludes (it is no exaggeration), are "wet with the tears of women and children."

Famine forced the hand of Peel; and, undoubtedly, at the moment the only alternative to repeal was revolution. It would be absurd to claim for Free Trade alone all the progress from that day to this. The repeal of the old Poor Law, emigration and the expansion of empire, trades-unionism, education, factory law, the growing sense of responsibility on the part of the governing classes, the growth of democracy, the liberation of the cities — all these played their part. The history of this social advance, when the time comes for its record, will form one of the most complex as well as one of the most fascinating of all studies of the past. Meanwhile, however, the true history of that past remains in these testimonies of simple poor people. The facts may be used for controversy, their implications challenged or denied; but the facts retain permanent value. These peep-holes into the actual life of the labourer in the hungry forties — the records of food eaten, labour undertaken, the privation, the despair, the misery of it all — have something in them of the quality which is permanent in memory.

---

The Garrick Club. By Percy Fitzgerald. (Elliot Stock.)

ON Mr. Percy Fitzgerald, as the biographer of David Garrick and the Kembles and the author or compiler of innumerable books on the stage, has devolved the task of supplying an account, gossiping, critical, and historical, of the Garrick Club, of which he has long been a member. To judge by the success which has attended recent publications, the sort of prohibition which was once directed against any revelation of the inner life of clubs is relaxed if not removed, and a good many West-End clubs, from the Athenæum to the Oriental, have found their historians. So long, indeed, as the inner life of an institution of the kind is not political, or in some sense ultra-convivial, it is not easy to see any reason for extreme reticence. The law affecting social intimacies indicated in the dedication to Harpocrates of the rose:—

Inde rosam mensis hospes suspendit amicis.
Convivæ ut sub ea dicta tacenda sciant, extends, of course, to club life, and is now perhaps, in consequence of the indiscretions of society journalism, somewhat rigorously applied. Offences against club etiquette are, however, few. Unwritten laws are in such matters stronger than written, and the law of self-preservation may be trusted to guarantee, within certain limits, the inviolability of club confidences.

It happens that the Garrick Club supplies the most exemplary instance on record of the inconveniences and disadvantages that may attend any departure from the strictest observance of club etiquette. No temptation exists, were such a course possible, to blow into a flame the ashes of a forgotten and, in some respects, pitiable controversy. When, however, Mr. Fitzgerald depicts the inner life of the Garrick, it is impossible that he should pass over in silence what is, perhaps, the most conspicuous event in its annals, and the commentator upon the book should deal as lightly and tactfully as may be with his utterances. An event which led to the banishment from the Garrick, and virtually, during some years, from club life, of a man such as Yates; brought about a misunderstanding, to use no stronger a term, between the two most conspicuous literary figures of the day; and conduced to one of the not infrequent resignations of membership by Dickens, can scarcely be regarded as wholly insignificant. Thackeray is, indeed, regarded by Mr. Fitzgerald as "a precious asset" in the Garrick, and is the central figure of the circle of which he writes. The well-known portrait presenting Thackeray seated in the smoking-room close to the famous picture by Clarkson Stanfield of Dutch luggers going out to sea—which is, perhaps, the most precious possession of the Club—serves as frontispiece, while the last reference in the book is to Thackeray's invitation to visit what he endearingly calls "the G., the little G." The fourth chapter is entirely devoted to the novelist whose presence is felt through the work. Though a champion and an admirer of Thackeray, Mr. Fitzgerald is also a zealot on behalf of Dickens. His comments upon the quarrel err in no respect of leniency with regard to Yates. A man of vigorous personality, capable of warm and disinterested friendships, Yates outside club life enjoyed much popularity. But he had what has been neatly called a moral or social colour-blindness, and was apt to be astonished when he found that the light he cast upon the private life of his associates was regarded as impertinence or offence rather than, as he anticipated, beneficence and advertisement. Those, however, who prized most his society hesitated about admitting him into club membership, and some instances in connexion with his candidature for clubs may be supposed to be unique. Mr. Fitzgerald attributes to jealousy the bitterness imported into the Garrick embroglio, concerning which it is needless and undesirable further to speak.

Beginning with the old clubhouse in King Street, Covent Garden, Mr. Fitzgerald includes in what may be regarded as the most interesting portion of his work an account of the earliest members. These seem to have numbered a larger portion of professed wits and notabilities than belonged to the Club at any subsequent period of its annals. Among the original members we note Barham (Ingoldsby), who left behind some unkind and disparaging comments, since published, upon his fellows; Charles Kemble, "Tom" Duncombe, Count D'Orsay, Capt. Gronow, Theodore Hook, Lockhart, the two Mathewses (Charles and Charles James), J. R. Planché, John Poole, author of 'Paul Pry,' Samuel Rogers, James Smith, Sir John Soane, Talfourd, and, of course, innumerable others. The sixth Duke of Devonshire was at the outset the president, a post now filled by His Majesty. Of the doings, largely convivial, at this time of the members few records exist. Mr. Fitzgerald may say with Southey—

I love to view these things with curious eyes
And moralize.

Moralize, indeed, he does on these bibulous gentlemen with more zeal than is to be expected from a profound worshipper of "Boz," in his works at least a high priest of conviviality. Such jovial souls as Mr. Fitzgerald depicts are, he says, "destroyed in pocket or in health—and demoralized in character." Continuing his lament, and passing to other Bohemians, not, presumably, belonging to the Garrick, but kindred souls with some whom he mentions, he says, "Nearly all these heroes ended in the most pitiable way—mostly in madness or with softened brains—and nearly all in acute distress."

Not always, nor indeed often, is Mr. Fitzgerald in so edifying, albeit lachrymose, a vein. Generally he writes in a most genial, effusive, and even ebullient style. He is full of pleasant anecdote, and says good-natured things of most with whom he has to deal. With many of these, especially of later days, whom he brings before us, he has had considerable intimacy. Has he not even written a life of Sir Henry Irving? From his verdicts we seldom dissent, but we do not hold that "This [Planché's] kind of wit seems now very ponderous though, and is all but unreadable," ready as we are to concede the implied censure on the modern public that it supposes a too high state of culture in the audience. The character on whom, in the Dickens-Thackeray epoch, the most light is thrown is John Forster, though at this point the writer is unduly reticent, supposing his knowledge concerning Forster—some of which has previously, if anonymously, been given to the world—to be common property. Some jokes are chronicled concerning Richard Jones, the comedian, who translated Hérol's 'Pré aux Clercs' 'Parsons' Green.'

Mr. Fitzgerald's book may be read with unending amusement and delight. It has scarcely a dull page. Having spoken thus much in praise of it, we feel in the position of Heino, who, having devoted poems to the various charms of his beloved, says that if only she had a heart, he would dedicate to it a sonnet. If Mr. Fitzgerald had any gift of accuracy, we would do homage to it. He is, however, so airily and debonairly inaccurate that he takes away our breath. Matters such as treating Sir Simon Simple as a play instead of a character, calling Mrs. Wood "Mrs. Woods," and Napier Sturt "Napier Stuart," spoiling entirely a well-known (H. J.) Byron story, substituting "Geneste" for Genest, speaking of J. S. Clarke (p. 132) as still alive, are nothing. It is saddening, however, to read that Dr. Johnson's verdict upon Mrs. Pritchard was that she was "a vulgar woman that talked of her gowns." What Johnson said was that "Pritchard, in common life, was a vulgar idiot; she would talk of her gown." On the page following this curious slip, p. 172, our author at some length attributes to Harlowe a picture by Clint given to the Club by Sir H. Irving, and constituting, if not Clint's masterpiece, the largest picture of his in the Club. Two noticeable pictures in the smoking-room are assigned to David Roberts. They are by Louis Haghe, and are attributed to him on the frame.

Not very liberal is the committee of the Club in permitting the reproduction of portraits. When Mr. Fitzgerald accordingly describes an actor from his likeness in the Garrick and a different portrait is supplied in the volume the effect is disturbing. In place of the "renowned mutton-chop whiskers," overhanging coal-black wig and eyebrows of G. F. Cooke, we find above the name white hair and a clean-shaven face; and in place of Grisoni's picture of Colley Cibber as Lord Foppington, taking snuff with the air of a fluttering and impertinent dandy, we have a rather heavy-jowled man sitting in a position suggesting that the appropriate additions would be a pipe and a pot of porter.

---

Collected Essays and Reviews of Thomas Graves Law, LL.D. Edited, with a Memoir, by Prof. Hume Brown. (Edinburgh, privately printed.)

THESE 'Essays and Reviews' are much more homogeneous in character than the title might lead one to expect, and they will be warmly welcomed by those whose appreciation of Mr. Law's fine gifts may have been tempered by regret that he largely sacrificed his own reputation to the generous guidance and encouragement of others in historical research. It is claimed for the collected papers that, with two exceptions, they are all concerned with the development, in its external relations, of the Roman Catholic Church; and it will be found on examination that more than a third of the volume is occupied with a study of the Catholic reaction, as it manifested itself in Great Britain, and especially in Scotland, during a period of a dozen years. As the last phase of this movement has been fully treated by Mr. Law in his 'Jesuits and Seculars in the Reign of Elizabeth,' and as its beginnings receive further attention in a contribution which he made to the "Cambridge Modern History," the papers here printed must be considered as completing in several essential points the work of his life. Prof. Hume Brown has ably acquitted himself in his twofold capacity of biographer and editor, and Mr. Law would have been gratified to know how nearly his ideal of a good index has been approached by his son.

The coincidence is worthy of remark that the late custodian of the Signet Library and his predecessor—who were both secretaries of historical societies—devoted themselves to elucidating respectively the Catholic and the Protestant sides of the Reformation; and, if the researches undertaken by David Laing were somewhat wider in scope, it must be conceded to Mr. Law that the section of the field with which his name will long be associated is much the more difficult and obscure. It is, indeed, a strange region to which we are introduced by the author of this book, as we descend with him into that vast mine of Catholic intrigue which had tunnelled from end to end the island fortress of Protestantism, and which, but for some flaws in the infernal machinery, which he is careful to point out, might at any moment have blown it into ruin. Mr. Law is very far from asserting that all the Catholic clergy were traitors, and that none of them suffered for their faith; but he shows that the distinction between priest and conspirator soon became so fine as to be hardly perceptible to the official eye; and one of the essays which will be read with most interest is that in which he traces the process by which a missionary enterprise developed into a plot against the State. The Papal Bull of deposition, the bare anticipation of which, seconded by the presence in England of Mary Stewart, had sufficed to excite a revolt, was issued in 1570, and four years later arrived the first batch of missionaries from the college which Allen, the future cardinal, had established at Douai; but only three "martyrdoms" are recorded before 1581; and it was not till Allen in the previous year had called in the Jesuits under Parsons and Campion to reinforce his secular or seminary priests that the work of repression was seriously begun. Despite the solemn protestations of the Jesuits that they were forbidden by their superiors—as indeed they were—to meddle with politics, it is impossible to believe that all of them adhered to this rule; for their advent was followed by a widespread conspiracy for the deposition of Elizabeth, in which Parsons and several others took a prominent part; and Parsons on one occasion, when asked for proof of his assertion that the English Catholics were eager to take arms, replied that "he knew all this from what many of them had declared when treating of their consciences." The Jesuits, in fact, took so readily to political intrigue that both Mary and Mendoza, the Spanish ambassador, complained in 1582 that, far from being content to act as intermediaries, they were "taking the road themselves"; and the character and extent of their influence were revealed towards the close of the reign, when the secular priests appealed to the Government against them, and declared that they would not only discourage, but also resist, all attempts to propagate Catholicism by the sword. On the other hand, many of the missionaries, whose guilt consisted only in the nature of their opinions, were put to death under legislation which branded them all as tainted with treason; and, as the author observes with his wonted impartiality, the protestation of Elizabeth that she did not interfere with consciences "proved as idle and impracticable as the Jesuit pretence of abstaining from politics."

In Scotland, whither two of the Jesuits had gone as early as 1581, the chief enemy of the order was not the Government, but the Kirk; and we venture to dissent from Mr. Law when, in estimating the power of the clergy, he says that "the heart and mind of the people were thoroughly" on their side. The Kirk at this period could count on not a few of the gentry and on the middle class, which was rising to prominence in the towns; but it had little hold on the nobles, who were almost supreme in Parliament, and still less on the peasantry; and even as regards the towns, one cannot but recall the saying of John Davidson, one of the clerical leaders:

"I fear more the multitude and body of Edinburgh to be persecutors of me and my brethren, and their readiness to concur to take our lives from us, than I fear the Court."

The ministers had sufficient influence in the Assembly to procure its assent to whatever theocratic absurdities they cared to propose; but outside the Assembly was a loyal and unregenerate nation; and, without allowing for the narrow basis of their power, it is difficult to account for the collapse of the zealots in 1584, or for the forty years' suppression into which they stumbled so unexpectedly in 1596. It was fortunate for the clergy as the guardians of Protestantism that they had a stout ally in the English queen, for it is evident from these essays that the attitude of their own sovereign towards the Papal intrigues was such as could not fail to excite alarm. The Jesuit emissaries on entering Scotland in 1581 were received with more respect than warmth by the Catholic nobility, who, as Mr. Law observes in his 'History,' "declined to be at any expense for the salvation of their souls"; but from that year to 1592 a series of conspiracies were concerted, more or less at Edinburgh, for the dethronement of Elizabeth, with the aid, first of France, then of France and Spain, and finally of Spain alone, in all of which James VI., in virtue of his claim to the succession, was regarded less as an adversary than as a possible ally. In some cases he actually participated in the plot. In 1581 a Jesuit was granted an interview with the king, then, however, a mere boy; in the following year another priestly conspirator was secreted in the palace for three days; and at the end of 1592, amongst the intercepted letters and "blanks" which George Kerr, an agent of the Catholic earls, was attempting to convey to Spain, was found a sort of memorandum, in which James discussed the advantages and disadvantages of co-operating with Philip in an invasion of England. The bearer of this dispatch was originally to have been Ogilvy of Pourie; and we learn from documents edited by Mr. Law for the Scottish History Society that this man afterwards appeared at Rome with a very dubious commission from the Scottish King to negotiate, on the basis of his conversion to Catholicism, with both Philip and the Pope. James, however, had certainly no intention of changing his creed, and in engaging in such intrigues he had no other object than to secure his succession to the English crown.

We have thought it well to direct attention to such portions of this book as serve to supplement the author's chief contribution to historical research; but in so doing we have not even indicated its scope. The first paper is a very interesting one on booksellers and librarians before the invention of printing; two others describe the success of Catholic missionaries in publishing and importing propagandist literature, and their reputed achievements in the casting out of devils. In 'John Major' and 'Biblical Studies in the Middle Ages' we have an admirable survey of the nature and limitations of scholastic learning; a pious myth is exposed and dissected in 'The Legend of Archangel Leslie'; and one paper, written before Mr. Law had left the Church of Rome, is a critical dissertation on the Latin Vulgate. The last of the series is an amusing and suggestive, ie somewhat paradoxical, essay on the ethical relations of States. The author objects of the term International Law, for a reason no less exhaustive than that which induced Voltaire to say of the Holy Roman Empire that it was not holy, was not Roman, and was not an empire; but he holds that the two main principles of this system, decidedly anti-moral as they are—intervention without, non-intervention within the recognized circle—are essential to human progress; and he looks with disfavour on the intrusion of democracy and its sentimentalism into the diplomatic sphere as likely to do infinite harm.

Mr. Law is a dignified, forcible, and luminous writer; and no one who reads these pages can fail to be impressed by his profound learning, his critical acumen, his openness of mind, his pure, undivided love of truth. The influence of these high qualities may be traced in all the forty-four volumes issued under his supervision by the Scottish History Society; and we can imagine nothing more stimulating to his fellow-workers than the contagion of that literary enthusiasm which, throughout a long and painful illness, he retained fully to the last.

NEW NOVELS.

The Secret Woman. By Eden Phillpotts. (Methuen & Co.)

MR. PHILLPOTTS'S new romance is constructed on what is almost a Sophoclean scale. It is a tragedy of country life, over which that irony of destiny which the Greek dramatist was the first to employ presides from the outset. Mr. Hardy has been accustomed to use this scheme, but he uses it after another fashion. He seems hardly conscious of the dramaturgy as he moves towards his end, say, in 'The Mayor of Casterbridge' or in 'The Return of the Native,' or in a later example, 'Jude the Obscure.' Mr. Phillpotts frankly faces the proportions of his tragedy from the start. Mr. Hardy creeps along to his conclusion sadly; Mr. Phillpotts almost revels in his. It is the difference between despair and defiance. The tragedy of the secret woman is, as may be guessed, the tragedy of a sexual problem. Mr. Phillpotts moves simply among primitive emotions, and moves with great natural insight. He has psychological subtlety, and he has great tenderness. He does not take sides or judge between his people: he lets them work out their natural destiny, the destiny for which they were born, which is ineluctable. The framework of the story is simple. Married twenty years, Anthony Redvers and his wife are forty, and have two nearly adult sons. But the temperamental coldness of the woman has gradually estranged from her the sentimental passion of the man, who yet gives her all his respect, admiration, and liking. The discovery of his intrigue with an unknown woman lights the fuse of the tragedy. The conversation between husband and wife after the discovery shows a delicacy, an understanding, and a strength which mark the author for the highest rank. He has, in addition, a sense of the dramatic which materially assists him. The reader is not looking for the tragedy when it falls—unexpectedly. The woman, in a fury of jealousy, love, and other mingling feelings, strikes him as he bends over a well, and in the sight of her two sons. He falls into the water below; and with that deed it may be said that the first act of the drama closes. The problem becomes after that more wholly psychological, though events move. There is the secret woman to identify; there is the younger son's passionate justification of his mother; there is the elder son's doubting and distraction; there is the acceptance by the mother of the consequences of her act. Into all this comes tragedy again, and yet the end is in accordance with Aristotelian canons. It is a purification by means of pity and tears. Too much praise cannot be given to the author for his handling of this big theme. The characterization is always good, and sometimes more than good. The central characters, wife and husband, are thoroughly well realized, and live. The sons, too, are life-like, and the minor figures of the story are all convincing. It is possible that Mr. Phillpotts would have done well to curtail his village pictures. They are all good, but detract in some way from the progress of the central drama. In that we have only to criticize the attitude of the two women to one another. When the younger woman—the mistress—discovers that Anthony Redvers was killed by his wife, she reveals herself, and the whole of the ensuing scene is not only powerful, but also right. It is later, we think, that a false note is struck. It is not conceivable on the facts as recorded by Mr. Phillpotts, and with the individualities revealed by him, that the mistress would forgive the wife when it was borne in upon her that the wife, too, loved the man. That generosity is hardly sexual. Yet we believe that Mr. Hardy also has erred in much the same way. The error in this case, as in his, does not diminish the value of a very remarkable novel.

A Song of a Single Note. By Amelia E. Barr. (Fisher Unwin.)

THERE are occasions when authorship resolves itself into the conscientious discharge of a function. This might have been said unreservedly of Mrs. Barr's 'The Maid of Maiden Lane,' and it may be said, with qualification, of her latest American story. The scene is laid in New York, a few years before General Clinton's evacuation, i.e., in 1779. The title has an amatory allusion, but the most interesting characters have ceased pranking with Cupid before the story opens. They are a Wesleyan saddler who heroically accompanies his son while the latter is drummed out of the city for a spy, and a Jewish shopkeeper who renders a great service with the tact of a prince. Both these men touch the imagination, but it is not touched either by the prettiness of Maria or the seriousness of Agnes, the two heroines of the novel. In one matter Mrs. Barr is creditably original. An English peer exacts from Maria a promise to marry him if he saves the forfeited life of the patriotic American she professes to love. Nine novelists out of ten would have killed Lord Medway or changed his mind. The tenth, Mrs. Barr, makes Maria happy in keeping her word. That there shall be no mistake about her heroism, Mrs. Barr sends her to a tyrannical father in London, who drives her to the altar with a man of his choice, only to hear her repudiate the bridegroom, for Medway's sake, when the priest asks her the crucial question. This scene sounds the fortissimo of the "single note," and let us hope it will convince the less strenuous of library subscribers that a rather fluid and motiveless story is sufficiently thrilling.

Some Loves and a Life. By Mrs. Campbell Praed. (White & Co.)

OF the human heart not much under control Mrs. Campbell Praed writes not only with vivacity and with the skill of a practised novelist, but also with the knowledge of one who has made a study of the passions and weaknesses of men and women. Perhaps it is by way of softening the aspects of temptation that she calls her principal lady a neurotic woman, and represents her as a victim of the morphia habit. The world has always afforded specimens like her, both before and after the invention of the hypodermic syringe. The character is not a pleasant one to contemplate, but Mrs. Campbell Praed exhibits her with unrelenting artistic distinctness. Even less pleasant, but not less penetrating, is her study of the popular continental chaplain who comes under the influence of the neurotic lady. But it seems probable that in describing the man's conflict with himself as priest and as lover, the author has at last sacrificed art to conventionality. Still she has contrived to interest the reader strongly in the characters she represents, and to enlist sympathy on the side which the moralist might think the least deserving. This is her title to success, and she achieves it with the ease and assurance of touch which distinguish the artist from the amateur.

Aubrey Ellison. By St. John Lucas. (Brown, Langham & Co.)

IT is difficult for the reader to disengage any definite theory out of Mr. Lucas's new romance, and we are not sure if he had any. Perhaps his story was contrived in the spirit of mischief which characterizes his dedication "to the Society for Psychical Research and the immortal spirit of melodrama." But to be satisfactory this experiment in the preternatural should approach seriousness. As it is, we are never fully convinced that the author is not gibing at his characters and his readers; yet the plot is formidable and lurid enough. Out of one of Mr. Lucas's former works strays a character of irresponsible humour, who describes genius as "an infinite capacity for giving pain," and asks a lady if she finds that "distance lends enchantment to the pew." But these perversions are by no means characteristic of the book. One must suppose that Mr. Lucas intends to show the psychic influence of a strong-willed and bad man on a youth. Vidal, the singer, is the former; Aubrey Ellison is the latter. Vidal seems to accomplish his evil purposes by animating the soul of young Ellison, but, as we have already said, we do not pretend to understand it at all. The atmosphere is that of melodrama, though the people are in many cases real enough. It is, in fact, a curious hotch-potch, conceived in a cynical mood. The writing is good throughout, and certain episodes are powerfully planned, as, for example, the culminating tragedy. Mr. Lucas is evidently feeling his way, and has not yet reached his own. But he is remarkably clever, and should do so in due time.

He that Eateth Bread with Me. By H. A. Mitchell Keays. (Methuen & Co.)

IT is sad to find the literary vice of exaggeration flaunting itself on the very threshold of a distinctly interesting novel. We have noticed for some time past a tendency to seek parallels for fictitious sorrows and calamities in the tragic story of the Cross, and here comes an author offering what is apparently a first work under a title which suggests that a husband who deserts his wife to live with another woman is like the disciple who "lifted up his heel" against his Master for thirty pieces of silver. This is an offence against taste which we are sure its perpetrator is capable of realizing. The motive for writing this novel seems to have been a wish to expose the iniquity of the system of easy divorce which operates in the United States. This purpose, however, would have been better served if the second Mrs. Mackemer had been conceived without allurements sufficient to dis sever a monk from his vows. It was certainly an artistic blunder to kill her brutally on a railway in order to rescue the first Mrs. Mackemer from a martyrdom for which the reader was thoroughly though tearfully prepared. Despite the curiously bad art which arranges effects by such devices as making Mackemer present flowers to his wife on the night when he states that he does not love her, the story succeeds in moving and sometimes convincing the reader. Katharine, with her beautiful patience and sense of what is due to her supplanter, is true to poetic life, and therefore not unreal. And in the prolonged hey-day of the Gibson girl it is refreshing to make the acquaintance of so spontaneous a creature as Airlie Casler, with her acute perception of comedy, her mimicry, and perfectly American metaphors. Although the requickening of Mackemer's extinct affection is accomplished by the rather trite expedient of drawing him to the bedside of a sick child, the pathos evoked is sincere enough to engender a pleasant sorrow. Mackemer himself is not a successful portrait. Indeed, it would be hardly rash to suppose that he and other male characters in the novel—including an Englishman who describes a fellow-guest as a "very fine bellows, by Jove"—proceeded from a woman's brain.

The Mysterious Miss Cass. By G. W. Appleton. (John Long.)

THIS is a story which ought to have been made a detective story. It loses something for want of the accustomed setting. The intricacies of mystery are so well contrived that one would have enjoyed the pleasure of hunting some one. However, Mr. Appleton has preferred another course, and he must have the credit due to him for the invention of a very ingenious piece of mystery and some remarkable wonders. The fact that a chimpanzee is impressed into the service of his plot reminds one of a similar actor in one of Poe's best stories; but as students of folk-lore assert that there are only five stories, so it may be ultimately laid down that all detective stories have a common origin, and the use of one piece of detail of the machinery will, of course, give no patent right to any true and first inventor. At all events, Mr. Appleton keeps his chimpanzee very well chained up till the last moment, and we are ready to admit that he tells his story with excellent spirit.

The Face in the Flashlight. By Florence Warden. (John Long.)

NUMBERLESS times since the publication of 'The House on the Marsh' has the author demonstrated her ability to produce a good plot. She invents almost, as it were, by instinct, and the construction of a novel apparently gives her very little trouble. In admiring this ingenuity one is inclined to associate with the admiration a regret that this clever lady has not greater gifts of characterization. If she had, she would write a fine tale. As it is, she only writes ingenious stories, which obviously occupy her but superficially. No one can read her latest book without an anxiety to get to the end and unravel the riddle, although from the first the mystery is not so occult as Miss Warden is wont to make it. The reader sights and scents the villain from the outset. It would have been better had his identity been veiled. At any rate, he is a monstrous villain, and has good manners. The heroine of the story is not of such assistance to the plot as she might be; also the hero takes it all too flippantly. In issues of life and death the hero must not be too flippant, or he stands a chance of losing the sympathies of his public. On the whole, this is too perfunctory a story to be accounted among Miss Warden's best.

L'Amant et le Médecin. By Gabriel de la Rochefoucauld. (Paris, Calmann-Lévy.)

WE suppose that the author of this clever novel is the young Count de la Rochefoucauld whose wedding is to take place at about the probable date of the appearance of this notice, and that, if so, it is a first book. The volume has a brilliancy and attractiveness which are curious, when we consider that the story is told in a manner usually found dull or repulsive. The ten pages which stand first lead up to "a manuscript" which fills the next 373, and relates events which precede the "opening." The whole ends with four pages as unsatisfactory as the beginning. Such, however, is the talent of the author that, in spite of his vile method of construction, which involves artificiality and absence of all chance of the naturalness of real life, he holds the attention of the reader almost to the end. If he had been nervous about the construction, as an old and skilled writer would have been, he would have tried to make his "manuscript" something like what his hero might have written. That he has not done so we may be grateful, as we forget in reading that we are dealing with "a manuscript," and take the story as though told in the usual fashion by the author. As a specimen of the contents of the novel, which is full of observation and of irony, we quote an incidental remark of a priest who is inviting "some intelligent young people" to lectures, to be followed by discussion: "M. Rivoire, comme tous les membres du clergé, ne considérait comme intelligents que ceux qu'il sentait hostiles." The book is not "suitable for young ladies," although we suppose its doctrine would be counted "moral."

RECENT AMERICAN SPORTING LITERATURE.

Guns, Ammunition, and Tackle. By Capt. A. W. Money and others. "The American Sportsman's Library." (New York, the Macmillan Company.)

Big Game. By Dwight W. Huntington. (Bickers & Son.)

Sportsman "Joe." By Edwyn Sands. (New York, the Macmillan Company.)

THE "American Sportsman's Library" holds in the United States a somewhat similar position to that of the "Badminton Library" in this country, though as yet it does not cover so wide a field, being apparently confined within the limits of North America. There its volumes supply with varying merit the best information procurable, and therefore British sportsmen, who wander over all the earth, hail their appearance with joy. President Roosevelt's descriptions of deer, and his advocacy of sufficient game laws, with sanctuaries for the game; Dean Sage on salmon and trout; Caspar Whitney, Grinnell, and Wister on musk-ox, bison, sheep, and goat; not to mention other volumes, appeal strongly to the best instincts of travellers and sportsmen. It is, however, a mistake to set forth unless provided with the best weapons or tackle procurable, and on such points Capt. Money and his associates endeavour to supply advice. The author begins by claiming that "America stands above all others in the world as a game-producing country," and that, as a rule, Americans are "better shots, use better guns and better ammunition, and have far more thorough acquaintance with all that concerns guns, ammunition, habits of game, and how to shoot, than their brother sportsmen in other countries."

And he proceeds to give reasons for this superiority, "apart from the natural tendency of an American to excel at anything he takes in hand, whether as an amusement or as a business," in the ground available, there being no temptation to trespass; in the variety of game, and the ability of many persons, on account of high wages, to indulge in sport; and chiefly in the general facility with which shooting can be obtained. Having thus established his case, the author compares English with American shooting. He has had exceptional opportunities for sport in both countries, and he prefers, as is natural, that of America. There you may wander at will north, south, east, or west, and enjoy in addition the pleasures of camp life. In a general way Capt. Money's advice about guns is trustworthy, and his remarks on ammunition are sensible; but they must be taken as applying to American rather than English shooting. He says one gun should suffice for all your wants, a sentiment which cannot be supported, were it merely because of the possibility of accident and difficulty of repair; he prefers the double-trigger to the single-trigger gun, and in the wilds he is right, for the mechanism is simpler; and, finally, no one will dispute that what is written to-day of so progressive a science as the making of guns and powders may require modification to-morrow.

More improvement is necessary to bring the rifle to perfection than is required for the smoothbore, and, curiously enough, Mr. Kephart, who deals with this subject, lays down the law that "the chief factor in a rifle's accuracy is its ammunition. In these days the 'make' of a rifle is of less consequence than the choice of a cartridge..... This will sound like heresy to many novices, and to some old marksmen, but it is a fact capable of demonstration. First choose a cartridge; then a gun to handle it."

Again:—

"In all kinds of hunting with the rifle, a low trajectory is a high merit; but it is the ammunition, not the gun, that gives it."

This is, in a measure, true, though it may be differently put before the reader. There are two main excellences in a rifle, viz., lowness of trajectory, and sufficient stopping power of its bullet. The former is got by a nice adjustment of barrel, explosive, and bullet; the latter by so arranging that, after sufficient penetration, the bullet shall expand to a form not unlike a button mushroom. When that happens the projectile is said to have set up, a process which the author describes as "upset." Mr. Carlin devotes sixty-six pages to the theory of rifle-shooting, and treats of energy, penetration, drift, and recoil; the pistol and revolver falling to the lot of Mr. Himmelwright. His chapter is excellent, and we believe there is little doubt that in this branch of shooting Americans are easily first. The photographs of well-known shots, in the attitudes they prefer when firing, are instructive.

The last chapter is devoted to the artificial fly, and is written by Mr. Keene, who mentions that he had charge of the Itchen Abbas water for several seasons for Lord Northbrook, who has so recently passed away from the scene. He should, therefore, know something of dry-fly work, and probably more than the reader of his pages may suspect. He seems to be more at home with the coarser methods which suffice for less educated trout. The coloured plates of salmon flies, lake-trout and bass flies, and of brook-trout flies are very well produced; most of them have names familiar to English anglers, others are strange, not the least so being a fly which rejoices in the style and title of "Kotoodle Bug."

The success which presumably has attended the "American Sportsman" series probably accounts for the appearance of many volumes on subjects more or less covered by that library. Of these 'Big Game' is one, and its debts to other books and periodicals are considerable; they are, however, duly acknowledged. The writer tells us that he visited the haunts of the big game of North America whilst the animals were abundant and tame; their domestication must have been marvellous, for he says: "I have ridden upon the mountain-lion on the fields of wild sage when shooting the sage-cock, or cock of the plains." A strange mount certainly. He has a good chapter on game clubs, parks, and preserves, all established for the protection of game. Then the deer family, the ox family—in which sheep, goats, and antelope are included—the bear family, and, finally, the cat family are described. Mr. Huntington is divided between the traditional ferocity of the grizzly bear, of which his patriotism demands the recognition, and his own better knowledge. Thus: "Our bears include the most ferocious and formidable bear in the world, the grizzly bear"; and, again, "Ever since Lewis and Clark discovered him he has been known as an extremely dangerous beast," and stories are told of bear and bull fights in which the former was victor. But along with this comes the truthful remark, "The ferocity of our bears has been exaggerated greatly," followed by "I am satisfied from what I have seen of the grizzly, and from what I have learned from others, that this animal to-day has a wholesome fear of man," &c. Bears are, we think, very much alike in their nature all the world over; they will escape if they can, but if cornered they will charge. When they do, it matters very little which variety of bear is met. Even when wounded they usually try to escape, and accidents happen generally from following a bear into an unsuspected cul de sac, or from incautiously approaching a wounded animal. An ordinary bull in a bad temper is, we are sure, far more dangerous and more likely to attack than any average bear. This book has an appendix in which the scientific names of the animals and some natural history notes are given; there is also an index; but its chief attraction lies in the illustrations from photographs of the wild animals. All are good, and the frontispiece, a bull moose, deserves special mention.

Sportsman "Joe" is a New York boy, just beginning to suffer from town life, who is taken in hand by his father's friend, and introduced to camping-out and all manner of adventure. Nature-worship, shooting, fishing, life in a log hut, Indians, &c., all appear in the descriptions of the trip, which are spirited and well told. The scenes are chiefly in Canada, on or about the American boundary; the evidences of prosperity cause the Mentor to lament that the States had not secured the country:—

"Just think of it! Thousands of miles of choice timber and mineral lands, of prairies all ready to be turned into the finest wheat-lands in the world; grazing lands, mixed farming lands, every old kind of lands; sporting fields unrivalled; enough country to make a dozen glorious States, as it has made one noble Dominion,—and we let it all get away!"

Though it is specially addressed to Americans, the book is a good, wholesome one for any boy, and should be a favourite; it is illustrated.

OUR LIBRARY TABLE.

THE charm of a refined and urbane spirit reveals itself in Otia (Lane), a slender volume of fugitive prose and verse reprinted by Messrs. Harold Hodge and Arthur Baumann as a memorial of their friend the late Armine Thomas Kent. Of the poems, which number over a score, more than one-half are vers de société, and reach a high level of excellence in that kind; a few, instinct with the spirit of youth, tell a summer's story of the earth and its delights—the lays of birds, the scent of hedgerow or garden-plot, the way of a man with a maid; and in one or two a deeper note is sounded. The prose is marked by an easy grace of style, a happiness in word and phrase, and a critical vein individual and fresh, if not profound. A pleasant flavour of scholarship pervades the book. On the whole, while there is much to attract—much that is ingenious and suggestive—there is little in this miscellany to challenge criticism save its title, for which not the author but his editors must be held accountable. To the title it may be reasonably objected that, like Byron's 'Hours of Idleness,' it seems to present the contents in the light of "immoment toys," thrown off to beguile the vacant hours of a lettered lounge, rather than as the good fruits—for such, surely, they are—of a genuine though fitful literary impulse. Otium, Catulle, tibi molestum, indeed, is the reflection with which many readers will close these pleasant pages. Had the common lot of humanity been his, Armine Kent might, despite his untimely death, have achieved something of permanent worth in literature—might, perhaps, have produced that history of Latin poetry of which, after the fashion of young Samuel Taylor Coleridge, he was wont to talk amongst friends, and for the writing of which Mr. Baumann, his biographer, stoutly avers no man of his time was better qualified. But so it was that fate, by endowing Kent with "a dangerously comfortable income," had delivered him from the yoke of regular industry; and in the upshot—as was perhaps inevitable in the case of one whose taste was fastidious to over-nicety, and whose social aptitudes were many and imperative—emancipation served but to defeat, instead of reinforcing, his original bent towards a life of literary labour.

Amongst the longer essays is a sketch of the rise, progress, and decline of the Della Cruscan movement—or mania. Like a resourceful culinary artist, Kent here displays his skill in creating an appetizing plat out of scanty and almost savourless ingredients. The subject, at this distance of time an ungrateful one, is handled with a light touch and an abundant humour. To a Della Cruscan it is—and the fact should never be forgotten—that we owe that song of simple sooth, 'Wapping Old Stairs,' which first appeared over the signature of "Arley" (a pseudonym still unidentified) in the columns of The World for November 29th, 1787. Kent exposes the fallacy of the popular view, expressed by Scott, which represents the Della Cruscans as "squabashed at one blow" by the 'Baviad' of William Gifford:—

"Satire, even first-rate satire, does not kill follies. They gradually die of inanition, or are crowded out by newer fashions. Laura Matilda's dirge in the 'Rejected Addresses' is a standing monument of the vitality of Della Cruscanism more than twenty years after its supposed death-blow."

Something might have been said about Coleridge's relations with the coterie. While still at Christ's Hospital, he had introduced a line adapted from Robert Merry's 'Adieu and Recall to Love'—the poem which, in 1787, set a-going the Della Cruscan give-and-take—into a set of verses, in which he playfully rallies himself on his personal disadvantages; Merry's line,

A sad vacuity of mind, reappearing in Coleridge's schoolboy verses as

This fat vacuity of face.

Later, Coleridge seems to have borrowed an occasional phrase from Merry. In some lines beginning,—

Again, dear harmonist, again!

which appeared in the volume of 1796, he reproduces with little change the lines from Merry's address to Mrs. Piozzi:—

E'en so when Parsons [Sara] pours his lay
Correctly wild or sweetly strong, &c.

Indeed, for one member of the circle, the luckless Perdita Robinson, who figures as Laura in the 'Poet's Corner' of The World, Coleridge cherished a very sincere admiration. Late in 1799 he writes to Southey in hearty praise of her ballad tales—of 'The Haunted Beach' in particular, which he urges Southey to secure for his 'Annual Anthology'; and of the few poems composed by him during the short and troubled period of his life at Keswick, two at least—the 'Address to Mount Skiddaw' and 'The Mad Monk'—were inspired by and written for Mrs. Robinson.

In a brief paper, entitled 'The Battle of the Scansionists,' Kent discusses the relative merits of stress-prosody and scansion by classical feet, and contrives to display a wide knowledge and an exquisite ear for metrical and rhythmical effect, without, however, arriving at any definite conclusion on the question. He quotes an isolated line from 'The Sensitive Plant':—

To shield the glow-worm from the evening dew, a line which, he rightly observes, when separated from the metrical context, no one would dream of scanning otherwise than as an iambic decasyllable.

"Now, unless we can find some way out of this, English prosody perishes. A metrical scheme which fails to inform us in what metre detached decasyllabic lines are written is really no scheme at all. .... If prosody is to be more than utterly embryonic, the lines of the 'Sensitive Plant' must clearly be like apples on a tree, differing often widely from each other, but still apples."

This is plausible enough; but the writer seems to overlook what he remarks elsewhere, that verse depends for its prosperity upon "subtle violations of a norm." The truth is that English anapaestic verse admits of so many substitutes for the anapest, and that in so many different places in the line, that instantaneous recognition of an isolated line becomes an impossibility. And the same thing may be said in the case of the iambic decasyllable. Take a few lines from the sonnets of Shakspeare:—

Be, as thy presence is, gracious and kind.

Happy to have thy love, happy to die.

Take all my loves, my love; yea, take them all.

Some in their hawks and hounds, some in their horse.

Or take this magnificent line from 'Henry V.':

Be in their flowing cups freshly remembered.

Would the reader, coming upon any one of these lines isolated from the context, inevitably recognize it for what in point of fact it is—an iambic decasyllable? Would he not rather scan it as he scans Shelley's

All that we wish to stay

Tempts and then flies—

or this, from the same poem?—

Whilst skies are blue and bright,

Whilst flowers are gay.

In a word, our metrical schemes are so complex, and admit of variations so many and artful, that identification on sight of the metre of any single line, severed from its companions, becomes a feat of divination rather than recognition. In the course of this essay, by the way, Kent cites, as an example of a Latin hexameter not immediately recognizable:—

Hymen O Hymenæe Io Hymen O Hymenæe.

Here, for once, his scholarship is found tripping. Catullus's line runs:—

Hymen O Hymenæe, Hymen ades O Hymenæe!

an hexameter which apparently got mixed up in the critic's memory with two lines of a different poem and metre:—

Io Hymen Hymenæe io,

Io Hymen Hymenæe!

While on the subject of casual slips, one may point out that Wordsworth's addressee was "dear brother Jim"—not Tim, as we read on p. 40. And surely the verses quoted on p. 17 should run:—

Woe worth the week, Sir John, and cursed the hour,

&c., instead of "Woe wait the week," as it is here printed. Some indication ought to have been given that the 'Song' printed on p. 76 is a translation from Victor Hugo.

In his volume A Secret Agent in Port Arthur (Constable & Co.) Mr. William Greener conveys a good deal of information in pleasant fashion. That he cannot be trusted by the reader is shown by the opening words of his third chapter, on 'Life at Port Arthur': "As everyone knows, Port Arthur was named after H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught." Now "everyone knows" nothing of the kind! "Every one knows" that Port Arthur had long been so called when it was the rendezvous of the British forces under General Sir Hope Grant in the childhood of Prince Arthur, and there is some evidence that it was so called before the birth of the Prince. The book brings out well the incredible carelessness of the Russians. We have previously named the fact that they employed in Manchuria Sikh watchmen and police, British pensioners and sympathizers almost to a man. This is illustrated by several of Mr. Greener's anecdotes.

THAT good wine needs no bush is a doctrine which has become exaggerated by experience till we are apt to think that a fine bush means bad wine. A list of the contents of The Athenæum, we flatter ourselves, is at least not superior to the contents themselves. The same cannot perhaps be said in all cases of the extra issues of Lancashire halfpenny evening papers. We were a little puzzled with the title, The Biology of British Politics, chosen by Mr. Charles Harvey for his volume (published by Messrs. Sonnenschein & Co.), but were delighted with the four pages of "contents." Little could be imagined more interesting, had only the matters there named been treated with intelligence and learning. When we came, however, to the contents themselves we found that the good bits were Spenser Wilkinson - and - water, while the greater portion were snippets from the wrong people. Mr. Harvey's studies of times before our own have not been sufficient to give him a sound foundation for his work. In the first lines of his introduction he is startled at what he thinks a change occurring in the nineteenth century in one of the two great parties in the State, and regards it as a "striking feature" of recent history that the Conservatives should have passed Bills which "made important alterations in the Constitution and initiated considerable social changes." The House of Commons of the eighteenth century, whichever party was in power, did not think it so necessary as we do to "pass measures." But the Tory party up to the American War was certainly, throughout that great period of English politics, the party which looked the most for Constitutional reform, if not also for social change. When Mr. Disraeli advocated measures which at the time seemed revolutionary, it was on Bolingbroke and the principles of Toryism that his action was based. So, too, when, also in his introduction, Mr. Harvey declares "that Politics still is only an empirical art," and tells us that "the philosopher" has seen "that there is no science of politics," he fails to show that he has given any consideration to the political philosophy of the eighteenth century, or even of the nineteenth before 1870. A great deal of Mr. Harvey's volume resembles, indeed, an ill-kept commonplace book of an ill-equipped boy. The subjects, however, with which Mr. Harvey deals are such that it is hardly possible to write about them without performing that greatest task of every writer—leading other men to think. It is one of the main doctrines of the book that the world has come to the pass which Mr. Harvey sums up as follows: " Militarism within and sovereignty over weaker peoples are rooted in natural impulses in the order of nature." This startling assertion makes us ask whether, then, we must consider that the practice of kicking old gentlemen in the stomach in order to steal their watches is "rooted in natural impulses." Mr. Harvey finds this militarism and this Congoism "in the order of nature ..... moving on to their destined developments," although we do not clearly discern what, in his opinion, this goal may be. As, however, he has explained and praised the principles of the Hague tribunal, we imagine that he cannot in fact hold that pessimistic view which at first sight appears to be his own. The details which, in order to illustrate his arguments, Mr. Harvey quotes or draws from various sources, are, for the most part, accurate, though sometimes misleading, as, for example, his statement: "Of Italy we note: 1. Her extraordinary development as a naval power. Her navy in 1800 of thirty-six ships had become, in 1900, 227." We imagine that "1800" is a misprint, but know not for what year, as in 1860 the Italian kingdom, in the present sense of the word, was not yet in existence. This, however, is not our ground for calling attention to the argument. A comparison of numbers of ships is no test whatever of the relative efficiency of fleets. What might be said is that Italy before 1885 had incurred vast military and naval expenditure, with a view to making her fleet and army formidable against what she thought the danger of French attack. At one moment she had made herself the third naval power, but before "1900" she had, in defiance of Mr. Harvey's statement as to her "true instincts," dropped from the third, and she is now falling into the seventh position.

THERE are not in this country men more competent to write on The Unemployed (P. S. King & Son) than Mr. Percy Alden, the author of the little book before us, and Sir John Gorst, who has contributed the preface. We commend the treatise to our readers, although we think the difficulties in the way of Mr. Alden's suggestions more numerous than will be apparent at first sight to those who peruse his pages. His first direct remedy, for example, is "a Ministry of Commerce and Industry." This is "heaven and hell amalgamation, limited," to use a phrase of Carlyle. It is "a goat and cabbage policy," to use the Belgian phrase. The traders, represented by the Chambers of Commerce, have a majority in the House of Commons for the creation of "a Ministry of Commerce," to be held by a manufacturer or merchant, and to represent in the Cabinet middle class views. The workmen have a majority also, for the creation of "a Ministry of Labour," to be held by a workman or a workman's friend, and to represent in the Cabinet labour views. Mr. Alden is a great deal too sensible not to know the difficulty of amalgamation of these two policies. The practical difficulty of taking most of the Home Office work and most of the Local Government Board work, and adding them to the work of the Board of Trade, is stupendous. What will happen will be the creation of additional departments, instead of that reduction of their number and simplification of their functions which is, in fact, defensible. Another "remedy" is that "the Government" "should grant subventions" to "lodging houses." But it is not just to lay on the shoulders of the poor rural taxpayer special charges intended to meet town misery, and to be spent in or for towns. "Afforestation of Waste Lands," again, means the extinction of common rights, valuable to the rural poor, and likely to be "compensated" by money gifts, which will be wasted, and will increase distress.

BOTH ability and eloquence distinguish Miss Ida A. Taylor's studies of Revolutionary Types (Duckworth & Co.). Her choice of characters is, perhaps, rather capricious. Thus we should be disposed, with Mr. Cunningham Graham, who contributes a racy introduction to the volume, to deny altogether to Pym the title of revolutionary. He was really a constitutional reformer who revered precedents as deeply as Burke himself, and the later phases of the Great Rebellion would have found in him no sympathizer. It is rather a pity, again, that Miss Taylor did not select a more weighty specimen of the revolutionaries of 1848 than young Manara—Mazzini, for example, or Louis Blanc. Still, her sketches invariably get down to the essentials of individualities, and in two instances, at any rate, her selections could not be improved. Benedict Arnold is unmistakably the typical revolutionary traitor. He had suffered grievous wrongs at the hands of Congress; but for his plot to betray West Point and the person of Washington to the British there can be no excuse. Revenge must have been his dominant motive, but he was also influenced, as were Moreau and Bazzaine after him, by the example of Monk, a fatal inspiration for puzzle-headed soldiers. Saint-Just is Miss Taylor's type of the French Revolution, and if any one man can stand for that tremendous and complex epoch it is the idealist who marched through the shambles towards Arcadia. The study of that splendidly Satanic creature is the most powerful in the collection, though a point is missed—namely, that the nation of antiquity which served for his model was undoubtedly the Spartan. Toussaint l'Ouverture is probably as typical an instance as could have been picked out of the revolutionist dominated by pure duty, while Pius IX. will remain for all time the great revolutionist malgré lui. Violent delights brought, in the cases of most of Miss Taylor's heroes, violent deaths. Yet it is possible to agree with her that they were justified in their quest of the unattainable, even if Mr. Cunningham Graham's saying that "they were worth a whole wilderness of Liberal politicians" seems in need of qualification. Revolutionaries, after all, are in the nature of necessary evils, and those at long intervals. Nobody would contemplate with equanimity the prospect of Saint-Just or Danton as his next-door neighbour.

M. MAURICE LEUDET'S L'Almanach des Sports is each year improving in artistic finish, although it hardly rises above the modest shilling price. It is now published in Paris by La Fare. The Basque ball game, which played a great part in last year's issue, as we showed in our review, has dropped out, such are the fickleness of fortune and the vicissitudes of fame. Rowing and sculling are fast declining in France, and will probably soon be abandoned. Fencing still holds her own, and it was fencing which first brought M. Leudet from the politics of Le Figaro into the world of "le sport." He prophesies the coming of a day when England will beat France at the rapier. Automobilmism continues to grow and to gain ground in the almanac till it swallows up its rivals. Flying machines have not maintained the position which they had conquered a year ago. We can safely recommend every motorist to get 'L'Almanach des Sports.' As regards the excellent illustrations, we rather question the title of M. Conrades to be sculling "champion of Europe." He would not stand a chance with our best men, and a small club with a feeble regatta ought not to give such high-sounding names.

Sir Thomas More (the Blessed Thomas More). By Henri Bremond. Translated by Harold Child. (Duckworth.)—This is a very just life of Sir Thomas More—of course, from the point of view of a Roman Catholic believer. It adds nothing to Father Bridgett's 'Life,' but it is better written, and excellently translated. It is rather amusing to note the continual return to apology for More's essential humanity in view of his prospective sainthood. Erasmus is vindicated, by the way, from the charge of favouring the reformed doctrine, as distinguished from a reform from within, such as that forced on the Council of Trent.

Romance of the Feudal Chateaux. By Elizabeth W. Champney. Illustrated. (Putnam's Sons.)—The illustrations are obviously meant to be the attraction of this volume, two of the predecessors of which have been noticed in our columns. They comprise eight "photogravures" of varying merit, that of Château Gaillard being the most characteristic, and thirty line and half-tone illustrations, two of them from "old prints" (acknowledged) and fifteen from Viollet-le-Duc (with his signature removed except in one case, no other means of identification being furnished). Besides these there are fourteen outline drawings from Grasset's 'Quatre Fils Aymon,' without any mention of them or their source being made. The text is a pretty medley of fancy and history, though it trembles on the verge of inaccuracy many times.

The Adventures of a Post-Captain, by a Naval Officer, "with characteristic engravings by Mr. Williams," is one of Messrs. Methuen's small reprints "of some of the rare and famous illustrated books of fiction and general literature," first published in 1820. As in the other volumes of the series, the printers and reproducers of the engravings have done their work admirably, though the pictures necessarily lose something by being reduced. The adventures are not too well told in octosyllabic verse, by a pretty close imitator of the gin-inspired John Mitford, the author of 'The Adventures of Johnny Newcomb in the Navy,' published in 1819; but can scarcely be conceived as representative of naval manners and usages a hundred years ago, though they may be of an ignorant and drunken master's-mate's ideas of them. Literature the book can scarcely be called, but here and there it is amusing.

A CHARMING little book for any child who cares for flowers—and where is the right-minded child that does not?—is The Young Gardener's Kalendar (De La More Press), by Dollie Radford, "pictured" by L. E. Wright. The format—cover, paper, typography, and all—presents an admirable instance of fine taste and simplicity, thoroughly in accord with Mrs. Radford's delicate verses, which are as daintily pretty and sweet as a country nose-gay, and pleasantly informative withal. She undoubtedly shows the right feeling for February when she sings—

Of all sweet days that come and go,
The sweetest fall
When first the almond blossoms show
Above the wall:
When through their flowers a cloudless sky
Shines clear and blue,
You know the spring will soon be by
With flowers for you.

It is a pity, however, that the illustrations although informed with a certain grace, are sicklied o'er with the pale cast of an affected method, with which we are already too familiar nowadays. The old lack of all decorative qualities has been replaced by a desperate be-decorative-at-all-costs mannerism that is profoundly tiresome; some study of the selective qualities which distinguish the art of Japan, of Boutet de Monvel, and many modern American illustrators of children's books, might have produced a comelier result.

THE fifth edition of the Guide to Italy and Sicily (Macmillan & Co.), in the series "Macmillan's Guides," has been "carefully revised," the Sicilian portion being new. The volume as a whole may, as our readers know, be praised, but the Sicilian part is not so "new" as might be gathered from the account given of it. Travellers are still told here, as they are in all the other guide-books, of three railway stations, all inconvenient, from which Segesta can be reached. A station called "Segesta" was opened in the summer of 1904, and the journey is thus shortened. The present guide differs, however, from all the others except one in rightly placing Segesta very high in the list of the temples of the world. Indeed, also rightly as we think, in two fine passages here, which follow Goethe, Segesta is put at the very top of the tree. The temples at Paestum and that at Segesta are, in fact, incomparable, and the first view of the temple of Segesta, in its glorious solitude, is finer than any aspect of the Parthenon. On the other hand, the account of the fortifications at the back of Syracuse is somewhat feeble. The tourist who reads in advance or takes with him only this guide will be tempted to avoid seeing ruins which, even apart from their great history, are of extraordinary architectural and engineering interest. The plans of towns in the new Sicilian part take in too limited a portion of each place: that of Palermo does not include the principal hotel; that of Messina does not comprise the interesting "Protestant cemetery" where the officers of Nelson's fleet and of Lord William Bentinck's army lie; and that of Syracuse excludes the principal hotel, the Latomie, the Ear of Dionysius, the Greek theatre and the amphitheatre; not to mention Fort Euryalus and the Corinthian and Athenian lines.

We are not altogether satisfied with the arrangement of the older part of the guide. Mr. Oscar Browning's chapter, that by Mr. Roger Fry on 'Italian Art,' with other preliminary essays of great value, are followed by a list of hotels, and cut off by this from the catalogue of works on art and archaeology. When we come to detail, we are not always able to find the thing we are in search of. Take, for example, the Vatican picture gallery. We naturally look in the index for 'Rome,' under 'Rome' for 'Vatican': under 'Vatican' we find the "sculpture galleries," but not the pictures, and are led off by "Museums, see that title under Rome"; turning then to 'Rome,' and under it to 'Museums,' we fail to recognize the Vatican. In the text the Caravaggio—to which, in spite of the painter's exclusion from the fashion of our day, the fifth place of honour in the Vatican Gallery is now awarded—is only named, without the words of commendation which are attached, for example, to Nicolo da Foligno in the same room, or the full explanation given of a Giulio Romano. Mr. Roger Fry in his introduction rightly states that Caravaggio was the founder of the Naturalists, and that from him, through Ribera, the "Spanish School" was formed. If we set aside all prejudice, and admit that Caravaggio's 'Entombment' is not a religious picture, but a representation of human grief, may we not claim for it that it is in itself as fine as anything that has been produced by the real Spanish School—that of Madrid? Assisi is treated scurvily in being robbed of its saint, whose body it preserved with much trouble against snatching, threatened by Perugia. The "Church.....is purely commemorative, and contains no relic of St. Francis except a very doubtfully authentic tomb." That the body of St. Francis lies under the church, which was built over him immediately after his burial, there can be no doubt at all. The sarcophagus discovered in 1818 is probably that of the saint, but if it be not, we are equally sure that he lies there in the rock, and only congratulate ourselves that he is not shown like his good friend, poor St. Clare, in her church hard by. The writer, who will not have the tomb, half-believes in the miraculous roses. They can be grown, however, we may assure him, elsewhere than at St. Mary of the Angels in the Assisi plain, thornless, and with the same occasional red stain as marks those which American ladies buy.

The Technique of Indexing. By Mary Petherbridge. (Secretarial Bureau, Conduit Street.)—Indexing, as the author says, is too often treated as a branch of cataloguing, which it is not. An index deals with one book, and its object is to show any one who uses it what exactly the book contains, and where each item of information is to be found. Miss Petherbridge has had a great deal of experience of indexing, and no small experience of teaching others to index; and while there are small points which we might discuss with her, we should like to make every author who publishes a book worth indexing read and profit by her treatise. "Quandoque bonus dormitat Homerus," and there is no such person as William, Emperor of Germany (p. 69), so that the German Emperor, who does exist, cannot be cross-referenced under Germany, which is merely a vague expression. Miss Petherbridge has not only studied her subject well; she is an authority on it herself, and her book is very useful.

Classical Echoes in Tennyson, by Prof. W. P. Mustard (New York, the Macmillan Company), is the third volume of the 'Studies in English' of Columbia University. We cannot see the need or room for a new book on this subject, which has been amply treated by Mr. Churton Collins already in his 'Illustrations of Tennyson.' Something more than a passing word of acknowledgment in the preface is needed in such a case, and while we recognize that the collection is comprehensive, we must add that very little of it is new to professed students of Tennyson. We have ourselves noted in reviews two or three things which we find here, and which have not, so far as we know, been published elsewhere. This volume is, in fact, so derivative that it can hardly bring any reputation to its author as a new and substantial achievement. It would not, in our view, be the least claim to a doctorate. But it does credit to the author's industry.

The Upper Norwood Athenæum: the Record of the Winter Meetings and Summer Excursions, 1904.—This is a record of the twenty-eighth season of the Upper Norwood Athenæum, and we are glad to see that the winter meetings have been resumed, in addition to the usual summer rambles. The winter visits included Apsley House, the Record Office, and St. John's, Clerkenwell. The summer excursions were well attended and began on May 7th, when Mr. Charles Wheeler conducted a visit to the old church at Ockham. Wrotham was selected by Mr. Vincent for the second ramble. Chislehurst was taken by Mr. Wiggins; and other places chosen were Saffron Walden—paper read by Mr. Virgoe; Ongar, Mr. Quartermain; Winchester, by Mr. C. Wheeler; and Colnbrook and Stanwell, by the editor. 'The Record' is carefully edited by Mr. Theophilus Pitt. The beautiful illustrations form an important feature of this interesting booklet. Six new members were elected during the past year. We suggest that ladies should be eligible for membership.

We have on our table William Lloyd Garrison, with a Preface by Leo Tolstoy ('The Free Age' Press),—An Account of Jesmond, by F. W. Dendy (Newcastle-upon-Tyne, Robinson),—The Story of the Iliad, by the Rev. A. J. Church (Seeley),—Lessons in Experimental and Practical Geometry, by H. S. Hall and F. H. Stevens (Macmillan),—Balloons, by G. Bacon (Jack),—The Story of the Odyssey, by the Rev. A. J. Church (Seeley),—The Principles of Relief, by E. T. Devine (Macmillan),—Intemperance, by H. H. Pereira (Longmans),—Seneca, a Selection, by H. C. Sidley (Bell),—Essays in Puritanism, by A. Macphail (Fisher Unwin),—The R. J. Campbell Birthday Book, compiled by Mary A. Willis ('Christian Commonwealth' Office),—Excursions and Lessons in Home Geography, by C. A. McMurtry (Macmillan),—The Spanish Conquest in America, by Sir Arthur Helps, Vol. IV. (Lane),—Motors and Motoring, by H. J. Spooner (Jack),—A Synonymic Catalogue of Orthoptera, by W. F. Kirby, Vol. I. (Trustees of the British Museum, Natural History),—The Zoological Record, 1903, Vol. XL., edited by D. Sharp (Zoological Society),—Stories of the Wind: a Forest Fairy Tale, and Others, by K. Blossé (Drane),—Mouncey and Others, by A. F. Lovat (Glasgow, Bryce),—The Doll's Dance, by C. Forestier-Walker (Digby & Long),—Chandra Shekhar, a Bengali novel, by the late Bankim Chandra Chatterjee, translated by M. N. R. Chowdhury (Luzac),—Terence Travers, by the Rev. A. C. Highton (Drane),—The Scarlet Pimpernel, by Baroness Orczy (Greening),—Bolts and Bars, by F. C. Vernon-Harcourt (Digby & Long),—Mrs. Maybrick's Own Story, by Florence E. Maybrick (Funk & Wagnalls),—The Secret of a Great Influence: Notes on Bishop Westcott's Teaching, by Mrs. H. Porter (Macmillan),—Anchors of the Soul, Sermons by the Rev. Brooke Herford, D.D. (P. Green).—The Royal Standard of God's United Kingdom (Greening).—The Century Bible: Samuel, edited by the Rev. A. R. S. Kennedy (Jack).—The Sound of a Voice that is Still, Passages from the Writings of the late Clifford Harrison (Sonnenschein).—and The Last Discourses of our Lord, by the Rev. A. G. Mortimer, D.D. (Skeffington). Among New Editions we have Chemistry in Daily Life, by Dr. Lassar-Cohn (Grevel).—The Tutorial Chemistry, by G. H. Bailey and W. Briggs, 2 vols. (Clive).—and The Heart of a Heretic, by S. Hallifax (R. Brimley Johnson).

LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

ENGLISH.

Theology.

Blacket (J.), Not Left without Witness, cr. 8vo, 6/ net.
Macdonald (Kenneth S.), by J. M. Macphail, 8vo, 5/
Mitchell (J. M.), The Great Religions of India, 5/ net.
Purves (D.), The Life Everlasting, cr. 8vo, 4/ net.
Smith (Gipsy), A Mission of Peace, cr. 8vo, 2/6 net.

Fine Art and Archaeology.

Davie (W. G.), Old Cottages, Farm-Houses, and other Stone Buildings in the Cotswold District, from Photographs, roy. 8vo, 21/ net.
Fletcher (B. and B. F.), A History of Architecture on the Comparative Method, 8vo, 21/ net.
Keyser (C. E.), A List of Norman Tympana and Lintels, &c., 4to, 21/ net.
Sun Pictures of the Antilles and British Guiana, oblong 4to, boards, 2/6 net.

Poetry and the Drama.

Carman (B.), Songs from a Northern Garden, cr. 8vo, 2/6 net.
Dickinson (E.), Poems, cr. 8vo, 4/6 net.
Grein (J. T.), Dramatic Criticism: Vol. 5, 1903, 3/6 net.

Music.

Southwark Psalter, Music by A. M. Richardson, 8vo, 4/6 net.

Philosophy.

Royce (J.), The Conception of Immortality, 18mo, 2/6

History and Biography.

Cambridge Modern History: Vol. 3, The Wars of Religion, roy. 8vo, 16/ net.
Chadwick (H. M.), Studies on Anglo-Saxon Institutions, cr. 8vo, 8/ net.
Bennett (R.) and Elton (J.), History of Corn Milling: Vol. 4, Some Feudal Mills, 8vo, 12/6
Franklin (Benjamin), Autobiography, edited, with Preface, by W. Macdonald, cr. 8vo, 3/6 net.
Gant (F. J.), Autobiography, cr. 8vo, 3/6 net.
Gosse (E.), French Profiles, cr. 8vo, 7/6
Greener (W.), A Secret Agent in Port Arthur, cr. 8vo, 6/
Knox (H. T.), Notes on the Early History of the Dioceses of Tuam, Killala, and Achonry, 8vo, 10/6 net.
Moore (Thomas), by S. Gwynn, cr. 8vo, 2/ net.
Vinogradoff (P.), The Growth of the Manor, 8vo, 10/6

Geography and Travel.

Burroughs (J.), Far and Near, cr. 8vo, 5/ net.
Du Plessis (J.), A Thousand Miles in the Heart of Africa, cr. 8vo, 3/6
Kashmir, by Sir Thomas Wardle, roy. 8vo, 10/6 net.
Survey Atlas of England and Wales, designed by J. G. Bartholomew, folio, half-leather, 70/ net.
Tenney (C. D.), Geography of Asia, 4to, limp, 4/ net.
Thackeray Country (The), by L. Melville, 8vo, 6/

Sports and Pastimes.

Beldam (G. W.) and Vaile (P. A.), Great Lawn Tennis Players, 8vo, 12/6 net.

Education.

Dodd (C. I.), Introduction to the Herbartian Principles of Teaching, cr. 8vo, 4/6
King (H. C.), Personal and Ideal Elements in Education, cr. 8vo, 6/6 net.
Mason (C. M.), School Education, cr. 8vo, 3/6 net.

Philology.

Farmer (J. S.) and Henley (W. H.), A Dictionary of Slang and Colloquial English, 8vo, 7/6 net.

Science.

Barton (F. T.), Non-Sporting Dogs, cr. 8vo, 5/ net.
Beavan (A. H.), Birds I have Known, cr. 8vo, 5/
Dunkerly (S.), Mechanism, 8vo, 9/ net.
Fenwick (E. H.), A Handbook of Clinical Electric-Light Cystoscopy, 8vo, 18/ net.
Griffiths (H.), The Plenum or Propulsion System of Heating and Ventilation, 8vo, 4/6 net.
Heilprin (A.), The Tower of Pelée, folio, 15/ net.
Lamborn (L. L.), Cottonseed Products, roy. 8vo, 12/6 net.
Mining Year-Book, 1905, 8vo, 15/ net.
Richmond (I. L.), Flowers and Fruit for the Home, 5/ net.
Robinson (E. K.), The Country Day by Day, cr. 8vo, 6/
Rogers (A. W.), An Introduction to the Geology of Cape Colony, cr. 8vo, 9/ net.
Scouller (J.), Darwinian Fallacies, cr. 8vo, 3/6 net.
Stewart (R. W.), The Certificate General Elementary Science: Part I, Physiography, cr. 8vo, 3/6
Wilcox (R. W.), A Manual of Fever Nursing, cr. 8vo, 4/6 net.

General Literature.

Adkin (J. H. Knight-), The Woman Stealers, cr. 8vo, 3/6
Anecdotes of Soldiers in Peace and War, arranged by J. H. Settle, cr. 8vo, 3/6 net.
Bourget (P.), Divorce, trans. by E. L. Charlwood, cr. 8vo, 6/
Brown (K. H.), Diane, cr. 8vo, 6/
Campbell (A. G.), Fleur-de-Camp, cr. 8vo, 6/
Cotterell (C.), The Virgin and the Scales, cr. 8vo, 6/
Cross (Victoria), The Religion of Evelyn Hastings, cr. 8vo, 5/
Field (R.), Little Miss Dec, cr. 8vo, 3/6 net.
Griffiths (A.), Winifred's Way, cr. 8vo, 6/

Harcourt (F. C. Vernon-), Bolts and Bars, cr. 8vo, 3/6
Hawkins (L. W.), Bookkeeping, 8vo, 5/ net.
Henderson (C. R.), Modern Methods of Charity, 8vo, 15/ net.
Henry (A.), The House in the Woods, cr. 8vo, 4/ net.
Hes (S. M.), The School of Life, cr. 8vo, 6/
Lovet (A. F.), Mouncey and Others, cr. 8vo, 2/6 net.
Muddock (J. E. Preston-), From the Clutch of the Sea, 6/
Phillipotts (E.), The Secret Woman, cr. 8vo, 6/
Smeaton (A.), Gordon Ogilvy, 8vo, 6/
Taylor (M. I.), The Rebellion of the Princess, cr. 8vo, 6/
Thom's Official Directory of the United Kingdom, 1905, 21/
Thurston (E. T.), The Apple of Eden, cr. 8vo, 6/
Tolstoy (Count), Childhood, Boyhood, Youth, The Incursion; A Landed Proprietor, The Cossacks, Sevastopol, translated and edited by L. Wiener, cr. 8vo, each 3/6 net.
Watson (E. K. R.), Shadow and Substance, cr. 8vo, 3/6 net.
Whishaw (F.), The Informer, cr. 8vo, 6/
Winter (John Strange), Love and Twenty, cr. 8vo, 6/
Young (F. E.), The War of the Sexes, cr. 8vo, 6/
Ystridde (G.), Three Dukes, cr. 8vo, 6/

FOREIGN.

Fine Art and Archaeology.

Bayet (C.), Précis d'Histoire de l'Art, 3fr. 50.
Bissing (F. W. v.), Ein thebanischer Grabfund aus dem Anfang des neuen Reichs, Parts 3 and 4, 20m.

Philosophy.

Bazailles (A.), La Vie Personnelle, 5fr.
Cosentini (F.), La Sociologie Génétique, 3fr. 75.
Fabre (J.), La Pensée Chrétienne, 9fr.

History and Biography.

Bourelly (Général), Souvenirs de la Campagne de 1859 en Italie, 3fr. 50.
Fontanges (H.), La Légion d'Honneur et les Femmes Décorées, 3fr. 50.
Hauser (F.), L'Affaire Syveton, 3fr. 50.
Lardanchet (H.), Les Enfants Perdus du Romantisme, 3fr. 50.
Rouge (I.), Frédéric Schlegel et la Genèse du Romantisme Allemand (1791-7), 7fr. 50.
Velschinger (H.), Le Pape et l'Empereur, 1804-15, 8fr.

Geography and Travel.

Ganniers (A. de), Le Maroc d'aujourd'hui, d'hier et de demain, 2fr. 50.

Science.

Champlly (R.), Les Bateaux Automobiles à Pétrole, 4fr. 50.

General Literature.

Clémengrand (M.), Vers le Bonheur, 3fr. 50.
Deuzèle (J.), Le Recueillement, 3fr. 50.
Morgan (J.), Les Amants du Passé, 3fr. 50.
Reboux (P.), La Maison de Danses, 3fr. 50.
Troy (J.), Soldats de la Fin, 3fr. 50.
Veretschaguine (Col.), Une Vie d'Officier Russe, 3fr. 50.

W. FRASER RAE.

WE regret to hear of the death on Sunday last, at Bath, of Mr. Fraser Rae. He had been in bad health for some years, and succumbed to an attack of pneumonia after a short illness. Mr. Rae was, as the varied list of books to his name suggests, a man of unusually wide culture. Educated at Heidelberg, he was an excellent German scholar, and retained till his death a keen interest in classical study. He founded his own style of writing on Macaulay, though his work was heavier in effect, and undoubtedly a good deal more painstaking. He was also a great admirer of Taine, whose 'Notes on England' he translated admirably. On Canada and the United States he wrote much, having travelled a good deal on the American continent. His books on 'Columbia and Canada' (1877), 'Notes on the Great Republic and the New Dominion' (same year), 'Newfoundland to Manitoba' (1881), and 'Facts about Manitoba' (1882) may be mentioned. He had much experience of 'Austrian Health Resorts' (1888) and similar institutions, whither he went to relieve his chronic throat troubles. His novels, of which 'Miss Bayle's Romance' (1887) is the best, are forgotten. The 'Business of Travel,' a book in which he displayed the rise of Cook, was an excellent exposition of the modern facilities which have changed the intercourse of nations.

But the identification of "Junius," on which he wrote much in these columns, was probably the subject in which he was most interested. The period was his favourite study. He wrote on 'Wilkes, Sheridan, Fox,' in 1873; and produced an elaborate biography of 'Sheridan,' in two volumes (1896), which has never received the credit it deserves. It was introduced by the late Lord Dufferin, and included numerous and important discoveries in the family papers. It was a complete and successful vindication of Sheridan, written with special knowledge of the politics of the time, and discrediting finally much that had passed for history in 'The Croker Papers,' Moore, and other sources. Mr. Rae's zeal and research did a further service in the issue of 'Sheridan's Plays, now Printed as he Wrote Them' (1902). Mr. Rae had a number of important unprinted letters concerning Sheridan's wife and her sister, Mrs. Tickell, in his hands, but his health did not allow him to make use of them. His latest signed communications to us concerned the subject of Junius. He was, he hoped and believed, in sight of the solution of the mystery, having discovered some very rare poems, apparently due to the author of the 'Letters.' At any rate, his investigations went far deeper than those of any predecessor, and he held justly that he had put the attribution to Francis out of court. He had satisfied, for instance, the late Lord Coleridge that this was so. Both for The Times and this paper Mr. Rae did numerous reviews, and his knowledge of the literary figures of the last half-century was remarkable, supported as it was by an excellent memory. Latterly he lived in Bath, but always came to London to take his place as chairman of the Library Committee of the Reform Club. There and elsewhere he was much liked. Cordial, considerate, vivid, he was at his best a delightful companion. The range of his endowments may be indicated by the fact that he was equally keen about copyright law and a new cycle tyre which he had invented. Such width of interest and well-grounded knowledge does not seem to be produced by latter day education. We have the more reason to regret a genial and accomplished specimen of the culture of earlier days, which was, perhaps, less brilliant in its exhibition, but more sound than that of the twentieth century.

THE BRITISH MUSEUM READING-ROOM

I WAS sorry to learn from Mr. Thomas's letter of January 7th that the well-signed effort to induce the Trustees of the British Museum to keep the Reading-Room open till a later hour has proved unsuccessful. The readers, I fancy, may be divided into three classes: (1) the careless or leisured class, who use the library fitfully and to whom particular hours are a matter of comparative indifference; (2) those who consult it from time to time for particular details or special points of reference; and (3) the genuine literary workers, whose labours, whether at first or second hand, are a gain to general knowledge and the world of letters. As one of the oldest readers, I fancy I have some power of discrimination, and on the comparatively rare occasions when I have stayed late, I feel quite confident that the third class largely predominated. It may be difficult to decide such a point, but if the Trustees would condescend to inquire of some of the older Reading-Room attendants, their opinion would be of great weight. Mere numbers ought not to be allowed to decide such a question.

It is, however, much to be hoped that there will be no deferring of the hour of opening. Various genuine workers, who from time to time put in eight hours' steady work at the Museum, are to be found in their places within a few minutes of the hour of nine.

A few weeks ago a question was asked in your columns, and left, I believe, unanswered, whether it was true that a special sum of money had been assigned or bequeathed for the improvement of the Reading-Room. Your correspondent made one excellent suggestion, namely, that clips should, if possible, be devised for holding open books of reference on the desks. Another suggestion then made is, I think, much to be deprecated, namely, an increase in the number of steps for the higher shelves. Quite half the readers are tall enough not to require such aids, and, as it is, careless and selfish readers will persist in using these steps as seats, and thus blocking up the gangway and hindering the use of the shelves by others.

This is often done in front of the 'Chronicles and Memorials' and the Calendars of the Public Record Office. The attendants ought to be instructed to put a stop to such a use of the steps, which has of late increased.

A more costly improvement would, I think, be generally welcomed, and prove of great service to the readers. At all events, it is worthy of consideration. Why could not the lower gallery of the dome be thrown open to readers to help themselves to the volumes? The difficulties are obvious, but are all capable of being met. The gallery could be gained by light iron stairways with double approaches—say four in all—involving merely the sacrifice of a few of the table seats. The gallery gangway could readily be widened. To increase or nearly double the available reference-books would be an enormous boon.

A READER OF OVER FORTY YEARS' STANDING.

THE TRUSTWORTHINESS OF THE 'ST. ALBANS CHRONICON ANGLIÆ, 1328-88.'

THE trustworthiness of the vivid account of the last months of the reign of Edward III. in the 'St. Albans Chronicon Angliæ, 1328-88' (edited by Sir E. Maunde Thompson in the Rolls Series), has been minimized by Mr. S. Armitage-Smith in his recent valuable book on 'John of Gaunt.' Its prejudices are, of course, obvious at first sight, but Mr. Smith gives few reasons for discrediting it generally as a record of facts. Attention may therefore be called to the writer's precision in stating one not very important detail. He tells us on p. 112 that John of Gaunt, in packing the Parliament of January, 1377, which undid the work of the Good Parliament, managed to prevent more than ten knights of the shire who had sat in 1376 from being retained in 1377 ("ita quod non fuerunt ex illis in hoc parlamento preter duodecim, quos dux amovere non potuit"). A reference to the unfortunately not very complete record of members in the 'Return of Members of Parliament' (part i. pp. 193-7), published by the House of Commons, shows that the St. Albans writer has understated, not overstated, his case. There were thirty-seven shires represented by two knights apiece in each Parliament, and only eight members of the Good Parliament are recorded to have sat in the Parliament of the following year. Nor is this quite all, for one of the members who sat in both assemblies came from Lancashire, and two from Leicestershire, where John's territorial influence was so strong that he could probably have always packed elections at his will. Similarly from the forty boroughs for whose representation in the two Parliaments materials for comparison are available, only eight of the men of 1376 were also returned in 1377.

T. F. TOUT.

WORDSWORTHIANA.

New College, Oxford, January 12th, 1905.

MAY I trouble you with a minute discovery in Wordsworthian criticism?

In 'An Evening Walk,' l. 175 (orig. ed., l. 158), Wordsworth wrote, as a quotation, the phrase "a prospect all on fire." In Prof. Knight's edition of Wordsworth this is one of the quotations which he and those who helped him were unable to trace. Having been for some years preparing an edition of Wordsworth's poems, I have been trying, off and on, to trace this and other untraced quotations. I have looked through many forgotten poems of the period succeeding Thomson's 'Seasons' as well as, of course, that obviously likely source. I ran the phrase to earth to-day at the British Museum, and should have done so long ago if the 'Critical Essays' of Scott of Amwell had been in the Bodleian. The phrase comes from a long-forgotten poem, called 'Sunday Thoughts,' by Moses Browne, and is quoted with praise by Scott on pp. 349 and 351 of the 'Critical Essays.'

The curious part of the story—though, as I said, the point is a minute one—will be obvious to any one who looks up the paragraph in the 'Evening Walk.' A few lines after the phrase "a prospect all on fire" Wordsworth imitates a passage of Thomson, and acknowledges the debt in the following note (in ed. 1793): "From Thomson. See Scott's 'Critical Essays.'" On this Prof. Knight remarks: "It is difficult to know to what Wordsworth here alludes." Apparently, he thought—though, considering the date of Wordsworth's note, I hesitate to make the supposition—that Wordsworth was alluding to some critical work of Walter Scott. Otherwise his note is hard to understand, as nothing was easier than to know that Wordsworth was alluding to the 'Critical Essays' of the Quaker poet, John Scott of Amwell. In that work, on pp. 346-8, the passage of Thomson is fully discussed, in the very dry light of reason, and with hardly any perception of poetry. If I had guessed that this work contained the key to an allusion which really was hard to explain, I should not have left it unexamined for several years, even at the pains of a visit to the British Museum.

May I take this opportunity of once more asking if any of your readers can identify any of the following quotations made by Wordsworth from sources hitherto untraced?—

Who never tasted grace, and goodness ne'er had felt.

Poorly provided, poorly followed.

Cruel of heart were they, bloody of hand.

— the murderer's chain partake,

Corded and burning at the social stake.

The dreadful appetite of death.

NOWELL SMITH.

POPE'S 'ESSAY ON MAN.'

IT is often stated that Pope's 'Essay on Man' was first published in 1732-4, in four folio epistles, without any date on the title-pages. In reality the first epistle appeared in February, 1733, the error being due to that date having been sometimes given in Old Style (1732). But this is not all; the Epistles were published in octavo and quarto, as well as in folio, and probably the issue in the various forms was almost simultaneous. In this paper I propose to discuss chiefly the forms of the first Epistle.

It is well known that the first issue of the first epistle was entitled 'An Essay on Man. Address'd to a Friend. Part I.' and the later issue, 'An Essay on Man. In Epistles to a Friend. Epistle I. Corrected by the Author.' But copies of the 'Part I.' issue vary considerably among themselves. In some the collation is as follows: Title, 1 leaf; 'To the Reader,' 1 leaf; the poem, B-E in twos. The text ends on p. 19, and there appear to be only 281 lines, but this is due to an error in numbering. There are no headlines, but the number of the page is in the middle instead of the corner. Some uncut copies measure 14½ by 9½ inches (like the later epistles); but others were printed on smaller paper, measuring when uncut 12½ by 7¾ inches.

There is another entirely separate issue with the same title-page ('Address'd to a Friend. Part I.'). In the copy before me the collation is as follows: Title, 1 leaf; 'To the Reader,' 1 leaf; the poem, B, 1 leaf; B-D in twos. There are 286 lines, and the poem ends on p. 20. The headline is "Epistles," on the first leaf in roman, and on the others in italic type. P. 6 (verso of the first sig. B 1) is followed by p. 9 (recto of the second B 1), and the figures on p. 6 are larger than those on subsequent pages.

These two issues of 'Part I.' are identical in the text, and it is not clear which came first. The quarto and octavo editions also have the same text. The British Museum has the "Second Edition" of Part I. in quarto (n.d.); the collation is: Title, 1 leaf; 'To the Reader,' 1 leaf; the poem [A 4]-C 3 in fours; headlines, "Epistles"; 286 lines. The octavo edition is dated 1733; the collation is A-B in fours; no headlines; 281 lines (really 286). The later Epistles in octavo (1733-4) had a pagination and registration in continuation of those of Part I. (D-H 2, A, I-K in fours); there was no sig. C (pp. 17 20).

A copy of the folio 'Part I.' with corrections for the second issue in Pope's handwriting, was sold at Messrs. Sotheby's in 1902. There was a "Second Edition" of the 'Epistle I. Corrected by the Author' (the second issue); and when Epistles II. and III. had been published, the whole were issued together, with a table of contents (three pages), and the short address 'To the Reader,' from Epistle II., was used in Epistle I.

To sum up. The following appear to be the early editions of the first Epistle:—

1. Part I. n.d. (1733), folio. Headlines, "Epistles."
2. Part I. n.d. (1733), folio. No headlines. Printed in two sizes, large and small folio.
3. Part I. n.d. (1733), quarto.
4. Part I. n.d. (1733), quarto. "Second Edition."
5. Part I. 1733, octavo.
6. Epistle I. n.d. (1733), folio.
7. Epistle I. n.d. (1733), folio. "Second Edition."
8. Epistle I. n.d. (1733), folio, with Epistles II. and III. General table of contents.

G. A. AITKEN.

'PALIO AND PONTE.'

IN reply to Mr. Heywood's objection I may say that I am not particular as to rack, by which, however, Florio is content to render collare. "Strappado" will do as well. The practical difference, depending chiefly on the position of the patient, does not seem worth talking about. My point was merely that if either was in use as a punishment for breach of the rules of a game—a sort of "penalty kick," in fact—its application to criminals need not be regarded as evidence of excessive brutality towards them.

As to feudalism, does Mr. Heywood clearly understand what the feudal system was? His phrase "in some of its most revolting forms" suggests rather the journalistic than the historical conception of it. My objection was to the exaggeration involved in saying that Italy—the part of the Empire where, owing partly to the greater power of the Church, partly to the never wholly extinguished Roman municipal institutions, feudalism took least root—was "soaked and permeated" by it. The words he quotes from Prof. Villari refer to the Empire generally. If he will look on to pp. 28-31 he will see something of what I mean; and if he will read his Hallam he will know more.

I prefer giving my author the benefit of the doubt to making him talk nonsense.

Since the above was written I have seen a letter addressed to The Athenæum by Dr. Prof. Guardabassi, President of the Liceo-Ginnasio and the Academy of Fine Arts of Perugia, taking up the cudgels in Mr. Heywood's defence on the feudal question. What has been said above will equally serve for a reply to him on that point. He further charges the criticism with being "not objective and serene, but animated with hostile preconceptions" towards the book. As to the objectivity and serenity, I can affirm nothing either way; but I can assure him that my preconceptions, based on a former work of Mr. Heywood's, were of the most amiable character. If I had not thought 'Palio and Ponte' likewise a very interesting book, I should not have taken the trouble to point out what seemed to me to be corrigenda in it.

YOUR REVIEWER.

MR. H. F. COX.

WE notice with regret the death of Mr. Henry Fisher Cox, which occurred on January 19th, at the comparatively early age of fifty-six. Mr. Cox, who became a member of the Stock Exchange in 1879, and was until the last few months a partner in the firm of Hunt, Cox & Co., of Threadneedle Street, was somewhat prominent in the literary world of the seventies, and would probably have made no small mark had not the claims of business chiefly absorbed his attention. Soon after graduating at Trinity College, Cambridge, he began to use his pen, and took much interest in the lives, writings, and surroundings of such men as Lamb, Blake, Hazlitt, and Crabbe, penning attractive little essays and articles on such subjects. About 1872 he became sub-editor of The Examiner, and afterwards for a brief period editor and proprietor. This was at a time when that old literary and political journal, founded by the Hunts in 1808, was making a spirited push for renewed youth, dropping its price from sixpence to threepence, and securing J. S. Mill as one of its writers. Mr. Cox's chief work on the paper consisted of reviewing and literary articles, but he occasionally wrote on political and social subjects. A series of articles on the then pressing question of the agricultural labourer, written jointly by Mr. Cox and his brother (Rev. Dr. Cox), were reprinted in substantial pamphlet form in 1874, under the title 'The Rise of the Farm Labourer,' and had a large circulation. His sympathies were warmly with the movement initiated by Mr. Joseph Arch, and for some time he threw his energies into the conducting of The English Labourer's Chronicle, at the time when it was published in Fleet Street, in conjunction with Mr. Howard Evans. He also showed some ability in writing for magazines, particularly in certain charming sketches of West-Country peasant life, which appeared in The Dark Blue. Much more recently he was an occasional contributor to The Outlook. In the latter part of his life, when he became a permanent resident at the house he had built at Hook Hill, Mr. Cox was elected a member of the Urban District Council, which he served with much faithfulness. Amid his many amiable qualities his affection for English literature and his desire to spread the love of books always stood out pre-eminently. There was, therefore, however sad, a certain fitness of things in the fact that his last public appearance was when pleading eloquently and powerfully for the acceptance of Mr. Carnegie's generous offer of a free library for Woking, which the Council was Philistine enough to reject by a small majority. Mr. Cox's speech was interrupted by a seizure which proved to be the precursor of the end.

Literary Gossip.

MESSRS. LONGMAN have in the press, and will publish very shortly, 'South Africa: a Glance at Current Conditions and Politics,' by Mr. J. H. Balfour Browne, K.C. It contains descriptions of the voyage from England to Cape Town, and notes of the journey from Cape Town to Johannesburg and Pretoria. It deals, too, in a guarded way, with some aspects of Johannesburg society, and touches such matters as Chinese labour, the future form of government, and land settlement.

THE same firm will also publish shortly 'Adventures among Books,' by Mr. Andrew Lang. The criticisms are not "scientific," but records of personal impressions. The volume includes reminiscences of R. L. Stevenson, Oliver Wendell Holmes, Dr. John Brown, and others.

AN authorized biography of Ainger, embodying a selection of his correspondence, has been in active preparation for some months past. Friends of his who may be willing to lend letters are invited to send any suitable for the purpose to the publishers, Messrs. A. Constable & Co., 16, James Street, Haymarket, by whom they will be copied and returned with all possible care and dispatch.

SUBSCRIBERS to the work on 'The Printed English Bible, 1525-1769,' which the late Mr. Lovett had in hand, have been informed that it will not now be proceeded with. It seems a pity that no expert can be found to continue the work of the late secretary of the Religious Tract Society.

THE great book sale of the season—great, that is, so far as regards quantity—will be the extensive library of the late John Scott, C.B., of Halkhill, Largs, Ayrshire, which will occupy Messrs. Sotheby, Wilkinson & Hodge for eleven days, from March 27th. The number of lots (3,523) does not give an adequate idea of the extent of the library, since one lot alone comprises a set of the Maitland Club publications, in seventy-one volumes, and another, the Abbotsford publications, consists of thirty-three volumes. Mr. Scott appears to have purchased everything relating to Mary, Queen of Scots, which came in his way, and this section alone of his accumulations will occupy nearly two days in the dispersal. The books relating to shipping, navigating, and naval affairs, in which Mr. Scott was naturally interested as a shipbuilder, will, if not sold together in one lot (the reserve price is 1,000*l.*), occupy the last two days in this remarkable sale.

THE library of Judge John H. V. Arnold, of the United States, contains a very interesting letter of Dr. Johnson addressed to his old acquaintance the Rev. Dr. John Taylor. It is dated from London, Sept. 20th, 1783, and deals partly with Johnson's visit to William Bowles at Heale, partly with his "dreadful disease, which nothing but Mr. Pott's knife can remove."

ON February 14th a new paper for boys, and especially for those of our elementary schools, will be published by the Religious Tract Society, with a view of counteracting the effects of the "penny dreadful." It will be conducted by Mr. G. A. Hutchison (who projected and has edited from the first The Boy's Own Paper), will cost a penny, and will be called Every Boy's Monthly.

WE regret to notice the death of Mr. Arnold Glover on Friday week last, aged thirty-nine. He was carried off by pneumonia after a few days' illness. Mr. Glover was a keen and erudite student of English literature, especially in the eighteenth century. He edited Boswell's 'Johnson' and 'Tour in the Hebrides,' supplying notes some way above the ordinary annotator, and in conjunction with Mr. A. R. Waller he did excellent work on Hazlitt's complete writings. He was engaged on an edition of Beaumont and Fletcher for the Cambridge University Press, the first volume of which is expected shortly. Mr. Glover was well known at the Savile Club as a charming companion, and will be deeply regretted by many friends. He had begun to make a name with the honourable minority whose verdict is worth having, but he was free from the airs which sometimes spoil the man of letters, while his sympathies were wide and readily bestowed.

WE notice with pleasure in The Cambridge University Reporter an announcement that Mr. A. C. Benson is lecturing this term in Magdalene Hall on 'Modern English Poetry.'

THE Oriental section of the library of the late Arthur Strong, Professor of Arabic and Lecturer in University College, London, and Librarian to the House of Lords, has been presented by Mrs. Strong to the College and accepted by the Council. The books will be known as the "Arthur Strong Oriental Library," and will be added to the similar books already available.

THE death of James Mason, the well-known chess-player, at the age of fifty-six, deserves notice, for he was an excellent writer on the game, with a clear and lively style. His 'Art of Chess,' 'Chess Openings,' and 'Principles of Chess in Theory and Practice' may be mentioned, while his 'Social Chess' is an admirable collection of short and brilliant games. In his own play he was not consistent, but he had a way of beating the most famous masters.

THE Annual Meeting of the Booksellers' Provident Institution will be held at Stationers' Hall on Thursday evening, March 9th. The meeting will be followed by a conversazione, at which Lord Avebury has promised to deliver an address.

DR. E. MACKEY writes:—

"Your reviewer's extract last week from Miss Repplier's 'Compromises,' that 'Nothing less than shipwreck on a desert island in company with Froissart's "Chronicles" could give us leisure to peruse this glorious narrative,' has a curious parallel in 'Old Mortality,' chap. xxxv., where Claverhouse says to Morton, 'Did you ever read Froissart?' 'No.' 'I have half a mind,' said C., 'to contrive you should have six months' imprisonment in order to procure you that pleasure.'"

We insert the parallel, though we deprecate any idea that Miss Repplier's observation is not her own. The idea is one which would naturally occur—in fact, has been used within our knowledge by two other modern writers.

PREPARATIONS are being made in Rome to commemorate the centenary of Schiller's death on the 10th of May. Among the arrangements at present announced are lectures on the poet by Ugo Falena and Edoardo Boulet, and the theatrical paper Tirso is planning a great celebration, the details of which have not yet been published.

THE Government of India has granted an honorarium of 2,000 rupees to Sarat Chandra Das, Rai Bahadur, for completing a Tibetan work which gives the history of Tibet from early times to the year 1726, when the Imperial Chinese Residency at Lhasa was first established under the Emperor Kanghi's order. Such is the statement in the official notice, but it is evidently incorrect in one particular, as the Emperor Kanghi died in 1722.

MR. FREDERIC ENOCH, who died recently at Ringmer, Sussex, was in early days connected with Galignani's Messenger at Paris; later he was co-editor with Thackeray of The Cornhill Magazine. He was acquainted with Carlyle, Dickens, and other famous literary men. He was also known in the musical world. His cantata 'Una' was set to music by A. R. Gaul, and produced at the Norwich Festival of 1893. His ballad 'My Sweetheart when a Boy' was set to music by the late John Wilford Morgan; and Balfe, Hatton, Pinsuti, J. Barnett, and other composers wrote music to poems of his. One of the best of them, entitled 'The Passing: a Masque of Autumn Time,' appeared in our columns so long ago as 1848.

MR. F. HAVERFIELD writes:—

"I must confess to doubting whether Mr. Anscombe's equation of Calleva and Galabes, in his note on Silchester last week, is right. The two names are, after all, not much alike, and Galabes is not quite the form (if I understand aright) which Calleva might be expected to assume. Moreover, Galabes is described by Geoffrey as a fountain and a valley, and this description is unsuited to Silchester. Even, however, if Galabes were Silchester, my contention would still hold true that the Romano-British name of Silchester had been forgotten in the twelfth century. For it is quite plain that Geoffrey had not the least idea where Galabes was, or the least suspicion that it had anything to do with the site known to him as Silchester."

MOULVIE SYED SUDERUDDIN AHMAD-UL-MUSAVY, Zemindar of Bohar, in the district of Burdwan, has presented to the Imperial Library, Calcutta, a collection of about 4,000 books and manuscripts, including a Koran in the autograph of the Emperor Aurangzeb.

AMONG recent Parliamentary Papers we note the Report of the Commissioners of National Education in Ireland (for 1903, though dated "1905"), price 4½d.

SCIENCE

The Cambridge Natural History. Vol. VII. (Macmillan & Co.)

THIS instalment of the well-known 'Cambridge Natural History' contains chapters on the Hemichordata and on the Ascidians and Amphioxus, contributed respectively by Mr. S. F. Harmer and Mr. W. A. Herdman, together with a luminous account of 'Fishes and their Classification,' by Mr. T. W. Bridge and Mr. G. A. Boulenger. A glance at the book shows how much the tide of knowledge about these creatures has increased in the last fifty years. Those days may be illustrated by a story which was current at the sister university when it first took up in serious earnest the study of natural science. To test three men who presented themselves for examination the examiners sent for a basket of bones from the Ashmolean. These were laid before the men, and they were asked to identify them. The unfortunate candidates were dumb, upon which the examiners looked at the bones, nodded and winked to each other, and finally announced to the candidates that they too were profoundly ignorant of their nature and classification. Such a story could not for a moment hold its ground at present in either university. Cambridge is specially to be congratulated on the progress made in the life-history of the animals described in this volume. It is a good example of diligent work. Should any fact in their recent study appear herein to be omitted, it may be remarked that Mr. Boulenger's account of the Teleostei was completed in 1902, while Prof. Herdman's account of the Ascidians was ready for publication two years earlier. For the rest, the book is beautifully produced, with numerous and well-drawn illustrations. The treatment of the important Amphioxus, both anatomically and in regard to its life-history, is most thorough, and shows the advance in biological study since the creature was described by Yarrell in 1836. Very satisfactory, too, are the accounts of the embryonic development of the Tunicata and the life-history of the Cephalochordata. Not merely the neophyte, but also the diligent student, will rejoice in the dissections and minute particulars here given of so many species.

But we must hasten on to the fishes; and here, too, the life-history of the creatures is brought up to the level of to-day's knowledge and most carefully considered. An extract may serve to indicate the spirit in which the ichthyological chapters are written:—

"It is by no means improbable that examples of 'warning' coloration occur amongst fishes. The brilliant colours of some of the trigger-fishes (Balistes, Monacanthus), coffer-fishes (Ostracion), and globe-fishes (Tetrodon) are perhaps of this nature. They are often associated with the presence of strong spines, defensive and often erectile, either in connexion with the dorsal fin or on the general surface of the body, and may therefore serve the purpose of a danger signal to such predatory foes of these fishes as might otherwise be tempted to attack them—to the mutual advantage of the fishes themselves and their would-be enemies. The British weever-fish (Trachinus) may perhaps offer another example of warning coloration."

The air-bladder is carefully examined. It has often been asked what is the object of this organ.

"Probably no single organ in any group of Vertebrata is associated with the performance of a greater variety of functions than the air-bladder of fishes. Originally evolved, it may be, as a glandular cæcum in certain sharks, the air-bladder in the Dipnoi, and some of the more generalized Teleostomi (e.g., Amia and Lepidosteus), and perhaps also in a few of the more specialized members of the latter group (e.g., certain Teleosts), is to a greater or less extent an accessory respiratory organ. In not a few Teleosts it is an organ for sound-production, and in others again it is sometimes regarded as having an important relation to the sense of hearing. But omitting such subordinate functions, which, as it were, have been grafted on to the air-bladder, there can be no doubt that in the great majority of fishes its primary use is to act as a hydrostatic organ or 'float.'"

Much labour, again, has been bestowed upon the Cephalaspides, which are largely developed in the Old Red Sandstone of South Herefordshire, although none of them is ever found unbroken. That singular fish the Polypterus, famous for its torpidity, is also described and figured.

The Elasmobranchii are not forgotten: their ancient forms have developed into our dog-fishes, sharks, and rays. In this connexion may be mentioned that curious creature the hammer-headed shark. It is not infrequent around our shores, and we have ourselves found one thrown up by a storm at the Mumbles. The anatomy, distribution, and habits of many singular fishes are here displayed, such as the climbing perch, and the vampire fish of the West Indian Islands. In short, all who take a serious interest in the advance of ichthyology will find this a fascinating book. As for the mere angler, who finds his occupation gone during winter, a careful study of it will open his eyes to marvels of which he has probably never dreamt.

ANTHROPOLOGICAL NOTES.

MRS. ZELIA NUTTALL has published in The American Anthropologist a paper in answer to Prof. Edward Seler's memoir on the rectifications of the year and the length of the Venus year in the Zeitschrift für Ethnologie. She traces the periodical adjustment of the ancient Mexican calendar, and shows how the solar years of 360 + 5 days, the lunar years of 260 + 5 days, and the Venus years of 584 days were adjusted to the astronomical facts and brought into harmony with each other by the intercalation of days. She supports her views by extracts from a treatise attributed to Friar Motolinia on the observation of the planet Venus by the ancient Mexicans, which has just been published in the city of Mexico by Dr. Leon, and in Paris by M. Pimentel, and from the work written in 1656 by Dr. Serna, and published in 1899 in the Annals of the National Museum of Mexico.

M. Manouvrier delivered before the Congress of Arts and Sciences at the St. Louis Exhibition, on September 23rd last, an excellent address on 'The Individuality of Anthropology,' which has been published in the Revue of the School of Anthropology of Paris for December. He referred to the difficult times through which anthropology had passed in several countries: the early stage in which each branch of the subject was pursued independently, the neglect of it by the universities, and the good work which has been done by the twenty or more anthropological societies that have come into existence, and by the School of Anthropology. He advocated the individualization of the science, which he defines as the special study of human beings, consisting in the differentiation of the several sorts of phenomena which those beings present from the fourfold point of view of anatomy, physiology, psychology, and sociology. Without knowing and understanding these differences there may be museums and professorships, but no real anthropology. The theoretical realization by anthropologists of the close relation between the somatological, mental, and sociological points of view of the human beings they study is the first thing to be sought for. Those characters of man are bound together in the nature of things, and should also be bound together in scientific study.

The Report of the Anthropometric Committee of the British Association has been issued in advance of the publication of the Association's annual volume. It is of some importance, as it gives details of a scheme for the establishment of an anthropometric bureau, and for the carrying out of a continuous anthropometric survey by the State, which was adopted in principle by the Committee appointed by the Government to inquire into the question of the alleged physical deterioration of the people, and has, therefore, so far advanced in the direction of practical realization. The scheme has received active support from the Anthropological Institute, the Childhood Society, the Sociological Society, and other bodies interested in the question, and they will present memorials to the Government in its favour. Mr. J. Gray has carefully worked out the statistical details.

SOCIETIES.

ASTRONOMICAL.—Jan. 13.—Prof. H. H. Turner in the chair.—Mr. Cowell read a note by Prof. Newcomb on the eclipse of Agathocles and the secular acceleration; and also a paper of his own on the longitude of the moon's perigee.—The Rev. A. L. Cortie read a paper on magnetic storms and associated sun-spots, in which he disputed some of the conclusions given by Mr. Maunder in his paper read at the November meeting.—Prof. Turner read a paper by Prof. Schuster on the same subject. The paper discussed at some length the statistical portion of Mr. Maunder's paper. The author was unable to agree with Mr. Maunder's explanation of the cause of terrestrial magnetic storms, which appeared to be produced within the earth's atmosphere, the earth's diurnal rotation being the real source of the energy. The energy thus drawn from the earth would tend to diminish its velocity of rotation, but in a million years this diminution would not amount to more than a second a year. Without forming any very definite theory, Prof. Schuster suggested that there is some solar effect propagated in straight lines, which may increase the electric conductivity of the atmosphere, and thus set a magnetic storm in action without supplying its energy. Prof. Schuster concluded that Mr. Maunder had made an important contribution to the subject, and shown the necessity of further investigation, but that the facts have become more difficult to understand and explain.—After a discussion, followed by a reply from Mr. Maunder, the meeting adjourned, many other papers being taken as read.

SOCIETY OF ANTIQUARIES.—Jan. 19.—Sir E. M. Thompson, V.P., in the chair.—Mr. Arthur J. Evans communicated a paper on 'The Tombs of Minoan Crete,' of which the following is an abstract. Mr. Evans's last season's work at Knossos had been largely devoted to the search for tombs in relation with the Minoan palace and city. On a hill about a mile north of the Palace a considerable cemetery was discovered. One hundred tombs were here opened, the contents of which showed that the bulk of them belonged to the period immediately succeeding the fall of the Palace. The civilization was, however, still high, and the character of the art displayed by the relics found showed the unbroken tradition of the Later Palace Style. Among the objects brought to light were a number of bronze vessels, implements, and arms, including swords, some of them nearly a metre in length. One of the shorter swords has a gold-plated handle engraved with a masterly design of lions hunting wild goats. The jewellery and gems discovered were of the typical "mature Mycenaean" class, and a scarab found in one of the graves is of a Late Eighteenth-Dynasty type. Among the painted ware "stirrup vases" were specially abundant, some with magnificent decorative designs. The tombs were of three main classes: (a) Chamber tombs cut in the soft rock and approached in each case by a dromos; in many cases these contained clay coffins, in which the dead had been deposited in cists, their knees drawn towards the chin. (b) Shaft graves, each with a lesser cavity below, containing the extended skeleton, and with a roofing of stone slabs. (c) Pits giving access to a walled cavity in the side below; these also contained extended skeletons. Unfortunately, owing to the character of the soil, the bones were much decayed, and only in a few cases was it possible to secure specimens for examination. A certain number of skulls are to be sent to England. On a high level called Sopata, about two miles north again of this cemetery, and forming a continuation of the same range, a still more important sepulchral monument was discovered. This consisted of a square chamber, about eight by six metres in dimensions, constructed of limestone blocks, and with the side walls arching in "Cyclopean" fashion towards a high gable, though unfortunately the upper part had been quarried away. The back wall was provided with a central cell opposite the blocked entrance. This entrance, arched on the same horizontal principle, communicated with a lofty entrance hall of similar construction, in the side walls of which, facing each other, were two cells that had been used for sepulchral purposes. A second blocked archway led from this hall to the imposing rock-cut dromos. In the floor of the main chamber was a pit grave covered with slabs. Its contents had been rifled for metal objects in antiquity, but a gold hairpin, parts of two silver vases, and a large bronze mirror remained to attest its former wealth of such objects. A large number of other relics were found scattered about, including repeated clay impressions of what may have been a royal seal. Specially remarkable among the stone vessels is a porphyry bowl of Minoan workmanship, but recalling in material and execution that of the early Egyptian dynasties. Many imported Egyptian alabastra were also found, showing the survival of Middle Empire forms besides others of Early Eighteenth-Dynasty type. Beads of lapis lazuli were also found, and pendants of the same material, showing a close imitation of Egyptian models. Four large painted "amphoras" illustrate the fine "architectonic" style of the Later Palace of Knossos, in connexion with which the great sepulchral monument must itself be brought. The form of this mausoleum, with its square chamber, is unique, and contrasts with that of the tholos tombs of mainland Greece. The position in which it lies commands the whole South Aegean to Melos and Santorin, and Central Crete from Dicta to Ida. It was tempting to recognize in it the traditional tomb of Idomeneus; but though further researches in its immediate vicinity led to the discovery of a rock-cut chamber-tomb containing contemporary relics, it was hardly considerable enough to be taken for that of Meriones, which tradition placed beside the other. The communication was illustrated by a series of lantern-slides.—Mr. Theodore Fyfe, architect to Mr. Evans's excavations, gave an account of the architecture of the royal tomb, accompanied by plans and sections.

BRITISH ARCHÆOLOGICAL ASSOCIATION.—Jan. 18.—Dr. W. de Gray Birch, Treasurer, in the chair.—A paper on 'Norman Art and Architecture in Sicily' was read by the Rev. H. Cart. Perhaps a more correct title for the paper would have been 'Art and Architecture in Sicily under the Normans,' as of purely Norman architecture, such as we are accustomed to see in England and Normandy, there is little, if any, to be found in Sicily. The principal Norman monuments, Mr. Cart said, are at and in the neighbourhood of Palermo, though throughout the island one comes unexpectedly upon faint traces of the Norman occupation in the most unlikely and unlooked-for places. Palermo rises gently from the harbour in a succession of terraces, studded with buildings, towers, and cupolas, intermixed with groves of orange and lemon trees, to the centre of a great amphitheatrical plain, whose wondrous fertility so impressed the Norman conquerors that they formed it into luxurious parks and gardens, and erected therein sumptuous palaces, summer pavilions, and ornamental fountains. One of these palaces, called the Zisa, is considered by some to resemble the Alhambra, but the author contended that it has a specially distinctive character of its own, which he calls Arabo-Norman. This palace and another called La Cuba (now a cavalry barrack) were constructed originally upon one and the same plan, and were large rectangular buildings flanked by square towers. The ground floor consisted of a large central hall, really a sort of vestibule to the apartments, and covered with a beehive-shaped vaulted ceiling, most elaborately decorated with geometrical patterns in stucco and mosaics, with somewhat crude colouring of sky-blue, coppery green, deep black, and gold. Through the midst of this hall or vestibule runs a stream of water, flowing in a marble channel from a very ornate fountain, having in the wall above it a well-preserved mosaic frieze, the subject of which may well be Norman, representing as it does, alternately, twin pairs of archers and peacocks, but the stiffness of the design seems to indicate a Byzantine source. One of the most interesting groups of royal sepulchres in the world is that of the tombs of the kings in the cathedral at Palermo, which, notwithstanding the barbarous nature of the several restorations the edifice itself has undergone, happily remain undisturbed. The small but exquisite chapel of the royal palace, the Capella Palatina, is the gem, in the author's opinion, of all Palermo. It is a sanctuary more beautiful than the Venetian S. Marco, and more bejewelled with mosaics than the lovely little mausoleum of Galla Placidia at Ravenna. It was founded in 1132 by King Roger, and was consecrated in 1140. In the archives is preserved the deed of consecration, bearing date 1140; it is written in letters of gold on a thin plate of silver. The cathedral of Monreale is described as the most remarkable example of the mixture of styles which existed under the Norman kings. It is of Latin form, with a Roman colonnade. Byzantine mosaics, Greek sculpture, and Saracenic and Norman details. The mosaics at Monreale are in point of workmanship far superior to those of the royal chapel, but, being spread over a larger surface, there is not the same splendour and warmth of colouring. The church at Cefalù and the mosaics which are its glory were described. They are supposed to be in point of execution the finest in Sicily, but, in the author's opinion, after Palermo and Monreale are distinctly disappointing.—An interesting discussion followed, in which Mr. Hubbard (who has spent many months in Sicily studying the architectural characteristics), Mr. Patrick, Mr. Compton, and the Chairman participated.

ROYAL NUMISMATIC.—Jan. 19.—Sir John Evans, President, in the chair.—The Rev. W. G. Searle, Major R. J. Carthew, Mr. Evelyn Grant Duff, and Mr. Leopold G. B. Messenger were elected Fellows.—Dr. Arthur Evans exhibited a series of rare tetradrachms of Crete, amongst which was one with a representation of the Minotaur, struck at Knossos; others of Gortyna showing the plane tree and the willow tree; of Kydonia with the reverse type an archer and the engraver's name NEYANTOS EHOEI, and another of the type of Lysimachus of Thrace, but with the Kydonian magistrate's name AIOQN, unpublished; and of Phæstus with Heracles and cauldron, and on the reverse a bull and the legend ΘΕΥ.—Mr. Percy Webb exhibited a series of silver and bronze coins bearing portraits of Roman empresses from the first century to the fourth.—Mr. W. C. Boyd showed an unpublished "second brass" of Antoninus Pius, struck in the last year of his reign, A.D. 161, and having on the reverse a terminal figure.—Mr. F. Walters exhibited a groat (struck in London) of Henry VII., with the mint-mark a lis and a rose dimidiated, which he attributed to the first issue of that reign,—and Mr. C. Winter specimens in gold, silver, and bronze of the Louisburg medal, commemorating the taking of that place in 1758, and the expulsion of the French from Canada.—Mr. W. J. Hocking read a paper on 'Some Coins of William II. in the Royal Mint,' in which he showed that in one instance the moneyer's name had been altered after the dies had been engraved; and he also discussed the question of overstruck and double-struck coins, distinguishing the two series.—Mr. G. Macdonald communicated an account of a hoard of Edward pennies recently discovered at Lochmaben, Dumfriesshire. The hoard consisted of 422 English, 5 Irish, and 9 Scottish pennies, and also 12 foreign sterling. The English pennies were classified by Mr. Macdonald as of the reigns of Edward I. and II., and he also attributed to the former reign those with the king's name reading EDW. REX.—In a discussion which ensued, Dr. Evans, Mr. Lawrence, and Mr. Grueber held to the view already expressed by them that, on account of certain variations in the lettering, the last coins were to be assigned to an early issue of Edward III.

ZOOLOGICAL.—Jan. 17.—Mr. G. A. Boulenger V.P., in the chair.—The Secretary read a report on the additions to the menagerie during December, 1904, and called special attention to a young male greater koodoo (Strepsiceros kudu), presented by Major Irvine; to a hairy-eared bear (Ursus piscator), presented by Mr. F. Ringer; to two Victoria crowned pigeons (Goura victoria), obtained by purchase; and to a young specimen of Pousargue's guenon (Cercopithecus pousarguei), presented by Mr. L. Lester. The last-named animal was new to the collection. The total additions during the month were 125.—The Secretary exhibited an enlarged photograph (taken by Mr. H. Sandland and presented by him to the Society) of Jim, the Indian rhinoceros which had recently died in the gardens after an existence there of forty-one years.—Mr. F. E. Beddard read three papers based on observations he had made on specimens that had died in the Society's gardens: (1) 'Some Notes on the Cranial Osteology of the Mastigore (Uromastix)'; (2) 'A Contribution to the Anatomy of Chlamydosaurus and some other Agamids'; and (3) 'A Note on the Brain of Cynopithecus niger'.—In three communications by Mr. W. F. Lanchester was given an account of (1) a collection of Sipunculids made at Singapore and Malacca; (2) a collection of Gephyrean worms from Zanzibar; and (3) the Sipunculids and Echiurids collected during the Skeat Expedition to the Malay Peninsula. Four new species were described in the second paper, and nine in the last.—A communication was read from Mr. A. D. Imms, entitled 'On the Oral and Pharyngeal Denticles of Elasmobranchs'.—Dr. C. W. Andrews exhibited and made remarks upon the skull of a musk-ox from the river-gravels of the Severn Valley at Frampton-on-Severn, near Stonehouse, Gloucestershire. The specimen consisted of the cranial portion of the skull of an old bull, and was found by Mr. W. T. Rennie, of Chestow, who had presented it to the British Museum. Remains of this species were comparatively rare in Britain, and the nearest previously recorded locality to that described was Barnwood, near Gloucester.—Mr. H. E. Dresser exhibited and described three new birds obtained by Col. Waddell on the recent expedition to Lhassa, these being the ornithological first-fruits of that expedition, viz. Babax madagascariensis, nearest to, but differing widely from, B. lanceolatus; Garrulus tibetanus, a much darker and more uniformly coloured bird than G. sanio, with the terminal part of the tail white; and Lanius lama, a much darker bird than L. schach, with less white on the forehead, no rufous on the back or scapulars, and no trace of an alar speculum.

INSTITUTION OF CIVIL ENGINEERS.—Jan. 24.—Sir Guilford L. Molesworth, President, in the chair.—The papers read were 'Notes on the Working of the Shone System of Sewerage at Karachi,' by Mr. J. F. Brunton; and 'The Sewerage of Douglas, Isle of Man,' by Messrs. E. H. Stevenson and E. K. Burstal.

HISTORICAL.—Jan. 19.—Sir Frederick Pollock in the chair.—The following were elected Fellows: C. M. Agur, S. J. G. Hoare, and the Rev. W. T. Whitley.—A communication was made by Mr. H. E. Malden, Hon. Secretary, dealing with the position of the later "bondmen" in Surrey as contrasted with the status of the mediæval villeins.—A paper was read by Miss E. M. Leonard on 'The Inclosing Movement in England during the Seventeenth Century,' with the object of showing that the extent and characteristics of the movement during the period in question have been hitherto inadequately described. The paper was illustrated by references to Chancery suits and other records in which the progress of the movement must be chiefly traced.—A discussion followed, in which the Chairman, Mr. I. S. Leadam, and Miss Skeel took part.

BRITISH NUMISMATIC.—Jan. 18.—Mr. P. Carlyon-Britton, President, in the chair.—It was announced that the King of the Belgians, the Prince of Wales, and the Queen of Portugal had honoured the Society by becoming Royal Members.—The Countess of Yarborough, Baroness Fauconberg and Conyers, was elected, and the following were proposed as Honorary Members: Their Excellencies Count Albert Mensdorff (Austria-Hungary), M. de Bille (Denmark), M. Paul Cambon (France), Count Metternich (Germany), Commendatore Alberto Pansa (Italy), Viscount Hayashi (Japan), Baron Gericke (the Netherlands), Count Alexandre Benckendorff (Russia), and Baron C. Bildt (Sweden and Norway); and Mr. V. H. Rendall.—Three ordinary Members were elected, and nine further applications for ordinary membership were received.—The paper of the evening was 'The Carolian Siege Pieces, 1642-9,' by Dr. P. Nelson, who sketched the history of the Civil War both in England and Ireland, and illustrated his subject by about seventy magic-lantern slides, showing the position and appearance of the strongholds whence the siege pieces were issued, as well as illustrations of the principal coins referred to. He also gave particulars of all the known varieties of siege pieces of the period, so that the paper will form a complete and amply illustrated monograph.—Mr. Baldwin, Miss Helen Farquhar, Mr. Oswald Fitch, Dr. Nelson, Mr. Bernard Roth, Mrs. Tew, and Mr. S. M. Spink exhibited some most interesting and, in some instances, unique siege pieces in illustration of the paper.—Other exhibitions of general numismatic interest were contributed by Mr. Baldwin, Mr. Maish, Lieut.-Col. Morrieson, and Mr. Wells.—Presentations to the Society's library and collections were made by Mr. W. J. Andrew, Mr. W. J. Davis, Messrs. Spink & Son, and the President.

MEETINGS NEXT WEEK.

- MON. Royal Academy, 4.—Lecture by Prof. A. Gilbert.
— Institute of Actuaries, 5.—'On Staff Pension Funds,' Mr. George King.
— London Institution, 5.—'Social Evolution amongst Social Insects,' Mr. B. Kidd.
— Society of Arts, 8.—'Reservoir, Stylographic, and Fountain Pens,' Lecture II., Mr. J. P. Maginnis. (Cantor Lectures.)
— Surveyors' Institution, 8.—Discussion on Papers by Mr. Stenning and Mr. Menzies.
— Society of Arts, 8.—'Calligraphy and Illumination,' Messrs. E. Johnston and G. Hewitt.
TUES. Royal Institution, 5.—'The Structure and Life of Animals,' Lecture III., Prof. L. C. Miall.
— Institution of Civil Engineers, 8.—'Floating Docks,' Mr. L. E. Clark.
WED. Geological, 8.—'On the Sporangia-like Organs of Glossopteris bronchialis Brongn.,' Mr. E. A. Newell Arber.
— Society of Arts, 8.—'The Navigation of the Nile,' Sir W. H. Preece.
THURS. Royal Academy, 4.—Lecture by Prof. A. Gilbert.
— Royal 4½.
— Royal Institution, 5.—'Forestry in the British Empire,' Lecture I., Prof. W. Schlich.
— London Institution, 6.—'The Balkans,' Mr. H. Tiedeman.
— Chemical, 8.—'Studies in the Camphane Series: Part XVI, Camphorylcarbinide and Isomeric Camphorylcarbamides,' Messrs. M. O. Forster and H. H. Fierz.
— Linnean 8.—'New Chinese Plants from the Neighbourhood of Hong Kong,' Mr. W. J. Tutcher; 'European Marine Species of Cirratulids,' Dr. H. J. Hansen.
— Society of Antiquaries, 8½.—'Palæolithic Implements from the Terrace Gravels of the River Arun and the Western Mothor,' Mr. R. G. Rice; 'On a Discovery of Roman Remains at Harpham,' E. R. Yorks; 'Rev. C. V. Collier.
FRI. Geologists' Association, 7½.—Annual Meeting, President's Address, 'Modern Methods in the Study of Fossils.'
— Philological, 8.—'Early French Manuals for English Use,' Dr. H. Oelsner.
— Royal Institution, 9.—'Blood Pressure in Man,' Prof. T. C. Allbutt.
SAT. Royal Institution, 2.—'The Bohemian School of Music,' Lecture I., Sir A. Mackenzie.

Science Gossip.

MR. FISHER UNWIN has arranged to publish a work entitled 'The Age of the Earth, and other Geological Studies,' by Prof. W. J. Sollas, F.R.S. Among the subjects dealt with, in addition to that indicated by the title, are: 'The Influence of Oxford on the History of Geology'; 'The Volcanoes of the Lipari Isles'; 'The History and Structure of Coral Atolls'; 'The Origin and Formation of Flints'; 'The Evolution of Fresh-water Animals'; 'The Figure of the Earth'; and 'Geologies and Deluges.'

COL. YOUNGHUSBAND is to address the Royal Scottish Geographical Society on March 7th in Edinburgh, on his recent expedition to Tibet. The Society's gold medal is to be awarded to him on this occasion.

THE Council of the Royal Meteorological Society have arranged to hold, at the Institution of Civil Engineers, Great George Street, Westminster, an exhibition of meteorological instruments from March 14th to 17th next.

THE death, in his sixty-fifth year, is announced from Jena of Prof. Ernst Abbé, the head of the famous Zeiss Institute. When he came to Jena as University Lecturer, he found that microscopic studies in Germany were at a very low level compared with those in England and Belgium, and that, owing partly to the inferiority in the glass manufactured, optical instruments were by no means up to the requirements of scientific research. He entered into partnership with Karl Zeiss, and, in addition to turning his attention to the manufacture of a superior quality of glass, brought his theoretical knowledge to bear on practical improvements, such as the Abbé condenser, the Abbé illuminator, and the oil immersion object glass. Under him the Institute turned out some of the finest optical instruments in use. He was constantly improving his work and producing new inventions. The great strides made in bacteriology may in a large measure be attributed to him, as he brought the microscope to its present perfection.

AT a meeting of the British Astronomical Association held at Sion College last Wednesday, Mr. Crommelin, the President, stated that later observations had made it probable that the small body recently photographed near Jupiter by Prof. Perrine, of the Lick Observatory, and supposed to be a sixth satellite of that planet, was, in fact, one of the numerous small planets revolving round the sun between the orbits of Mars and Jupiter. Prof. Max Wolf, of Heidelberg, has noticed one of these, the motion of which shows that it is probably identical with Prof. Perrine's discovery, which is now at a somewhat greater distance from Jupiter.

THE moon will be new about an hour before noon on the 4th prox., and full about seven o'clock on the evening of the 19th, when she will undergo partial eclipse, the greatest part of which will be visible in this country; about 0.4 of the moon's diameter will be obscured at seven o'clock, Greenwich time, in the evening, and the first contact with the shadow will take place at 5h. 54m., nearly forty minutes after the moon has risen. The planet Mercury will be visible in the morning in the early part of next month, situated in the constellation Sagittarius. Venus is still brilliant in the evening, moving from Pisces towards Aries; she will be at greatest eastern elongation from the sun on the 14th. Mars is visible in the early mornings, and will pass very near  $\alpha$  Libræ on the 12th. Jupiter sets earlier each evening; he is now in the constellation Pisces, and will enter Aries towards the end of next month. Saturn will be in conjunction with the sun on the 12th.

THE brothers MM. Henry were well known for their long united labours, especially in the field of celestial photography, at the Paris Observatory. The sad death of the younger,

M. Mathieu Prosper Henry, was mentioned in The Athenæum of August 15th, 1903; he was found on the 25th of the preceding month in a valley at a great elevation in the French Alps, where he had been travelling, death having apparently been due to congestion, brought on by exposure to the cold. It is with great regret that we now announce the death of his brother, M. Paul Pierre Henry, which took place at Paris last week. He was born on August 21st, 1848. Both brothers were natives of Nancy, and, in recognition of their merits, were elected Associates of the Royal Astronomical Society of London in 1889.

WE are sorry to notice also the death of Mr. E. Crossley, F.R.A.S., of Halifax, which took place on the 21st inst., in the sixty-fourth year of his age. He had been an assiduous observer, and published in 1879, in conjunction with Messrs. Gledhill and Wilson, a valuable 'Handbook of Double Stars,' which is complete in its information up to the time of publication. He purchased from the late Dr. Common, who constructed it, a reflecting telescope, afterwards presented to the Lick Observatory, and of which Prof. Perrine has been making excellent use. Mr. Crossley was formerly for some years M.P. for the Sowerby division of Yorkshire.

HALLEY'S comet, at its last return in 1835, was first seen by Dumouchel at Rome on the 6th of August. Its motions during that appearance had been calculated beforehand by Damoiseau, Rosenberger, and Pontécoulant, and from a preliminary investigation by the last-named it would appear that this most interesting body will probably come into view again about the month of May, 1910. But long before that time we may expect that the prize offered by the German Astronomische Gesellschaft will produce a more rigorous determination of its place, so as to secure observations at as early a date as possible. When Halley, just two hundred years ago, put forth his famous prediction of the return of the great comet of 1682, he could only indicate the probable year of the return, but astronomy has made great advances since then.

A NEW small planet was photographically registered by Dr. Götz at the Königstuhl Observatory, Heidelberg, on the 8th inst.

FINE ARTS

Verrocchio. By Maud Cruttwell. (Duckworth & Co.)

A SERIOUS study of Verrocchio has been long wanted, for no great artist of the Quattrocento has fared worse than he. His reputation, the high excellence of his undoubted works, the rarity of these, and the shoal of imitators of his manner have all combined to lay him open to every kind of misconstruction, until at last his personality has become obscured by the quantities of feeble work with which his name has been associated. Miss Cruttwell has definitely made it her aim to set out his works in some intelligible order, to limit them to such as conform to the standard of his known masterpieces, and thereby to disentangle one of the most remarkable artistic personalities of Florence. We wish we could say that she had produced a final canonical version of his work. Her book shows, indeed, patient study and a thoroughness and care in bringing together all available sources of outside knowledge which are admirable. There is no information about Verrocchio which does not find a place in her book, while some of the documents which throw light on his early life we owe to her own researches.

No less thorough has been her study of Verrocchio's works; but here we come to something in which no amount of goodwill nor lavish expenditure of attention will altogether suffice, and we may say at once that it is in her purely æsthetic judgments that we find Miss Cruttwell least satisfactory. They are enunciated, moreover, with a positive assurance, a dogmatic emphasis, which are often wholly out of place. Thus in the most difficult and involved questions, in which the internal evidence of the works is our only guide, we are almost sure to find it stated that "there is no doubt whatever" that such and such is or is not by Verrocchio.

We are met at the outset by one of these questions: Did Leonardo paint, as Vasari says, one of the angels in Verrocchio's 'Baptism'? Miss Cruttwell tells us at once that he did not; but she does not meet the real difficulty, that the angels are different in treatment, and that the drapery of the left-hand one is of a different design, and suggests a much thinner, more flexible material than any that Verrocchio himself used elsewhere, while it agrees strikingly in these respects with Leonardo's early works. Moreover, she uses as an argument against Leonardo's assistance the early date which she assigns—rightly, we think—to the main design of the picture, but adds that the angels were executed at a later date, without seeing that this invalidates her former argument. She also declares positively that the two angels are by one hand, which, as we have suggested, is by no means self-evident, and proceeds to prove Verrocchio's authorship of one by means of the drawing for an angel's head in the Uffizi, which "there is no doubt was executed as a study for the painting." Here, again, we venture to doubt nevertheless. It does not agree in pose, movement, or design of the hair, nor is it, we believe, by Verrocchio at all, but by Botticini, whose peculiar hair, curled into volutes, it has. As for the 'Annunciation' of the Uffizi, which has been, perhaps, more disputed about than any other single Florentine picture, she declares roundly for Verrocchio. Here, we suspect, is an elaborate compound work of the atelier, in which, in its repainted condition, it will never be possible to isolate the various hands. The fact that she connects it, perhaps rightly, with a drawing of 'Venus and Cupid' in the Uffizi, really tells against her theory, for in the opinion of the best critics this is not by Verrocchio himself.

Probably the noble terra-cotta relief of 'The Resurrection' from the Villa Careggi, recently discovered by Count Carlo Gamba and Dr. Fabriczy, will be new to most English readers, and here we are delighted to be in entire agreement with our author. Not so, however, in her equally positive attribution to Verrocchio of the magnificent relief of the 'Genius of Discord' at South Kensington. It would take too long to discuss the point in detail; but while we believe that it is, in fact, one of the replicas of a celebrated battle of nudes by Antonio Pollajuolo, which Vasari tells us were to be found in all the workshops of Florence, we admit that the attribution to Leonardo is arguable. But we fail to find in the relief anywhere one touch characteristic of Verrocchio, who nowhere shows such a close imitation of Pollajuolo's characteristics as this attribution implies.

Discussing the female portrait busts, Miss Cruttwell defends well Verrocchio's authorship of the Bargello 'Bust of a Lady,' rightly indicating the decisive character of the hands. The only attribution which surprises us here is that of M. Edmond Foulé's 'Bust of a Lady' to Verrocchio. The photograph gives an unduly favourable impression of this excellent, but uninspired effort of Florentine craftsmanship, with its hard, capable, but intensely prosaic modelling.

Once more we must protest against Morelli's attribution of the drawing of a female head in the Malcolm Collection to Verrocchio, a view which our author accepts apparently without misgiving. We are, however, pleased to find that she will have none of the preposterous 'Madonna and Child' at Berlin, which some German critics have attempted to include in our artist's work. We do not think it is by the same hand as the far more beautiful 'Madonna' and the little 'Tobias' of the National Gallery, to whom we may no doubt attribute the second Berlin 'Madonna' (No. 108), as well as a large number of works that pass for the master's own. There can be no doubt that Verrocchio's atelier was crowded with pupils and imitators, and though we can isolate a few, like Botticini and the author of the National Gallery 'Madonna,' a large mass of work will probably always remain under the vague title of Verrocchio's School.

We come now to the Forteguerri tomb, the account of which is lucid and accurate. It leads, however, to a discussion of the sketch model at South Kensington, wherein we find Miss Cruttwell unduly hasty and positive. She sums up by saying that "there is no doubt whatever but that it is a modern forgery, executed by some ignorant mechanic with fraudulent intention." This is one of the cases where a little modest hesitation would have been becoming. A careful examination shows that the plaque has at one time been broken in half, and the three heads of Faith, the Cardinal, and Hope lost. These have been replaced in comparatively recent times; but when once one has discounted these three disturbing patches, the rest takes its place as the work of a great master. No "ignorant mechanic" could, we venture to think, have developed from the clumsy composition of the existing monument so gracious and rhythmical a design as we have here, nor, we think, could any one but Verrocchio himself have designed the draperies, at once voluminous and structural, or indicated in this particular the psychological significance of the faces.

On the Tornabuoni relief Miss Cruttwell is admirable. She demolishes its pretensions both on stylistic grounds and by a more scrupulous examination of Vasari's description than has hitherto been made. Here for once, at least, is a vexed question which ought to be considered as settled beyond dispute, and we are grateful to our author for the skill with which she has disposed of it.

One other important work remains, the Colleoni statue, and here again our author's interpretation of the documents is shrewd and well considered. With her æsthetic judgment of the work, especially her disparagement, by comparison, of Donatello's Gattamelata, we are again at variance. For us the Colleoni just does miss the monumental unity which makes the Gattamelata unique. It is rather in the rendering of the face, with its searching psychological interpretation, that Verrocchio's power is seen, and just that psychological curiosity which Verrocchio was the first to express in art is scarcely favourable to monumental design, in which we look rather for the generalized and epic aspect of the hero.

In reference to this statue, Miss Cruttwell makes the interesting suggestion that Verrocchio, rather than Donatello, is responsible for the horse's head, in imitation of an antique, at Naples. The idea is supported by arguments that are rather ingenious than convincing, but we do not think it impossible. The work, however, scarcely merits its reputation, and may, after all, be by some artist inferior to both the great men whose names are in question.

Taken as a whole, Miss Cruttwell's study is the most accurate, impartial, and complete that has yet been made on the subject; but it leaves room for some writer touched more deeply by the imaginative aspect of Verrocchio's work to give him his exact place in the temple of fame.

---

Scottish Pewter - Ware and Pewterers. By L. Ingleby Wood. (Edinburgh, G. A. Morton; London, Simpkin, Marshall & Co.)—The recent remarkable development of interest in pewter ware, and in all that pertains to the history of the craft, pervades Scotland as well as England, and shows no sign at present of any diminution. Mr. Ingleby Wood's timely work on Scotch pewter can be cordially recommended to all pewter lovers and collectors, as well as to those interested in particular handicrafts. It is a handsome quarto volume, excellently illustrated by thirty-five full-page plates, whilst the letterpress is so thoroughly and conscientiously arranged that it possesses real historical value.

The art of pewter making and casting does not seem to have been practised in Scotland before the close of the fifteenth century. Prior to that date such pewter vessels as were used in that country probably came from France, Flanders, or Holland; for the continuously disturbed relations with England prohibited much import from that direction. The ordinary burgesses and lower classes contented themselves with eating and drinking from vessels of wood, leather, and horn, pewter being a luxury used only by the nobles, the more wealthy burgesses, and the higher ecclesiastics. In 1493, however, the Pewterers became one of the crafts of the Incorporation of Hammermen of Edinburgh.

The story of the separation of the hammermen, i.e., those craftsmen who chiefly employed the hammer in their trade, from the main body of the Merchants' Guild, and their respective incorporation as the Hammermen of Edinburgh, of the Canongate, of Perth, of Dundee, of Aberdeen, of St. Andrews, of Glasgow, and of Stirling, is admirably told in a succession of chapters. The chapter on the "touches," or private and other marks on Scottish pewter ware, will prove of great value to all collectors, and the successive legislation on the subject is set forth with historical precision.

The shapes of not a few of the old Scotch pewter vessels show clearly that their general idea of design came from France or from Holland, and not across the border from England. But the occasionally fanciful shape, and the frequent enrichments by engraving and punching, common with continental pewter, are (with two exceptions) entirely lacking in this Northern adaptation of the art. "There is some truth," says Mr. Wood,

"in the idea that a race shows its character in the design which it imparts to articles of everyday use, and the Scottish pewter-ware is, in a measure, characteristic of the people who made it, strong of line, and entirely devoid of any superfluous ornament."

The story of pewter altar or Communion vessels is far more interesting in Scotland than in England, and the extant examples far more numerous. Here the use of pewter for chalices and patens has always been irregular and very exceptional, although the metal was commonly used for flagons and alms-dishes in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries. The idea expressed by Mr. Wood, that "pewter was frequently used in the making of actual church vessels, and probably for the chalice and paten, in Scotland before the date of the Reformation," is certainly wrong, so far as the chalice and paten are concerned; such a use could only have been possible in some remote and poverty-stricken chapelry, and was distinctly uncanonical. After Presbyterianism had held sway in Scotland for over half a century, Episcopalianism was reintroduced by James I. in 1617, and continued till 1638. The clergy of the Episcopal Church for the most part reverted to the use of silver, but the outlying parishes had to be content with the Presbyterian or recent pewter. From 1660 to 1688 the Episcopal Church was again re-established, with the result of silver again taking the place of pewter as far as possible. At the Revolution of 1688 most of the silver chalices and patens were carried off by the dispossessed clergy. In 1745 the Duke of Cumberland seized the church plate of the unauthorized Episcopal congregations, and burnt their places of worship. After that date the Episcopalians, in their stealthy worship, could only afford, as a rule, to use pewter; nevertheless, one broad principle obtained throughout all these religious ups and downs, namely, that those who believed in the government of bishops always desired to use silver at the altar, whilst those who preferred the control of elders were content with pewter.

Among the earliest known examples of Scotch Episcopal pewter are two tumbler types of chalice of late seventeenth-century date, belonging to the church of St. John Baptist at Drumlithie; these were undoubtedly originally made for Presbyterian use. At the same church are a stemmed chalice and a paten of pewter of eighteenth-century date. A variety of admirable illustrations of other Episcopal pewter is also given, including a handsome covered chalice and paten, late eighteenth century, belonging to old St. Paul's Church, Edinburgh, with the sacred monogram in a rayed border; and also two fine flagons and a baptismal laver of the same church and century. Full particulars are given in an appendix of pewter altar-sets belonging to a score of congregations of old foundation of the Episcopal Church of Scotland, and the editor is aware of a few other sets, of which descriptions are not forthcoming. Pewter sets of Presbyterian Communion cups seem to be fairly common.

Scotland possesses another kind of church pewter, which would be looked for in vain in England; we allude to the Communion tokens, which were small, variously shaped stamped pieces of pewter, lead, or brass given to the intending communicant some time prior to "Sacrament Sunday," and delivered up by him before he partook of the Communion. This custom was introduced from the Calvinistic churches of the Continent, and it will surprise many to learn not only that it was general throughout Presbyterian congregations, but also that it was occasionally adopted in the Episcopal Church. There are but few old tokens extant, for when they became worn with use it was customary to melt them down, or to bury them in the churchyard, or occasionally to restamp them with a new design. Tokens of the Episcopal Church frequently bear a small cross or the sacred monogram; others bear the initial letter of the parish; whilst those of town parishes, such as Edinburgh, Dundee, and Glasgow, were often decorated with the corporate arms. The large majority of such tokens were cast in pewter, and a variety of good examples are here illustrated and described, from the seventeenth century downwards.

Perhaps the most curious piece of pewter-ware in Scotland is the "pirley-pig" or circular money-box pertaining to the Town Council of Dundee. This pewter money-box is in the shape of an orange or flattened globe, measuring 6 in. in diameter, and 3 in. in height. On one side is a money slit, and on the opposite side an opening through which an iron rod passes for security. The box was intended to receive the fines of members of the Council who failed to attend the meetings. It is beautifully ornamented with inscribed scrolls and other designs, as well as with shields bearing the royal and other arms, including those of "Sir James Skrimzeour, Prowest, Anno 1602, 14 May." This interesting little vessel was probably the work of some skilled Dundee pewterer; it was discovered in 1839, after being long lost, among a heap of old iron, rescued from the melting-pot, and is now reckoned among the treasures of the Charter Room of the Town Hall.

Beggars' badges were by no means peculiar to Scotland. They were adopted in England in Elizabethan days as a means of checking and regulating vagrancy. Nevertheless these tokens of poverty were in far more general and later use in Scotland than in any other country, the custom actually lasting until about the midst of the last century. Mr. Wood mentions 1424 as the earliest date of their general employment in Scotland. An Act of that year provided for the distribution of leaden begging badges to applicants by the sheriffs of the counties and the clerks of town councils. Lead, as the cheaper metal, was most frequently used for such badges; but there were many instances of the use of pewter for those of smaller size. A pewter badge issued by the town of Perth is a small circular medal bearing the arms of the town, a double-headed eagle displayed. Badges of Kirkwall, Kirkcaldy, and other towns also bore the corporate arms, whilst others were simply marked with the name of town, parish, or county, often with a number. Sometimes the name of the beggar was also stamped thereon. They were usually pierced with holes for fastening to the outer garment of the owner. A plate of illustrations of some of these pewter begging badges in the Museum of Antiquities, Edinburgh, includes a circular one, about the size of a crown-piece, bearing a crowned thistle and the initials V. R., the year 1847, the number 28, the name of William Bain, and the legend at the bottom "Pass and Repass."

In addition to a full discussion of pewter tavern and corn measures, interesting accounts and illustrations are also given of such old objects as pewter snuff-mulls and horn snuff-mulls with pewter mountings, as well as of punchbowl and rummer ladles of the eighteenth century. It may be mentioned, in conclusion, that the sedan-chair men of Edinburgh of the eighteenth century wore pewter badges, similar to cabmen's badges of to-day.

SCOTLAND ILLUSTRATED.

Bonnie Scotland. Painted by Sutton Palmer, described by A. R. Hope Moncrieff. (Black.)—Quite a large number of books have been published recently in illustration of Scottish life, character, and customs. This is one of the best. It contains, indeed, nothing that is actually new, and is not of any historical importance; but it reproduces with sympathy and essential accuracy all the characteristic traits and features of Scottish life and scenery, mingling story and legend, topography and history, literary allusion and personal recollection, in a way which suggests the pleasing figure of a tartan of intricate pattern. The reader is supposed to enter Scotland from the Berwick border; to pass through the Liddesdale country, on to Peebles and Edinburgh; to traverse Fife, see Perth, glance at St. Andrews and Aberdeen; and, after getting as far as John o' Groat's, return by Glasgow and the West Country, and end his tour with Mr. Crockett's "grey Galloway." Mr. Moncrieff's part is to take him by the hand and gossip lightly as he goes along. The gossip serves its purpose, and need not be taken too seriously. It may, however, be pointed out that the title of Lady Nairne's famous song is not 'Caller Haddie,' but 'Caller Herrin'; and Gladstone's forbears should be associated with Biggar rather than with Stonehaven. The illustrations are not wholly satisfactory, either as regards subject or treatment. The three-colour process does not lend itself well to the reproduction of Scottish scenery. It results in a rather pretty picture, undoubtedly; but the effect is, generally, far too rich. It may be objected, again, that, great as is the charm of Perthshire and the Trossachs district, it is an outrage on proportion to devote twenty-four out of seventy-five pictures to scenes in these districts. Perthshire does not make "bonnie Scotland," and a native artist would certainly have made a more representative collection of the beauties of the country. It is significant, perhaps, of the purpose of the book that it is not provided with an index.

In Scottish Life and Character, painted by H. J. Dobson and described by William Sanderson (same publisher), is repeated the fault of many modern works dealing with Scotland, the fault especially of the so-called "kailyard" school. Scotland, as presented here, is all sentiment and pathos: a mixture of ministers and elders, precentors and beadles, "auld folk" and bairns, who read their Bibles and say long "graces," and find in the Kirk and its services the chief interest of their existence. The life that we see in 'The House with the Green Shutters'—a picture which is clearly the result of first-hand study, and not a mere repetition of what a hundred predecessors have set down—is almost entirely ignored, alike by artist and author. The boisterous horse-play of the bothie, the gross immorality, the drunkenness—these are not so much as mentioned. What we do get is, in fact, virtually a modern reflection of 'The Cottar's Saturday Night.' Admitting the expediency of illustrating only this better side of Scottish life and character, one may also admit that Mr. Sanderson has acquitted himself creditably. He has a simple style, which well befits his theme, and he is in complete sympathy with the particular types of character and the particular kind of life which he has chosen to describe. Some of his stories have an ancient flavour, but their use as illustrations is generally effective. Thus, what could better exemplify the "bitter observance of the Sabbath," enforced by the more narrow-minded Scot, than the anecdote of the youngster who, confined indoors on the Sunday, wished he were a cabbage, because he "wad be oot"? Mr. Dobson's pictures have been well reproduced by the three-colour process. They are mostly interior scenes, illustrating that simple home-life of the Scottish people which is fast passing away. 'A Window in Thrums' constitutes the frontispiece.

Edinburgh, pictured by John Fulleylove, and described by Rosaline Masson (same publisher), makes an attractive volume both for the inhabitant of that city and for the casual visitor. Miss Masson has done her share of the work well and judiciously; she does not attempt to be exhaustive, but merely selects the more picturesque incidents of Edinburgh's history, notes its more romantic buildings and byways, the haunts of its more familiar celebrities, and its social aspects, and thus contrives to give bright and entertaining sketches of the Castle, Holyrood, St. Giles, the Edinburgh of Walter Scott and of Robert Louis Stevenson, and so on. The score of illustrations by Mr. Fulleylove are happily chosen and admirably executed, though in the matter of colouring they seem to repeat a criticism made above—often unwarrantably rich. Some of them are warm enough to suggest scenes from Southern Italy, and the use of greyer and more cheerless tints, though perhaps not so taking, would certainly have been more characteristic of the place. It will be seen that all these three volumes are due to one publisher, whose enterprise in producing handsome illustrated volumes has recently been noteworthy.

G. F. WATTS AT BURLINGTON HOUSE.

(Second Article.)

A FORTNIGHT ago we dealt with the development of the art of Watts as represented by the portraits contained in the exhibition at Burlington House. These portraits illustrate the evolution of his methods of work more completely than either his landscapes or his allegorical subjects. With one or two short intervals, they cover almost every year of Watts's working life. Again, a portrait, having usually to be finished offhand, cannot be worked upon year after year, and so is a definite document of the painter's manner at the time of its production. Portrait-painting, too, was the road by which Watts made his way to independence, and to the leisure necessary for the execution of the larger schemes he had planned for himself.

Thus out of a total of two hundred and fifty pictures and drawings we find scarcely half a dozen allegorical or religious paintings executed before the artist was fifty years of age. The whole of the work by which Watts's reputation as a master of the grand style must stand or fall was thus begun when the painter was passing from middle age to old age, and was devoted to subjects of which he had previously only an intermittent experience.

That intermittence, however, may explain certain preferences and indifferences in the artist's treatment of the human figure. These might possibly have been less marked had he been compelled, like Titian or Veronese, to spend almost all his life in painting heroic subjects, and to acquire thereby a certain routine of outwardly complete presentation. Yet it was not a purposeless intermittence. Certain groups of allegorical pictures, just as certain groups of portraits, when seen together, appear as deliberate experiments in method, in handling, quality, pigment, scale, and degree of definition—experiments preparatory to the settlement of the final process for expressing what had never before been expressed in paint.

Thus the Aurora of 1842 (No. 13), and the first version of the 'Life's Illusions' at the Tate Gallery, represent an effort to get air and space and mystery by means of the current English tradition deftly employed. The painter's visit to Italy opened his eyes to the fact that this native tradition was effete and effeminate, and too weak to bear the strain of his vast conceptions. In the works of the great Italian masters Watts discovered the strong method of which he was in search. The specimens of work done under their immediate influence show that he was not a man to put up with compromise and half measures. In the massive 'Time and Oblivion' of 1848, and in the gigantic painting in the Tate Gallery of the story of Nostagio degli Onesti, Watts casts aside all delicacy and finesse, and works like an ideal student of Reynolds's 'Discourses,' combining the "firm and definite outline" of the passage which Blake applauded, with the simple and distinct colours that act "as martial music, which is intended to rouse the nobler passions," and with something of the gesture of the master whose name was most constantly on Reynolds's lips—Michelangelo.

Grand and impressive as the method was, Watts must soon have discovered its limitations, possibly through some hint from the work of Alfred Stevens, which may have pointed the way to more complete fusion. The study of Titian would be the natural way of explaining the transition to a richer and more fluent method; but Watts himself disclaimed any such special attention, and in the face of that statement we can give the Venetians no more than a casual and partial share in his development. In default we must fall back upon the evidence of such portraits as those of Miss Nassau Senior (32) and Lady Margaret Beaumont (176), and conclude that he learnt to temper his rigid grandeurs by the suave example of Reynolds and Gainsborough, not without some memory of Stevens, as the Esau of 1865 (14) and the Jacob and Esau of 1878 (17) seem to suggest.

The grandeur of the latter work is generally and deservedly recognized. Nevertheless, many of those who admire it may not see that the wonderful force of its design depends upon the daring pictorial invention of a sky that is virtually white, upon which the tawny tints of the patriarch and his brother and the blue hills behind them tell solidly and harmoniously. In the 'Una and the Red Cross Knight' of 1869 we find the same device used to define a scheme in which the prominent note is cool dark green.

In these pictures we see in its simplest form the faculty of colour invention, possessed by all the greatest colourists. This is the decisive gift which separates them from men who, like the lesser Venetian masters, coloured well from imitation of their betters and from technical practice in their company. Because Watts, with rare simplicity of mind, spoke only of the didactic purpose of his pictures, and not of the brains and effort he expended on the process of their manufacture, those who are accustomed to judge men by their published utterances—no uncomplimentary system in the case of political mediocrity—have leapt to the conclusion that he possessed no more than his modesty allowed him to make public. They thus entirely overlook his consistent creativeness as a colourist, as a designer, and as a technician—a creativeness which is almost invariably in his best pictures pictorial, because it is exactly suited to the sentiment and treatment of the subject in hand.

We have already mentioned some of the simpler examples of Watts's power of inventing new schemes of colour. If those who go round the exhibition carefully, and who remember also the magnificent series of pictures on a larger scale in the Tate Gallery, will ask themselves, when they have finished their visit, how many of the subject pieces are obviously based upon Titian or upon any other painter, they will be rather surprised to find how small the number is. Like Titian, Watts loved the flash of white cloud against a deep blue sky; like Titian, he loved vinous red and russet brown, and certain tones of dusky green. Like Veronese, he was a master of certain kinds of crumbling and fresco-like pigment, broad, simple, and luminous. Yet these preferences prove no more than that, like every great colourist who has used oil paint since the sixteenth century, Watts came into contact here and there with the classical and central masters of colouring.

Were we to change his titles and adapt them to the modern mode, labelling here a 'Harmony in Gold and Ivory,' and there a 'Harmony in Russet and Emerald,' expanding our vocabulary where possible to correspond with the variations of turquoise, lapis lazuli, and sapphire in his blue, and puzzling our wits to find terms for the degrees and qualities of his white and his scarlet, his amber, yellow, and opalescent grey, we might understand better how much that is purely artistic underlies the professed didactic purpose. Then, considering each harmony in relation to the subject, we might realize how Watts used colour with the unerring instinct of a true colourist, not as a mere outward adornment of a design, but as an integral part of its emphatic quality, at one time grave and pallid in the presence of death, at another glowing with the warm fire of human passion or with the colder radiance befitting the immortals, but reserving its most martial and tremendous notes for the great visions when Time, Life, and Death themselves are seen marching, fighting, conquering, and dying. Since instances are to be found on every wall of the exhibition, it is needless to quote particular examples.

Of Watts's powers of invention as a designer it is difficult to speak clearly. His portraits, perhaps, are the best evidence of the variety of his treatment of single figures, in which one gesture, such as the turning of a head or the placing of a hand, is made significant and emphatic. The design of his larger compositions is often misjudged by confusing it with the truism of the underlying idea. That Time and Death move forward hand in hand followed by the Unknown, or that Love cannot bar the passage of Death, are ideas which need no unusual power of intellect for their comprehension. To provide them with fitting pictorial expression is an entirely different and far more difficult task, especially when conceived on the scale and in the brilliant key of Watts's work. To find fault with such painting because it points an obvious moral is as ridiculous as to find fault with Shakspeare because 'Hamlet' is full of thoughts which are the common property of all intelligent people, without regard to the unique and noble form in which they are expressed.

It must first of all be remembered that Watts in this field was a pioneer. Something no doubt was reminiscent of Michelangelo; much, especially in the treatment of drapery, was learnt from the sculptures of the Parthenon, and one or two groups sweeping upwards or downwards recall William Blake; but the main idea of these arrangements of figures floating upon luminous masses of clouds, moving gravely to some inevitable task, or whirled along in swift fiery motion, is a conception as wholly personal and unique in art as the radiant cascade of light which floods the newborn Eve, or blazes round his spirits of progress and divine vengeance.

These remarkable achievements in design necessitated a change from the current technique, a change which has led astray some of the painter's critics. No one who has practised any form of painting in which space, mystery, opalescence, and luminosity are required instead of the clean, direct touch which suits painting from a model or still-life, ought to fail to understand why Watts in his portraits is a master of the traditional technique of his craft, but in his allegories ruthlessly cast it aside. We do not question Titian's fame because the 'Europa' or the 'Pietà' in the Venice Academy is not painted like the 'Philip II.' in the Prado, or Rembrandt's because his glorious later portraits are not painted with the delicacy of our little 'Adoration of the Shepherds.' Why should we then be less liberal to Watts, whose later method had at least the advantage of giving the effects of mystery, iridescence, luminosity, and space that his subjects required? We may grant that his failure is apparent when he does now and then fall very far short of his ideal, and there is, perhaps, almost an unfair proportion of such unsuccessful and unsold work at Burlington House; but these lapses into weakness might be paralleled in the work of other great painters without the condoning element of taste and feeling which Watts invariably possessed.

The one regrettable fact about Watts's landscapes is their scarcity, and Lord Davey, who seems to own several of the best of them, is a man to be envied. Some of their most remarkable features are too technical in their nature to be comprehensible or interesting to any one who is not a landscape painter, but the manner in which the master time after time attains to vastness, intensity, and unity of effect, without any of the customary compositional devices, by sheer suggestion of the atmospheric envelope, must strike the veriest amateur. The wonderful view of The Carrara Mountains from Pisa (166) would serve as an example, since their clear-cut desolation and pallid crystalline quality are stated with a directness and truth to local conditions which will strike all who remember the view from the famous Campanile. The soaring cloud and shadowed expanse of The Rainbow (221) are singular examples of the artist's power and daring in his most ambitious and tremendous mood; but we miss several smaller works, which would have made the series of landscapes more complete. Two or three of the best were for years in the gallery at Little Holland House. The Green Summer (202) and that romantic invention The Two Paths (223) looked better in the more discreet light of the New Gallery, and we miss that grand composition of the same period 'The Parasite,' a signal proof that even in his last years Watts was unequalled by any living landscape painter.

The last room is usually an ordeal, and though Sandys is the artist whom the Academy has delighted to honour this year, his woodcuts are almost the only things that stand the test. One portrait (270) is a miracle of minute craftsmanship; the rest look thin and hard, in spite of unfailing ability, by comparison with the broader and richer talent of Watts. Mr. Brock's model for the National Memorial to Queen Victoria displays no unexpected beauty or originality, but, as London monuments go, will be by no means the worst of them. The approaches are skilfully conceived, and the sculpture upon them is taken from good models, but more refinement, simplicity, and emphasis in the central mass are required to lift the idea above the region of the merely inoffensive.

ARCHÆOLOGICAL NOTES.

DR. ALFRED JEREMIAS, in his 'Monotheistische Strömungen innerhalb der Babylonischen Religion,' labours, as so many have done before him, to show that the Babylonian religion was based on the worship of one god. As Dr. Jeremias is a Lutheran pastor, and thinks that the origin of the religion of the Hebrews must be looked for in Babylon, his bias, though perfectly excusable, and even praiseworthy, is evident. Among his so-called proofs he includes certain "mysteries of Heaven and Earth" mentioned in the cuneiform texts which remain mysteries for us, but which he seeks to explain by analogy with the secret rites of the Orphics and the Eleusinia. Others are the adoration at far-apart epochs of Anu, Sin, and Ninib as "the highest god," coupled, of course, with Dr. Pinches's tablet equating most of the gods of the Babylonian pantheon with Marduk, and the apparently monotheistic expressions to be found in the Penitential Psalms which we know only in Assur-bani-pal's recension. His arguments seem ill calculated to convince any but those who are convinced already. It may be conceded that a tendency to the worship of one supreme God can be found in the religion of most races of low civilization, such as many of the African black tribes, the explanation being that the worshippers, in strict accordance with Aristotle's maxim, transfer to the skies the form of civil government in their own country, they being, for the most part, under the rule of an absolute chief. Monotheistic tendencies can also, with a little goodwill, be read into the religious literature of most Oriental peoples; but they are singularly belied by the action of the worshippers. Thus Solomon, at the dedication of the Temple at Jerusalem, assures Jehovah that there is no god like Him in heaven or earth, and that "heaven and the heaven of heavens" cannot contain Him. But it has been well said that Solomon must have thought there were other gods, because he worshipped other gods, and his supposed monotheism must, therefore, have been tainted by that henotheism which treats any god as supreme so long as he is being addressed. The same tendency is as marked in the Egyptian religion in all ages.

A well-written review of the progress of Assyriology in 1903 by M. Ch. Fossey appears in the Journal Asiatique, and can be had separately. M. Fossey expresses a wish, well worth the attention of the Oriental Congress at their forthcoming meeting, that Brunnow's 'Classified List of Cuneiform Ideographs,' which he rightly describes as a Sumero-Assyrian dictionary, should be completed and brought up to date, but disregards Dr. C. Howards's efforts in this direction. He also expresses doubt as to the perfect wisdom of M. de Morgan's explorations at Susa, and suggests that a trained archaeologist should be told off to accompany him—a counsel of perfection that might be followed with advantage in all such cases. But how many archaeologists can be found able and willing to face the hardships and the injury to health resulting from work in Western Asia? On the question of Babylonian religion, M. Fossey exposes many of the errors of Dr. Delitzsch and Prof. Sayce, gives due weight to the crushing by M. Oppert of the first-named's Jahve theory, and is, on the whole, against the tendency visible among German scholars of late to derive all Hebrew beliefs from Babylonia. From his title-page it may be gathered that M. Fossey intends to renew his survey every year till 1907, and his subsequent summaries will be looked forward to with pleasure.

The season seems to have opened fairly well in Egypt, and Dr. Naville and Mr. Hall's work at Deir-el-Bahari has so far been successful enough for them to announce that they have uncovered the platform of the pyramid of that Mentuhotep whose temple they discovered last year, and whose hawk-name was Neb-kheru-Ra. They have also found monuments of two other kings of the eleventh dynasty, one of whom possessed the hawk-name Ra-neb-hapef-t (?), and the other that of Ra-s...-hetep. The last-named, at any rate, is a Mentuhotep, as is probably the first. Both are, perhaps, to be identified with names found in the tablet of Kurnak; but in any case the final t in the first name requires explanation. It is reported that Prof. Petrie has had trouble with his camel-drivers in the desert of Sin, which led to the expedition travelling on short rations for some days, but that the difficulty is now happily over. Dr. Budge, when last heard of, was at Cairo, and was said to be en route for Khartum.

M. Victor Henry has continued the study of Aryan origins, the first instalment of which was noticed here (see The Athenæum, No. 4011) some months ago. He now tells us that the ancestors of the modern Persians must have left their primitive seat in Russia, and have skirted round the Caspian Sea, probably in two divisions, which united in a territory that may have been the modern Armenia, the mysterious land of Turan being for him none other than the present Turkestan. Thence they spread over a vast territory, including all the high lands between the Caspian and the Indus, or, in other words, over Persia, Afghanistan, and what used to be the Khanates. He thinks they must have been settled there for at least a millennium before the most southerly tribes overflowed into Hindostan, through which they spread the civilization of the "Aryas" or nobles from the Punjab to Ceylon. Yet they never conquered India as they did the northern countries, from which they must have evicted or extirpated the original inhabitants. For while even the modern Persian exhibits the true Aryan type, in India the dead weight of a teeming population of inferior races proved too much for the invaders, and the resulting cross proved smaller, darker, and more brachycephalic than their sires. As they brought with them from their Russian home the arts of building, weaving, and the making of pottery, together with their chief industry of agriculture, so they took these into India, although he does not go so far as to say that similar arts and pursuits may not have been indigenous there.

The great service, however, which India has rendered to the archaeologist has been to preserve the primitive Aryan faith almost whole and undefiled. Long before the Aryan invasion of India the "infantile" naturalism of the earliest Aryan tribes had crystallized into the worship of the Asuras and the Devas, whom he warns us against considering either good or bad. The difference between them, according to M. Henry, was that while the Asuras were the powers withdrawn from human ken, and, although essentially all-powerful, dispensed their favours in accord with caprices of which men could never know the nature, the Devas were beings engaged, like the human race, in a perpetual strife with evil, and owed their possession of the good things of life only to their success in the strife. Among the foremost of these Devas to be deified were the glorious Indra, the warrior-god, and the divine Haoma or Soma, god of the mysterious drink which intoxicates mortals, whose names show that they must have been worshipped before the invasion. The process by which these high divinities came to be looked upon in Avestan times as the enemies of the light is with M. Henry substantially the same as that set forth by the late James Darmesteter, and is, indeed, only what occurs among most nations, where the gods of one age become the devils of the next. But it may be noted that it is to the introduction of the art of writing by certain Semites that M. Henry attributes the preservation of the traditional Aryan faith in the Vedas.

M. Léon Homo's essay on the reign of the Emperor Aurelian deserves mention as a brilliant and conscientious attempt to elucidate a period of great importance to us, which has hitherto been but little studied. He gives abundant proof of his theory that Aurelian's reorganization of the military forces of the empire ensured its defence against the barbarians for several centuries, and thus made possible the reforms of Diocletian. His religious reform, which, teste M. Homo, aimed at establishing the supremacy of solar worship, and deified the living emperor as vicerent of the sun-god, is more obscure, and its connexion with the increase of the religion of Mithras was probably closer than here appears. In the absence of documents, however, the question is full of difficulty.

Dr. Pinches is now giving instruction in Assyriology at University College, Gower Street. There are, too, Mr. C. H. W. Johns's lectures on the same subject at King's College, London, so that it is plain that London students can obtain well-qualified instructors in Sumerian and Assyrian on easy terms. This is the more to be desired as English exploration on any large scale in Mesopotamia seems to be now a thing of the past, and we, the first nation to lay bare the treasures of archæology to be found there, must henceforth, apparently, be content with studying and explaining the discoveries of others.

The accounts of the Society of Biblical Archæology, which has been doing for some time past much excellent and unobtrusive work in this respect, show that they have freed themselves from debt without external assistance, and hope in future to conduct their business on ready-money principles. Few learned societies can say as much. One principle which has contributed to this happy state of things is that none of the officials of the Society derives any profit from his connexion with it.

G. H. BOUGHTON, R.A.

THE death of Mr. G. H. Boughton, R.A., removes one of the most popular artists of the day, who had contributed steadily for many years to the Royal Academy, the New Gallery, and, earlier, the Grosvenor Gallery. Born near Norwich in 1833, he was taken to America in the next year, and taught himself to paint at Albany, where he took a studio, and soon achieved considerable local success. In 1856 he visited England. In 1858 he made a sensation with his 'Winter Twilight' in the New York Academy Gallery, and moved to New York in consequence. But he was soon persuaded to start for Paris, which he reached in 1860, and where he was a good deal influenced by the work of Édouard Frère. From France Boughton came to England for a short stay, but instead of returning to America as he proposed, he took a studio at 23, Newman Street, and very soon entered on the career of assured success and increasing honours which has since been his. He was made A.R.A. in 1879, and R.A. in 1896. Dealing largely in popular anecdote, he may be said almost to have made a corner in pretty Puritans, and his New England pictures were a great success. He was led to take up this line by his desire to get rid of the influence of Frère, in whose style he painted several Breton pictures. Devoted to a single model, who dominated his painting for years, he maintained a style and distinction which placed him above the ordinary popular artist. His genre pictures are not likely to survive as memorable works. For the Grolier Club of New York he did some excellent illustrations of Washington Irving's 'Knickerbocker History' and Hawthorne's 'Scarlet Letter.' A capable and liberally illustrated account of his life and work, by Mr. A. L. Baldry, was published in The Art Annual this Christmas.

THE 'ARIOSTO' IN THE NATIONAL GALLERY.

47, Lansdowne Gardens, Clapham, S.W.

IN connexion with Mr. Herbert Cook's article on the above in last week's Athenæum, and other articles which have appeared elsewhere, I have not noticed any reference to an interesting paper dealing incidentally with the subject (written and published before the Darnley 'Ariosto' changed hands) in the Rivista delle Biblioteche e degli Archivi of February-April, 1904. The paper is written by Prof. Angelo Solerti, and comprises reproductions of four portraits (real or presumed) of Ariosto, including that now in the National Gallery. I should be pleased to lend Mr. Cook my copy of the article, if he has not already seen it.

W. ROBERTS.

SALES.

AT Messrs. Christie's on the 21st inst. Mr. E. Hayes's picture, Entrance to the Harbour, Messina, fetched 120*l*.

The same firm sold on the 24th inst. the following engravings. After Turner: Liber Studiorum Plates: Chain of Alps and Hindhead Hill, by Say and Dunkarton, 60*l*. After Morland: Rustic Amusement and Rural Employment, by J. R. Smith (a pair), 64*l*.; Delia in Town and Delia in the Country, by the same (a pair), 44*l*.; Inside of a Country Alehouse, by W. Ward, 33*l*.; A Visit to the Child at Nurse, by the same, 25*l*.; Mutual Confidences, by E. Bell, 31*l*. After Hoppner: Mrs. Benwell, by W. Ward, 29*l*.; Lady Charlotte Greville, by J. Young, 58*l*.; Miss Paget as Psyche, by H. Meyer, 55*l*. After Reynolds: Viscountess Crosbie, by W. Dickinson, 33*l*.; Lady Jane Halliday, by V. Green, 25*l*.; Mrs. Hartley and Child, by Sherwin, 28*l*.; Lady Taylor, by W. Dickinson, 58*l*.; Mrs. Beresford with the Marchioness Townshend and Mrs. Gardiner, by T. Watson, 44*l*. After Romney: Mrs. North, by J. R. Smith, 115*l*. After Wheatley: Summer and Winter, by F. Bartolozzi, 91*l*.

Fine-Art Cossip.

AT the Bruton Gallery, next Wednesday, is the private view of a show of water-colours of Highland scenery by Mr. Finlay Mackinnon.

AT the Baillie Gallery, next Saturday, an exhibition opens of pictures and sketches by Mr. J. H. Donaldson, water-colour drawings by Mr. J. B. Yeats, and drawings and woodcuts by Miss Elinor M. Monsell.

WE regret to notice the death of Mr. Robert Brough as the result of the recent railway accident at Cudworth. He was a young man, and one of the most promising artists of the day, a well-known exhibitor at the Royal Academy and the New Gallery. Scotch by birth, he had his art education partly in Scotland and partly in Paris.

LAST Wednesday, at Burlington House, two painters and an architect were chosen for honours. Mr. David Murray was made R.A., and Mr. David Farquharson and Mr. Reginald Blomfield were elected Associates.

The Burlington Magazine for February contains editorial articles on 'The Prospects of Contemporary Painting,' 'The Strand Improvements' (a protest against the County Council scheme), and 'The Insurance of Works of Art.' The last-named article calls attention to a serious flaw in insurance practice which is of grave importance to owners of works of art. Mr. Charles Ricketts writes on the Watts Exhibition at Burlington House, and Mr. Lionel Cust, in a sixth article on the Royal Collections, deals with paintings by Lucas Cranach, one of which is reproduced in photogravure and three in collotype. The series of articles on the late Mr. J. S. Forbes's collection of drawings by Millet is concluded. In this, her last paper, Julia Cartwright describes five crayon portraits of Rousseau, Diaz, Barye, Victor Dupré, and Desbrosses, together with a pastel of the painter's first wife and a drawing of his second wife, all of which are reproduced in collotype. Mr. Campbell Dodgson publishes a woodcut of 'Alexander's Journey to the Sky,' with an account of the legend; and among other articles are 'Whieldon Pottery in the British Museum,' by Mr. R. L. Hobson; another of Mr. Clouston's valuable contributions to the history of English furniture makers; and a concluding paper on the Blackburne collection of lace. The correspondence includes an important letter by Mrs. Herringham on the proposed restoration of St. Mark's, Venice, and an amusing criticism by Mr. James Weale on the recent article on the Van Eycks by M. Henri Bouchot.

THE death, in his eightieth year, is reported of the landscape painter Valentin Raths. His pictures, among the best-known of which are 'Treibeis auf der Elbe' and 'Abend an der Ostsee,' are for the most part representations of the Baltic coast of Holstein and Hamburg and its neighbourhood. He painted six large pictures for the Hamburg Kunsthalle, and many of his works are in the chief galleries of Berlin, Dresden, &c.

ONE of the foremost writers on Venetian art has passed away in Gustav Ludwig. He was a native of Essen, but spent some years in England, and became a naturalized British subject. Few men have rivalled him in his knowledge of all that concerned the painters of Venice, and his careful researches enabled him to clear up many obscurities in their lives. It was he who first proved, among other things, that there was only one Bonifazio da Pitati, instead of three, as had been assumed. Of great interest and importance is the work on Carpaccio which he wrote conjointly with Pompeo Molmenti.

THE death is also announced of the popular Düsseldorf landscape painter Alfred Metzener.

MESSRS. CHRISTIE'S sale to-day is one of unusual importance and interest. Messrs. Lawrie, whose stock is being sold in consequence of the dissolution of partnership, have only dealt in the best pictures. The sale is strongest in examples of the Dutch, Flemish, and German artists. There is a beautiful picture by J. Ruysdael, which sold for as much as 18,700 francs at Baron Denon's sale in 1826. The characteristic little Metsu was at one time in the Hope Collection at Deepdene.

MRS. ISABELLA M. ANDERTON-DEBARBIERI, who died at Florence on the 20th inst., was correspondent for The Studio in Florence. She had lived in Italy some twenty-five years, and had an excellent knowledge of Italian language and literature. A collection of some of her writings will be shortly issued (in English) under the title 'Tuscan Folk Stories and Sketches.' She was a teacher at the Poggio Imperial Institute.

M. WALTER GAY, of Paris, has presented to the Louvre one of the many interesting primitives which he lent to the exhibition held at the Pavillon de Marsan last year. It is ascribed to the Bourbon artist (or school) known as Le Maître de Moulins, and was No. 113 in the exhibition. It is a portrait on panel of a young woman, and was at one time thought to represent Yolande, sister of Louis XI.; but she died in 1478, and the style of dress is of a much later period. By some authorities the picture is ascribed to Perréal, who was sent to England by Louis XII., and the compilers of the catalogue suggest that it may represent Mary Tudor, who married Louis XII. after the death of Anne de Bretagne.

THE death is announced at Paris of M. Ferdinand Levillain, the well-known sculptor and engraver. He studied under Lequien and Jouffroy, and had been an exhibitor since 1861 at the Salon, where he obtained medals in 1872, 1884, and in 1889. He was for many years a member of the committee of the Salon. There are ten examples of his work as a medalist in the Luxembourg, besides a fine bronze vase with a subject for the history of Diogenes. M. Levillain was born at Paris-Passy.

THE Fine-Arts Committee of the city of Paris have awarded the Lheureux Prize this year to M. Antonin Mercié, for his monument to Alfred de Musset. The prize is only of the value of 3,000 francs, and is so arranged that one year it goes to an architect and the next to a sculptor.

MUSIC

The Oxford History of Music.—Vol. V. The Viennese Period. By W. H. Hadow. (Oxford, Clarendon Press.)

"THE field is so wide, and the need of selection so obvious," says the author, "that it may be serviceable to explain in a few words the method which is here adopted, and the topics which are here discussed." In reviewing a book it is only fair to the writer, and also to the reader, to give a clear idea of the method adopted and the nature of the contents.

The first chapter discusses "the effect for good or ill of patronage"; the second concerns "the structure of instruments and the careers of virtuosi"; while from there onward the subject is the history of composition, on the basis of the various musical forms, from Carl Philipp Emanuel Bach to Schubert. The eighteenth century, until the last decade, presents a marked contrast to the nineteenth. To understand, therefore, the treatment of Mozart by Archbishop Hieronymus at Salzburg, a knowledge of life in high quarters is indispensable, while the defective education, vulgar habits, and coarse conversation of musicians in those days generally account in large measure for the low esteem in which they were held. Even Mozart, whose music is so pure and refined, was not, as the story of his life shows, free from a certain commonplaceness, which to some extent explains, if it does not altogether excuse, his treatment as a menial by the above-mentioned prelate.

As regards patronage there were numerous Court appointments throughout Europe, while the aristocracy followed suit by maintaining "a private orchestra as an essential part of its retinue"; it was a custom, and only in some instances a matter of personal taste. This patronage was, for the most part, frankly that of master and servant; Haydn, it is true, was highly esteemed at Eisenstadt, and allowed considerable freedom, yet in various ways he must have felt his position a humble one. But he was of a sanguine disposition, and declared that the quiet secluded life which he led at Esterházy forced him to become original. Mr. Hadow's verdict is that "the system in general was not well qualified to raise the dignity of art or to increase the self-respect of the artist," and that statement we fully endorse. Our author's second point, the effect which the "structure of instruments and the careers of virtuosi" had upon the art, is one of considerable importance. Violin playing progressed by rapid strides, while notable performers—Tartini, Veracini, Locatelli, Geminiani, and others—displayed their gifts in various European capitals, and thus, through their music, influenced players and composers. Mr. Hadow notes that advance in technique is apt to lead to pure virtuosity. Possibly, however, artists thus tempted to "treat resource as an end in itself" had not genius enough to make so wise a use of it as was made by such masters as Bach, Tartini, Mozart, or Beethoven.

The volume is supposed to deal with the Viennese period, to which, strictly, Carl Philipp Emanuel Bach does not belong. But his influence on Haydn was so direct and strong that he could not well be omitted; moreover, he laid the foundations of the classical sonata on which Haydn, Mozart, and Beethoven erected such magnificent works. The services which he thus rendered to his art were great, and they have been fully recognized by many historians. But he was something more than a pioneer. Mr. Hadow is fully aware of certain weaknesses in many of his pianoforte sonatas, but later, in speaking of oratorio, he refers to the beauty, emotional and dramatic strength of much of the music in 'Die Israeliten in der Wüste,' a work which he considers "eminently worth reviving at the present day."

Gluck, in connexion with the reform of the opera, naturally has a chapter all to himself. The aims and achievements of that great man are well described; but the author could not be expected to say anything really new about such matters. He points out clearly the different views taken of opera by Gluck and his great successor Mozart. "When I sit down to write an opera," said Gluck, "I endeavour before all things to forget that I am a musician." To Mozart such a confession, says Mr. Hadow, "would have seemed little short of artistic blasphemy." In the account of Schubert's operas the titles are given in a footnote, 'Rosamunde' among them. The next sentence in the text, referring to "the exquisite incidental music which he wrote for Helmine von Chezy's 'Rosamunde,'" shows that that name ought not to have been included in the list. In connexion with oratorio Spohr is, of course, named, and in that branch of music he is described "as the most conspicuous figure between C. P. E. Bach and Mendelssohn." Our author might almost have said the "only" one.

The chapter on 'The Growth of the Sonata' is very clear and instructive. Speaking of the "absence of distinctive themes" in a sonata by Emanuel Bach, Mr. Hadow adds that he was "preoccupied with clearing the outlines of his form." We doubt whether that was the real cause; in Haydn, after Emanuel Bach had well established the form, we occasionally find absence of distinctive themes in the exposition of a sonata movement.

From Emanuel Bach Mr. Hadow proceeds to Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven, and Schubert, and what he has to say respecting their works is for the most part sound and sensible; we cannot, however, understand exactly what he means concerning Beethoven's overtures—viz., that though containing some magnificent music, "they are not comparable as landmarks to his achievement in the stricter forms." The absence, with few exceptions, of technical language, renders the volume acceptable to general as well as musical readers.

Musical Gossip.

THE Bach Choir concert at the Horticultural Hall, Westminster, yesterday week was interesting, but too long. Of the four motets with which the programme opened, Byrd's "Bow Thine ear, O Lord," and Morley's "Nolo mortem peccatoris" were the most striking; they represent a glorious period in the history of British sacred art. S. S. Wesley's anthem for double chorus, "O Lord, Thou art my God," contains some fine music, though the composer's inspiration was not at white heat throughout; anyhow, the work was not heard to best advantage with the accompaniment played on the pianoforte—a necessity in this case, as there is as yet no organ in the building. The motet "Blessing, Glory, Wisdom, and Thanks" was sung, a work formerly, though without good reason, attributed to Bach. In view of the name which the choir bears, a genuine specimen of that master would have been more fitting. The programme included part-songs and various pianoforte solos. Mr.

Leonard Borwick was the pianist, and he gave an artistic rendering of Bach's Chromatic Fantasia and Fugue. Brahms's second set of Variations on a Theme by Paganini served to show his skill, and he is a delightful interpreter of Scarlatti, of whom he played three Allegros; these pieces, nevertheless, seemed to us out of keeping with the general character of the programme. Dr. Walter Davies has a fine choir, and if the balance of tone was not always satisfactory, the singing on the whole was impressive.

Mlle. GUILHERMINA SUGGIA, a performer on the 'cello from Oporto, made her first appearance in London at the Bechstein Hall on Saturday afternoon, under the auspices of the Curtius Concert Club. She played Dvorák's Concerto in E minor, Op. 104, an unwise selection for a début. The music is not truly characteristic of the Bohemian composer, and with pianoforte accompaniment it sounded very dry. Even with interesting works such as the violin concertos of Mendelssohn and Max Bruch the effect under such conditions is dull. Violinists and 'cellists, if they give chamber concerts, would do well, in their own interest, to confine themselves to chamber music. Mlle. Suggia has good technique, and in a Svendsen Romance displayed marked refinement. Mr. Howard-Jones was the pianist, and in short solos by Beethoven, Glazounow, Brahms, and Liszt he created a highly favourable impression. He is a thoroughly sound player and intelligent interpreter.

MR. HAROLD BAUER gave the third and last of a series of three pianoforte recitals at the Æolian Hall on Tuesday afternoon. As regards touch and technique he satisfies all requirements. He played two important pieces by Chopin, the Fantasia in F minor and the Ballade in A flat, and though both performances were very fine, we do not consider Mr. Bauer to the Chopin manner born; his reading especially of the first-named was a little too serious. The rendering of the fine Prélude, Choral et Fugue, by César Franck, was a triumph for the pianist, while in a quiet piece by Arensky he showed refinement, and in a not uninteresting one by Balakireff he proved his complete mastery of the key-board. Mr. Bauer is undoubtedly one of the most satisfactory pianists of the present day.

AT Bechstein Hall last Sunday afternoon was held the inaugural orchestral concert of the newly formed Concert Club. The band, consisting of forty-seven instrumentalists, drawn mainly from the London Symphony Orchestra, was under the direction of Señor Fernandez Arbos, who proved an admirable conductor. Excellent performances were given of the Overture to 'Die Zauberflöte' and Wagner's 'Siegfried Idyll,' the playing being clear and animated. A new and pleasing intermezzo by Señor Arbos, styled 'Arabian Night,' and notable for engaging Spanish rhythms, met with a hearty welcome. Herr Benno Schönberger played Schumann's Pianoforte Concerto.

THE first Monday Subscription Concert at the Æolian Hall this week attracted a good audience. Madame Roger-Miclos, the clever French pianist, and M. Johannes Wolff were the instrumentalists, and Mr. Stanley Adams the vocalist. The programme included the 'Kreutzer' Sonata and Grieg's Sonata for violin and pianoforte in C minor.

MR. BORIS HAMBURG, brother of Mark Hamburg, the pianist, gave a 'cello recital on Wednesday afternoon at the Bechstein Hall. He has good tone and excellent technique. His rendering of a fine Étude by J. L. Duport, also of a Prelude by Bach, both for 'cello solo, proved him to be a sound artist. He played on a fine-toned instrument.

BERLIOZ'S 'Childhood of Christ' was announced for first performance by the Royal Choral Society last Thursday. The English version of the text used was probably the one by Paul England in the new Novello edition of the work. Berlioz's sacred trilogy was produced at Paris in 1854, though one section, 'La Fuite en Égypte,' had already been performed four years previously. Henry F. Chorley translated the poem for an edition published by Cramer in 1855, but the work does not appear to have been heard in England until December 30th, 1880, when it was brought to a hearing at Manchester under the late Sir Charles Hallé.

THE directors of the Philharmonic Society have issued the prospectus of their ninety-fourth season. The following is the list of works to be performed "for the first time at these concerts": Edward German's 'Welsh Rhapsody'; Arthur Herve's tone-poem 'In the East'; Sir A. Mackenzie's new 'Canadian Rhapsody'; Sir C. Stanford's Violin Concerto; César Franck's 'Symphonic Variations' for piano and orchestra; Debussy's 'L'Après-midi d'un Faune'; Saint-Saëns's first 'Cello Concerto, and 'Africa' Fantasia for piano and orchestra; Rimsky-Korsakoff's 'Antar' Symphony; Paul Juon's Symphony in A; and two 'Bohemian Dances' by Alberto Randegger, jun. Pablo Casalo, the Spanish 'cellist, will appear at one of the concerts.

MR. A. SCHULZ-CURTIS announces a Richter Concert at the Queen's Hall on March 27th, in conjunction with the London Symphony Orchestra. The programme will be devoted to Wagner and Beethoven, the latter being represented by his 'Eroica,' given "In Memoriam," a note stating that the composer died on March 27th. According to all accounts, however, Beethoven died shortly before six o'clock on the afternoon of March 26th, 1827.

THE programme of the fourth concert given by Miss Grace Sunderland and Mr. Frank Thistleton, at Broadwood's on January 31st, includes a Quartet Sonata for flute, violin, 'cello, and pianoforte, by Johann Friedrich Fasch (1688-1758), and a Quartet Concerto by Evarista Felice dall' Abaco (1675-1725), first known performances in England.

THE season of opera at Covent Garden will commence on May 1st. Two cycles of the 'Ring' will be given under the direction of Dr. Hans Richter, May 1st, 2nd, 4th, and 6th, and 10th, 12th, 13th, and 15th. 'Das Rheingold' will begin at 8.30; 'Die Walküre' and 'Siegfried' at 5; and 'Götterdämmerung' at 4.30, hours showing that there will be no cuts. Engagements have already been made with Mesdames Morena (of Munich), Wittich, Reini, Knüpfer-Egli, and Kirkby Lunn, and MM. Burrian, Ernst Kraus, van Rooy, Reiss, and Whitehill.

THE degree of Doctor of Music, honoris causa, has been conferred by the Archbishop of Canterbury on Mr. William Stevenson Hoyte, organist and choirmaster of All Saints', Margaret Street, for over six-and-thirty years.

SIR A. C. MACKENZIE will lecture on the music of Bohemian composers at the Royal Institution on Saturdays, February 4th, 11th, and 18th.

The Musical Times for February states that Mr. T. W. Taphouse's books and instruments will shortly be sold at Messrs. Sotheby's.

THE death is announced of Mr. William Stuartson Collard, formerly one of the most active members of the firm of Collard & Collard. His great-uncle, Frederick William Collard, who was in partnership with Muzio Clementi, took out patents in 1811 for notable improvements in the making of pianofortes. W. S. Collard, who was three times Master of the Worshipful Company of Musicians, retired from the business eight years ago. The present head is his brother, Mr. J. Clementi Collard.

Le Ménestrel of January 22nd furnishes details of a scheme for a theatre at Ostend on the lines of the Bayreuth Festspielhaus. The idea originated with Herr van Dyck. The King is strongly in favour of it, and the architects Van Dievoet of Brussels and Stordian of Antwerp have been consulted. About 60,000% would be required for the building of the theatre, and it is stated that nearly half that sum has already been guaranteed.

PERFORMANCES NEXT WEEK.

SUN. Concert Club, 3.30, Bechstein Hall.
— Sunday Society Concert, 3.30, Queen's Hall.
— Sunday League, 7, Queen's Hall.
MON. Subscription Concert, 8.30, Aeolian Hall.
TUES. Miss G. Sunderland and Mr. F. Thistleton's Concert, 1 Broadwood's.
THURS. Miss Maud MacCarthy's Concert, 8, Queen's Hall.
— Miss Katie Moss's Vocal Recital, 8.50, Bechstein Hall.
SAT. Mr. Chappell's Ballad Concert, 3, Queen's Hall.
— Mr. Lamond's Pianoforte Recital, 3.50, Bechstein Hall.

DRAMA

THE WEEK.

HIS MAJESTY'S.—'Much Ado about Nothing,' played in Three Acts.

AVENUE.—'The Chosen People,' a Play in Three Acts. By Eugen Tschirikoff.

TERRY'S.—'Mrs. Dering's Divorce,' a Comedy in Three Acts. By Percy Fendall.

IMPERIAL.—'King Henry V.,' played in Four Acts.

THE revival at His Majesty's of 'Much Ado about Nothing' differs little from previous representations of Shakspearean comedy at the same house. Splendid as a spectacle, it is also respectable as interpretation. More than one character is played as well as can be hoped under existing conditions, and the performance has an ensemble such as was rarely, if ever, obtainable in the days of Macready and Charles Kean, the remotest, virtually, to which modern memory extends. Against the elaboration of the whole it is futile to protest. In presence of the modern taste for pageantry, a management which refused to supply it would simply court disaster. It may justly be urged that no dramatist of Tudor times—Shakspeare himself not excepted—would have dreamt of refusing spectacular effects such as are now supplied, had there been a chance of obtaining them. The scenic effects and the accessories generally are, moreover, the best in their way, nothing in them being trivial or tawdry. Music such as is supplied by Mr. Raymond Roze is in the full sense illuminative; the scenery conveys happily an idea of life in Sicily in the sixteenth century, dress and armour are characteristic of a period of extreme luxury, and the revels that are exhibited are characteristic as well as beautiful. The only thing we have, perhaps ungraciously, to urge, is that we have been more impressed by the beauty and poetry of the play when we have seen it in a simpler setting.

Some of Mr. Tree's innovations are to be commended. So soon as we realize that the scene of the mimic action is Messina, and not the Bankside; that the characters are Italians and Spaniards, not Englishmen of the Tudor epoch; and that the time of year, as is distinctly stated in the play, is July, the appropriateness of making the revels take place al fresco is recognized. Gain attends the added importance assigned to the love interest between Claudio and Hero, into which is infused more romance and passion than have previously been allotted it. "We are in love's world" in the play, and love's magic is in the air in which a transformation such as that of Benedick and Beatrice is accomplished. Wholly commendable is the restored scene in Hero's chamber, in which the future bride is dressed by Margaret and Ursula for her prospective nuptials. Of the details introduced into the action, some are helpful and others are trivial. Change for its own sake is no more to be approved in the acting than in the printed text. As a whole the performance commended itself warmly to the public, a fact that in itself conveys no particular message to the student. It may be seen with pleasure, and accepted as indicative of the kind of entertainment which is henceforward to be expected. Mr. Tree imparted to Benedick much humour. Miss Winifred Emery's Beatrice had both espièglerie and tenderness, and was a fine piece of comedy with something of the grand style. Mr. Basil Gill as Claudio and Miss Miriam Clements as Hero were excellent. Dogberry, Verges, Don Pedro, Don John, and Leonato found good interpretation.

To the initiative of the German company now in possession of the Great Queen Street Theatre is due the appearance at the Avenue of a "St. Petersburg dramatic company" in a characteristically Russian play. The venture is, indeed, announced as "under the auspices of Mr. J. T. Grein," founder and arch-patron of German comedy in England. Whether the motive of the organizers of the experiment is wholly benevolent, or whether it is an outcome of a species of tension between St. Petersburg and Berlin, and has an oblique purpose of showing the superiority of Teutonic to Slav wit, we know not. The experiment itself has moderate interest, and is less satisfactory than that of the Rotterdam dramatic company which in 1880 introduced us, in 'Anne-Mie,' to a drama of domestic life of palpitating interest, and in Charlotte Beersmans to the best of many imitators of Ristori. The motive in 'The Chosen People,' originally called 'The Jews,' is chiefly political, which may account for the prohibition of its performance on Russian boards, and its aim is to show Hebrew aspiration to a national life as embodied in Zionism, together with Russian persecution of the Jew. It is unjust to pronounce an opinion upon a work on the presentation of a life known only by report. It is, however, to speak favourably of the acting to say that it conformed to German methods rather than English.

First produced at Providence, Rhode Island, a couple of years ago, 'Mrs. Dering's Divorce' has been since seen in England in many country and suburban theatres, and has at length found its way to the West-End. It is one of those pieces, of growth completely modern, the action of which begins after the pronouncement of a decree nisi, and shows the means by which the subjugation of the husband is re-effected, and relations once found intolerable are resumed. The condition of affairs—first perhaps indicated in the 'Divorçons' of MM. Sardou and de Najac—has been dealt with in many subsequent plays, the latest and perhaps the most familiar of which is 'The Freedom of Suzanne.' In that of Mr. Fendall the treatment is inexpert and unconvincing. No reason for separation exists, and consequently no reason for reunion. People who love one another do not take steps to obtain a collusive divorce just because they have fallen on evil days—or, if they do so, lose all claim upon sympathy. The raison d'être of the piece seems to consist in the fact that it exhibits Mrs. Langtry in a "society part." In this it obtains a measure of triumph, since, granted that such a character exists, the actress shows its lighter phases with some success.

Four years after its first exhibition at the Lyceum Mr. Lewis Waller revives at the Imperial his version of 'King Henry V.' Some changes of no special importance have been made in the cast, the principal consisting of the substitution of Miss Mary Rorke for Miss Lily Hanbury as Chorus. Mr. Waller plays with much vigour and some passion as the monarch, and Miss Sarah Brocke remains acceptable as Katharine. The entire performance has many elements of popularity, and is, indeed, creditable in most respects. Especially commendable are the scenes of Pistol with Nym and Bardolph, which, while free from the extravagance regrettably noticeable in many recent performances of Shakspearean comedy, have abundance of vigour and vivacity.

The Arden Shakespeare: The Taming of the Shrew. Edited by R. Warwick Bond. (Methuen & Co.)—Twelve volumes have now been issued of the "Arden Shakespeare," which we have from time to time pronounced charming in its general excellence of design and performance. The present issue maintains in all respects the character of its predecessors, and, indeed, of the competence of Mr. Bond for the task he has fulfilled there could be no doubt; it is sufficient to refer to his recent exhaustive edition of Lyly's 'Works,' and his still more recent large share in the first volume of the variorum edition of Beaumont and Fletcher's plays, now in course of publication by Messrs. Bell and Bullen. Editorial care is not the less required because what may be called the farcical comedy of 'The Taming of the Shrew' occupies but a very inferior position in Shakspeare's works, and is admittedly not entirely his.

Founded in the first place on the old play, author unknown, called 'The Taming of a Shrew'; then revised, with additions from Gascoigne's 'Supposes,' the author being again unknown, and the revision itself non-extant, it was finally licked into the shape we now possess by Shakspeare himself. Such we ourselves believe to be its genesis, and such we believe to be the generally received opinion of Shakspearean scholars, though speculation, much of it self-destructive, has been rife on the subject. All that is known, or has been suggested, of its origin, is duly set forth by Mr. Bond in his elaborate introduction to the play.

The progress of the "Arden Shakespeare" has hitherto been somewhat slow. Designed and begun in 1899 by Prof. Dowden, and under his general editorship—he himself has contributed three volumes to the series—it is now under the general care of Mr. W. J. Craig, the editor of the 'King Lear' volume. All the remaining plays are now in progress under the care of the several editors to whom they have been assigned, so that a more rapid issue may shortly be expected.

Dramatic Gossip.

THE Shakspeare star is in the ascendant. In addition to the revivals of 'Much Ado about Nothing' and 'King Henry V.' which we this week chronicle, 'Romeo and Juliet' is to be given at the Imperial, and 'Hamlet,' with Mr. H. B. Irving as the Dane, at the Adelphi.

Another Hamlet is also promised, that of Mr. Martin Harvey, which has been seen in Dublin, and will be given in London on May 15th.

THE revival of Shakspeare is less due to the renewal of interest in repertory theatres, many schemes for which, of no great promise, are current, than to the impossibility of securing dramatic novelties fulfilling the requirements of an ignorant and exigent public.

It is a subject of much regret that Miss Viola Tree has been prevented by illness from appearing as Hero in her father's revival of 'Much Ado about Nothing.' The part was taken at shortest notice by Miss Miriam Clements.

'LE PATRIMOINE,' a three-act comedy of M. Ambroise Janvier, produced at the Odéon, shows the attempts to protect the fortune of a girl whose father, a pronounced libertine, is spending it on his mistresses. The latest of these, Mrs. Williams, an extravagant American, forms so strong a sentiment for the girl whose dot she is in the way of consuming, that she reduces her tariff to a minimum. This disagreeable work was not specially well played.

'PETITE PESTE,' a three-act comedy by M. Romain Coolus, given at the Vaudeville, has also an uncomfortable plot. Marceline, the heroine, played by Mlle. Marthe Regnier, elects, at the fall of the curtain, to be the mistress rather than the wife of a middle-aged viveur, from whom she receives an offer of marriage.

MADAME BERNHARDT has accepted from M. Leloir, of the Comédie Française, a four-act comedy, which she will produce towards the close of the season.

At the Théâtre de l'Œuvre M. Lugne-Poe promises 'La Fille de Jorio,' translated from D'Annunzio; 'Dionysos,' by M. Gasquet; and a rendering of the 'Elektra' of Herr Hugo de Hofmansthal, in which Mlle. Suzanne Desprès will play the heroine.

THE Grillparzer Prize has been awarded to Gerhart Hauptmann for his play 'Der arme Heinrich.' This is the third time that he has won it, it having been bestowed on him in previous years for 'Fuhrmann Henschel' and 'Hannele.'

MISCELLANEA

'THE LAIRDS OF FIFE.'

14, Cavendish Place, Cavendish Square, W.

CAN any of your readers explain a copy of this book which has lately come into my possession? The title-page is as follows:—

"The | Lairds of Fife | a Tale | By the author of 'Marriage.' | Veluti in Speculum | In Three Volumes | Vol. I. | Edinburgh: | Printed For Constable & Co. | 1830."

The point, of course, is that this title-page ascribes the authorship to Miss Ferrier, the writer of 'Marriage.' There was an earlier edition, which omits the words "A Tale by the Author of 'Marriage,'" adds after Constable's name "and Hurst, Chance & Co., London," and is dated 1828.

The earlier edition is in the British Museum; the later is not. I can find no mention of the book in Halkett and Laing, or in Cushing, and I can find no reference to it in any bibliographical work, or in Miss Ferrier's 'Correspondence,' edited by J. A. Doyle in 1848.

All this negative evidence would seem to show that Miss Ferrier had nothing to do with the volumes. Yet, as she was living until 1854, and actually published 'Destiny' in Edinburgh in 1831, it seems strange that she should not have objected to an incorrect ascription.

CHAS. P. JOHNSON.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.—F. R.—F. P. W.—J. W.—P. A. S.—received.
K. M.—Later.
G. E. W.—Will insert in new form.

MESSRS. BELL'S RECENT BOOKS.

COMPLETE CATALOGUE POST FREE
ON APPLICATION.

A CHEAPER EDITION OF ROSE'S

'LIFE OF NAPOLEON.'

LIFE OF NAPOLEON I. By J. Holland

ROSE, Litt.D., late Scholar of Christ's College, Cambridge. Largely compiled from New Materials taken from the British Official Records. In 2 vols. post 8vo, with Maps and Plans. Fourth Edition. 10s. net.

ORIGINAL EDITION, with numerous Illustrations, 2 vols. large post 8vo, 18s. net.

NAPOLEONIC STUDIES. By John

HOLLAND ROSE, Litt.D., Author of 'The Life of Napoleon I.' Post 8vo, with Maps, 7s. 6d. net.

NAPOLEON and ENGLAND, 1803—

1813. A Study from Unprinted Documents. By P. COQUELLE. Translated from the French by GORDON D. KNOX, Balliol College, Oxford. With a Preface by Dr. J. HOLLAND ROSE, Author of 'The Life of Napoleon I.' &c. Post 8vo, 5s. net.

NAPOLEON'S CAPTIVITY in RELATION to SIR HUDSON LOWE. By R. C. SEATON, M.A., late Fellow of Jesus College, Cambridge. With a Portrait of Sir H. Lowe. Post 8vo, 5s. net.

The FOUNDATIONS of MODERN

EUROPE. Twelve Lectures delivered at the University of London. By EMIL REICH, Doctor Juris, Author of 'A New Student's Atlas of English History,' 'Græco-Roman Institutions,' 'History of Civilisation,' &c. Large post 8vo, 5s. net.

CHEAPER EDITION OF WHEATLEY'S 'PEPYS'

The DIARY of SAMUEL PEPYS, M.A.

F.R.S., Clerk of the Works and Secretary to the Admiralty. Transcribed from the Shorthand MS. in the Pepysian Library, Magdalene College, Cambridge, by the Rev. MYNORS BRIGHT, M.A., late Fellow and President of the College. With Lord Braybrooke's Notes. Edited, with Additions, by HENRY B. WHEATLEY, F.S.A. In 8 vols. post 8vo, 5s. net each.

ORIGINAL EDITION, in 10 vols. demy 8vo, with Portraits and other Illustrations, 10s. 6d. net each.

ECONOMIC INQUIRIES and

STUDIES. By Sir ROBERT GIFFEN, K.C.B. 2 vols. demy 8vo, 21s. net.

NYASALAND under the FOREIGN OFFICE. By H. L. DUFF, of the British Central Africa Administration. With Illustrations from Photographs and Sketches by the Author, and a Map of Nyasaland. Demy 8vo, 12s. net.

GEORGE MORLAND: his Life and Works. By GEORGE C. WILLIAMSON, Litt.D. With 48 Collotype Plates and a Frontispiece in Colours. Small colombier 8vo, 25s. net.

Also a LARGE-PAPER EDITION of 100 Copies, printed on Hand-made Paper, with the Plates on Japanese Vellum. Crown folio, 37. 3s. net.

WILLIAM BLAKE: a Study of his Life and Art Work. By IRENE LANGRIDGE. With 43 Illustrations. Small 4to, 10s. 6d. net.

SAMUEL COUSINS. By A. Whitman,

Author of 'The Print Collectors' Handbook,' 'S. W. Reynolds,' &c. With 32 Collotype Plates and a Photogravure Frontispiece. Small colombier 8vo, 25s. net.

HOW to COLLECT OLD FUR-

NITURE. By FREDERICK LITCHFIELD, Author of 'Illustrated History of Furniture,' &c. With 40 Plates and numerous other Illustrations. Third Edition. Post 8vo, 6s. net.

HOW to IDENTIFY PORTRAIT

MINIATURES. By GEORGE C. WILLIAMSON, Litt.D. With Chapters on the Painting of Miniatures, by ALYN WILLIAMS, R.B.A. With 40 Plates, illustrating upwards of 70 Miniatures. Post 8vo, 6s. net.

HOW to IDENTIFY OLD CHINA.

A Handbook for Collectors of English Pottery and Porcelain. By Mrs. WILLOUGHBY HODGSON. With 40 Plates and numerous Reproductions of Marks. Sixth Thousand. Post 8vo, 5s. net.

HOW to LOOK at PICTURES. By ROBERT CLAREMONT WITT, M.A. With 35 Illustrations. Fourth Edition. Post 8vo, 5s. net.

BRITISH ARTISTS SERIES.

NEW VOLUME.—Post 8vo, with 2 Photogravure Plates and 95 other Illustrations, 7s. 6d. net.

DANTE GABRIEL ROSSETTI. By

H. C. MARILLIER.

Previously published in this Series:—REYNOLDS—BURNES—JONES—GAINSBOROUGH—LEIGHTON—MILLAIS—ENGLISH PRE-RAPHAELITE PAINTERS.

BELL'S MINIATURE SERIES OF GREAT WRITERS.

Pott 8vo, illustrated, cloth, 1s. net; or in limp leather, with Photogravure Frontispiece, 2s. net.

Now ready:—CHAUCER. By Rev. W. Tuckwell.—COLERIDGE. By Dr. Garnett, C.B.—SHAKESPEARE. By Alfred Ewen.—DE QUINCEY. By H. S. Salt.—DICKENS. By W. Teignmouth Shore. Others to follow.

London: GEORGE BELL & SONS,
Portugal Street, Lincoln's Inn, W.C.

CHATTO & WINDUS, PUBLISHERS.

(FULL CATALOGUES FREE.)

MR. SWINBURNE'S POETICAL WORKS.

THE COLLECTED LIBRARY EDITION IN SIX VOLUMES,

Price 36s. net, is NOW COMPLETE.

NEW STORIES BY THE AUTHOR OF 'THE GRAND BABYLON HOTEL.'

TALES of the FIVE TOWNS. By Arnold Bennett, Author of 'Anna of the Five Towns,' &c.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"All the stories are of so good a quality that nobody need despair of the fate of the short story so long as such fine things are produced."—Scotsman.

A STORY OF THE NAPOLEONIC CAMPAIGNS.

FLEUR-DE-CAMP: a Daughter of France. By A. Godric Campbell. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

The ISLAND of TRANQUIL DELIGHTS. By C. Warren Stoddard, Author of 'Summer

Cruising in the South Seas.' With Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 6s. net.

HUMOURS of CYCLING. By Jerome K. Jerome, H. G. Wells, Barry Pain, Clarence Rook, W. PETT RIDGE, J. F. SULLIVAN, and others. A NEW EDITION. Crown 8vo, cloth, 1s. net.

A STRONG NOVEL.

The ENDLESS HERITAGE. By Chris Healy, Author of 'Heirs of Reuben.' Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"It is not too much to say that there are not half a dozen known authors who could have produced this remarkable book.....The touch of personal experience is strong in every page, and compels the interest of the reader from start to finish..... Altogether, Mr. Healy may be congratulated on a novel of exceptional power and merit."—Pull Mall Gazette.

ON FEBRUARY 16, crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

HEIRS of REUBEN. By Chris Healy, Author of 'The Endless Heritage.'

IN MARCH, crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

A SPOILER of MEN. By Richard Marsh, Author of 'The Beetle.'

IN MARCH, crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

The YOUNGEST MISS BROWN. By Florence Warden, Author of 'The House on the Marsh.'

The CLOISTER and the HEARTH. By Charles Reade.

Édition de Luxe. With 16 Photogravure and 84 Half-Tone Illustrations by MATT B. HEWERDINE. Small 4to, cloth, 6s. net.

PHIL MAY'S SKETCH-BOOK. Containing 54

Humorous Cartoons. Crown folio, cloth, 2s. 6d.

A DICTIONARY of the DRAMA. A Guide to the Plays, Playwrights, Players, and Playhouses of the United Kingdom and America, from the Earliest Times to the Present. Vol. I. (A to G). By W. DAVENPORT ADAMS. Demy 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d. net.

STUDIES in ASTRONOMY. By J. Ellard Gore, F.R.A.S.

With 8 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 6s.

WORKS BY RICHARD A. PROCTOR.

CHEAPER ISSUE, crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. each.

EASY STAR LESSONS. With Star Maps for every Night in the Year.

FLOWERS of the SKY. With 55 Illustrations.

FAMILIAR SCIENCE STUDIES.

MYSTERIES of TIME and SPACE. With 24 Illustrations.

The UNIVERSE of SUNS. With 11 Illustrations.

SATURN and its SYSTEM. With 13 Plates. Demy 8vo, cloth, 6s.

The PASTON LETTERS, 1422-1509. Edited, with

Introduction and Notes, by JAMES GAIRDNER. A LIMITED LIBRARY EDITION (500 sets), 6 vols. square demy 8vo, art linen, gilt top, 3l. 15s. the set. (Sold only in Sets.)

SHORTLY, crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 6s.

The WILD MARQUIS: Life and Adventures of Armand

Guerry de Maubreuil. By ERNEST A. VIZETELLY, Author of 'With Zola in England.'

SHORTLY, 2 vols. demy 8vo, cloth, 21s.

The LIFE of CHARLES DICKENS as Revealed in his Writings. By PERCY FITZGERALD, F.S.A.

NEW THREE-AND-SIXPENNY NOVELS.

The MASSARENES. By Ouida.

The LADY of LYNN. By Sir Walter Besant. With 12 Illustrations by G. DEMAIN HAMMOND.

The ALABASTER BOX. By Sir Walter Besant.

The CLYFFARDS of CLYFFE. By James Payn.

A QUEEN of CURDS and CREAM. By Dorothea GERARD.

AS LUCK WOULD HAVE IT. By William Westall.

THE ST. MARTIN'S LIBRARY.

Pott 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 2s. net each; leather, gilt edges, 3s. net each.

ACROSS the PLAINS. By Robert Louis Stevenson.

NATURE NEAR LONDON. By Richard Jefferies.

BY SIR WALTER BESANT.

London, All Sort and Conditions of Men.

BY HALL CAINE.

The Deemster.

BY WILKIE COLLINS.

The Woman in White.

BY DANIEL DEFOE.

Robinson Crusoe. (The Two Parts.) With 37 Illustrations by GEORGE CRUIKSHANK.

BY THOMAS HARDY.

Under the Greenwood Tree.

BY BRET HARTE.

Condensed Novels.

BY OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES.

The Autocrat of the Breakfast Table. With Illustrations by J. G. THOMSON.

BY RICHARD JEFFERIES.

The Life of the Fields.

The Open Air.

BY CHARLES READE.

The Cloister and the Hearth.

'It is Never Too Late to Mend.'

BY ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON.

Memories and Portraits.

Virginibus Puerisque.

Men and Books.

New Arabian Nights.

The Pocket R. L. S.: Favourite Passages from STEVENSON'S Works.

BY MARK TWAIN.

Sketches.

BY WALTON AND COTTON.

The Complete Angler.

Fcap. 8vo, cloth, 1s. net each; leather, 1s. 6d. net each.

TWO LITTLE WOODEN SHOES. By Ouida.

The FROZEN DEEP. By Wilkie Collins.

The WANDERING HEIR. By Charles Reade.

POPULAR SIXPENNY COPYRIGHT NOVELS.

The following are NEW in this form, and are now in course of issue.

DOROTHY FORSTER. By Sir Walter Besant.

LOST SIR MASSINGBERD. By James Payn.

GOD and the MAN. By Robert Buchanan.

RED SPIDER. By S. Baring Gould.

CHANDOS. By Ouida. | PARIS. By Émile Zola.

A BIRD of PASSAGE. By B. M. Croker.

A TERRIBLE TEMPTATION. By Charles Reade.

London: CHATTO &amp; WINDUS, 111, St. Martin's Lane, W.C.

MESSRS. J. M. DENT &amp; CO.'S LIST.

The Complete Works of
LEO TOLSTOY.To be completed in 24 vols. at the rate of Two every Month.*

Edited and Translated by Prof. LEO WIENER,
Professor of Slavic Languages and Literature at Harvard University, and Author of 'An Anthology of Russian Literature,' 'Yiddish Literature in the Nineteenth Century,' &c.

FIRST TWO VOLUMES NOW READY.

Vol. I.—CHILDHOOD, BOYHOOD,
YOUTH. 1852-1857.Vol. II.—The COSSACKS, SEVAS-
TOPOL, &c. 1852-1856.ORDINARY EDITION, price 3s. 6d. net per vol.
Sold separately.LARGE-PAPER EDITION, price 10s. 6d. net per vol.
Sold in Sets only.Please write for a Prospectus.Les Classiques FrançaisEdited by DANIEL S. O'CONNOR.

Pott 8vo, cloth, 1s. 6d. net; limp lambskin, 2s. 6d. net.

Atala, Rene, et le Dernier Abencerage.

Par CHATEAUBRIAND. Préface du Vicomte MEL-
CHIOR DE VOGUE, de l'Académie Française.

CONTES CHOISIS de BALZAC.

Préface de PAUL BOURGET, de l'Académie Française.

Please write for a Prospectus.

The Temple Autobiographies.

NEW VOLUME.

The AUTOBIOGRAPHY of BENJAMIN FRANKLIN. Edited, with a Sketch of his Later Life, by W. MACDONALD. Illustrated.
Long fcap. 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

London:

J. M. DENT &amp; CO. 29, Bedford Street, W.C.

JUST PUBLISHED.

A GEOLOGICAL MAP OF CYPRUS.

By C. V. BELLAMY, F.G.S. M.I.C.E.

Printed in Colours; size 30 by 22 inches; scale 5½ miles to an inch (1:348,480).Accompanied by a 16-page pamphlet explaining briefly the characteristics of the various formations as they occur.

This Map and the accompanying Key thereto are the result of observations extending over a period of five years during which the compiler was stationed in the Island.

Prices: Coloured Sheet, 6s.; post free, 6s. 5d.
Mounted to fold in case, 8s. 6d.; post free, 8s. 9d.

JUST PUBLISHED.

STANFORD'S GEOLOGICAL ATLAS OF GREAT BRITAIN.

With Plates of Characteristic Fossils.

Preceded by a Description of the Geological Structure of Great Britain and its Counties, and of the Features Observable along the Principal Lines of Railway.

By HORACE B. WOODWARD, F.R.S. F.G.S.

Comprising 34 Coloured Maps and 16 Double-Page Plates of Fossils, 149 pages of Text, illustrated by 17 Sections and Views.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 12s. 6d. net.

"Crammed full of information of the best quality.....The work reflects credit on author, editor, and publisher, and deserves to prove a success."—Geological Magazine.

Detailed Prospectus on application.

London: EDWARD STANFORD,
12, 13, and 14, Long Acre, W.C.
Geographer to His Majesty the King.

DIGBY, LONG &amp; CO.'S NEW LIST.

THE ADVENTURES OF A NAVAL OFFICER.

By Capt. CHARLES HUNTER, R.N.

Edited by Sir SPENSER ST. JOHN, G.C.M.G.

In crown 8vo, cloth gilt, price 6s.

Daily Mail—"The exciting story of part of the life of the author spent in Borneo."Glasgow Herald—"The book presents to us a varied and lively picture of the manners and customs of North Borneo. An interesting and exciting story."

NEW SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.

The DOLL'S DANCE. By C. Forestier

WALKER, Author of 'The Chameleon,' &amp;c.

Pall Mall Gazette—"A well-told and exciting story."Daily Telegraph—"Is lightly and brightly written."Morning Post—"An excellent love story."The LUCK of BELLA BARTON. By

G. W. APPLETON, Author of 'François the Valet.'

With 6 Full-Page Illustrations by C. KEMP TEBBY.

Scotsman—"An exciting bit of fiction."Pall Mall Gazette—"As a specimen of the galloping novel of police adventure and mystery, 'The Luck of Bella Barton' commands unstinted admiration. If we must have sensational literature, it would be pleasant to find more of it so cleverly designed as 'The Luck of Bella Barton.'"The REDEMPTION of DAMIAN

GIER. By WINIFRIDE TRAFFORD TAUNTON,

Author of 'Silent Dominion,' &amp;c.

Morning Advertiser—"An absorbing story. The authoress has already made a name for herself as a clever writer, but she has surpassed herself in the present instance....A book which will not easily be forgotten."Literary World—"Powerful is this weird story, and it is hard to lay it down until the end is reached."CELIA'S FORTUNE.

By ADELINE SERGEANT.

Times—"A well-told story."Scotsman—"Celia is a sweet and lovable heroine."Outlook—"The novel shows Miss Sergeant's power at its ripest."Manchester Courier—"Well written, and full of vigorous interest."FAVOURS FROM FRANCE.

By SARAH TYTLER.

World—"Miss Sarah Tytler is always acceptable, and has seldom been more certain to please than by her latest novel. Miss Tytler has evolved a charming story."

In crown 8vo, cloth gilt, price 7s. 6d. net.

The DIVINA COMMEDIA of DANTE.

Translated into English Verse by C. POTTER

Aberdeen Press—"This translation has led us to read again the great poem of Dante. It is a translation to be read with pleasure and profit. The verse in English has music and rhythm, it glides easily along, and it bears with it the meaning of the poet in such a measure that the English reader may readily grasp it."Liverpool Courier—"Mr. Potter's translation is well written and pleasant to read."

London: DIGBY, LONG &amp; CO. 18, Bouverie St., E.C.

NOTES AND QUERIES.*GENERAL INDEXES.*THE FOLLOWING ARE STILL IN STOCK:—

GENERAL INDEX, £. s. d.

FOURTH SERIES ... 3 3 0

GENERAL INDEX,

SIXTH SERIES ... 0 6 0

GENERAL INDEX,

SEVENTH SERIES ... 0 6 0

GENERAL INDEX,

EIGHTH SERIES ... 0 6 0

For Copies by post an additional Threepence is charged.

JOHN C. FRANCIS,

Notes and Queries Office,

11, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

AS AUTHORIZED TO BE USED BY BRITISH SUBJECTS.

THE

NATIONAL FLAG,

BEING

THE UNION JACK.

COPIES OF

NOTES AND QUERIES

For JUNE 30, 1900,

Can still be had, containing an Account of the Flag, with

Coloured Illustration according to Scale.

JOHN C. FRANCIS,

Notes and Queries Office, Bream's Buildings, E.C.

"I'll note you in my book of memory."—SHAKESPEARE.

S E C C O T I N E
S E C C O T I N E Regd.
S E C C O T I N E Trade Mark.

Sticks everything.

FREE SAMPLE

From the Sole Proprietors:

McCAW, STEVENSON &amp; ORR, LIMITED, Belfast and London.

In Chaps and Chilblains

VINOLIA CREAM

affords instant relief.

1s. 1½d. and 1s. 9d. per Box.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

The best remedy for

ACIDITY of the STOMACH, HEARTBURN,

HEADACHE, AND INDIGESTION.

And Safest Aperient for Delicate Constitutions,

Ladies, Children, and Infants.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

MR. NASH'S LIST.

A BOOK WHICH SHOULD BE IN EVERY LIBRARY.

NOW READY, large crown 8vo, price 7s. 6d.

SPANISH INFLUENCE ON ENGLISH LITERATURE.

By MARTIN HUME,
Examiner in Spanish in the University of London.

STANDARD.—"Major Hume's volume is a most valuable contribution to literary history, and an example of English critical scholarship at its best."

MORNING POST.—"A fascinating book—fascinating, that is, for readers of literary tastes."

READY ON WEDNESDAY, February 1.
Demy 8vo, price 7s. 6d.

THE TRUTH ABOUT THE TSAR,

And the Present State of Russia.

By CARL JOUBERT,
Author of 'Russia as it Really Is.'

** As the demand for this volume will be enormous, the public should order it at once from their bookseller or librarian. Mr. Carl Joubert has lived nine years in Russia, and he knows more about the internal condition of the country than any other writer on the subject. Special information for this new book has been supplied by officials who are to-day in the entourage of the Tsar.

READY SHORTLY.

Demy 8vo, with Portraits, price 12s. 6d.

WITH THE RUSSIANS IN PEACE AND WAR.

Recollections of a Military Attaché.

By Col. the Hon. F. A. WELLESLEY,
Formerly British Military Attaché in Russia.

SECOND IMPRESSION NEXT WEEK.

Demy 8vo, 2 vols. price 24s. net.

THE PRIVATE LIFE OF TWO EMPERORS,

William II. of Germany and Francis Joseph of Austria.

POPULAR SIX-SHILLING NOVELS SOPHY BUNCE.

By THOMAS COBB.

[Shortly.]

THE OTHER WORLD.

By F. FRANKFORT MOORE.

THE GOLDEN THREAD.

By TOM GALLON.

THE LETTERS WHICH NEVER REACHED HIM.

ANONYMOUS.

[Fifth Edition.]

London: EVELEIGH NASH, 32, Bedford Street.

HARPER'S FOR FEBRUARY,

NOW READY.

Abridged Contents.

RADIUM THE CAUSE OF THE EARTH'S HEAT.

By Prof. E. RUTHERFORD, F.R.S.

SPECIAL MESSENGER. A Story.

By ROBT. W. CHAMBERS.

THE YOUTH OF MARY STUART.

(An Unpublished MS.)

By HENRY W. LONGFELLOW.

FLANAGAN AND STEVEY TODD. A Story.

By ARTHUR COLTON.

DO ANIMALS THINK?

By JOHN BURROUGHS.

THE MARRIAGE OF WILLIAM ASHE.

By Mrs. HUMPHRY WARD.

THE GREAT LA SALLE.

By HENRY LOOMIS NELSON.

THE WORD BUSINESS.

By RICHARD LE GALLIENNE.

STUDIES IN MARINE BIOLOGY.

By W. S. HARWOOD.

"THE LAND OF A HUNDRED CASTLES" (WALES).

By ERNEST RHYS.

Other Short Stories, &c., and

A PROFUSION OF ILLUSTRATIONS.

PRICE ONE SHILLING.

NEW BOOKS.

THE MARATHON MYSTERY.

By BURTON E. STEVENSON,

Author of 'The Holladay Case.'

Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 6s.

A tale of mystery and its unravelling by non-professional detectives of striking ingenuity—a newspaper reporter and a lawyer's clerk. The plot is unusual, full of surprises, and the handling is masterful.

RED HUNTERS AND THE ANIMAL PEOPLE.

By C. A. EASTMAN ("Chiyesa").

Crown 8vo, illustrated, cloth extra, 5s.

The author, a cultured and talented Sioux Indian, has here collected the legends of his people, which show how the race has been imbued with the belief in the brotherhood of the "animal people" to man. They are full of a quaint humour, pathos, and tragedy, and always show a close communion with nature and "the great mystery."

THE STRATEGY OF GREAT RAILROADS.

By FRANK H. SPEARMAN.

Crown 8vo, 11 Maps, 7s. 6d.

During the last five years extraordinary struggles have arisen between the contending financial interests for supremacy in control among American railroads. The absorbing story of the strategy of those fights is set forth concisely in this volume, which has real fascination.

HARPER & BROTHERS, 45, Albemarle Street, W.

Mr. JOHN LANE desires to call attention to a volume which he has just published as a Tercentenary Memorial of the first appearance of 'Don Quixote,' namely, a new LIFE OF CERVANTES, by Mr. ALBERT F. CALVERT, Author of 'Impressions of Spain' and 'The Alhambra.'

THE LIFE OF CERVANTES.

By A. F. CALVERT,

Author of 'Impressions of Spain' and 'The Alhambra.'

With numerous Illustrations, reproduced from Portraits, Title-Pages of Early Editions, &c.

Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

Now ready at all Libraries, Booksellers', and Railway Bookstalls.

A FASCINATING VOLUME ON THE GREAT MUHAMMADAN PILGRIMAGE.

WITH THE PILGRIMS TO MECCA.

The Great Pilgrimage, A.H. 1318; A.D. 1902. By HADJI KILIAN, M.R.A.S., Special Correspondent of the Morning Post, and WILFRID SPARROCK. With an Introduction by Prof. VAMBERY, and numerous illustrations. Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d. net. [Ready February 3.]

6s. TWO NEWSIX-SHILLING NOVELS. 6s.

AN AMERICAN HEIRESS AND HER SUITORS.

HELEN OF TROY, N.Y.

HELEN OF TROY, N.Y.

By WILFRID SCARBOROUGH JACKSON, Author of 'Nine Points of the Law.'

A TALE OF THE AMERICAN CIVIL WAR.

BEFORE THE CRISIS.

BEFORE THE CRISIS.

By F. B. MOTT. [Ready Feb. 3.]

"THE IMPERATIVE BREATH OF SONG."

THE POEMS OF WILLIAM WATSON.

Edited and Arranged, with an Introduction, by J. A. SPENDER. 2 vols. crown 8vo, with Portrait and many New Poems, 9s. net.

TIMES.—"William Watson is, above all things, an artist who is proud of his calling and conscientious in every syllable that he writes. To appreciate his work you must take it as a whole, for he is in the line of the high priests of poetry, reared, like Ion, in the shadow of Delphic presences and memories, and weighing every word of his utterance before it is given to the world."

MUSA VERTICORDIA.

By FRANCIS COUTTS. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

ACADEMY.—"Mr. Coutts stands out head and shoulders from the generality of our modern minor poets in that, in addition to its technical excellence, his verse strikes a strongly individual note.....The 'Musa Verticordia,' with which the volume opens, reminds us of Milton by the sustained majesty of both its thought and its rhythm. 'There shall be Weeping'.....is one of the best short lyrics we have seen in recent years."

JUST THE BOOK FOR A SCHOOL PRIZE IN NATURAL HISTORY.

BIRDS BY LAND AND SEA.

By J. M. BORASTON. With numerous Illustrations from Photographs by the Author. Demy 8vo, 11s. 6d. net.

R. L. (in NATURE).—"If it be said that this notice is purely commendatory, and contains nothing in the way of criticism, the reply is that we have found nothing to criticize or condemn. It is a real nature-study."

NATURE-STUDY.—"Truly a delightful book."

ATHENÆUM.—"The illustrations are so exquisite that it is difficult to select any for special praise."

LITERARY WORLD.—"We particularly wish to call the attention of ornithologists, parents, and schoolmasters to this charming book."

JOHN LANE, Publisher, London and New York.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS' SPRING ANNOUNCEMENTS.

FRENCH CLASSICS FOR ENGLISH READERS.

Edited by ADOLPHE COHN, LL.B., and CURTIS HIDDEN PAGE, Ph.D.

Six Volumes. The Works of the following Authors, are in immediate preparation:—

RABELAIS, MONTAIGNE, MOLIÈRE (2 vols.), BEAUMARCHAIS, GEORGE SAND.

The design of the Series is to present the chief French authors in the best possible translation to English readers, to meet the need of many who are interested in French literature and desire to know it directly, but who cannot easily read its authors in the original, and to fill the lack of adequate and dignified representation of these authors in public and private libraries.

The best and most representative works of each author will be given in full, the use of extracts being, so far as possible, avoided. When a standard classical translation in English exists, this will be used. When no good translations are available, new versions will be made by Dr. Page. Each author's work will be introduced by a biographical and critical essay, giving an adequate account of his life, writings, and place in literary history.

RABELAIS. Including all the Best Chapters of his famous 'Romance of Gargantua and Pantagruel' (the Seventeenth-Century Version of Urquhart and Motteux). 1 vol. 8vo, cloth extra, 7s. 6d. net. [Nearly ready.]

THOMAS CRANMER and the ENGLISH REFORMATION, 1489-1556. By Albert Frederick POLLARD, M.A. F.R.H.S., Author of 'Henry VIII,' 'England under Protector Somerset,' &c. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, fully illustrated, 6s. No. 6 in "Heroes of Reformation" Series. [Ready next week.]

"There are many points in Cranmer's life that need elucidation. He has been termed the most mysterious figure in the English Reformation; the obscurity is not in his character, but in the atmosphere which he breathed, and that atmosphere is the most difficult of all things to recreate."

CONSTANTINE the GREAT. The Reorganization of the Empire and the Triumph of the Church. By J. B. FIRTH, Author of 'Augustus Caesar,' &c. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, fully illustrated, 5s. No. 39 in the "Heroes of the Nations." [Immediately.]

Mr. Firth is an impartial historian, and he has tried to present a fair and accurate description of Constantine the Great. There are many matters connected with the reign of Constantine which have been the subjects of heated controversy ever since his time. Mr. Firth realizes the importance and significance of the first conversion of a Roman Emperor to Christianity, and his book is a brilliant chronicle, worthy of its subject.

The KAISER AS HE IS; or, the Real William II. (Le Véritable Guillaume II.). By Henri de NOUSSANNE. Translated into English by WALTER LITTLEFIELD, Author of 'The Truth about Dreyfuss,' &c. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 6s. [Immediately.]
A series of excellent sketches, dealing with every phase of character and action of the German Emperor, domestic, social, political, national, and international.

The STORY of the CONGO FREE STATE. Social, Political, and Economic Aspects of the Belgian System of Government in Central Africa. By HENRY WELLINGTON WACK, F.R.G.S. With 125 Illustrations and Maps. 8vo, cloth extra, 15s. net. [Shortly.]

Mr. Wack's work gives evidence of an intimate knowledge of Congolese affairs. He has lived abroad many years, and has made a special study of the subject. His independent observations cast new light and a fresh breeze on a subject which has perhaps been overheated.

The CASE for PHYSICAL CULTURE. By H. Irving Hancock. With Full-Page Illustrations from Life. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 5s. net. [Almost ready.]

In this new volume Mr. Hancock will explain the benefits of physical training, and the subjects to whom such treatment is especially helpful. The author has a thorough knowledge of anatomy and physiology, and this book will prove a valuable and reliable handbook.

Previous Books by the same Author:—JAPANESE PHYSICAL TRAINING—PHYSICAL TRAINING for WOMEN by JAPANESE METHODS—PHYSICAL TRAINING for CHILDREN by JAPANESE METHODS—JIU-JITSU COMBAT TRICKS.

The ROMANCE of a POET in EXILE. By Henry Wellington Wack. 8vo, cloth extra, illustrated. [In active preparation.]

This work tells of the life of Victor Hugo in Guernsey, and the letters written to him during his residence there by Juliette Drouet. An interesting and new light is thrown on the character of the great French poet.

The JORDAN VALLEY and PETRA. By Prof. Wm. LIBBEY, of Princeton University, and Rev. FRANKLIN E. HOSKINS. 8vo, cloth extra, fully illustrated. [In preparation.]

The authors of this work made a thorough trip through the Holy Land, and spent a longer time at Petra than any other archaeological students.

LIFE INSURANCE EXAMINATIONS. By Brandreth SYMONDS, M.D. 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. net. [Nearly ready.]

CORPORATIONS. By John P. Davis. 8vo, cloth, 2 vols. [In the press.]

PHYSICAL REGENERATION. By James Cantlie, F.R.C.S. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth. [In rapid preparation.]

The RELIGION of the EARLY EGYPTIANS. By GEORG STEINDORFF, Ph.D., Professor of Egyptology at the University of Leipzig. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. [Nearly ready.]
This is the fifth series of the American Lectures on the History of Religions.

TALKS in a LIBRARY with LAURENCE HUTTON. By ISABEL MOORE. Crown 8vo, cloth. [Shortly.]

The UNITED STATES. By Prof. Edwin Erle Sparks, Ph.D., Professor in the University of Chicago. 2 vols. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. each. [Next week.]

The ADMINISTRATIVE LAW of the UNITED STATES. By FRANK J. GOODNOW. 8vo, cloth. [In the press.]

The PHILIPPINES and the FILIPINOS. By James A. LEROY. Fully illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth. [In preparation.]

OUT of WORK. By Frances A. Kellor. Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s. net. [At once.]

NEW FICTION.

A SELF-MADE MAN'S WIFE. Her Letters to Her Son. Being the Woman's View of Certain Famous Correspondence. By CHARLES EUSTACE MERRIMAN, Author of 'Letters from a Son to a Self-Made Father.' Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 6s. [In the press.]

This book introduces another member of the well-known Graham family of Chicago. The self-made man's wife turns out to have been an amusing, lovable old lady with a very neat wit and a substantial fund of old-fashioned common sense.

MY LADY of the NORTH. The Story of a Gray-Jacket. By RANDALL PARRISH, Author of 'When Wilderness was King.' Crown 8vo, cloth extra, with 4 Illustrations in Colour, 6s. [Next week.]

The GIRL of LA GLORIA. By Clara Driscoll. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 6s. [Nearly ready.]
A charming love story of Texas. The heroine, Maria, is the last of an old Mexican family, who have gradually been dispossessed of all their lands by the grasping Americans.

NEW LISTS AND ANNOUNCEMENTS NOW READY.

24, BEDFORD STREET, STRAND, LONDON; and 27 and 29, West 23rd Street, New York City.

Editorial Communications should be addressed to "The Editor"—Advertisements and Business Letters to "The Publisher"—at the Office, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

Published Weekly by JOHN C. FRANCIS at Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C., and Printed by JOHN EDWARD FRANCIS, Athenæum Press, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

Agents for Scotland, Messrs. Bell & Bradburn and Mr. John Menzies, Edinburgh.—Saturday, January 28, 1905.

THE ATHENÆUM

Journal of English and Foreign Literature, Science, the Fine Arts, Music and the Drama.

No. 4032.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 4, 1905.

PRICE
THREEPENCE
REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER

FRENCH MASTERS.—DURAND-RUEL & SONS, of Paris.—EXHIBITION of 315 PICTURES by BODIN, CÉZANNE, DEGAS, MANET, MONET, MORISOT, PISSARRO, RENOIR, SISLEY.—GRAFTON GALLERIES, Grafton Street, Bond Street, DAILY (till February 18), 10-6. Admission 1s.

BEDFORD COLLEGE for WOMEN
(University of London),
YORK PLACE, BAKER STREET, W.

The HALF TERM begins on FEBRUARY 23.
The College provides instruction for Students preparing for the University of London Degrees in Arts, Science, and Preliminary Medicine; also in subjects of General Education.
There is a Hygiene Department and an Art School.
Students can reside in the College.
TWO ENTRANCE SCHOLARSHIPS, each one tenable for Three Years at the College, will be offered for COMPETITION in JUNE, 1905.
DEPARTMENT FOR PROFESSIONAL TRAINING IN TEACHING.
STUDENTS are admitted to the TRAINING COURSE in OCTOBER and in JANUARY.
The Course includes full preparation for the Examinations for the Teaching Diplomas granted by the Universities of London and Cambridge, held annually in December.
Full particulars on application to the PRINCIPAL.

THE DOWNS SCHOOL, SEAFORD, SUSSEX.
Head Mistress—Miss LUCY ROBINSON, M.A. (late Second Mistress St. Felix School, Southwold). References: The Principal of Bedford College, London; The Master of Peterhouse, Cambridge.

MISS LOUISA DREWRY will read PARADISE LOST with her TEACHERS' CLASS THIS TERM. She gives Lectures, Readings, and Lessons as usual; Examines; and helps Students by Letter and in her Reading Society.—143, King Henry's Road, London, N.W.

TO TRUSTEES and Others.—A LADY of experience and highly recommended can RECEIVE into her own HOME a young WARD in CHANCERY or the CHILDREN of ONE FAMILY for reliable guardianship and capable supervision of Education.—Write, first, REFERENCE, Box 977, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

WANTED, address SMALL SCHOOL, moderate terms near (if possible) Chingford, Essex, for backward Boy of Thirteen. Much Gymnastic Drill and Manners indispensable; also plenty of individual attention.—Write M. L. DESONGLE, 5, Rue Cadet, Paris.

EDUCATION.
Parents or Guardians desiring accurate information relative to the CHOICE of SCHOOLS for BOYS or GIRLS or TUTOR in England or Abroad are invited to call upon or send fully detailed particulars to MESSRS. GABBITS, THRING & CO., who for more than thirty years have been closely in touch with the leading Educational Establishments.
Advice, free of charge, is given by Mr. Thring, Nephew of the late Head Master of Uppingham, 36, Sackville Street, London, W.

CITY of SHEFFIELD.
EDUCATION COMMITTEE.
KING EDWARD VII. SCHOOL AT SHEFFIELD.
HEAD MASTER REQUIRED.

The GOVERNORS of the FIRST-GRADE SECONDARY DAY SCHOOL (Classical and Modern, with Preparatory Department attached), about to be established in place of the Royal Grammar School and Wesley College, and to be called, by command of His Majesty, KING EDWARD VII. SCHOOL AT SHEFFIELD, invite applications for the position of HEAD MASTER. Salary to commence at 800l. per year, with House connected with the School. It is expected that the School will start with from 350 to 400 boys. Fees up to 16l. 16s. per annum. A general outline of the Scheme will be furnished to intending Candidates.

Forms of Application, which should be obtained on application to the undersigned, should be sent in not later than FEBRUARY 22, 1905, accompanied by 25 printed copies of Testimonials.

Personal canvassing will disqualify Candidates.
JNO. F. MOSS, Secretary.
Education Office, Sheffield.

UNIVERSITY of LONDON.
GOLDSMITHS' COLLEGE, NEW CROSS.

The following Appointments will shortly be made in the DEPARTMENT for the TRAINING of TEACHERS, which will be opened on SEPTEMBER 28, 1905:—

(a) A VICE-PRINCIPAL and MASTER of METHOD.
(b) A VICE-PRINCIPAL and MISTRESS of METHOD.

The salary attached to each post will be 500l. per annum, without Residence. Applications must be received not later than MARCH 6. Further particulars may be obtained from the PRINCIPAL, University of London, South Kensington, S.W.
ARTHUR W. RÜCKER, Principal.

DIOCESAN TRAINING COLLEGE, YORK.

VICE-PRINCIPAL REQUIRED for NEXT TERM. Must be in Holy Orders, Unmarried, and a good Teacher and Disciplinarian. Salary to begin with 200l. per annum, along with Board, Residence, and Washing.—Applications, with Three Testimonials only, to be sent to J. T. WARE, Esq., 6, New Street, York.

GOSPORT and ALVERSTOKE SECONDARY SCHOOL.

Applications are invited for the post of an ASSISTANT MISTRESS in the SCHOOL. Duties to commence at the beginning of MAY. Candidates should be well qualified in ordinary Form Subjects, Needlework, and Physical Exercises, and should be registered, or qualified for registration, in Column B of the Register of Teachers. The salary will commence at 110l. per annum, and will come under a scale of salaries to be adopted shortly. Further particulars may be obtained from the HEAD MASTER, by whom applications should be received not later than FEBRUARY 23 NEXT.

CITY of HULL.
EDUCATION COMMITTEE.

The above COMMITTEE require the services of an ASSISTANT ART TEACHER at the MUNICIPAL SCHOOL of ART, who will be required to devote the whole of his time to the service of the Committee. Salary 55l. per annum.

Applications, stating age, qualifications, and experience, accompanied by copies of three recent Testimonials, must be sent to Mr. J. H. Parkyn, A.R.C.A., Head Master, School of Art, Albion Street, Hull, on or before FEBRUARY 28, 1905.

Canvassing will be considered a disqualification.
J. T. RILEY, Secretary of Education.
Education Offices, Albion Street, Hull, January 23, 1905.

GRAHAMSTOWN, CAPE COLONY.
LIBRARIANSHIP.

The COMMITTEE of the GRAHAMSTOWN PUBLIC LIBRARY invite applications for the Office of LIBRARIAN, about to become vacant. The Library is supported by Government Grant, Subscriptions, and a Revenue from some Property, and is managed by a Committee elected by the Subscribers. Salary 200l. per annum. 30l. Passage Money allowed. Candidates (who must be young men and unmarried) must have had experience in a Public Library, and must be familiar with the Dewey Decimal Classification.

Applications, endorsed "Librarianship," stating age and experience, to be sent, along with copies of three recent Testimonials, to Mr. JOHN MINTO, Chief Librarian, Public Library, Brighton, on or before FEBRUARY 25.

SUB-EDITOR REQUIRED, on the STAFF of a leading ILLUSTRATED WEEKLY JOURNAL. Must be experienced in Literary Work, and have a thorough knowledge of Natural History, Country Life, and Sport.—Write, with full particulars of experience, &c., to E. H., Box 959, care of Willing's, 125, Strand, W.C.

ASSISTANT EDITORSHIP WANTED by a GENTLEMAN. Has had great experience, and was four years Editor of a Colonial Daily. Special knowledge of Far East.—Address Box 953, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

ADVERTISER desires post as LITERARY ADVISER to PUBLISHING FIRM. University Classical Honours Man.—Address A. R. S., Box 962, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

AUTHOR and JOURNALIST of established reputation, forcible and versatile Leader-Writer, and energetic Organiser, is OPEN to CONTRIBUTE SIGNED ARTICLES, to which his name would lend additional value; or would undertake the Editorship (for which he is qualified by considerable experience) of new or existing Magazine or Journal.—H., S. Lichfield Road, Kew, Surrey.

GENTLEMANLY YOUTH WANTED, as PUPIL, by a BOOK PUBLISHER. Small Premium.—Apply Box 979, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

FULLY QUALIFIED JOURNALIST of high standing desires to CONTRIBUTE a WEEKLY COLUMN to a WHOLESOME NEWSPAPER, by way of Notes on Current Events, &c. Has special knowledge of Law and Classics.—Full particulars from M.A. Oxon, Box 980, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, E.C.

EDITORSHIP WANTED by GENTLEMAN of much Literary and Journalistic Experience. Politics Imperial. Has for several years edited a well-known London Weekly. Special Legal knowledge. Oxford man.—Apply to Z. F., Box 981, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

SECRETARY or POST of TRUST WANTED by GENTLEMAN (Author) of high integrity, long standing. Speaks and writes French and English with equal facility. Security, if necessary, 1,000l. Salary moderate.—Address VICTOR, Eason & Son, Advertising Agents, Dublin.

GENTLEMAN, 26, educated at Public School and in Germany, well read, and with business experience, desires post as PRIVATE SECRETARY, or Assistant to a Literary Man. Good references.—Box 978, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

EXPERIENCED LADY SECRETARY, late Student of London School of Econ and Pol. Sc and Edinburgh School of Sociology, desires RE-ENGAGEMENT to Literary Man or other interested in Social Work or Investigation.—Miss SHEPHERD, 23, Woburn Place, W.C.

LITERARY RESEARCH undertaken at the British Museum and elsewhere on moderate terms. Excellent Testimonials.—A. H., Box 910, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

TRANSLATION, REVISION, RESEARCH, REVIEWING, INDEXING, and other LITERARY WORK, or non-resident Secretaryship. Classics, French, German, Italian. Special Subjects, Mythology and Literature. Varied experience.—Miss SELBY, 53, Talbot Road, W.

SOUND INVESTMENT.—FOR SALE, 500 1/2 SHARES in old-established PUBLISHING COMPANY. Dividends last eleven years, 8 per cent per annum. Price 21s. or lot 500l.—Address Mr. W. STOCKIN, 45, Lombard Street, London, E.C.

PROPRIETORS of BOOK PUBLISHING, Newspapers, or kindred concerns requiring active PARTNERS, INVESTORS, or to SELL.—Publishers' Readers, Editors, Managers, &c., seeking PARTNERSHIPS, sound INVESTMENTS, or to PURCHASE, write MAXWELL, 20, Vukon Road, Balham. (Established 1902.)

C. MITCHELL & CO., Agents for the Sale and Purchase of Newspaper Properties, undertake Valuations for Probate or Purchase, Investigations, and Audit of Accounts, &c. Card of Terms on application.
Mitchell House, 1 and 2, Snow Hill, Holborn Viaduct, E.C.

Yearly Subscription, free by post, Inland, 15s. 3d.; Foreign, 18s. Entered at the New York Post Office as Second Class matter.

FRANCE.—The ATHENÆUM can be obtained at the following Railway Stations in France:—

AMIENS, ANTIBES, BEAULIEU-SUR-MER, BIARRITZ, BORDEAUX, BOULOGNE-SUR-MER, CALAIS, CANNES, DIJON, DUNKIRK, HAVRE, LILLE, LYONS, MARSEILLES, MENTONE, MONACO, NANTES, NICE, PARIS, PAU, SAINT RAPHAEL, TOURS, TOULON.

PARIS: W. H. SMITH & SON, 248, Rue de Rivoli; and at the GALIGNANI LIBRARY, 224, Rue de Rivoli.

TYPE-WRITING.—Mrs. KATE REILLY, "thoroughly trustworthy when any confidential work is required," has opened another Copying Office at 76, REGENT STREET, W. MSS. received by post accurately and quickly COPIED. Experienced in all kinds of Professional Work. Established at Whitcomb House in 1891.)

AUTHORS' MSS., NOVELS, SERMONS, PLAYS, REVIEWS TYPE-WRITTEN accurately and promptly, 9d. per 1,000 words. References to well-known Writers.—M. SRTAAR, Thirlbank, Roxborough Road, Harrow.

SHORTHAND and TYPE-WRITING.—Authors' MSS., Plays, Sermons, Reports, &c., 9d. per 1,000. Legal and General Copying. Accuracy and Despatch guaranteed.—Miss N. E. ROBINSON, 8, Westover Road, Wandsworth Common, London, S.W.

TYPE-WRITING promptly and accurately done. Ten years' experience. Excellent references. 10d. per 1,000 words. Reduction for quantity.—Miss MESSER, The Orchard, Cotterill Road, Surbiton S.W.

TYPE-WRITING undertaken by highly educated Women (Classical Tripos; Cambridge Higher Local; Modern Languages). Research, Revision, Translation.—THE CAMBRIDGE TYPE-WRITING AGENCY, 10, Duke Street, Adelphi, W.C.

AUTHORS' MSS., SERMONS, PLAYS, ENVELOPES, CIRCULARS, and all kinds, TYPED at home (Remington), 9d. per 1,000. Good paper. Orders promptly executed.—M. L., 7, Vernon Road, Clapham.

THE AUTHOR'S AGENCY.—Established 1879. The interests of Authors capably represented. Agreements for Publishing arranged. MSS. placed with Publishers.—Terms and Testimonials on application to Mr. A. M. BURGESS, 24, Paternoster Row.

MR. GEORGE LARNER, Accountant and Licensed Valuer to the Bookselling, Publishing, Newspaper, Printing, and Stationery Trades. Partnerships Arranged. Balance Sheets and Trading Accounts Prepared and Audited. All Business carried out under Mr. Larner's personal supervision.—28, 29, and 30, Paternoster Row, E.C. Secretary to the Booksellers' Provident Institution.

PRESS CUTTING S.
Special Departments for ART, SCIENCE, LITERATURE, COMMERCE, and EDUCATION.
Terms from 5s. per 100.
Send requirements and obtain quotation from the PRESS CUTTING AGENCY, Keston, Kent.

NEWSPAPER PROPERTIES BOUGHT, SOLD, VALUED; and supplied with every requisite. Write for THE COMPLETE JOURNALIST, sent post free. The Imperial News Agency, London: 2 and 4, Tudor Street, E.C. America: 700-706, Fourteenth Street, N.W., Washington, D.C.

ATHENÆUM PRESS.—JOHN EDWARD FRANCIS, Printer of the Athenæum, Notes and Queries, &c., is prepared to SUBMIT ESTIMATES for all kinds of BOOK, NEWS, and PERIODICAL PRINTING.—13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

Catalogues.

H. H. PEACH, Antiquarian Bookseller, 37, Bel-voir Street, Leicester, issues CATALOGUES of MSS. and OLD BOOKS post free to Book Collectors. No 9 contains Incunables, MSS., Autographs of Lord Clive, Napoleon, &c.

CATALOGUE No. 42.—Drawings—Engravings—Turner's Liber Studiorum—Lucas's Mezzotints after Constable—Engravings. Hogarth, Girtin—Etchings. Palmer—Whistler—Japanese Colour-Prints—Illustrated Books—Works by Ruskin. Post free. Sixpence. Wm. Wain, 2, Church Terrace, Richmond, Surrey.

THE INTERNATIONAL BOOK CIRCULAR, No 139, containing a Special Article entitled "SOME CONTEMPORARY FOREIGN CHEMISTS," by Dr. M. O. FORSTER, together with an exact Bibliography of their Publications, and a Double Plate of their Portraits. Specimen copies gratis.—Williams & N. W. Art, Book Importers, 11, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, W.C.

LEIGHTON'S

CATALOGUE of EARLY PRINTED and other INTERESTING BOOKS, MANUSCRIPTS, and BINDINGS.

Part VII. R.—SHARPSPEAR 160 Illustrations price 2s. NEARLY READY.

Parts I-VI., containing A-Q with 800 Illustrations in Facsimile. Price 15s. the 6 Parts.

J. & J. LEIGHTON, 40, Brewer Street, Golden Square, W.

FIRST EDITIONS of MODERN AUTHORS, including Dickens, Thackeray, Lever, Ainsworth; Books illustrated by G. and R. Cruikshank, Philz, Rowlandson, Leech, &c. The largest and choicest Collection offered for Sale in the World. Catalogues issued and sent post free on application. Books Bought.—WALTER T. STENCER, 27, New Oxford Street, London, W.C.

TO BOOKBUYERS and LIBRARIANS of FREE LIBRARIES—The FEBRUARY CATALOGUE of valuable SECOND-HAND WORKS and NEW REMAINERS, offered at prices greatly reduced, is now ready, and will be sent post free upon application to W. H. SMITH & SON, Library Department, 150, Strand, London, W.C.

MESSRS. HENRY YOUNG & SONS possess one of the LARGEST STOCKS of OLD and NEW BOOKS in GREAT BRITAIN, and they will be glad to hear from any one in search of Books out of print, as they can in many cases supply them at once.

ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE MONTHLY. Price 6d.
12, South Castle Street, Liverpool.

INCUNABULA TYPOGRAPHICA.

CATALOGUE of 1,500 BOOKS PRINTED before A.D. 1500 (by 400 Printers in 90 different Cities), for sale at prices affixed. 232 pp. with 80 Facsimiles. To be had post free.
JACQUES ROSENTHAL, Bookseller, 10, Karl Str., Munich, Bavaria.

CATALOGUE (36) of OLD and RARE BOOKS and MANUSCRIPTS. Illuminated MSS.—fine Bindings—Early Printed Books—Autograph Letters, &c. With 57 Facsimiles. For sale at prices affixed. To be had post free.
Copy with 10 extra Plates, price 1s.
JACQUES ROSENTHAL, Bookseller, 10, Karl Str., Munich, Bavaria.

FOLLOWING of CHRIST.

I am always open to Purchase for Cash, Highest Prices given:—
TREATISE of ye IMITATION and FOLWYNGE ye BLESSED LYFE of CRYST. London, Wynkin de Worde, 1504.
—London, Richard Tynson, 1503, 1504, 1517.
The Imitation (following) of Christ, Translated in Cornish, Kentish, Manx, Scotch, and other Dialects.
Early Editions of the Imitation of Christ, and Translations in all Languages.
JACQUES ROSENTHAL, Bookseller, 10, Karl Str., Munich, Bavaria.

TO PUBLIC LIBRARIES, &c.—FOR SALE, a very interesting and unusual COLLECTION of 10,000 POLITICAL, HISTORICAL, and CONTROVERSIAL PAMPHLETS, chiefly of the Eighteenth and Nineteenth Centuries, many very scarce. Price for the lot, 75s.—Apply CLEMENT S. PALMER, Antiquarian Bookseller, 88, Bedford Hill, Balham, S.W., whose CATALOGUE can be had on application. Part 161 just ready.

INFORMATION to LIBRARIANS and COLLECTORS—To SELL PRIVATELY, a fine COLLECTION of FRENCH BOOKS, Revolutionary Papers, Placards, Pamphlets on Louis XVI., Marie Antoinette, Robespierre, Napoleon, &c. All genuine and scarce. Fine opportunity at very moderate charge. Price 200s.—Write to M. A. H., 9, Connaught Street, Hyde Park.

PORTRAIT of GEORGE MEREDITH, after the celebrated Painting by G. F. WATTS, R.A., Engraved by W. BISCOMBE GARDNER. Limited to 600 Artist's Proofs at One Guinea each. Size, 12 in. by 8½ in.—Address W. BISCOMBE GARDNER, Hoathly, Hind Head, Surrey.

GEORGE CRUIKSHANK.

Collectors, Dealers, and Owners having Coloured or Plain Caricatures, Etchings, Engravings, Woodcuts (or Books containing same)

Done by GEORGE CRUIKSHANK

Which they wish to dispose of

Are requested to send Title, Publisher, Date, Condition, and Price asked to

EDWIN H. WENDELL, Esq.,
500 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

Sales by Auction.

Miscellaneous Books, including the Library of the late G. A. F. RIDOUTT, Esq., removed from Portsmouth.

MESSRS. HODGSON & CO. will SELL by AUCTION, at their Rooms, 115, Chancery Lane, W.C., on WEDNESDAY, February 8, and Two Following Days, at 1 o'clock, MISCELLANEOUS BOOKS, including the above Library and other Properties, comprising Gould's Birds of Great Britain, 5 vols. morocco (the Property of the late Sir William Flower, F.R.S.)—Smith's Catalogue Raisonné, 9 vols.—Burlington Fine-Arts Club Catalogues of the Works of the Ferrara-Bolognese and Netherlandish Schools—Perkins's Tuscan Sculptors, 2 vols.—The Latin Bible, printed by Rodt & Richel, Basel, 1470, and other Early Editions, Versions, and Translations—Bibliographical Works on the Bible by Lea Wilson, Fry, Westwood, Copinger, and others—Early Printed Books—Books relating to America—Hakluyt's Voyages, Limited Edition, 12 vols.—Scott's Waverley Novels, Edinburgh Edition, 48 vols.—Kipling's Works, Edition de Luxe, 22 vols.—The Kilmecott Press Keats—First Editions of Modern Authors—Rawlinson's Ancient Monarchies, 6 vols.—Freeman's Norman Conquest, 6 vols.—Creighton's History of the Papacy, 5 vols.; and other Standard Works in Theology, History, Travel and Topography—Cayley's Mathematical Papers, 11 vols., &c.
To be viewed and Catalogues had.

Valuable Miscellaneous Books.

MESSRS. HODGSON & CO. will SELL by AUCTION, at their Rooms, 115, Chancery Lane, W.C., on WEDNESDAY, February 15, and Two Following Days, at 1 o'clock, valuable MISCELLANEOUS BOOKS, comprising Tractatus de Animalibus, Woodcuts, Augsburg, 1500—Boccaccio, The Fall of Priuces, by Lydgate, 1554—Quarto Plays by Chapman and Ben Jonson, and others in Old English Literature—Dibdin's Bibliographical Decameron, 3 vols.—Keeble's Christian Year, 2 vols. boards, and other First Editions—Standard Books in General Literature—Books on Sporting, &c.
Catalogues are preparing.

Lecturer's Optical Lanterns and fine Sets of Slides—Photographic Cameras and Lenses—Scientific Instruments and Apparatus, &c.

FRIDAY, February 10, at half-past 12 o'clock.

MR. J. C. STEVENS will OFFER, at his Rooms, 38, King Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C., Optical Lanterns, complete, and Slides—Photographic Cameras, Hand Studio, and others, by all Leading Makers—very fine Student and other Microscopes and Micro-Objects—Field and Astronomical Telescopes—Plated Goods—China—Ivory Carvings—Chinese and Japanese Porcelain—Fishing Tackle—and many Lots of valuable Miscellaneous Property.
On view day prior 2 to 5 and morning of Sale. Catalogues on application.

Shells.

MONDAY, February 13, at half-past 12 o'clock.

MR. J. C. STEVENS will SELL by AUCTION, at his Rooms, 38, King Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C., the REMAINING PORTION of the large and important COLLECTION of SHELLS formed by Dr. JAMES C. COX, of Sydney, Author of 'Monograph of Australian Land Shells'

Full particulars in Catalogues, which may be had on application.

Entomological Sale.

TUESDAY, February 14, at half-past 12 o'clock.

MR. J. C. STEVENS will OFFER, at his Rooms, 38, King Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C., several COLLECTIONS of BRITISH-TAKEN LEPIDOPTERA, including some very rare Specimens in fine condition—Exotic Lepidoptera in variety; also several exceptionally fine Insect Cabinets by Gurney and other Makers. In same Catalogue will be submitted some Choice Lots of BRITISH-TAKEN and other EGGS.

On view morning of Sale. Catalogues and full particulars on application.

MR. J. C. STEVENS, Auctioneer and Valuer, 38, King Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C., begs to announce that SALES are held at his Rooms regularly for the DISPOSAL OF ANTIQUE FURNITURE, WORKS OF ART, SILVER PLATE, JEWELLERY, BOOKS, COINS, PICTURES and ENGRAVINGS, SCIENTIFIC INSTRUMENTS, and all kinds of MISCELLANEOUS PROPERTY.

Valuations for all purposes.

Terms and all particulars on application.

Collection of Engravings, Drawings, and Paintings.

MESSRS. PUTTICK & SIMPSON will SELL by AUCTION, at their Galleries, 47, Leicester Square, W.C., on MONDAY, February 6, at ten minutes past 1 o'clock precisely, a COLLECTION of ENGRAVINGS, including Early English and Foreign Portraits—Fancy Subjects in Mezzotint, Line, and Stipple—Topographical Prints—Caricatures, &c.—the Etched Plates of Caen Cathedral and A Street in Cardiff by Axel Haig—Original Pen-and-Ink Drawings by Edouard Detaille—and a few Paintings.

Valuable Books, including a Portion of the Library of Major GORDON, removed from Wimbledon.

MESSRS. PUTTICK & SIMPSON will SELL by AUCTION, at their Galleries, 47, Leicester Square, W.C., on WEDNESDAY, February 15, and Following Day, at ten minutes past 1 o'clock precisely, valuable BOOKS, including Proceedings of the Civil Engineers—Nature, 56 vols.—Annales de Chemie, 45 vols.—Macaulay's Works, 10 vols.—Burton's History of Scotland, 8 vols.—Shelley's Queen Mab, First Edition, uncut—Morris's British Birds, 6 vols.—Lowe's Ferns—Art Journal, 32 vols.—Shepherd's Vignette Designs, Coloured Plates—Hassell's Original Specimens of Water Colours, Coloured Plates—Puisse d'Avenues—The Oriental Album, Coloured Plates—Encyclopædia Britannica, Ninth Edition—Century Dictionary, 8 vols.—Lang's Prince Charles Edward—Skelton's Charles I.—Robson's Grampian Mountains, Coloured Plates—Heppelwhite's Cabinet Maker, 1789—Ciceronis de Officiis, Paris, 1509—Orrey's Plays, 1690—Horticultural Society's Transactions—Chesterfield's Letters, 2 vols.—Humphreys and Westwood's Moths, 2 vols. Coloured Plates—important Collections of Autograph Letters—Book-Plates (Ex-Libris)—Sporting Books—Old Playing Cards—Illuminated MSS. on Vellum, with Miniatures—First Editions of Scott, Dickens, Thackeray, Lever, and other Modern Authors.

MESSRS. CHRISTIE, MANSON & WOODS respectfully give Notice that they will hold the Following SALES by AUCTION at their Great Rooms, King Street, St. James's Square, the Sales commencing at 1 o'clock precisely:—

On MONDAY, February 6, the remaining WORKS of the late BASIL BRADLEY, R.W.S.

On TUESDAY, February 7, PORCELAIN of the late THOMAS BOONE, Esq.; Objects of Art, Porcelain, and Decorative Furniture.

On WEDNESDAY, February 8, UNSET PRECIOUS STONES, the Property of a FOREIGN NOBLEMAN, and JEWELS from various sources.

On THURSDAY, February 9, OLD ENGLISH SILVER PLATE of J. R. MASON, Esq. (deceased), and others.

On FRIDAY, February 10, PORCELAIN, OBJECTS OF ART, and DECORATIVE FURNITURE.

On SATURDAY, February 11, MODERN PICTURES and DRAWINGS of the late W. H. CRABTREE, Esq., the late J. R. MASON, Esq., and others.

Books and Manuscripts.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION, at their Rooms, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on THURSDAY, February 23, and Two Following Days, at 1 o'clock precisely, BOOKS and MANUSCRIPTS, including a SELECTION from the COLLECTION of W. B. TEGETMEIER, Esq., comprising an unusual Collection of Books and Papers by and relating to Shelley; the PROPERTY of the late JULIAN MARSHALL, Esq., including the Writings of Charles Dickens, W. M. Thackeray—valuable Musical Collections—and an extensive Collection of Cuttings, referring chiefly to Theatrical and Operatic Entertainments; the LIBRARY of THOMAS HUTCHINSON, Esq., containing a very extensive and interesting COLLECTION of PRESENT-DAY LITERATURE, including many Volumes with Autograph Inscriptions, or Letters from the Authors—the Writings of Robert Bridges, Norman Gale, Richard Le Gallienne, W. E. Henley, Andrew Lang, Stephen Phillips, R. L. Stevenson, &c.; other Properties, comprising Smith's Catalogue Raisonné, 9 vols.—Sporting Books—Elizabethan Dramatic Literature—Playbills—Dictionary of National Biography, a Complete Set—the Kilmecott Press Publications, including the Chaucer—La Fontaine, Contes et Nouvelles en Vers, 1762, with the Rejected Plates—Foreign Literature—Books of Prints—Modern Literature, Art, and Archaeology, &c.

May be viewed two days prior. Catalogues may be had.

THE NINETEENTH CENTURY and AFTER

For FEBRUARY.

RUSSIA'S VIEW of her MISSION. By C. Hagberg Wright.
MORAL TEACHING in JAPAN. By Baron Suyematsu.
JAPAN'S DEBT to CHINA. By Herbert A. Giles, Professor of Chinese at Cambridge.
The AWAKENING of the TARTARS. By Prof. A. Vambéry.
The BALANCE of NAVAL POWER. By Archibald S. Hurd.
TRAINING the YOUTH of ENGLAND. By General Lord Methuen.
COMPULSORY GREEK as a NATIONAL QUESTION. By Prof. J. Westlake, K.C.
A WANING GLORY of ENGLAND: the MADRIGAL. By J. A. Fuller Maitland.
The BISHOPS and the REFORMATION SETTLEMENT. By Sir George Arthur, Bart.
The CHURCH ARMY and the RECLAMATION of CRIMINALS. By the Rev. Wilson Carlile, Founder of the Church Army.
The ECONOMIC SIDE of ALIEN IMMIGRATION. By Major W. Evans Gordon, M.P.
FROM the TOLL-BAR of the GALATA BRIDGE. By the Lady Currie.
PAKISH SCHOOL DINNERS and MUSEUMS. By Jonathan Hutchinson, F.R.C.S.
HENRY PARRY LIDDON. By D. C. Lathbury.
LAST MONTH:
1. By Sir Wemyss Reid.
2. By Walter Frewen Lord.
London: Spottiswoode & Co., Ltd., 5, New Street Square, and 54, Gracechurch Street, E.C.

THE NATIONAL REVIEW.

Edited by L. J. MAXSE.

Contents for FEBRUARY, 1905.

EPISODES of the MONTH.

ON the PROPOSAL to ERECT a STATUE to SHAKE-SPEARE in LONDON. By Alfred Austin (Poet Laureate).

An AUTOCRACY at WORK. By the Author of 'The Tsar' in the Quarterly Review.

LABOUR CONDITIONS in the TRANSVAAL. By F. Drummond Chaplin (Joint Manager at Johannesburg of the Consolidated Goldfields of South Africa, Limited).

PROTECTION AGAINST FIRE. By Edwin O. Sachs (Chairman of British Fire Prevention Committee).

The GERMAN EMPEROR'S WAR SCARE. By Custos.

The SERVANT PROBLEM. By Viscountess Barrington.

AMERICAN AFFAIRS. By A. Maurice Low.

The SITUATION in MOROCCO. By Walter B. Harris.

The PALAIS ROYAL. By the Hon. Mrs. Edward Stuart Wortley.

The SIEGE of PORT ARTHUR (with the Times Map of Port Arthur and its Defences). By Col. de la Poer Beresford (late Military Attaché in St. Petersburg).

GREATER BRITAIN (including Our Special Letter from Australia).

Price 2s. 6d. net.

23, Ryder Street, St. James's, London, S.W.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS

ANNOUNCE THAT THEY HAVE JUST PUBLISHED

THOMAS CRANMER and the ENGLISH REFORMATION,

1489-1556. By ALBERT FREDERICK POLLARD, M.A. F.R.H.S., Author of 'Henry VIII.,' 'England under Protector Somerset,' &c. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, fully illustrated, 6s. No. 6 in 'Heroes of Reformation' Series.

The UNITED STATES. By Prof. Edwin Earle Sparks, Ph.D., Professor in the University of Chicago. 2 vols. crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. each.

MY LADY of the NORTH. The Story of a Gray-Jacket. By

RANDALL PARRISH, Author of 'When Wilderness was King.' Crown 8vo, cloth extra, with 4 Illustrations in Colour, 6s.

24, BEDFORD STREET, STRAND, LONDON; and NEW YORK.

SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE

FOR FEBRUARY.

Beautifully illustrated, 1s. net.

MADAME WADDINGTON'S RECOLLECTIONS.

These new Letters deal with Madame Waddington's life in Italy, and have all the social interest and brilliancy of her former correspondence, supplemented by a great deal of valuable inside political and social history.

MANY OTHER INTERESTING ARTICLES FULLY ILLUSTRATED.

London: Wm. Heinemann, 21, Bedford Street, W.C.

THE CONTEMPORARY REVIEW

For FEBRUARY,

NOW READY, contains:—

1. The PROSPECTS of RUSSIAN REVOLUTION. By Alexander Ular.
2. The RAILWAYS of GERMANY. By O. Eltzbacher.
3. PATRIOTISM and CHRISTIANITY. By Augustine Birrell, K.C.
4. The BANKRUPTCY of HIGHER CRITICISM. By Dr. Emil Reich.
5. A DECADE of DECADENCE in FINANCE. By Lord Welby.
6. HUSBAND and WIFE AMONG the POOR. By Miss M. Loane.
7. A GARDEN SUBURB at HAMPTHEAD. By Mrs. Barnett.
8. IN CORPORE SANO. By Dr. Macnamara, M.P.
9. PLUTARCH the HUMANE. By the Countess Martinengo Cesaresco.
10. The SUCCESS of the SUGAR CONVENTION. By Thom Lough, M.P.
11. FOREIGN AFFAIRS. By Dr E. J. Dillon.
12. SOME RECENT BOOKS. By "A Reader."

London: Horace Marshall & Son.

THE GEOGRAPHICAL JOURNAL. Price 2s.

Contents.—FEBRUARY.

- ON a NEW GENUS of ALGÆ, CLEMENTSIA MARKHAMIANA. By George Murray, F.R.S. With Plate.
- ON CERTAIN RECENT CHANGES in the CRATER of STROMBOLI. By Tempest Anderson, M.D. D.Sc. With Sketch Map and 11 Plates.
- The MOUNTAINS of TURKESTAN. By Ellsworth Huntington. With 7 Illustrations.
- SOUTH-WESTERN ABYSSINIA. By B. H. Jessen. With 5 Illustrations and Maps.
- NOTES on an IRISH LAKE DISTRICT. By O. J. R. Howorth. With Sketch Map.
- LIEUT. BOYD ALEXANDER'S EXPEDITION THROUGH NIGERIA JOMOKANGKAR. By Major C. F. Close, C.M.G. R.E.
- The SUBMARINE GREAT CANON of the HUDSON RIVER. By J. W. Spencer, A.M. Ph.D. F.O.S. With Sketch Map and 6 Sections.
- ON the METHOD of STUDYING THALASSOLOGY. By Prof. Ludovico Marini.
- The INDIAN CENSUS REPORT.
- REVIEWS.
- OBITUARY:—Sir Erasmus Ommanney and Sir James Donnet, by Sir Clements R. Markham, K.C.B.; Col. C. E. Stewart, C.B. C.M.G. C.I.E.; Edward John Payne; Capt. Claud Alexander; Charles H. Allen.
- CORRESPONDENCE:—Results of the British Occupation of Minorca, by Frederick Sternberg.
- MEETINGS of the ROYAL GEOGRAPHICAL SOCIETY, SESSION 1904-5.
- GEOGRAPHICAL LITERATURE of the MONTH.
- NEW MAPS.

Edward Stanford, 12, 13, and 14, Long Acre, W.C., London.

INDEPENDENT REVIEW.

FEBRUARY. 2s. 6d. net.

NOTES on CURRENT EVENTS.

The SECOND BALLOT in PARTY GOVERNMENT. J. Ramsay MacDonald.

"HOW LONG HALT YE?" G. Lowes Dickinson.

FIVE PER CENT ALL ROUND. L. T. Hobhouse.

The POETIC QUALITY in LIBERALISM. G. K. Chesterton.

LABOUR and the CROWN LANDS. C. Sheridan Jones.

SIDE LIGHTS on the FRANCISCANS. G. G. Coulton.

The CHURCHES and the CHILD. Father O'Donovan.

MILLIONAIRE ENDOWMENTS. J. A. Hobson.

The VILLAGE and the UNEMPLOYED. Rev. Arnold D. Taylor.

LETTERS to the EDITOR.

The LIFE of LIDDON. Rev. Hastings Rashdall.

OTHER REVIEWS.

T. Fisher Unwin, Paternoster Square.

JOURNAL of the INSTITUTE of ACTUARIES.

No. CCXIX. JANUARY, 1905. Price 2s. 6d.

Contents.

Opening Address by the President.

On the Retrospective Method of Valuation. By Frederick Bell, F.I.A., of the Alliance Assurance Company, Limited, Actuary for the Imperial Life Assurance Fund. With Discussion.

Correspondence.

Reviews.

The Institute of Actuaries.

London: C. & E. Layton, Farringdon Street.

THE TECHNIQUE of INDEXING. By MARY PETHERBRIDGE. Nat. Sci. Tripos, Indexer of the East India Company's Records, the Drapers' Company's Records, the Warrington Corporation Records, &c. Price 5s. net.—Published by the Secretarial Bureau, 52a, Conduit Street, London, W.

For Continuation of Magazines see p. 132.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS.

THE CAMBRIDGE MODERN HISTORY.

Planned by the late LORD ACTON.

Edited by Dr. A. W. WARD, Dr. G. W. PROTHERO, and STANLEY LEATHES, M.A.
To be completed in 12 vols. royal 8vo, buckram, gilt top, 16s. net each.

TIMES on Vol. I.—"The opening volume of what promises to be one of the most important books of our time."

DAILY TELEGRAPH.—"This promises to be the standard modern history for long years to come."

NEW VOLUME NOW READY.

Vol. III. THE WARS OF RELIGION.

THE FOLLOWING VOLUMES ARE ALSO READY:—

Vol. I. The RENAISSANCE. Vol. VII. The UNITED STATES.
FOURTH IMPRESSION. 16s. net. SECOND IMPRESSION. 16s. net

Vol. II. The REFORMATION. Vol. VIII. The FRENCH REVOLU-
SECOND IMPRESSION. 16s. net. TION. 16s. net.

TERMS TO SUBSCRIBERS.—Subscriptions will be received for the Complete Work at £7 10s. net, which may be either paid in advance or by payments of 12s. 6d. net for each Volume on publication.

A Prospectus will be sent on application.

A COMPANION to GREEK STUDIES. Edited by Leonard

WHIBLEY, M.A., Fellow of Pembroke College, and University Lecturer in Ancient History. With 141 Illustrations and 5 Maps. Demy 8vo, 18s. net.

The Contents include Chapters on Geography, Fauna, and Flora; History; Literature, Philosophy, and Science; Art, Mythology, and Religion; Public Antiquities; Private Antiquities; Criticism and Interpretation, contributed by H. F. TOZER, Canon TRISTRAM, R. D. HICKS, Sir R. JEBB, Dr. HENRY JACKSON, Dr. GOW, Dr. F. C. PENROSE, Prof. E. A. GARDNER, Dr. WALDSTEIN, F. R. EARP, A. H. SMITH, Prof. RIDGEWAY, Dr. ARCHER-HIND, L. WHIBLEY, W. WYSE, R. J. G. MAYOR, H. J. EDWARDS, Prof. OMAN, A. B. COOK, Miss HARRISON, Dr. WILKINS, Dr. M. R. JAMES, F. WARRE CORNISH, Lady EVANS, Prof. ALLBUTT, R. A. NEIL, P. GILES, E. S. ROBERTS, J. RENDEL HARRIS, Dr. VERRALL, and Dr. SANDYS.

A Prospectus will be sent on application.

FOURTH EDITION NEARLY READY.

The GROWTH of ENGLISH INDUSTRY and COMMERCE

DURING the EARLY and MIDDLE AGES. By W. CUNNINGHAM, D.D., Fellow of the British Academy, Hon. Fellow of Gonville and Caius College, Fellow and Lecturer of Trinity College, and Vicar of Great St. Mary's, Cambridge; formerly Lecturer on Economic History in Harvard University. Fourth Edition. Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d. net. [nearly ready.]

The SPEECHES of ISAEUS With Critical and Explanatory

Notes. By WILLIAM WYSE, M.A., late Fellow and Lecturer of Trinity College, Cambridge, sometime Professor of Greek in the University College, London. Demy 8vo, 18s. net

NICETA of REMESIANA: his Life and Works. By A. E.

BURN, D.D., Trinity College, Cambridge, Rector of Handsworth and Prebendary of Lichfield, Examining Chaplain to the Lord Bishop of Lichfield. Crown 8vo, 9s. net.

STUDIES on ANGLO-SAXON INSTITUTIONS. By H. Munro

CHADWICK, Fellow of Clare College, Cambridge. Crown 8vo, 8s. net.

A GRAMMAR of the SOMALI LANGUAGE. With Examples

in Prose and Verse, and an Account of the Yibir and Midgan Dialects. By J. W. C. KIRK, B.A., King's College, Cambridge, Lieutenant, Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry, and 6th (Somaliland) Battalion, King's African Rifles. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

The HARVEIAN ORATION, Delivered before the Royal College

of Physicians on June 21, 1904. By RICHARD CATON, M.D. F.R.C.P., Emeritus Professor of Physiology, University of Liverpool; Consulting Physician, Royal Infirmary. I. I-em-hotep and Ancient Egyptian Medicine. II. Prevention of Valvular Disease. With 7 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 3s. net.

CAMBRIDGE ENGLISH CLASSICS.—New Volume.

Prospectus, with Specimen Pages, will be sent on application.

SAMUEL BUTLER.—HUDIBRAS: Written in the Time of the Late Wars. The Text Edited by A. R. WALLER. Large crown 8vo, 4s. 6d. net.

THE CAMBRIDGE HISTORICAL SERIES.—New Volume.

General Editor: G. W. PROTHERO, Litt.D.

SCANDINAVIA: a Political History of Denmark, Norway, and

SWEDEN from 1513 to 1900. By R. NISBET BAIN, Author of 'The Daughter of Peter the Great,' 'Charles XII. and the Collapse of the Swedish Empire,' &c. Crown 8vo, with 5 Maps, 7s. 6d.

NOW READY. VOL. I. PART I. JANUARY, 1905. Price 5s. net.

The JOURNAL of AGRICULTURAL SCIENCE. Edited by

R. H. BIFFEN, M.A., A. D. HALD, M.A., J. H. MIDDLETON, M.A., T. R. WOOD, M.A., in consultation with W. BATESON, M.A. F.R.S., J. R. CAMPBELL, B.Sc., W. SOMERVILLE, M.A. D.Sc.

The JOURNAL of AGRICULTURAL SCIENCE will be issued as material accumulates, aiming at Quarterly Parts of about 100 pages, with Plates and Figures, Four Parts to constitute a Volume. The Subscription Price, payable in advance, is 15s. per volume, post free.

Prospectus will be sent on application.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS BULLETIN. Now Ready, No. 4, containing Notes on Books published by the Cambridge University Press. The Bulletin is published early in each University Term, and will be posted free of charge to any address.

London: Cambridge University Press Warehouse, Ave Maria Lane. C. F. CLAY, Manager.

SEE
BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE

FOR FEBRUARY FOR NELSON'S YEAR.

A NEW POEM. By ALFRED NOYES.

ALSO

THE RENASCENCE OF SYCOPHANCY.

THE WAR IN THE FAR EAST.

By O.

I. OF an OFFICER'S PATROL.

II. The NAVAL SUB-LIEUTENANT'S STORY.

III. PORT ARTHUR.

A STUDY OF THE RUSSO-JAPANESE WAR.

By CHASSEUR.

The LAND CAMPAIGN to the PASSAGE of the YALU.

THE MYSTICS.

By the AUTHOR of 'JOHN CHILCOTE, M.P.'

The Marriage Bond.

The Crisis in the French Chamber.

By IAN MALCOLM, M.P.

Musings Without Method.

Mrs. John Hunter, the Surgeon's Wife.

Two Singers.

The Rawhide. By Stewart Edward White.

Richard Hartley, Prospector.

By DOUGLAS BLACKBURN.

W. BLACKWOOD & SONS, Edinburgh and London.

Just published.

ÜBUNGS- und LESEBUCH zum STUDIUM der JAPANISCHEN SPRACHE.

Von Prof. Dr. RUD. LANGE.

Price, bound, 28s.

Georg Reimer,

Berlin, W., 35, Lützowstrasse 107/8.

BYZANTINE, ROMANESQUE, and GOTHIC;
Examples of Wrought-Iron Work; Byzantine Architecture (Architectural Association); West Front, Beverley Minster; University College Schools, Hampstead; Metropolitan Asylums Board Offices; Wrought-Iron Gates, Worsley Hall; Old Lead Spout-heads, Bolton Hall; Section of S. Irene, Constantinople; Types of Concrete-Steel Structures (Student's Column), &c.—See the BUILDER of February 4 (4d.); by post, 4jd.).—Through any Newsagent; or direct from the Publisher of the Builder, Catherine Street, London, W.C.

ABSTRACTS of the WILLS in REGISTER
SOAME, 1620, in the PREROGATIVE COURT of CANTERBURY.
This Volume of over 600 Pages, now ready, contains concise but exhaustive Abstracts of every Will in the two volumes known as Register Soame, containing 1,366 Wills, with 40,000 References to Persons, and 10,000 to Places, all thoroughly indexed. The volume will be delivered at 6dols., or 23s. (carriage extra). All correspondence relative to the work may be addressed to the Editor, J. HENRY LEA, 14, Chiford's Inn, London, E.C. Subscriptions should be sent to N. C. NASH, Treasurer, New England Historic Genealogical Society, Somerset Street, Boston, Mass., U.S.A.

SUPPLEMENT TO HAIN AND COPINGER'S REPERTORIUM BIBL.
NOW READY.—PROF. DR. DIETRICH REICHLING.

APPENDICES ad HAINII COPINGERI
REPERTORIUM BIBLIOGRAPHICUM. PART I Very important Bibliographical Item, containing a full description of 860 Incunabula, of which 365 are entirely unknown to Hain and Copinger. 266 pp. 8vo, price 10s.

Jacques Rosenthal, Bookseller, 10, Karl Str., Munich, Bavaria.

JUST PUBLISHED, January 11, 1905. Price Two Guineas net.
Limited to 500 numbered Copies.

THE EIGHTEENTH CENTURY ARCHITECTURE OF BATH. By MOWBRAY A. GREEN, A.R.I.B.A. With 195 Full-Page Plates and 52 other Engravings, Views, Details, Plans, Sketches, and Facsimiles. Also Articles on Mrs. Piozzi, Bath Theatre, and Thomas Beach. 4to, pp. xvii+263, art. linen, top edges gilt.

Bath: George Gregory, Bookseller to H. M. Queen Alexandra

MESSRS. LONGMANS & CO.'S LIST.

MR. FREDERIC VILLIERS' BOOK ON THE WAR.

PORT ARTHUR:

Three Months with the Besiegers.

A DIURNAL OF OCCURRENTS.

By FREDERIC VILLIERS.

With 35 Illustrations, 2 Facsimiles, and a Map.

8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

* * This book is illustrated from the Author's original Sketches and Photographs, depicting his experiences with General Baron Nogi's army before the great fortress. It deals with all the vicissitudes of the indomitable besiegers, the Author having been an eye-witness of the fighting night and day.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION.

THE

AMERICAN REVOLUTION.

By the Right Hon.

Sir GEORGE OTTO TREVELYAN, Bart.

CHEAP EDITION. With Portrait. Vols. I., II., III.

Crown 8vo, 5s. net each.

* * Vol. I. of this Edition was issued as Part I. of the Original Edition. It has been largely Rearranged, carefully Revised, and in part Rewritten.

PALL MALL GAZETTE.—"A masterpiece which lays both nations under a deep and welcome obligation."

SCOTSMAN.—"Sir George Trevelyan's history is on its own account so well balanced, carefully authenticated, and interestingly written that its publication in this cheap form should find for it hosts of new readers among those who affect serious literature."

NEW CHEAP EDITION IN TWELVE VOLUMES.

THE EARTHLY PARADISE.

By WILLIAM MORRIS.

In 14 parts, comprised in 12 vols. crown 8vo.

Part I. PROLOGUE. With a Prefatory Note on the Life and Work of William Morris, by Mr. J. W. MACKAIL, and a Portrait hitherto unpublished. 1s. net.

Part II. ATALANTA'S RACE. 1s. net.

The type of this New Edition is reset, and the Parts bound in grey boards, with linen backs, similar in style to the various Lectures and Essays by William Morris, which were printed in the Golden Type.

THIRD ENGLISH EDITION.

THE PRINCIPLES OF CHEMISTRY.

By D. MENDELÉEFF.

Translated from the Russian (Seventh Edition) by

GEORGE KAMENSKY, A.R.S.M.,

Of the Imperial Mint, St. Petersburg.

And Edited by THOMAS H. POPE, B.Sc. F.I.C.

With 110 Diagrams and Illustrations.

2 vols. 8vo, 32s. net.

THE TIGER OF MUSCOVY:

A Romance of the Time of Ivan the Terrible.

By FRED WHISHAW.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

DUNDEE COURIER.—"Mr. Wishaw has depicted all the characters in this story with his usual force and vividness. The tale moves with rapidity; not one dull page can be found in the book."

DAILY NEWS.—"The plot is ingenious, and the picture of Ivan the Terrible carries with it the conviction of its essential reality.....The Czar's changing moods are narrated with much spirit, while there is sufficient adventure to satisfy the most insatiate appetite."

LONGMANS, GREEN & CO.

39, Paternoster Row, London, E.C.

ELLIOT STOCK'S
NEW BOOKS.

In crown 4to, cloth, fully illustrated with Portraits,
&c., price 21s. net.

THE GARRICK CLUB

BY

PERCY FITZGERALD, F.S.A.,

Author of 'The Life of Garrick,' 'Lives of the Kembles,' &c.

"Mr. Fitzgerald's book may be read with unending amusement and delight. It has scarcely a dull page. He writes in a most genial, effusive, and even ebullient style."—Athenæum.

"Mr. Percy Fitzgerald has found a subject thoroughly congenial to his light, discursive style; the very reverence with which he handles the smallest item of gossip concerning the more distinguished members will help to win him the sympathy of his readers."—Standard.

"About a great many interesting persons are told a great many interesting stories, and the admirable portrait illustrations add greatly to the worth of the book."—Daily News.

"Full of good stories, well illustrated, and especially rich in reminiscences of Thackeray."—Weekly Times.

"A volume full of delightful chat about notable people, while the numerous illustrations have an historical value."—Graphic.

"This handsome volume is at once a storehouse of anecdote and an ample account of the Garrick Club pictures."—Referee.

Tastefully printed with broad margins, in large 4to size, with over 150 Photographic Illustrations, handsomely bound, with gilt top, price 21s. net.

NORMAN TYMPANA and

LINTELS, with Figures of Symbolical Sculpture, still, or till recently, existing in the Churches of Great Britain. With an extended Introduction and Description, and 150 Phototype Illustrations. By CHARLES EDWARD KEYSER, M.A. F.S.A.

"The volume is produced with an elaborate detail which suits the subject, and establishes itself at once as a work of reference."

Reading Gazette.

"The illustrations are all of good size, and very clearly depict the sculptured figures and ornaments."—City Press.

In crown 8vo, tastefully bound, price 5s.

The LOVE LETTERS of a
LADY of QUALITY of the SEVENTEENTH CENTURY. With 2 Facsimile Portraits from Miniature.

"Full of romantic interest."

Newcastle Daily Chronicle.

"A refined and artistic piece of work."

Aberdeen Free Press.

NEW NOVELS.

In crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s.

The SCHOOL of LIFE. A Study
in the Discipline of Circumstance. By SYBIL
M. ILES.

In crown 8vo, cloth, gilt lettered, price 6s.

LIFE'S PHASES. A Domestic
Story. By MARY ADAMS COLLINGS.

"It is drawn from real life, and would seem to be a faithful record, for it presents a picture which is, alas! only too often to be seen in outline in newspaper reports."—Record.

ELLIOT STOCK, 62, Paternoster Row, London, E.C.

MESSRS. JAMES MACLEHOSE & SONS.

Messrs. MacLehose's Library of Travels of Sixteenth and Seventeenth Centuries.

1. HAKLUYT'S VOYAGES. 12 vols. demy 8vo.

[Out of print.]

2. PURCHAS'S VOYAGES, entitled Hakluytus Posthumus or Purchas

His Pilgrimes. Contayning a History of the World in Sea Voyages and Lande Travells, by Englishmen and others. By SAMUEL PURCHAS, B.D.
In 20 vols. demy 8vo, 12s. 6d. net per vol. [Vols. I. and II. next week.]

This is the First Reprint since the Original Edition of 1625.

3. CORYAT'S CRUDITIES. Hastily gobbled up in five moneths travells

in France, Savoy, Italy, Rhetia, Switzerland, High Germany, and the Netherlands. By THOMAS CORYAT. This Edition will contain Facsimile Reproductions of all the Illustrations in the 1611 Edition. 2 vols. 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 25s. net. [In February.]

Other Volumes in preparation.

A Special Edition of each of these Books, limited to 100 Copies on Hand-made Paper, 25s. net per volume, will contain Proofs on Japanese of all the Engravings.

Sir WILLIAM LAIRD CLOWES, Author of 'A History of the Royal Navy,' writing in the 'Daily Chronicle,' January 19th, 1905, says:—"I speak of the enthralling work which is usually cited as 'Purchas, his Pilgrimes,' but of which the first title is 'Hakluytus Posthumus.' This vast collection was published in 1625, and has never since been reissued, and I am delighted to see that so soon as they are finished with Hakluyt proper Messrs. MacLehose's purpose is to begin a republication of 'Purchas.'

"It will consist of twenty volumes, in the same form and illustrated in the same manner as the Hakluyt, and the thirty-two handsome tomes will then provide those who are interested in such studies—and what Englishman is not?—with a most thoroughly attractive account of British adventure up to the time of James I.

"For the manner in which Messrs. MacLehose, the publishers, and the Glasgow University Press, the printers, are doing their parts of the business, no praise can be too warm.

"Not only are paper and type alike excellent, but also the pages are singularly free from misprints. And this is not all. Included in each volume is a most wisely chosen series of charts, plans, portraits, and illustrative sketches, reproduced from originals roughly contemporaneous with the events described in the text, and it is high merit indeed that it can be said of these that not one appears to be inappropriate, not one insufficiently authoritative.

"The reissue of 'Purchas' is announced to begin in February, and the publishers hope to bring their final great undertaking to a conclusion within about two years from the present time. I wish them every success."

'NOTES AND QUERIES,' January 7th, 1905, says:—"It is pleasant to know that the reception given to their edition of 'Hakluyt's Voyages' has emboldened the publishers to undertake the issue in a similar form of 'Hakluytus Posthumus; or, Purchas his Pilgrimes,' a work even rarer than that of which it is a continuation. This, founded on materials left by Hakluyt, has not previously been reprinted. All the maps (over seventy in number) in the 1625 edition will be reproduced, the fine title-page will be executed in facsimile, and the work will be enriched by a complete index upon a scale corresponding to modern requirements. Of this a thousand copies only, all of which will doubtless be subscribed for before publication, will be issued. Two volumes will appear in February, and it is hoped that the entire work will within a couple of years be in the hands of the subscribers."

Demy 8vo, 540 pp., 10s. net.

EARLY SCOTTISH CHARTERS. Prior to A.D. 1153.

A Series of 270 Charters, Collected, with Notes and Index, by Sir ARCHIBALD C. LAWRIE. [This day.]

MUSEUMS: their History and their Use. With a

Bibliography and List of Museums in the United Kingdom. By DAVID MURRAY, LL.D. F.S.A. 3 vols. demy 8vo, 32s. net. [This day.]

MAGNA CARTA: a Commentary on the Great Charter

of King John, with an Historical Introduction. By WILLIAM SHARP McKECHNIE, M.A. LL.B. D.Phil., Lecturer on Constitutional Law and History in the University of Glasgow, Author of 'The State and the Individual: an Introduction to Political Science.' Demy 8vo, 600 pp. 12s. 6d. net. [Next week.]

PRINCIPAL CAIRD'S WORKS.

CHEAPER UNIFORM EDITION.

Extra post 8vo, 4s. 6d. net each volume.

AN INTRODUCTION to the PHILOSOPHY of RELI-

GION. By the Very Rev. JOHN CAIRD, DD. LL.D., late Principal and Vice-Chancellor of the University of Glasgow. Seventh Thousand.

The FUNDAMENTAL IDEAS of CHRISTIANITY.

With a Memoir by EDWARD CAIRD, D.C.L. LL.D., Master of Balliol. Fourth Thousand, 2 vols., with Portrait.

UNIVERSITY ADDRESSES on SUBJECTS of ACADEMIC STUDY. Third Thousand.

UNIVERSITY SERMONS, Preached before the University of Glasgow. Fourth Thousand.

JUST OUT, 461 pp., 6s. net, with 42 Illustrations taken from Contemporary Sources.

FROM the MONARCHY to the REPUBLIC in FRANCE, 1788-1792. By SOPHIA H. MACLEHOSE.

"The same qualities of careful scholarship and unpretentious exposition are shown..... We do not think that any one who wished for an introduction to the best and most recent French authorities on the subject could do better than begin with this work."—Athenæum.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

SECOND THOUSAND, 408 pp., 6s. net, with 41 Illustrations taken from Contemporary Sources.

The LAST DAYS of the FRENCH MONARCHY.

"We do not want for the ordinary reader a more readable and a more thorough guide to the decay of the Monarchy than this lucid and carefully digested sketch of the most interesting period of the eighteenth-century history. It is more than a sketch, it is a history."—Spectator.

THE MASTER OF BALLIOL'S WORKS.

The EVOLUTION of THEOLOGY in the GREEK

PHILOSOPHERS. By EDWARD CAIRD, LL.D. D.C.L. D.Litt., Master of Balliol College, Oxford. 2 vols. extra post 8vo, 14s. net.

"The most masterly and illuminating survey of the highest Greek thought that it has ever been our fortune to read."—Guardian.

The EVOLUTION of RELIGION. Third Edition. 2 vols. 12s. net.

The CRITICAL PHILOSOPHY of IMMANUEL KANT. 2 vols. 32s.

The SOCIAL PHILOSOPHY and RELIGION of COMTE. Second Edition. 5s. net.

Glasgow: JAMES MACLEHOSE & SONS, Publishers to the University.

London and New York: MACMILLAN & CO., LIMITED.

MACMILLAN & CO.'S LIST.

VOL. III. READY THIS DAY.

DIARY & LETTERS OF MADAME D'ARBLAY

(1778-1840). As Edited by her Niece, CHARLOTTE BARRETT. With Preface and Notes by AUSTIN DOBSON. With Photogravure Portraits and other Sketches. In 6 vols. Vol. I., 1778 to June, 1781. Vol. II., 1781-84. Vol. III., August, 1786, to June, 1788. 8vo, 10s. 6d. net each

SHAKESPEAREAN TRAGEDY.

Lectures on 'Hamlet,' 'Othello,' 'King Lear,' and 'Macbeth.' By Prof. A. C. BRADLEY, LL.D. Litt.D. 8vo, 10s. net.

SPECTATOR—"We have no hesitation in putting Prof. Bradley's book far above any modern Shakespearean criticism that we know, worthy to rank very near the immortal work of Lamb and Coleridge. It is, indeed, difficult to praise it in language which shall do it justice, and yet seem free from exaggeration. For it is more than a study of Shakespeare: it is a unique piece of constructive criticism, which, from its freshness of method and distinction of form, deserves to rank as the most important exercise in the craft since Matthew Arnold's 'Essays in Criticism.'"

POPULAR EDITION NOW READY.

THE GOLDEN TREASURY.

Selected from the Best Songs and Lyrical Poems in the English Language. Selected and Arranged with Notes by FRANCIS T. PALGRAVE. Pott 8vo, 1s. net.

MACMILLAN'S GUIDE BOOKS.

GUIDE to ITALY and SICILY.

With 19 Maps and 36 Plans. Fifth Edition. 10s. net.

GUIDE to EGYPT and the SUDAN,

including a Description of the Route through Uganda to Mombasa. With 35 Maps and Plans. Third Edition. 5s. net

GUIDE to PALESTINE and SYRIA.

With 13 Maps and 5 Plans. Third Edition. 5s. net.

GERTRUDE ATHERTON'S NEW NOVEL.

THE BELL IN THE FOG,

And other Stories. Crown 8vo, gilt top, 6s.

ENGLISH MEN OF LETTERS.—New Series.

Crown 8vo, gilt tops, flat backs, 2s. net each.

SYDNEY SMITH.

By GEORGE W. E. RUSSELL.

THOMAS MOORE.

By STEPHEN GWYNN.

ACADEMY and LITERATURE.—"Mr. Gwynn has added considerably to his already very considerable repute by this capital little book, in which he does justice to his subject and to himself."

A BOOK OF WIT AND HUMOUR.

THE WORKS OF

ARTHUR CLEMENT HILTON

(Of Marlborough and Cambridge). Author of 'The Light Green.' With 2 Illustrations, together with HIS LIFE AND LETTERS, by Sir ROBERT EDGEUMBE. Fcap. 8vo, 5s. net; vellum, gilt top, 12s. 6d. net.

PALL MALL GAZETTE.—"Wit on the wings of metre. Highly remarkable. Sir Robert Edgecumbe's memoir is a model of affectionate and tributary sympathy. There are parodies brilliant enough to persuade one almost that the same hand wrote the parent and the parasite. There are things in this delightful little book that will live among the best examples of English wit."

ATHENÆUM.—"This record of a bright, short life was well worth making, and Sir Robert Edgecumbe has told us with modesty and grace just what we wanted to know. A parodist, classic at his best, and long since promoted to that rank by the dignity of frequent misquotation."

SPEAKER.—"Will be welcome."

SCOTSMAN.—"Sunny collection."

SPECTATOR.—"We have always had a special affection for the irresistible audacity of 'The May Exam.'.....We have nothing but congratulations to offer Sir Robert Edgecumbe on his pious act of homage to the memory of his friend and contemporary A. C. Hilton. To a collection of Hilton's Cambridge brilliant jeux d'esprit he has added a number of other pieces."

DAILY CHRONICLE.—"The champagne of parody..... A born humourist."

HARVARD LECTURES ON GREEK SUBJECTS.

By S. H. BUTCHER, Litt.D. LL.D., late Professor of Greek in the University of Edinburgh. Crown 8vo, 7s. net.

DAILY NEWS.—"They are the work of a scholar of profound erudition and a keen literary sense, who has succeeded in presenting with clearness and grace some of the characteristic qualities of Greek culture, and thereby suggesting the value of Greek to the modern world."

MACMILLAN & CO., LIMITED, London.

HURST & BLACKETT'S LIST.

NEW AND IMPORTANT WORK.

READY IN ENGLAND AND AMERICA
FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 10.

In 2 vols. royal 8vo.

With over 250 beautiful Illustrations in Colour from Paintings by Countess Helena Gleichen and the Author, Photogravures, and Half-Tones.

With Portraits of Lord Curzon and Col. Sir Francis Younghusband, K.C.I.E.,

7 Maps, and in a specially designed Cover, buckram gilt.

Price £2 2s.

L H A S A.

An Account of the Country and People of Central Tibet, and of the Progress of the Mission sent there by the English Government in the Year 1903-4.

Written, with the help of all the principal persons of the Mission,

BY

PERCEVAL LANDON,

Special Correspondent of the Times.

With an Introduction by

Col. Sir FRANCIS YOUNGHUSBAND,
K.C.I.E.

An Illustrated Prospectus sent free on application.

DR. OTTO NORDENSKJOLD'S GREAT WORK ON THE SOUTH POLAR REGIONS.

READY IMMEDIATELY.

In 1 vol. medium 8vo.

Illustrated by over 250 Reproductions of Photographs taken especially for this Work, 4 Coloured Plates from Paintings, and 3 Maps.

Price 18s. net.

ANTARCTICA.

Two Years Amongst the Ice of the South Pole.

BY

Dr. OTTO NORDENSKJOLD.

London: HURST & BLACKETT, LIMITED,
182, High Holborn, W.C.

THE LIBRARY.

A QUARTERLY MAGAZINE OF BIBLIOGRAPHY
AND LIBRARY LITERATURE.

EDITED BY

J. Y. W. MACALISTER

AND

ALFRED W. POLLARD,

IN COLLABORATION WITH

KONRAD BURGER, LEOPOLD DELISLE,
MELVILLE DEWEY, and RICHARD GARNETT.

A NEW VOLUME BEGINS THIS MONTH.

Among the Contents for 1904 were Articles on

Robert Proctor, by Alfred Pollard; the Perceval Legend, by Jessie L. Weston; Tottel's Miscellany, by W. W. Greg; Notes from the first French Translation of the Vicar of Wakefield, by F. F. Barwick; the Musée Dobrée at Nantes, by R. S. Faber; Bad Books, by R. F. Cholmeley; Secret Printing during the Civil War, by H. R. Plomer; Letters of Henry Bradshaw to Officials at the British Museum; Public Utilization of Existing Libraries, by James Duff Brown; a Cataloguing Bureau for Public Libraries, by Stanley Jast; Reviews of recent French and German Books, by Elizabeth Lee.

Printed at the Chiswick Press.

Single Numbers, 3s.;

Annual Subscription, 10s. 6d.

Bound Volumes, 12s.

A few Complete Sets still in print.

Published by

KEGAN PAUL, TRENCH, TRÜBNER & CO.,
LTD., Dryden House, Gerrard Street, W.C.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 4, 1905.

CONTENTS.

|   | PAGE    |
|---|---------|
| ENGLAND UNDER THE STUARTS ... ..  | 135     |
| FRENCH PROFILES ... ..  | 136     |
| EMMANUEL COLLEGE ... ..   | 138     |
| TWO BOOKS ON JAPAN ... ..   | 138     |
| A BOOK OF REMINISCENCES ... ..  | 140     |
| NEW NOVELS (Nellie Maturin's Victory; Olive Kinsella; Godfrey Marten, Undergraduate; The Night of Reckoning; Heart of my Heart; The Provincials)  | 140-141 |
| ASSYRIOLOGICAL BOOKS ... ..   | 141     |
| BOOKS ON DANTE ... ..   | 142     |
| OUR LIBRARY TABLE (Books and Things; The Other Side of the Lantern; Dr. Japp on Stevenson; Two Books concerning St. Francis; Chaucer englished by Prof. Skeat; The Jewish Encyclopedia; Ascham's English Works; The Earthly Paradise; English Seamen; Don Quixote; Cervantes in England; Shakespeare; Hazell's Annual) ... .. | 143-144 |
| LIST OF NEW BOOKS ... ..  | 144     |
| A VETERAN SCHOLAR; CROMWELL ON SIR JOHN PALGRAVE; MR. COX AND 'THE EXAMINER'; THE BRITISH MUSEUM READING-ROOM; THE SPEN- SERIAN STANZA; SCHOOL OF IRISH LEARNING, DUBLIN; SALE ... ..   | 145-146 |
| LITERARY GOSSIP ... ..  | 146     |
| SCIENCE—THE UNVEILING OF LHASA; THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS; EARLY WESTERN TRAVELS; ASTRONOMICAL BOOKS; RESEARCH NOTES; SOCIETIES; MEETINGS NEXT WEEK; GOSSIP ... ..   | 147-151 |
| FINE ARTS—PROCTOR'S EDITION OF THE ORESTEIA; BOROUGH SEALS OF THE GOTHIC PERIOD; FRENCH IMPRESSIONISTS AT THE GRAFTON GALLERIES; SALES; GOSSIP ... ..   | 151-153 |
| MUSIC—SYMPHONY CONCERT; BERLIOZ'S CHILDHOOD OF CHRIST AND MACKENZIE'S THE WITCH'S DAUGHTER; GOSSIP; PERFORMANCES NEXT WEEK  | 151     |
| DRAMA—THE SIN OF DAVID; GREAT FRIENDS; GOSSIP   | 155     |
| MISCELLANEA—COLERIDGE'S POEMS ... ..  | 156     |

LITERATURE

England under the Stuarts. By G. M. Trevelyan. Part of 'A History of England' in Six Volumes, edited by C. W. C. Oman. (Methuen & Co.)

(First Notice.)

THE delay in noticing a book which will undoubtedly take a high and permanent place in the literature of its subject, and which will of itself confer distinction upon the series which it introduces, must be ascribed to its proper cause. It has been read twice through from cover to cover—many passages, indeed, several times; and, although the conclusions arrived at on the first reading have suffered no considerable change, it was desirable to take time before expressing them in a very positive form.

"Bon chien chasse de race." Mr. Trevelyan can fairly face his family traditions. He has given us not so much a history, in the ordinary sense of the word, as a sustained and luminous commentary upon history, high-toned and impartial; and the general excellence of its purely literary qualities is, so to speak, picked out by not infrequent passages of real and picturesque eloquence. It is necessarily a long book, but it is a fine example of selection and condensation, while a power of epigrammatic expression—"The sectarians had read the secret of the future, but the present was for their rivals," will serve as an instance—prevents the condensation from becoming too great a strain. When it has been said that here and there a sentence may be found which appears obscure, or a statement of fact, or a deduction, to which exception may be taken; that once or twice we have been surprised by a lapse into the language of the schoolroom—when we have entered a protest against one or two affectations of style—the only reservations have been made to a whole-hearted decision that this is a book for which to be grateful, a worthy supplement to the work of the great historical students who have concerned themselves with the greatest of English themes. It is not, of course, a book for the young learner; it demands what we may call an effective knowledge of the facts with which it deals, and a considerable amount of previous reflection upon those facts.

The preliminary chapters, which serve as an introduction to the main theme, form a careful and comprehensive sketch of the varied face of English society as it existed without practical change from 1603 to 1640. Of the large number of interesting matters with which they deal we can notice but one or two. Mr. Trevelyan lays deserved weight upon the custom which led the cadets of the country families to seek their fortunes in commerce:—

"When we read of the proud spirit in which the shopkeepers of London claimed to be heard in Church and State, and faced the royal soldiers in street riot and on battlefield, it must be remembered that there was a leaven among them of the sons of gentlemen brought up in the country side. The English town-folk were in blood and temper a blend of the two classes. Accordingly the squires regarded neighbouring cities, where they watched their sons rising to wealth and fame, with none of that jealousy which in other lands divided a nobility, proud in arms, from a rival plutocracy of pure burgher blood. If such a feud had existed in England, the Civil War, however begun, would have resolved itself into a strife between town and country, from which the Prince would have emerged, as from the revolt of the Spanish comuneros and the Knights' War in Germany, an umpire with powers supreme."

No less suggestive are his words upon the meaning and value of an unpaid magistracy, which, while its authority was derived from the Crown, represented local government and the rule of the squire:—

"This mutual dependence of the central and provincial administrations is the key to the history of the Stuart epoch. It ensured both the ill-success of the republican propaganda and the failure of the Stuart kings to establish a despotism without possessing a bureaucracy. ....The policy of the Crown depended for its execution on the active consent of magistrates, who, again, depended for their social position on the goodwill of the neighbouring squires, and were on such friendly terms with the middle class in town and country that magisterial resistance to the Crown might at moments become one with the resistance of the whole nation, and it was these moments that decided the fate of England."

These considerations are focussed, and their importance emphasized, when it is remembered that while at the beginning of the reign of James I. the House of Commons contained only 92 members for counties and about 400 for the towns, more than 350 of these 400 were not town-folk, but country gentry:—

"Except the men of London, Bristol, and Plymouth, ....the shopkeepers considered that the privileges of Parliament were treated with more respect, and their own interests with more attention, when the market towns of Buckinghamshire sent up such neighbours as the Verneys and the Hampdens, and the cities of Yorkshire spoke through a Wentworth or a Beaumont, a Cholmeley or a Fairfax."

An admirable passage upon the character of these squires is closed with these words:—

"Hundreds of forgotten men, who during the Parliaments of forty years succeeded each other on the benches beside Coke, Eliot, Wentworth, Hyde, and Pym, brought to the help of England a type of character that never reappeared in our history—directness of intention and simplicity of mind, the inheritance of modest generations of active and hearty rural life; now at last informed by Elizabethan culture; and now at last spiritualized by a Puritan religion."

To many events Mr. Trevelyan, even when he adds no new facts, gives a new tone. We are fairly familiar with the story of the Gunpowder Plot; we can claim at least to have studied all that is readily available on the subject; and yet, after reading his account, we feel that it is lifted to a higher plane. In words which illustrate his sympathy and detachment of mind he writes:—

"Courage cold as steel, self-sacrifice untainted by jealousy or ambition, readiness when all was lost to endure all, raise the Gunpowder Plot into a story of which the ungarnished facts might well be read by those of every faith, not with shame or anger, but with enlarged admiration and pity for the things which man can do."

Mr. Trevelyan thus explains the meaning, to the unlettered man, of the dispute between Arminianism and Predestinarianism, the real issues in daily life which that dispute connoted:—

"The problem which in every age baffles or divides the acutest metaphysicians supplied the catchwords of the two parties in Church and State. Prentices hooted down the street after the Arminian rogues; courtiers damned the Predestinate crew. Our ancestors might understand even less of what they were disputing than did the mobs who massacred one another for the doctrine of the Homocousion in the cities of the Eastern Empire; yet much that every Englishman could appreciate was for the time involved in the fate of the rival dogmas. The victory of Free Will would establish a coercive and despotic Government, a sacramental and priestly religion; while Predestination implied privilege of Parliament, liberty of person, Protestant ascendancy, and the agreeable doctrine of exclusive salvation."

The characterization here of the protagonists in the great constitutional struggle which immediately preceded the Civil War, though not invariably satisfactory, generally compels interest and reflection. Upon Charles I., indeed, and his mental attitude, we do not find that any new light has been thrown; to call him "stupid" is unconvincing, even if it be not a misuse of language. But with Laud Mr. Trevelyan is particularly happy: with his objects, his limitations, his success, and his failure. He is generous in his recognition of Laud's virtues; and such phrases as "his modest, unselfish, and conscientious life"; "the fearless and energetic man" who scorned to conciliate enemies in his determination that "the village churches of England should have a seemly service"; "the only honest man"—with the exception of Strafford—"at the head of affairs"; "too old and brave to fly"—will tend, even among Laud's warmest admirers, to the acceptance of much of the censure which Mr. Trevelyan metes out with an equally unsparing hand. In a few well-chosen sentences we have the key to all:—

"In the narrow hotbed of college personalities he learned to hate a set of men who were not improbably odious—the Puritan divines then dominant in Oxford. ....When at last he became Primate, in 1633, he still conceived that all Puritans were like the clerical pedants over whom his first victory had been won. England was to him another Oxford, a place whence Puritanism, at first blustering and assertive, could soon be driven out by methodical application of college discipline."

With Mr. Trevelyan's treatment of Laud's greater colleague, with the light and the shade which he casts around "the immortal name of Strafford," we are far less content. He speaks, indeed, of many high and noble qualities, of "princely intellect and royal valour"—a perfunctory phrase which does not commend itself. He comprehends that Strafford championed the traditions of Elizabeth in an age which could not accept them; that Cromwell himself was a "Puritan Strafford." And we do not complain that otherwise Mr. Trevelyan seems to be in thrall to earlier judgments, and that he consequently fails to realize either the loneliness or the heroism of that most noble man. But we do complain that in his last mention of him he leaves him with a sneer. We appeal to Mr. Trevelyan to purge his next edition of the unworthy suggestion which occurs in his final words upon the death of Montrose:—

"At the foot of the gallows he uttered no complaint, for, unlike the ambitious Strafford, who had cried out against Princes at the last, he cared nothing for himself, but only for his king."

"Ambitious" may serve, though we may well cry, with Mark Antony, "Was this ambition?" But—Strafford selfish! Was it care for himself, or shocked amazement at the dishonour of the recreant for whom he vainly died, which wrung from those proud, patient lips the bitter cry, "Put not your trust in Princes"? It is a small matter that, apart from sentiment, this passage is historically bad, since there is no evidence that Montrose ever knew that he was the victim of a betrayal by Charles II. as dastardly as that by which the memory of Charles I. is ineffaceably stained.

We pass by Mr. Trevelyan's narrative of the Civil War. It is carefully done, but the tale is well known. The fine passage with which the chapter closes bears with it a disputable proposition. The triumph of the Parliament may perhaps have been a better thing for England than the "armed victory" of the king. But can Mr. Trevelyan be sure that this armed victory, with the lessons of the past to steady it, with no Strafford, no Laud, and probably no Star Chamber or High Commission Court, would have led to worse things than those which followed the armed victory of Cromwell? Conjecture is doubtless unprofitable; but, had things been otherwise, England might at least have escaped the deadly burden of puritanic repression which even yet is scarcely lifted from her, and which led immediately to the national disgrace of the reign of Charles II.; it might have escaped the horrors of Drogheda and Wexford and the "settlement," the brutalities of Rothes and Sharpe and Lauderdale, the immeasurable wickedness of Oates and Jeffreys.

Mr. Trevelyan comes to his own again in the next chapter. It opens well with a description of the rival claims of Necessity and Free Will in Commonwealth politics,

"the constant war between Need and Principle," which not only occupied the mind of Cromwell, but also "raged in every town and village of the island that he held coerced." Mr. Trevelyan lays true emphasis upon the cardinal failure of the second-rate politicians who followed Pym and Hampden to see that if the sovereignty of the two Houses was to become a settled principle, they must render life tolerable to their defeated foes. How the army became non-Presbyterian, how the republican rule made its own fall certain, and the meaning of John Lilburne, are no less well and freshly put.

Mr. Trevelyan is, perhaps consciously, sparing in his use of antithesis; but in one passage at least—a masterly summing-up of the case between the Protector and his first Parliament—he uses this device for its legitimate purpose of condensation in a way which gives him a claim to stand abreast with his great relative who made antithesis his own:—

"He was willing that they should alter it [the Instrument of Government] in 'circumstantial,' but they saw need for alteration in 'fundamentals.' They sat to defend the rights of the nation against the army, and in pursuit of this end they were naturally drawn on to claim for themselves the sovereign powers of the Long Parliament. Rejecting two 'fundamentals,' they threatened to revive religious persecution, and to take the control of the armed force out of the hands of Council and Protector. Oliver was determined to save England from religious intolerance and from the omnipotence of an irresponsible assembly. The members were determined to save her from despotism and military rule. He would not suffer England again to tread the weary round of Long Parliament tyranny; they would not suffer her to be ruled by the sole will of a Puritan Strafford. He knew that war and anarchy would raise their heads if, while factions were still so divided, he resigned to an assembly the power of the sword. They knew that as long as he retained it, constitutional government was a farce. Both were right. There was no escape from the situation which the Long Parliament had created when it refused to reconcile parties after the first civil war."

No less suggestive of Macaulay, in a different way, is the description—with its grim foot-note—of the subjugation of Ireland under Ludlow and Fleetwood after Cromwell's return from his own butcher's work:

"When the Tories took refuge in the oozy isles of the bogland, and defied pursuit, the English hunters sent the unsubstantial hounds of famine down the watery ways to throttle them in their last lair. All Ireland was devastated of food: its last defenders lay down to die unseen among their hills, and wailing rose faint in many a secret place with only the birds of the air to hear it. Others came out to die in battle in yelling hordes. The Puritans themselves drooped with starvation and disease as they plied the pike, wearily now and in grim silence. They rose victorious over the horrors of that war by the discipline and the self-restraint which they brought from the English field; but they left their human kindness in their own country. Like all the English who touched that fatal shore, they were degraded towards the level of the bands that had wasted Germany for the woeful Thirty Years. When Ireland at last lay dead under their feet, one-third of her inhabitants had perished by the sword, pestilence, or famine. Then followed the settlement."

With the chapters upon the later Stuarts we hope to deal in a future notice.

French Profiles. By Edmund Gosse. (Heinemann.)

By no means the least interesting of Mr. Gosse's 'French Profiles' is that chapter which, as the writer says, "is not in any sense a profile." This is the chapter on 'The Influence of France upon English Poetry,' delivered as a lecture before the Société des Conférences in Paris. It fitly concludes a book in which so much is said on the mutual influences of both literatures, and in which so scrupulous an attempt has been made to deal justly with French matters, though without giving up an English standpoint. "Here in England," says Mr. Gosse,

"we are called upon—if only English people would comprehend the fact—to contemplate and not to criticize the intellectual and moral idiosyncrasies of our neighbours. If we could but learn the lesson that a curious attention, an inquisitive observation into foreign modes of thought becomes us very well, but that we are not asked for our opinion, it would vastly facilitate our relations."

That is, of course, very true, and it might be wished that other students of French literature besides Mr. Gosse had so precise a sense of what "they are asked for." But as any virtue may topple over, by excess, into its corresponding vice, so it seems to us there are times when Mr. Gosse avoids coming to any conclusion when a conclusion of some sort is what we are most in need of. When, for instance, in writing about Daudet, he says:—

"This is no place to touch on what will eventually occupy the historian of literature, Alphonse Daudet's place in the ranks of the naturalists," we can only ask, Why not? Just that is what we want to know; and who better than Mr. Gosse could tell us? When, again, Mr. Gosse tells us that from 1877 to 1881 Daudet "was the leading novelist of the world," we are at a loss to understand whether by "leading" he means more than "leading in popularity"; and though, further on, we find him admitting that Daudet cannot seriously be compared with Balzac, with Tourguénief, with Flaubert, even with Maupassant, he is seen throughout the whole essay treating him with as much respect as if he were a great novelist, and with a partiality greater than if he were. On the other hand, though an amusing personal experience of Verlaine is related, and the problem of Mallarmé is fronted with friendly resolution, there is no apparent perception that Verlaine was, in the strict sense of the word, a great poet, and that Mallarmé has had a deep, and is likely to have a deepening, influence on the art of French poetry. But we are told a great deal about M. Paul Bourget, M. René Bazin, and above all Pierre Loti.

Before certain talents, not perhaps of the first rank, but in whom an indefinable charm seems to escape analysis, Mr. Gosse capitulates from the outset; he cannot reason about them, he can only reason about the reasons why they charm him. One of these talents is Stevenson, another is Pierre Loti. He is on his knees before both these charming, feminine writers; he can but say of each, as he says in this book of Loti, "he is irresistible." He finds that "the critical spirit is powerless against a pen so delicately sensitive, so capable of playing with masterly effect on all the finer stops of our emotions."

Loti is a Pied Piper, and Mr. Gosse is "always among the bewitched." Loti is a "magician"; "it is a vice, this Lotism"; "magic," "enchantment," "fascination," and then "fascination," and "enchantment," and "magic," turn and return on every page. And Mr. Gosse's own words take colour and movement from those coloured and moving pages, as he dwells on the delight which book after book has given him. Occasionally he pauses to make a comparison, as here:—

"There are pages of 'Le Désert' with which there is nothing in European literature of their limited class to compare, except certain of the atmospheric pictures in Fromentin's two books and in 'Modern Painters.'"

But for this sentence, one would have imagined that Mr. Gosse had never read Fromentin, or that, having read him, he did not appreciate him; but he has read Fromentin, he appreciates him, and he sees no essential difference between the serene and austere art of that great painter in words and what is painted, scented, and bewigged in the sentimental traveller who notes his sensations au jour le jour like a journalist. Or, rather, a suspicion seems once to dawn upon him, as he reads a single book, 'La Galilée,' and recognizes "a tourist like ourselves," making copy for a daily paper. The suspicion lasts through the whole review of that particular book, and in the course of that review "we find ourselves glancing back at our old favourites with horrid new suspicions." But the mood passes, and leaves not a cloud. The "incomparable magic" is on the next page, and the "irresistible enchantment." It is as if a dreamer refused to be wakened, and shook off daylight that he might plunge back into a delightful dream. We see the personal confession of an enthusiastic and capricious reader; the "case," as psychology, becomes more and more interesting; but where is criticism?

In a notable passage Mr. Gosse says, very justly:—

"It is extraordinary, but very fortunate, that the firm expression of an opinion on the part of a few expert persons whose views are founded on principle and reason still exercises a very great authority on the better class of readers. When it ceases to do so the reign of chaos will have set in."

Has Mr. Gosse quite realized the extent to which he is looked upon in England as precisely one of those "expert persons," and the "very great authority" which his name carries with the "better class of readers"? Has he not at least forgotten it for a moment when he tells us not of some great, or at least fine, French novel, but of "a well-constructed book, full of noble thoughts" (a certain piece of fiction called 'De tout son Ame'), of a "sale of twenty large editions," which, it seems, "proves that it has appealed with success to a wide public in France"? What are twenty editions to the critic, or "appealing with success to a wide public"? "It is at least pleasant," we read,

"to have one man writing, in excellent French, refined, cheerful, and sentimental novels of the most ultra-modest kind"; and no doubt it is pleasant, but is it of any conceivable importance to the "few expert persons whose views are founded on principle and reason," and of whom Mr. Gosse is one?

It is because we take Mr. Gosse seriously, it is because we look upon him as one of the best-equipped interpreters between England and France, that we are at the pains to point out what seems to us a caprice and lightness in some of his estimates in this book. He is to be seen almost, if not quite, at his best in such a study as that of Ferdinand Fabre, a sympathetic study of a gentle and genuine talent, but little known in England. Fabre had a personal talent and a private nook of his own; he painted priests—only peasants and priests, and, as Mr. Gosse aptly says, "he is to French fiction what Zurbaran is to Spanish painting." To do justice and no more than justice to Fabre is difficult; for, as Mr. Gosse says,

"the novels of Ferdinand Fabre have one signal merit: they are entirely unlike those of any other writer; but they have one equally signal defect—they are terribly like one another."

Mr. Gosse's article sets the man and his work before us with a quiet art like his own. And there is scarcely less sympathetic divination in the study of 'The Irony of M. Anatole France,' especially in the section concerned with 'Histoire Comique.' There is an apology for the commission of irony in England, which is delicately true, and all that is said about M. France is just and suggestive. The study of Barbey d'Aurevilly, though it could hardly be expected to be very sympathetic, is good, sometimes witty, as here:—

"Barbey d'Aurevilly is a devil who may or may not believe, but who always makes a point of trembling."

It is the only account of Barbey which we remember to have read in English, and may send some readers, who will be thankful for a new sensation, to a curious artist in the seasoning of sensations. Equally novel for English readers will be the articles on Henri de Régnier, Albert Samain, Émile Verhaeren, and Paul Fort. In all of these Mr. Gosse is equally just and liberal; indeed, most conspicuously so in writing of the last, who is certainly the most difficult to estimate fairly. In writing, with sympathetic insight, of Albert Samain, Mr. Gosse, however, overlooks the main influence upon the verse of that graceful and charming writer, the influence of the early Verlaine, while assigning an undue weight to the influence of Baudelaire, which scarcely affected Samain except at second hand. To appreciate equally, as Mr. Gosse does, work so delicate as that of Albert Samain, so pure and austere as that of Henri de Régnier, and, at the same time, work so gnarled and sinewy as that of Émile Verhaeren, is a rare thing, and shows a remarkable catholicity of taste, an unfettered delight in literature for its own sake, which remains, after all, Mr. Gosse's main merit and chief distinction as a critic.

Some of the best writing in the book is contained in the note on Verhaeren, and we may quote a passage in which, as sometimes happens with Mr. Gosse, an acute criticism is contained in a significant and striking picture:—

"A hundred years ago we possessed in English literature a writer very curiously parallel to M. Verhaeren, who probably never heard of him. I do not know whether any one has pointed out the similarity between Crabbe and the Belgian poet of our day. It is, however, very striking when we once come to think of it; and it embraces subject-matter, attitude to life and art, and even such closer matters as diction and versification. The situation of Crabbe, in relation to the old school of the eighteenth century on the one hand, and to the romantic school on the other, is closely repeated by that of M. Verhaeren to his elders and his juniors. If Byron were now alive, he might call M. Verhaeren a Victor Hugo in worsted stockings. There is the same sardonic delineation of a bleak and sandy sea coast country, Suffolk or Zeeland as the case may be, the same determination to find poetic material in the perfectly truthful study of a raw peasantry, of narrow provincial towns, of rough and cheerless seafaring existences. In each of these poets—and scarcely in any other European writers of verse—we find the same saline flavour, the same odour of iodine, the same tenacious attachment to the strength and violence and formidable simplicity of nature."

There is one writer to whom Mr. Gosse returns again and again, with an attitude never wholly defined; nor is it easy to come to a final conclusion with regard to a writer so strangely disconcerting as Mallarmé. But Mr. Gosse is almost the only English writer who has taken the trouble to write about Mallarmé at all, and thus we may the more regret that a certain impatience with what seems to him some form of mystification should have led him on occasion to find fault with a very plain error of his own making. "Some of his alterations of his own text," says Mr. Gosse,

"betray the fact that he treated words as musical notation, that he was far more intimately affected by their euphonic inter-relation than by their meaning in logical sequence. In my own copy of 'Les Fenêtres,' he has altered in MS. the line

Que dore la main chaste de l'Infini

to

Que dore le matin chaste de l'Infini.

Whether the Infinite had a Hand or a Morning was purely a question of euphony."

Now, if Mr. Gosse had looked twice at the line which Mallarmé corrected in his copy, he would have seen, before Mallarmé corrected it, that there was some misprint, because the words as they stand do not make an alexandrine at all, and the rest of the poem is written in alexandrines. Is it fair to Mallarmé to argue, from a palpable misprint, that he was indifferent whether he said that the window-panes were gilt by a hand or (much as Browning has said in his "washed by the morning water-gold") that they were gilded by the morning?

But we are coming now to Mr. Gosse at his very best, and, as if well aware of it, he has put first in his book the three long essays which certainly contain what is finest in it: the essays on Alfred de Vigny, on 'A Nun's Love-Letters,' and on Mlle. Aïssé. It is difficult to say which of the latter two is the more absorbing. Each is a study in a woman's temperament, as seen through her own letters; and if Mr. Gosse had only added Mlle. de Lespinasse to his two heroines, he would have given us an almost complete study in this form of psychology. Mr. Gosse is never more at home than in the seventeenth or eighteenth century; he seems to "find" himself in the company of the age of sensibility, and not less in that of the age of discreet reason. He tells the story of the fair Circassian Aïssé as if it were a novel, and he a novelist her contemporary; he elucidates, and did indeed in 1888 introduce to modern English readers, the marvellous 'Portuguese Letters,' about which he has written more feelingly and more instructively than any one else. And this sensibility, this love of the reasonable, which he has developed, no doubt, in frequenting the literature of those two centuries, come to his aid, with singular efficacy, when he sets himself to deal with a modern writer like Alfred de Vigny, the most "majestic" poet of the century, the most original, one in whom the romantic qualities are anticipated with a difference. No modern poet could be said to invite Mr. Gosse's attention more aptly than Vigny. This distinguished, reticent soldier, this lover of England, this poet with his strange "tenacity of vision," who in 'Chatterton' wrote a "drama of pure thought," and in his best poems elegies of pure idea; this mixture of sensibility, delicacy, fragility, rarity, austerity; this remote artist of the "ivory tower," who snatched the finest part of his genius warm from life; this self-sufficing man of letters, who was so human, presents a problem which no one before Mr. Gosse had adequately investigated. Nothing in the book is more skilful than this study, nothing more satisfying.

Emmanuel College. By E. S. Shuckburgh. "College Histories." (Robinson & Co.)

DR. SHUCKBURGH has produced an excellent history of his college, and has been fortunate in being able to present it to the world at a time of exceptional, but by no means undeserved, prosperity. Thanks to its staff of teachers, good government, and, we may add, considerable financial advantages, Emmanuel is taking a high place among the colleges of the University of Cambridge. The historian of the college can consequently trace its ups and downs with complacency, since its star at the present moment is in the ascendant. The story of the foundation of Emmanuel College is unlike that of any other. Whilst other colleges are styled "religious," Emmanuel is emphatically a "Protestant" foundation. Sir Walter Mildmay built and endowed it for the maintenance of those who were to be above all things "Preachers of the Word." "Let Fellows and scholars," he says,

"who obtrude themselves into the college with any other design than to devote themselves to sacred theology, and eventually to labour in preaching the Word, know that they are frustrating my hope and occupying the place of Fellow or scholar contrary to my ordinance."

Mildmay disclaimed the charge that he had "erected a Puritan foundation." "Far from me," he told Queen Elizabeth,

"to countenance anything contrary to your established laws; but I have set an acorn which when it becomes an oak, God alone knows what will be the fruit thereof."

The first Master was Laurence Chaderton, a man of wide learning and attainments. He was most celebrated as a preacher, and it is said of him that on one occasion, after discoursing for two hours, he expressed a fear that he had tired his audience, upon which the whole congregation cried out: "For God's sake, sir, go on! we beg you, go on!" Chaderton was a fervent Puritan, and the surplice was not used at Emmanuel in his time, nor for many years after his death; but he enjoyed the friendship of Archbishop Bancroft, who, though he had no love for Puritans, always remembered that Chaderton had, at the risk of his own right hand, saved his life in a disturbance between town and gown. James I., when he visited Cambridge in 1615, was shown that the chapel at Emmanuel was far out of the eastward position, and upon Chaderton's remarking that the same was true of the royal chapel at Whitehall, the king answered:—

"God will not turn His face from the prayer of any holy and pious man, to whatever region of heaven he directs his eyes. So, doctor, I beg you pray for me."

One of Chaderton's pupils was the famous scholar, satirist, and divine, Bishop Hall; another, strange to say, James Waddesworth, went to Spain, and became "an officer of the inquisition, and English tutor to the Infanta."

In 1622 a curious but unfortunately obscure intrigue of the Fellows caused Chaderton to resign his Mastership. He was offered the see of Chester, but declined it, perhaps owing to his age, for he was already about eighty-seven. He lived till November, 1640. Chaderton's successor, Preston, was a Court favourite, and preferred to live in London. The statutes as to the residence of the Master were very strict. He had to be in Cambridge "nisi violenta detentione impeditus fuerit." Casuistry had not, however, been neglected in the College, for all the Fellows, "with one consent and assent" (we quote the order book of the College),

"make this interpretation, that they were to be understood as well of a moral as a natural violence, and that the service of the King or Prince.....was to be esteemed as moral violence."

It was during Preston's tenure of office that Harvard entered Emmanuel. Strange to say, the College has no record of the founder of the first American University "except his name in a book of receipts and his autograph in a small volume of divinity in the College library."

Emmanuel continued to flourish during the first half of the seventeenth century, producing, among other eminent men, Sancroft, the Nonjuring archbishop, and Sir William Temple. Dr. Shuckburgh suggests that Swift sent Gulliver to Emmanuel because his patron had been educated there. Gulliver was hardly a contemporary of another fictitious character who received his education at the same College—Thomas Tusher, of Thackeray's 'Esmond.' Few more pleasant episodes in University life are recorded than the kindly way in which Dillingham, the Puritan Master dispossessed at the Restoration, wrote to his successor Sancroft at the time of the latter's appointment. After the Restoration Emmanuel passed through a period of obscurity; but it never altogether lacked men of distinction. No college could fail to be proud, for example, of having numbered William Law among its Fellows.

Towards the middle of the eighteenth century the importance of the college tutor, so striking a feature in Cambridge life, began to make itself felt; and Dr. Shuckburgh gives a somewhat detailed account of the tutorship of Henry Hubbard, who also filled the post of Registrary to the University. Between 1736 and 1767, whilst Hubbard was tutor, Emmanuel, despite his businesslike habits, did not flourish greatly; but posterity has good reason to thank him for much valuable information. The dividends of a Fellow of Emmanuel varied from year to year as they do now in most colleges; but in Hubbard's time the average was about 38%. A little later (1764) we read that, by raising the price of the beer sold in college, a Fellow's income was raised by 10%. In the inventory of the furniture of his college rooms by Mr. Hubbard we find the following entry: "Picture of Mr. Canning by Gainsborough, valued at 5*l.* 5*s.*, the frame 1*l.* 11*s.* 6*d.*" He left a considerable sum to the college.

From 1775-97 Emmanuel was under the genial rule of Richard Farmer, author of the 'Essay on the Learning of Shakespear,' which shows extraordinary knowledge of old English literature. Farmer was just the sort of man a modern university ought to produce and cherish to raise its social tone. Indolent, unbusinesslike, a lover of "old port, old clothes, and old books," he refused Church promotion, made the college parlour a social centre, patronized the drama, and was an enthusiast for good literature. Before he became Master, Farmer served in the curacy of Swavesey, where he endeared himself to the farmers, preached plain, practical sermons, and read the evening service, after repeating his invariable formula, "I am going to read prayers, but I shall be back by the time you have made the punch." Gunning gives a most sympathetic account of Farmer, who in personal character seems to have stood far above his contemporaries at Cambridge.

The remainder of the volume is mainly devoted to the successful revival of the fame of Emmanuel College. Its prosperity justifies the wise policy of selecting the best possible man for a tutorial post without regard to his college. The wealth of the society has enabled it to increase the number of its fellowships, and to endow studentships in research. Three properties have improved the position of the College. In 1585 the founder gave it a house in Bishopsgate Street, in 1588 one Walter Dunch some houses in Threadneedle Street, and in 1629 it acquired by purchase a farm of 61 acres at Clapham.

There are several useful appendixes, and Dr. Shuckburgh is to be congratulated on having done good service to his College by his interesting review of its fortunes.

Japan: the Place and People. By G. Waldo Browne. With an Introduction by the Hon. K. Takahira. (Sampson Low & Co.)
Hana: a Daughter of Japan. By Gensai Murai. (Tokyo, published by the Hochi Shimbun.)

IN Mr. Browne's profusely illustrated and handsome volume we find an interesting description of the land and people of Japan, not inaccurate, though uncritical, and agreeably varied by stories drawn from history and tradition. The author does not say what his means of information were, nor what was the extent of his personal acquaintance with the country—indeed, the whole volume may, for aught we know, be a compilation made in some comfortable study in New York or Boston. The preface, by no less a person than the Japanese Minister to the United States, gives the tone to the whole work—it is a dithyramb upon his own country, justified in not a few respects, but, unfortunately, based upon the unhistorical absurdities, which repeated exposure by this time ought to have exploded, of a dynastic succession enduring through 2,560 years, and of a vigilance in the government of their subjects which the puppet emperors, almost from the beginnings of authentic history, have never been in a position to exercise.

The usual places are sufficiently described and extremely well illustrated, while most of the ordinary types of Japanese life that meet the eye of the foreigner are adequately portrayed; but we cannot say that the book, except in the illustrations, rises above the average level of the class to which it belongs. The figures and manners of Old Japan, so far as they survive, are again brought upon the stage, but what makes the force of New Japan we are not told. The whole of that esoteric movement within the educated classes, which has in the last decade or two brought Japan into the comity of nations, is unnoticed. It could scarcely be otherwise, for the author does not show any knowledge of the language, without which the thought of the country cannot be approached.

Mr. Browne's account of Buddhism is incorrect in several particulars. The Jodo sect was not founded by Honen. It was of Indian origin. Nichiren did not adopt monotheism; his sect (the only one founded in Japan) is not Ho-Hokke, but Hokke; its characteristic doctrine is that mere matter may become a Buddha. On the whole, it is the most superstitious of the Buddhist sects in Japan.

The story of Tanabata night (seventh of the seventh month) is entirely Chinese, and is not a Japanese story at all—it is the story of the Herdman and the Webster stars, of which a full account will be found in Mayer's manual. Sir Edwin Arnold's translation of the so-called Japanese National Hymn, characterized by Mr. Browne as "excellent," misses the whole point of the original, which likens the duration of the empire to the time necessary for a pebble to grow to a boulder and be covered with green moss. The original is a hash of Mannyō verses, without a trace of originality, and the Mannyō verses themselves reproduce a Chinese conceit of unknown antiquity.

The identification of Yoshitsune, the brother of Yoritomo, with Genghis Khan has no foundation whatever beyond the similarity of the Chinese characters with which the names are written. Lastly, the practice of seppuku (harakiri) is not of ancient date, probably not earlier than the end of the sixteenth century; it did not originate in a passion of loyalty, but in a desire to escape capture by the enemy; but, curiously enough, it became almost fashionable under the Shōgunate. Even Arai Hakuseki, the greatest of Tokugawa statesmen, contemplated harakiri merely because a certain detail of policy seemed likely to prove unsuccessful. It is unsatisfactory to learn that such is "the painful weakness of physique peculiar to the Japanese" that 40 per cent. of students "drop out on account of death before they graduate, and not over one in twenty takes his degree at the University of Tokyo."

There are some misprints; the worst error of this kind is the name "Visu," a totally impossible Japanese name in connexion with a pretty myth familiar in most Japanese households. The illustrations are of varying value, but constitute, as has been hinted, a principal attraction of the volume. A large proportion have the merit of being unhackneyed. Of the coloured pictures, the best is the one called 'Three Little Maids,' whose faces and expressions, as well as colouring, are very characteristic of Dai Nippon.

'Hana' is a Japanese novel, written in Japanese, translated into English by a Japanese, printed, illustrated, bound, and published in Japan, and now seeking the favour of an English-speaking public. The personages of the story are five: an old doctor of the ancient shokui type—a "dietetic doctor," he is correctly enough styled—his daughter Hana Hanako-san, Miss Flower (i.e., Cherry Flower), the heroine of the piece; her brother, a captain in the Imperial navy; a dyspeptic American, Conner, hailing from the city of pork; and a Russian spy, Danski, naval officer and captive, who is the villain. The story turns upon the rivalry for the lady's hand. But its special interest is not in the narrative, but in its moral. "This book," which the author has written as a study of the future, "because he deems it a duty to do something for his country," he "sends as the herald of many others to be published in England"; and the concluding sentence of the preface from which the above citations are made is:—

"Because one fruit that has been snatched from a tree may taste sour, do not disdain the whole of the tree—time will ripen the rest of the fruit."

Well, the story as such is no great success, the want of characterization is fatal to it (from a Western point of view); the heroes are too heroic, and the villains are too villainous. Hana, however, as a type of the obedient, submissive, dainty, but inane Japanese female, is well presented, and the parental and intermediary courtship system of the country is prettily defended, while the criticisms passed by foreigners upon various Japanese qualities, especially on the impassivity of the sons of Dai Nippon, are amusingly (in intent most earnestly) rebutted. The total result is the flawless Nihonjin of both sexes as typified in the shokui doctor, Hana, and the naval captain. Lastly, throughout the author exemplifies the complacency of his countrymen, who with scarcely an effort take over, in the course of a generation, the whole of that Western civilization—at all events its industrialisms, militarisms, navalisms, and administrativeisms, if we may for a moment borrow these expressions from Japano-English sources—on which the West has prided itself as a peculiar appanage of the white man not to be understood by him of yellow skin. But by far the most interesting part of the volume is the preface of fifty-four pages, in which the life and works of the author, Gensai Murai, are told by his translator Unkichi Kawai. Gensai must be a man of remarkable industry. During the last fifteen years he has written "38 large works.....in 59 massive volumes of 4,200 chapters, with more than 20 minor stories.....and numerous essays and notes." He has also "commanded the staff of editors in one of the metropolitan newspapers," and in ten years has raised the circulation from 3,500 to 180,000. At the same time he has been Director of the Manufacturers' Association, and as its chief has supervised a steam pump manufactory. His watchword is kakugo, a Chinese compound which may be translated "Ready, aye ready." He is descended from a Samurai (esquire) family—all good Japanese are so descended now; in the seventies they loved to describe themselves as heimin (common fellows), but Germanism has altered all that—the members of which for many generations have been admirable "gunners," his ancestor, five generations ago, having made, in the "august presence of his lord," the "highest possible," one hundred "bull's-eyes," and so gained the name "Ariyemon," which is translated "sure aimer" by some occult process, which is the preface-writer's own secret. He was born in 1863, and so he has ample time to write another 4,200 chapters. This he is likely to do, for he has been fired by the example of Bakin—whose chief novel (and a very good one it is) 'Satomi Hakenden,' 'The Story of the Eight Dogs (heroes) of Satomi,' occupies some eighty volumes—and has already completed a novel in eleven volumes, containing 1,200 chapters. Among his later works is 'Gunshi Tokuhon,' 'Pocket Monitor for Soldiers and Sailors,' for the use of the rank and file engaged in the present war. This work is frequently quoted from in the volume before us. It is full of the most beautiful sentiments, and inculcates the most chivalrous and humane treatment of Russian prisoners, although they are denizens of a country which "is wicked a capite ad calcem." Russia, it appears, is governed by despotic principles of ancient barbarian ages; everywhere she brings commerce to ruin, and banishes liberty and right, and "with her ever gluttonous ambition tries to gobble up China and Korea, and Japan if she can."

The book is a sign of the times, an irregular and somewhat bombastic exhibition of power, but of power nevertheless, and throws a good deal of light upon the feeling aroused in Japan among the educated classes by the enforced Liaotung surrender of a decade ago, upon the national sentiment (and its peculiar modes of expression) excited by the present struggle, and upon the curious mixture of the new West and the old-world East which characterizes contemporaneous Japanese society. An odd instance of this came under our observation a short time since in the form of a sort of caricature on the cover of a number of a current popular history of the war. It was divided by a horizontal line into an upper and lower portion; in the upper Capt. Hirose (whose heroic exploit will be remembered) was represented stepping over lotus leaves, under the guidance of a Buddhist priest, to Paradise; in the lower Admiral Makaroff was depicted in a "cold hell," being approached by a number of demons armed with clubs, with which they mockingly present arms before inflicting upon him his merited punishment. We must add that the typography is excellent, apart from some misprints; the English good on the whole; the illustrations—a sort of compromise between old and new—less successful, though not without talent and power; and the binding (à la japonaise) and general get-up unexceptionable. But the translator is not a wagakusha; his translation of the stanza on p. 121 appears to be incorrect.

Memories. By Constance F. Gordon Cumming. (Blackwood & Sons.)

THERE is no more popular kind of book than that which contains memoirs and reminiscences, and this volume should enjoy a notable success. It is packed from end to end with memories of a full and interesting life; the personality it discloses is one of exceptional vitality, and the style in which it is written, if not actually distinguished, indicates the hand of the practised author.

Miss Gordon Cumming has written eight or nine books of travel dealing with countries as widely separate as China and Cornwall, Fiji and California. Her family has included great hunters, soldiers, and travellers, and famous beauties. Miss Gordon Cumming's grandmother, Lady Charlotte, was a daughter of the fifth Duke of Argyll, who, in 1759, married the lovely young widow of the sixth Duke of Hamilton, one of the three beautiful Miss Gunnings, whose combined loveliness set London and Dublin crazy. It was of these fair sisters that Horace Walpole declared that "those goddesses make more noise than any of their predecessors since the days of Helen of Troy." They could not walk in the parks on account of the crowds that surrounded them in sheer admiration. It is recorded that when they travelled, crowds lined the roads to gaze at them, and hundreds of people stayed up all night round the inns where they halted, on the chance of getting a peep at them in the morning. The Gordon Cummings appear always to have lived intensely:—

"The excellent machines entrusted to our care have generally been worked at high pressure, and consequently have worn out before their time. Certainly, our race as a whole has not proved long-lived, and sometimes I marvel how so great a mark has been made in so brief a period."

The brief period refers, of course, to the lives of individual members of the family, not to the life of the family itself, for the Gordon Cummings have their ancestors.

"The Clan is spoken of by various old writers as the most potent that ever existed in Scotland; and a quaint old book, as published in Amsterdam in 1654 by Jean Blaeu, quotes a somewhat older Latin work by Sir Robert Gordon of Straloch concerning 'Altyr qui appartenait à ce de la maison de Cumines qui estoit, il y a plus de trois cens ans, la plus riche et la plus puissante de l'Ecosse.' How it came to pass that this powerful family should, so quickly after the accession of Robert Bruce, have been reduced to the comparatively small proportions of later years is one of the unsolved mysteries of Scottish history."

Family pride attains somewhat portentous expression in the author, as this extract shows:—

"My mother was the very embodiment of health and beauty, bodily and mental.....My father, Sir William Gordon Cumming, Chief of Clan Comyn, or Cumming, was as splendid a Highlander as ever trod the heather, only excelled in beauty and stature by his own second son, Roualeyn, who was certainly the grandest and most beautiful human being I have ever beheld.....So I started in life with fifty first cousins, about twice as many second and third cousins, and collaterals without number, for the family tree had roots and branches ramifying in every direction; and as each group centred round some more or less notable home, it followed that England and Scotland were dotted over with points of family interest, in those good old days when it was held that 'blood was thicker than water,' and kinship, however much diluted, was fully recognized.....In looking back and considering lives and characters, I often think how little weight we give to the inestimable advantages which have enfolded some of us from our birth to our grave. Ay, and long, long before our birth, in the unspeakable blessing of healthy, well-conditioned ancestors, who have transmitted to their descendants well-balanced minds in healthy bodies, naturally cheerful dispositions, and many another pleasant inheritance; all natural gifts which we accept as our birthrights, quite as a matter of course, yet the lack of which are to so many lifelong drawbacks, for which all the world's wealth cannot compensate."

Not exactly original or striking is this moralizing, but it has the solidity which appeals to the general public. This portly volume is not all occupied with stories of childhood and family history. It deals with the author's travels in every part of the world—which supply abundantly reflections and experiences.

NEW NOVELS.

Nellie Maturin's Victory. By Adeline Sergeant. (Hodder & Stoughton.)

LIKE most of the late Miss Sergeant's novels, this is a pleasant story, easy to read and healthy in tone, but not remarkable as regards either characterization or construction. The heroine, a clergyman's daughter, is thrown by her father's death upon the protection of his relations, the proprietors, as she with dismay discovers, of a village "general shop," and in this uncongenial atmosphere she passes through strange and, to the reader, amusing experiences. By one of those chances peculiar to novels she is introduced to some connexions of her mother, an heiress, disinherited upon her marriage by a cruel father, and in their house discovers the inevitable hidden will under which she herself inherits the family property. This reparation she at first, in a spirit of exaggerated self-abnegation, refuses, but in the end consents to a compromise. Her two lovers strike us as rather poor specimens of that class, especially the gentleman who, after proving his affection by playing the private detective upon her actions, ultimately secures her favour.

Olive Kinsella. By Curtis Yorke. (John Long.)

THIS is not, perhaps, the best of the author's numerous novels. Yet it is not without attempts at liveliness, though these may be swamped by matter almost too familiar in fiction. For there are two, if not three, sets of husbands and wives given up to misunderstandings. In the end two couples arrive at comprehension and a modus operandi. The girl who lends her name to the story is of the misunderstanding and misunderstood sisterhood. The more we read of her the more she bores us, though the author has done what she could to vitalize her. Fashionable in fiction just now is a kind of "young family" consisting of boys and girls left by orphanhood to their own devices and desires. They always talk slang. They are boisterous and what is called "breezy," and their hearts (if not their heads and clothing) are in the right place. They have to be well done to strike the right note. Here they fail to do this. The plot, such as it is, turns on a very clumsy piece of machinery.

Godfrey Marten, Undergraduate. By Charles Turley. (Heinemann.)

IF 'Godfrey Marten, Undergraduate,' is less interesting than 'Godfrey Marten, School-boy,' the fault, we suspect, is not so much the author's as his subject's. Somehow or other, in spite of the incomparably wider sphere of activities enjoyed by the undergraduate, his career seems more essentially devoid of incident and less susceptible of expression in fiction than the schoolboy's. The relative failure of the little-read sequel to 'Tom Brown's Schooldays' illustrates this truth. Godfrey Marten plays, indeed, for the university fifteen, is "hauled" by proctors and college authorities, goes to wine-parties, and gets a second in his Schools; but all this hardly furnishes sufficient material for a narrative, however well-written, of between three and four hundred pages. We must confess, too, to having found the hero and his friends a little irritating at times. In a story of this kind accuracy of detail is indispensable. It is pleasant, therefore, to note that the local colour is beyond reproach.

The Night of Reckoning. By Frank Barrett. (John Long.)

THIS is a night of reckoning with a vengeance, wherein a would-be murderer meets a violent fate, and her girl victim at length finds safety in the arms of a devoted and chivalrous sailor, not in the heyday of youth, though of passion. The villains are a clergyman and a clergyman's wife, and they do not convince one. There are also detectives and others. We cannot say that the framework of all this is particularly well knit together, or even imagined.

Heart of my Heart. By Ellis Meredith. (Methuen & Co.)

IT is rather a puzzle to the conscientious reviewer to hit upon an adequate means of treating this book in a small space. It is well written, and full of the gentlest sentiment. Yet a plain description of it would be likely to prevent many intelligent people from reading it. Nevertheless, we are bound to declare in some fashion the theme. It is neither more nor less than a sort of diary of the daily feelings, thoughts, plans, and experiences of a wife awaiting the arrival of her first-born child. The words have a ring, or a look, most unpromising, almost forbidding, to the reader of taste, perhaps. Yet nine women out of ten who open this book will thoroughly enjoy the reading of it, and few men will find cause to regret any time they may devote to the same task. Such a theme might very easily be made maudlin, or even objectionable. Here it is not treated in maudlin style, but with tenderness and delicacy. The treatment is frank and free, but never in the least offensive. As a piece of work, almost inevitably, compact of sentiment, it is remarkably pleasing. At the same time we hope that it will not set a fashion, for imitations and variants upon it would be likely to prove sorry stuff.

The Provincials. By Lady Helen Forbes. (John Long.)

THE author has a good story to tell here, a domestic comedy of considerable merit, steady interest (of a light sort), and consistent high spirits. A rich country squire, whose wife and family share his belief that hunting the hounds is the most important thing in life; a parson who was, more or less, extinguished early in life by the lady who married him out of pique; and a host of high-spirited young Philistines of both sexes, whose aim in life is to have "a good time"—these are the dramatis personæ. Hunting naturally plays a prominent part in such a story, and this subject the author handles with notable spirit, displaying by the way a considerable faculty of observation and no small powers of description. Such topics have unfailing interest for English readers, and the author should win popularity for her story. It makes no serious demand upon thought, but rises above banality, and contains some genuine delineation of character. Altogether, it is a pleasant and entertaining tale.

ASSYRIOLOGICAL BOOKS.

Manuel d'Assyriologie. Par Charles Fossey. Tome I. (Paris, Leroux.)—This is, in effect, the introduction to M. Fossey's monumental work, the general scope of which has already been indicated in The Athenæum (see 'Archæological Notes' in No. 4017). It gives, in the first place, a fairly complete history of exploration in Mesopotamia, beginning with Benjamin of Tudela and ending with De Morgan. This does not call for much remark, as most of it is familiar to all Assyriologists, and we fancy that M. Fossey has not himself had practical acquaintance with the work of exploration. His statement may be noted, however, that, up to 1842, all archæologists looked to Persia alone for Assyrian or Babylonian monuments, and that, as the East India Company maintained a great number of agents in that country, the lion's share of both the work and its results naturally fell to England. He is a little querulous as to this, and considers that Layard did no more than make a beginning at Kuyunjik, while Rassam's work in Western Asia, according to him, "resembled pillage rather than scientific excavation." As he admits that De Sarzec's work at Telloh was neither pushed with the energy nor published with the speed that he would like, and that both he and the American expedition to Nippur had nearly half their tablets stolen from them by the Arabs, we think he makes too slender allowance for the difficulties of excavation in an unsettled country. It remains to be seen whether the methods of the Germans, who have taken advantage of the indifference of English governments in such matters to "grab" nearly all the known Mesopotamian sites of excavation for themselves, will lead to any happier result.

There follows upon this a lucid and accurate summary of the history of the decipherment of the cuneiform inscriptions, which will have the less interest for English readers from the fact that Mr. Leonard King, in his popular works on the subject, has already dealt with it with admirable conciseness and point, while Mr. A. S. Booth has gone over the ground at greater length and with even superfluous minuteness. We then come to the origin of the cuneiform script, in which M. Fossey reiterates the theory—now generally received—first maintained by the veteran Assyriologist M. Jules Oppert, that the cuneiform signs were originally pictorial. He also exposes some failures in Prof. Delitzsch's attempted identification of the primitive signs, and brings out with more clearness than we have seen elsewhere the meaning and effect of "gunification," or, in other words, the addition of the sign generally read gunu as an intensitive. Here, too, he explains, with every appearance of probability, the reason why so many of the primitive signs came to be turned quarter-circle, so as to be drawn in later times as if lying on their sides. The whole of this part of the book is extremely well worked out, and will repay careful study. The remaining pages are occupied with the discussion and refutation of the Pan-Semitic theory of Halévy, who, as is well known, contends that the agglutinative language of a large part of the earlier cuneiform texts is not Sumerian or that spoken by the Mongoloid nation whom the Semites found in Mesopotamia at their first coming thither, but a form of cryptography invented by the Semitic priesthood. So few Assyriologists of repute have embraced this heresy that its exposure may seem to have been hardly needed. Yet in view of the large scope of the work it was necessary that it should be given, and M. Fossey's detailed refutation leaves nothing to be desired. It will doubtless be a surprise to younger scholars to know that Prof. Delitzsch at one time adhered to the Pan-Semitic theory, though he has since abjured it. A chapter on the Babylonian origin of the Persian cuneiform concludes the volume, which is fully equipped with an excellent bibliography and index, a large-scale map of Mesopotamia by M. Lesquier, and plans of the excavations at Hilleh, Kuyunjik, and Telloh. Generally it may be said that no pains have been spared to make this volume complete, and if M. Fossey succeeds in keeping up the remaining eight volumes to the level of excellence reached in this, he will have rendered yeoman's service to science, beside raising for himself a monument that will put even German laboriousness to shame.

Records of the Reign of Tukulti-Ninib I. By Leonard W. King. (Luzac.)—This handy little volume, which we understand is the first of a series of studies in Eastern history by the same author, is entirely devoted to a memorial tablet of the king whose name it bears, and who reigned over Assyria during the first half of the thirteenth century before our era. The tablet was found under the wall of the city of Kar-Tukulti-Ninib, situated "near the Tigris between Kuyunjik and Kaleh Shergat," and has just been acquired by Mr. King for the British Museum, in which he is an assistant. It appears that it formed part of the foundation deposit made by Tukulti-Ninib I. at the inauguration of his new capital, and Mr. King draws a distinction between these foundation deposits in the case of Assyrian kings, who seem to him to have been merely anxious to hand down their titles and exploits to posterity, and those familiar to us in Egypt, where they seem to have had a magical meaning. We are not sure that this was not the case in Assyria also, as it is difficult to believe that so soon after the achieving of the independence of Assyria—she seems to have been subject to Babylonia up to about 1500 B.C.—her kings can have contemplated the ruin of her cities, in which case alone would the foundation deposit be likely to see the light. However that may be, there can be little doubt that the new tablet is a most valuable historical document, and fills a gap between that of Adad-Nirari I. (1325 B.C.) and the great historical inscription of Tiglath-Pilezer I. (1100 B.C.). Tukulti-Ninib ("My help is in Ninib") tells us that in his first year of power he conquered the mountain lands of the Kuti and other tribes who seem to have lived to the east of Assyria, and that he carried fire and sword through the country of (among others) the Kummukhi—of which name it has been thought we find a trace in that of the ancient kingdom of Commagene—and pushed across the Euphrates into the lands of Nairi, where he subjected to tribute forty kings of what is now Armenia. But his greatest exploit was his conquest of Babylonia under the Kassite or Third-Dynasty king Bibeashu, whom he took captive and brought into Assyria with him. This conquest was before recorded only in the Babylonian Chronicle, and the name of the conquered king was unknown, Prof. Hommel among others having placed Tukulti-Ninib's reign about seventy years before that of his victim. He then describes how he built his city with temples to Ashur and other gods, a canal, and other conveniences, and concludes with the customary curse upon "any future prince" who may destroy the city or remove the tablet.

Mr. King has here given the actual inscription, together with the necessary transcription and translation, and some 'Supplementary Texts,' from which we learn that Tukulti-Ninib's rule over Babylonia lasted for seven years, at the end of which his son rebelled against him, and caused him to be "slain with a sword" in a house of the great city he had founded. We also learn that he carried away from Babylon the statue of "the great god Marduk," or Merodach, and that it was restored by Tukulti-Ashur, who some think was the son of Tukulti-Ninib and his regent in Babylon. Mr. King explains certain discrepancies in the different Babylonian chronicles, and gives a new reading of some lines on a seal of the Assyrian king, whence it appears that the seal was originally the property of Bibeashu's father, and was altered by Tukulti-Ninib more than three thousand years before it found its way to the British Museum. Mr. King is to be congratulated not only upon this excellent piece of work, but also upon having materially enriched our national collection.

The Code of Hammurabi. By Robert Francis Harper. (Chicago, University Press.)—This, the latest translation of this much-discussed code, contains, besides a glossary and index, a full copy, in ninety-eight plates, of the text itself; which is no slight boon when it is considered that the only other copy published is in the magnificent, but expensive and cumbersome, memoirs of De Morgan's 'Délégations en Perse.' In his very brief introduction Dr. Harper describes Hammurabi as identified by most Assyriologists with the Amraphel of Genesis. We should have thought the tide of learned opinion was, in fact, setting the other way, some very convincing reasons having been adduced by Mr. Boscawen for supposing Amraphel to have been Sin-muballit, Hammurabi's father. We hear, too, that this volume is to be followed by another, setting forth the connexion between the code and the Mosaic legislation. But even as it is, the present volume may be safely recommended to the student as the best and most complete edition of the code of Hammurabi that has yet appeared.

Babylonian and Assyrian Laws, Contracts, and Letters. By C. H. W. Johns. (Edinburgh, T. & T. Clark.)—Everything from the pen of the Professor of Assyriology at King's College, London, is worth reading, and although some may think we are beginning to have enough of Hammurabi's code, this volume is still welcome. Mr. Johns makes a new and valuable point when he explains that the famous code was in itself a compilation, and that Hammurabi was merely putting into authoritative shape a body of laws which must have existed long before his time. He does not say so in so many words, but as his proof of this rests upon phrases in contracts and in legal books written in Sumerian, it seems difficult to resist the conclusion that these laws were the property of the most ancient inhabitants of Babylonia of whom we have any knowledge. He thinks, too, that he can detect in these earlier laws the traces of a time when law was not imposed by any central authority, but was a matter of convention, in some cases between members of the same family, and in others between the citizens of the same town, the head of the family and the magistrate of the city being respectively charged with the execution of them. If this be so, we are touching upon a very early state of society indeed, and we may add to the invention of writing, which we undoubtedly owe to the Mongoloid race, the institution which more than all others has drawn man from the primitive or nomad state and made him into a civilized being. In what he has to say about the organization of Babylonian culture Mr. Johns is also instructive, and there seems abundant reason for his division of the community into the three great classes of nobles, freemen, and slaves, although it may be doubted whether the merchants really formed a class apart, or were in earlier times so often foreigners as he seems to fancy. Although the texts are not very clear on the point, the fact that kings and royal personages engaged in trading and banking, and that such businesses when once founded were often handed on from father to son for many generations, shows that they were from the first looked upon as honourable, and were by no means confined to foreigners. Much more singular must have been the status of the votary, who, according to Mr. Johns, might marry, but must remain a virgin and provide her husband with a handmaiden if she wished for a family. Probably some means were devised by which these obligations were evaded.

Want of space compels us to pass over the very interesting chapters 'Marriage,' 'Divorce,' 'Education,' 'Slavery,' 'Land Tenure,' and the like, although we may note in passing that a post in a temple was the subject of sale and pledge as freely as the charge of a Paris stockbroker, and we come to that part of the book which deals with Babylonian and Assyrian letters. Here, again, Mr. Johns has been anticipated, so far as the letters of Hammurabi are concerned, by the more stately publication of Mr. Leonard King, which leaves, indeed, nothing to be said on the subject. Enough, however, remain, particularly of the yet untranslated collection published by Dr. Harper, to make a fairly representative volume. Thus there is a letter of one Akkullānu to King Esarhaddon complaining of certain temple appointments made by Sennacherib, in which the writer indulges in very un-Orientially frank observations on his dead master's choice of servants and his contempt for "the rights of Assur." Possibly it was some religious or priestly intrigue which brought about the great conqueror's assassination. There is also a prescription for bleeding at the nose, coupled with the promise that the doctor sending it will call in the morning, very much in the modern style; and another to "the scribe of the palace," from his "handmaid Sarāi," concerning some slaves of his that appear to have been sold by "administrative order." Others are of higher import, being correspondence between the king and various governors and officials in the provinces on affairs of State. Among these are letters between Assurbanipal and Kudur, governor of Erech, in which the latter reports the rebellion of the men of Pekod, who "have occupied the cities, killed the men, and ravished the women," and some friendly letters of the king as to the promotion of certain favourites and the holidays then being celebrated in Nineveh. Kudur also informs the king that a doctor who has been sent to him by the royal care has "restored him to life." But all are interesting.

The book, which is well and clearly printed, seems to be the first to appear of a series called "The Library of Ancient Inscriptions," of which the preceding five are by American authors, and apparently not yet ready. It contains all necessary notes and references, but is without the cuneiform texts, which perhaps would add little to the information of the general reader. At the same time it must not be forgotten that this makes it impossible in some cases to check the conclusions of the author. Other volumes are to be contributed by (among others) Dr. Reisner, Prof. Jastrow, M. Maspero, and Prof. Delitzsch.

BOOKS ON DANTE.

THE Rev. H. F. Tozer, whose volume of notes to the Commedia we reviewed some three years ago, has now completed his work and added to the gratitude due to him from Dante students, by producing in a handy volume, published at the Clarendon Press, a prose version of the entire poem. Other renderings in both prose and verse, of course, exist in plenty; but we know of no other in quite so convenient and portable a form. The translation, so far as we have tested it, seems as faithful as might be expected from Mr. Tozer's thorough knowledge of his author. It is also eminently "safe," adhering to accepted interpretations even in cases where on literary or linguistic grounds there would seem to be inducements to revise them. The style perhaps lacks the distinction of Prof. Norton's version. At times it becomes a little pedestrian. Terms like "preoccupied" or "depleted," phrases such as "all expedients were inadequate," "I was impelled by righteous indignation to censure the audacity of Eve," sound out of place in the Earthly Paradise. "Over thyself I invest thee with supreme control" is all very well as an explanation, if any were needed, of "te sopra te coronò e mitrio," but it is hardly a rendering of the words. The notes are brief, mostly taken from the commentary above referred to. We do not indeed find in the earlier work the somewhat misleading statement that the Brenta rises in the Carinthian Alps, which will puzzle students who know their geography. On the other hand, the rather doubtful assumption that the reference to Hungary at the end of 'Par.' xix. implies a compliment to Andrew III. (oddly called Andrea) reappears. Considering that Andrew's reign was near its end, we think the contrary far more likely; nor is it probable that Dante would have been disposed to hint good of the man who had kept his admired Carlo Martello out of his kingdom.

The first edition of Rossetti's Early Italian Poets (afterwards called 'Dante and his Circle') has recently passed out of copyright, and Messrs. Newnes & Co. have lost no time in bringing out a reprint of it in a dainty little volume with mystic end-papers and two title-pages, one engraved and the other printed. The addition of the latter we cannot regard as a happy thought, for it has given the printer the chance of working his will on the name Ciullo (d'Alcamo), which duly appears as "Cuillo." For the rest, the book seems to be a mere reprint, with no attempt at editing, a deficiency which we regret, considering how much has been done since Rossetti's day for the better knowledge of these early Italian singers. Even the absurd dates which Rossetti, following Trucchi, who knew no better, gave for some of the earliest, are retained. Nor, of course, has it been possible to take advantage of the rearrangement adopted by the translator in the edition of 1874. It must be said, however, in justice to whoever saw the book through the press, that the few errata at the end of the first edition have been incorporated.

From the De La More Press we receive a neat little volume, The Early Lives of Dante, translated by Philip H. Wicksteed. The lives in question are those by Boccaccio and Leonardo Bruni of Arezzo, with, as an appendix, the well-known chapter by John Villani (book ix. chap. 136 of his 'Chronicles'), an extract from Philip Villani's life of the poet, and the so-called 'Letter of Frate Ilario' of very doubtful authenticity. Of them all John Villani's chapter is probably the most really valuable, though Boccaccio has preserved for us the great fact of the identity of Beatrice, with regard to which no one on whose judgment any reliance can be placed has any doubt. But on the whole the good Certaldese lets his rhetoric get the best of him, and posterity is the loser. The chance of writing a trustworthy life of Dante, once lost, could never be recalled. Bruni was a scholar and a trained historian, but the generation which had elapsed between Boccaccio's day and his had left him with only third-hand evidence. It is curious that he did not, so far as appears, investigate more thoroughly the Florentine archives, to which we know he had access, and from which, in modern times, some valuable information about Dante has been gleaned. Some of his remarks on poets and poetry are, on the other hand, extremely acute, though his humanist's contempt for mediæval scholarship shows itself in some depreciation of Dante's Latin writing. On the whole, one wishes that he had had Boccaccio's opportunities, or Boccaccio his historical sense. Mr. Wicksteed's translation is well executed, and will form a useful companion to Dr. Moore's 'Dante and his Early Biographers.'

Dr. E. C. Lowe, Canon of Ely, is the last person who has fallen a victim to that inevitable desire of translating which the close study of Dante is found to engender. His rendering of the Commedia into blank verse (Parker), however, justifies itself better than any similar attempt which has come our way for a very long time. Dr. Lowe has followed in the steps rather of Longfellow than of Cary, translating, so far as possible, line for line. The process is, indeed, not difficult, as any one who has tried to translate Dante into prose is well aware. But a good choice of words which shall at the same time faithfully render the original and please the ear of the reader is less easy; and here Dr. Lowe seems to us to have been eminently successful. It is true that in many places the rendering stands as much in need of a note as the original; but the translation of Dante of which that cannot be said is yet to come. Cary comes the nearest; but the liberty of rearrangement, as well as of occasional expansion, which he allowed himself, made his task less difficult in this respect. Dr. Lowe's versification is usually easy. Once or twice he has been guilty of a "hyper-metric" line, and there are a few rather violent enjambements, with a preposition in one line and its noun in the next. Proper names are not always very happily managed, a point of some importance in rendering Dante. "Fiesole," we would say once more, is not four syllables; and we regret that Dr. Lowe has libelled Sir Galahad by making him the equivalent of "Galeotto." Still, on the whole, this is a sound, scholarly, and readable version.

OUR LIBRARY TABLE.

Books and Things: a Collection of Stray Remarks, by G. S. Street (Duckworth & Co.), is divided into two sections, 'Mainly of Books' and 'Mainly of other Things.' In both he is master of a refined and accomplished style, entirely free from foppery or over-emphasis; only occasionally, perhaps, too deliberately literary in phrase to match with its general character. But remembering that he was a young lion of the old National Observer, we are glad to find that he has emerged singularly immune from the too-stylish mannerisms which flecked the brilliancy of its staff. In substance his essays are an exhibition of temperate, balanced, observant common sense. There are other qualities, of course: scholarly reading and information, a nice and delicate literary taste, a sense of values all-round. But the quality which outstands in our impression of these papers is their admirable and corrective common sense. Whatever point he takes up, it becomes evident by its shrewd and clear-headed correction of extremes on every hand, its seizure of the just and cool medium. And it is towards correction, towards the fine adjustment of the literary balance, that he tends.

Sometimes, as in 'The Poor Public,' the point made is so trifling that, apart from the dexterous and cultivated pleasantry of the handling (for readers of 'The Autobiography of a Boy' know of old that Mr. Street has a humour of his own), it seems scarce worth the expenditure of common sense. As for the public at large, the literary and other publics, he does little more than convey a doubt of their existence. And of the theatrical public, which alone he recognizes as an apparent entity, he says only (in effect) that it is not so black as it is painted. Which is common sense, but a small point of common sense. Oftener, however, he has something to say, and something suggestive, as in 'The Provincial Mind,' for instance. There he suggests rational limitation of the phrase, as signifying a point of view contracted by limitations of the class to which a man belongs, and points out several varieties of provincial mind—the provincialism of class, properly so called, as in Thackeray and (to a less extent) Dickens; academic provincialism (which he finds strikingly in Matthew Arnold); provincialism of the coterie, and so forth. Whether in his criticism of authors or in the more miscellaneous papers on general topics, this dispassionate common sense appears as the quality which gives them their leading value.

Yet it must be said that Mr. Street in these papers shows as an intellectual dilettante. Though he has always something to say of his own, and from his own point of view, the points made and suggested are, after all, slight. Originality is there, but it is a slight originality. It does not cut deep, and it does not aim at cutting deep. He is, after all, skimming the surface of life and letters, with excellent sanity, with a personal eye, so far as it goes, but content not to go far. It is "Vive la bagatelle!" But the bagatelles are refined, fastidious, things worth saying in their degree, only there would be no striking loss to letters if they remained unsaid.

SIR F. TREVES has done himself injustice in his book The Other Side of the Lantern (Cassell & Co.). At his best he is as good as possible; his Agra is the finest Agra that we have found in any book of travel. But his best is mingled with his worst, and he is so humble a writer that he opens with Gibraltar and Marseilles and Port Said, and ends with the still more hackneyed Yosemite. Yet Sir F. Treves shows in this volume that he has poetry of soul and a noble imagination. We differ from him about the Inland Sea, which he cannot have seen under the best conditions; and like Scotland and Norway, to which, strangely, he compares it, rather than to New Zealand, the Inland Sea depends upon conditions. He likes the tropics; and the Andes of the West Coast remain for him to describe. No one could do it better.

Robert Louis Stevenson. By A. H. Japp. (Werner Laurie.)—Its author further describes this little book as 'A Record, an Estimate, and a Memorial,' a title which is certainly somewhat portentous. Dr. Japp is the gentleman who visited Stevenson at Braemar in the early eighties, and of whom the romancer wrote from Samoa, a dozen years later:—

"And now, who should come dropping in ex machinâ, but Dr. Japp, like the disguised prince who is to bring down the curtain upon peace and happiness in the last act; for he carried in his pocket, not a horn or a talisman, but a publisher, in fact, ready to unearth new writers for my old friend Mr. Henderson's Young Folks..... From that moment on, I have thought highly of his critical faculty; for when he left us he carried away the manuscript in his portmanteau. 'Treasure Island'—it was Mr. Henderson who deleted the first title, 'The Sea Cook'—appeared duly in Young Folks, where it figured in the ignoble midst, without woodcuts, and attracted not the least attention. I did not care. I liked the tale myself, for much the same reason as my father liked the beginning: it was my kind of picturesque. I was not a little proud of John Silver, also; and to this day rather admire that smooth and formidable adventurer."

Stevenson was right not to care. So much has been proved; and, though he produced far finer work, 'Treasure Island' has won our affection, and "that smooth and formidable adventurer," John Silver, our admiration. Dr. Japp lays too much stress, we think, in his estimate of Stevenson's position in literature, upon the question of the moral vagueness of his fiction. Stevenson's habit of cherishing a lingering fondness for his villains, and painting in the imperfections of his heroes, as though more than half inclined, himself, to doubt their heroism, while possibly fatal from the theatrical and dramatic standpoint, is not necessarily the flaw in fiction that Dr. Japp appears to think it. Life is like that. Men are not all black or all white, but a blend of very many shades—even the best and the worst of them. Upon the whole, we cannot attach any great importance to Dr. Japp's literary estimate of Stevenson, though it has the notable merit of being temperate and thoughtful. It is not penetrating or luminous.

We learn from this book that Mr. Gosse is of opinion that both Stevenson and Dr. Japp himself overrated the importance of the part played by the latter in giving 'Treasure Island' to the world. The point is not of vital moment in any case, and scarcely seems to call for Dr. Japp's elaborated disquisition upon it any more than does Lord Rosebery's omission from a certain speech of reference to one of the many writers who influenced Stevenson. This, also, Dr. Japp treats with needless elaboration.

The book contains a few letters that have not appeared before, and a neatly arranged selection of extracts from published letters and other writings. It will interest lovers of Stevenson's work, if it does not appreciably enlarge their knowledge of it.

The Life of St. Francis. By St. Bonaventura. Translated from the Latin by Miss E. Gurney Salyer. (Dent.)—It was a good inspiration to add St. Bonaventura's "authorized version" of the 'Life of St. Francis' to the others already published by Messrs. Dent in the "Temple Classics." The 'Life' has been twice previously translated into English, the first translation being published at Douay in 1635. It was made by Anthony Montague, and the book was dedicated on its appearance to Lady Winefred Englefield. It is a very simple and correct version, and quite worth reprinting nowadays. The second version, first published in 1868, is pretentious and tumid. Miss Salyer's translation is generally good and founded on the best models. Curiously enough, it is in the chapter on the Stigmata, where the most scrupulous accuracy is absolutely essential, that she departs the most from her text. "Nerves," for example, should be sineus; the force of "patentius" is not given by "manifestly"; "into a circle" is too strong for "ad orbicularitatem." The difficult "stoke" is translated "state and royal apparel." English readers have now a complete course of early lives of St. Francis within their reach.

The Words of St. Francis from his Works and the Early Legends. Selected and translated by Anne Macdonell. (Dent.)—This is a very well-chosen selection of the words of St. Francis, giving in little space the marrow of his teaching. A selection can hardly escape being controversial in its implications and omissions, but little objection can be taken to this edition on that ground. Perhaps the author has not always gone to the best texts for her translations, and the notes might have been fuller with advantage, e.g., the occasions of the composition of the last two verses of the 'Canticle of the Sun' might have been told. Boehmer's 'Analakten zur Geschichte des F. von Assisi,' which contains modern texts of all the writings attributed to St. Francis, not to mention an excellent German edition of the Opuscula.

The Prioress's Tale, and other Tales. By Geoffrey Chaucer. Done into Modern English by Prof. Skeat. (Moring.)—This is decidedly the best of this little series of Chaucer modernizations that has yet appeared. Prof. Skeat, in his introduction, very properly says:—

"The present version, in a word, is meant for the reader who is only acquainted with modern English, and should be judged of accordingly. If any such reader can be induced to study the original, so much the better. He will then understand that the charm and melody of the original language, when rightly understood and pronounced, are quite inimitable."

These selections from Chaucer's tales, carrying behind them the authority of Prof. Skeat's unrivalled scholarship, can be placed in the hands of an untrained reader or a child with the certainty of attracting and keeping his interest.

The Jewish Encyclopedia: Vol. VIII., Leon-Moravia (Funk & Wagnalls Company), includes a number of noteworthy articles. Mr. Joseph Jacobs is the author of a sumptuously illustrated article on 'London,' giving the history of the Jews in the capital city of England from about the year 1070, when William the Conqueror "brought certain Jews from Rouen to London," down to the present day.

There are several omissions in the earlier parts of the article. The careful reader will, however, be able to complete the story by consulting a number of other papers scattered throughout the work (e.g., 'Rodrigo Lopez' in the present volume). Much fuller information is vouchsafed in the article before us on modern Jewish developments in London. The paper on ancient and mediæval Hebrew literature is extremely meagre, but here, too, the information can be supplemented from other articles on various literary subjects. A praiseworthy contribution is Dr. N. Slouschz's elaborate notice of modern Hebrew literature (1743-1904). The revival of Hebrew belles-lettres during the last century and a half is not without its deep significance. It exhibits on the literary side an adaptation to modern European standards, and the romantic story is one of its most interesting features. Dr. C. D. Spivak, of Denver, Colorado, writes on 'Medicine' as practised in Biblical and Talmudic times, and Dr. Frederick T. Haneman furnishes a paper on post-Talmudic medical science. The bibliography attached to the first-named article covers an entire column, and at the end of Dr. Haneman's contribution a list of leading Jewish physicians now practising in Europe and the United States is added. Passing on to articles belonging to a decidedly Rabbinic category, we notice important contributions on the legendary and legal Midrash by Dr. J. Theodor, Rabbi of Bojanowo, Posen. Dr. J. Z. Lauterbach, of New York, writes on the 'Mishnah.' The Jewish liturgy is treated by Prof. Ludwig Blau, of Budapest, but the subject is one which is likely to receive much fuller treatment in the near future. Among other papers dealing with Jewish legal and ceremonial life we notice 'Marriage Laws,' 'Marriage Ceremonies,' and 'Master and Servant.' Dr. Richard Gottheil contributes an article on 'Libraries,' dealing largely with the classification of Hebrew books at the Bodleian Library, the New York Public Library, and institutions of a similar character. The article on 'Manuscripts' is illustrated by four plates containing over eighty specimens of Hebrew writing, ranging from the sixth century down to the present day. The volume is very rich in biography. Among the better-known names are those of Moses Mendelssohn, Felix Mendelssohn-Bartholdy, Sir Moses Montefiore, and Manasseh ben Israel. For the rest, this new instalment of the 'Encyclopædia' includes the great variety of subjects to which allusion has been made in our notices of the preceding volumes. Here and there mistakes and shortcomings are found in the contributions, and we suggest that special editorial care should be taken to ensure the accuracy of the smaller articles. But the work is, on the whole, well done, and is sure to be exceedingly useful to all kinds of students. The illustrations of the present volume are as copious and as fine as ever.

The English Works of Roger Ascham.—Toxophilus, Report of the Affaires and States of Germany, The Scholemaster. Edited by William Aldis Wright. (Cambridge, University Press.)—Mr. Aldis Wright's work is so invariably accurate that one is always tempted to take it for granted, and thus to overlook the enormous amount of work hidden from view. Even in the half dozen or so cases where, on first view, the reviewer is inclined to support the old text against the editorial emendation, on the latter consideration it comes out triumphant. We are still a little doubtful as to the alteration on p. 96, where, speaking of heading an arrow, Ascham says: "Ful on is whan the wood is be[n]t hard up to the ende or stoppyng of the heade." Bent does not seem an improvement on bet. A comparison of the three copies of the 'Toxophilus' in the British Museum with the Cambridge copy shows that probably two presses must have been at work at once in printing it. Thus the Grenville copy doubles a line on the title-page; others are normal. The two other copies have a comma after "lesse" on p. 72; G. and the Cambridge have it before "lesse." The three Museum copies have "goose" where Cambridge has "gouse," p. 89, l. 4 up—"But the gouse." On the other hand, all three Museum copies have the same damaged letter (t) in "leopardyt," p. 115, thus proving that the sheets were printed off from the same type. It is to be noted that the facsimile on p. vii is reduced. The press-mark of the Museum copy referred to is C. 31, e. 27, not c. No better edition of Ascham's text is ever likely to be printed.

MESSRS. LONGMAN have just published Parts I. and II. of a new edition of The Earthly Paradise. These slim volumes are bound in grey with linen backs, and printed in a clear beautiful type which is delightful to the eye. Part I. contains a new portrait of Morris and an introduction by Mr. Mackail, which says, and says well, just what is wanted. Morris's own delightful preface in verse completes the charm. The price of the parts, one shilling net, is worth remark; but we should not have printed it on the grey boards together with the title. In every other point the new issue is as tasteful as it could be.

UNDER the title of English Seamen (Methuen), Mr. David Hannay has extracted from Southey's 'Lives of the British Admirals' the memoirs of 'Hawkins [Sir Richard], Greenville, Devereux, Raleigh,' in continuation of a former volume of 'Howard, Clifford, Hawkins [Sir John], Drake, Cavendish,' which appeared just ten years ago. The merits and defects of Southey's work have been long recognized, but the fact may be emphasized that, considered as literature, these chapters were well worth reprinting, especially in this age, when literature is scarce in comparison with the enormous output of the press. As history their value is more doubtful, for they are far from being up to the standard of modern research. The most interesting part of the work is thus Mr. Hannay's very short introduction, which—whether we agree with his conclusions or not—is an admirable bit of writing, and a virile protest against much misplaced glossing of ugly facts.

Don Quixote has just appeared in the "New Century Library" (Nelson), which offers good type and neat binding. Messrs. Nelson were, we think, the pioneers in the production of the various thin-paper editions which are both compact and readable.—Messrs. Cassell send us Part I. of Don Quixote, illustrated by Doré, which ought to be a success. It is certainly very cheap at sixpence. A biographical notice of Cervantes by Mr. Teignmouth Shore is promised, but does not appear in this instalment.—Mr. Fitzmaurice-Kelly's lecture to the British Academy on Cervantes in England (Frowde) is, as might be expected, an admirable piece of work, both graceful and learned.

WE have now before us a complete set of The Plays of Shakespeare in Mr. Heinemann's "Favourite Classics." Each volume has an introduction by Dr. Brandes and a frontispiece, the text is clearly printed, and the whole is neatly bound in green cloth. The price, as we said in noticing some of the early issues of the plays, is a veritable feat in cheap production. But looking at the many merits of the edition, we have little doubt that Mr. Heinemann will recoup himself for his enterprise by the number of copies he sells.

Hazell's Annual for 1905 (Hazell, Watson & Viney) is an excellent book of reference. The editor, Mr. W. Palmer, is to be congratulated on the ability of the summaries, which contain in all the numerous cases we have tested the requisite information in a small space. The index to the work is effective. The book is unusually wide in range; indeed, we think that the biographies of eminent persons might have been omitted in view of 'Who's Who.' They are not always accurate in detail. We are glad to see that the prominence given to Nonconformist bodies, sometimes to the exclusion of equally meritorious associations, has disappeared. The volume cannot be said at present to have any special bias. On details of the past year it is particularly useful. We notice an event recorded which happened on December 29th.

LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

ENGLISH.

Theology.

- Blosius (L.), The Sanctuary of the Faithful Soul, translated by B. A. Wilberforce, cr. 8vo, 2/6 net.
Bury (R. V.), Vinum Sacramenti, cr. 8vo, 2/6 net.
Confession of Faith (A.), compiled by S. Smith, M.P., 12mo, 6/
Evangelion Da-Mepharreshe, edited by F. C. Burkitt, Vol. 1, 31/6 net; Vol. 2, 21/ net; or complete, 4to, 42/ net.
Glover (R.), The Teacher's Commentary on the Gospel of St. Mark, cr. 8vo, 2/6
Ramsay (A.), Studies in Jeremiah, cr. 8vo, 5/ net.
Wood (I. F.), The Spirit of God in Biblical Literature, 6/

Law.

- Emery (G. F.), The Licensing Justices' Manual, 8vo, 5/
Marchant (J. R. V.), An Essay on the Legal Position of Counsel in England, 8vo, 9/

Fine Art and Archaeology.

- Dürer (Albert), by T. S. Moore, cr. 8vo, 7/6 net.
Gordon (N.), Coins of Japan, cr. 8vo, 21/ net.
Rhodes (John N.), a Yorkshire Painter, 1809-42, by W. H. Thorn, 4to, 10/8 net.

Poetry and the Drama.

- Brett (O.), The Reckoning, cr. 8vo, 2/6 net.

Music.

- Chopin's Works (A Handbook to), by G. C. A. Jonson, 6/

Philosophy.

- Gomperz (T.), Greek Thinkers, Vols. 2 and 3, translated by G. G. Berry, 8vo, each 14/ net.

Political Economy.

- Dunbar (C. F.), Economic Essays, edited by O. M. W. Sprague, 8vo, 10/6 net.

History and Biography.

- Belle of the Fifties (A.), roy, 8vo, 10/6 net.
Bennett (R.) and Elton (J.), History of Corn-Milling: Vol. 4, Some Feudal Mills, 8vo, 10/6 net.
Cecil (K. H. D.), The Historical Tragedy of Nero, 3/6 net.
Cervantes (The Life of), by A. F. Calvert, cr. 8vo, 3/6 net.
Dawson (I. C.), The South American Republics, Part 2, 6/
Harrison (Thomas), Regicide and Major-General, by C. H. Simpkinson, cr. 8vo, 4/6 net.
Joubert (C.), The Truth about the Tsar and the Present State of Russia, 8vo, 7/6
Lant (A. C.), Pathfinders of the West, cr. 8vo, 8/6 net.
Niceta of Remesiana: his Life and Works, by A. E. Burn, cr. 8vo, 9/ net.
Shakespeare (William), A Life of, by W. J. Rolfe, 10/6 net.
Sparks (E. E.), The United States of America, 2 vols. 12/

Geography and Travel.

- Cook's Tourist's Handbook for Southern Italy, Rome, and Sicily, cr. 8vo, 4/
Maugham (W. S.), The Land of the Blessed Virgin, 6/ net.
Treves (Sir F.), The Other Side of the Lantern, 12/ net.
Willans (J. B.), The Byways of Montgomeryshire, 5/ net.

Sports and Pastimes.

- Barton (F. P.), Bridge Simplified, roy. 16mo, 2/6
Foster (R. F.), Practical Poker, 12mo, 5/ net.
Ju-Jitsu: What it really is, by "Apollo," cr. 8vo, 5/ net.

Philology.

- Plato, Euthydemus, Revised Text by E. H. Gifford, 3/6
Speeches of Isæus, edited by W. Wyse, 8vo, 18/ net.

Science.

- Brown (J. J. G.), The Treatment of Nervous Disease, 15/ net.
Gould (G. M.), A Dictionary of New Medical Terms, 21/ net.
Lovett (W. J.), A Complete Class-Book of Naval Architecture, 8vo, 7/6 net.
Maxwell (W. H.), British Progress in Municipal Engineering, imp. 8vo, 6/ net.
Righi (A.), Modern Theory of Physical Phenomena, &c., 12mo, 5/ net.
Robson (A. W. M.), Cancer and its Treatment, 8vo, 3/6 net.
Shearer (J. S.), Notes and Questions in Physics, 8vo, 7/6 net.
Sociological Papers, by Sir F. Galton and others, 10/6

General Literature.

- Benson (E. F.), An Act in a Backwater, cr. 8vo, 6/
British Imperial Calendar, 1905, cr. 8vo, 5/
Butcher (C. H.), The Oriflamme in Egypt, cr. 8vo, 4/6 net.
Carman (B.), The Friendship of Art, cr. 8vo, 6/
Character and Conduct, cr. 8vo, half-vellum, 5/ net.
Eastman (C. A.), Red Hunters and the Animal People, 5/
Fitzpatrick (K.), The Weans at Rowallan, cr. 8vo, 6/
Griffith (G.), A Mayfair Magician, cr. 8vo, 6/
Hampstead Annual, 1904-5, edited by G. E. Matheson and S. C. Mayle, imp. 8vo, sewed, 2/6 net.
Heptameron, translated by A. Machen, 8vo, 6/
Herford (O.), The Rubāyat of a Persian Kitten, 3/6 net.
Isam (F. S.), The Strollers, cr. 8vo, 6/
Jackson (W. S.), Helen of Troy, N.Y., cr. 8vo, 6/
Jeans (J. S.), Canada's Resources and Possibilities, 15/ net.
Kernahan (Mrs. C.), The Fate of Felix, cr. 8vo, 6/
Lorimer (G. H.), Old Gorgon Graham, cr. 8vo, 6/
McChesney (D. G.), Yesterday's To-morrow, cr. 8vo, 4/6 net.

Mask of Apollo (The), and other Stories, by A. E., 2/6 net.
 Meade (L. T.), Little Wife Hester, cr. 8vo, 6/
 Michaëlis (Karin), The Child Andrea, translated by J. N.
 Laurvik, cr. 8vo, 3/6
 Michelet (J.), The Sorceress, translated from the French,
 roy. 8vo, 6/ net.
 Orcutt (W. D.), Robert Cavalier, 8vo, 6/
 Parrish (R.), My Lady of the North, cr. 8vo, 6/
 Pennell (E. R.), My Cookery Books, sewed, in box, 90/ net.
 Porter (G. Stratton-), Freckles, 8vo, 6/
 Spearman (F. H.), The Strategy of Great Railroads, 7/6
 Stevenson (B. E.), The Marathon Mystery, cr. 8vo, 6/
 Street (G. S.), Books and Things, cr. 8vo, 6/
 Thumbnail Essays, by K. C., 8vo, 3/6 net.
 White (P.), The System, cr. 8vo, 6/
 White (S. E.), The Mountains, 8vo, 7/6
 Whiting (M. B.), The Torchbearers, cr. 8vo, 4/6 net.
 Wilde (O.), De Profundis, 4to, Japanese vellum, 42/ net.

FOREIGN.

Theology.

Rieder (K.), Der Gottesfreund vom Oberland, 21m.

Fine Art and Archaeology.

Boissier (A.), Choix de Textes relatifs à la Divination
 Assyro-Babylonienne, 25fr.

Günzburg (D.) et Stasoff (V.), L'Ornement Hébraïque,
 120m.

Meyer (E.), Aegyptische Chronologie, 11m. 50.

Poetry.

Fabié (F.), Poésies, 1892-1904, 6fr.

Mardrus (L. D.), Horizons, 3fr. 50.

Political Economy.

Guiraud (P.), Études Économiques sur l'Antiquité, 3fr. 50.

History and Biography.

Baudry (J.), Étude Historique et Critique sur la Bretagne, 1782-90, 2 vols. 12fr.

Funk-Brentano (T.), Les Sophistes Français et la Révolution
 Européenne, 6fr.

Lacour-Gayet (G.), La Marine Militaire de la France sous
 Louis XVI., 15fr.

Geography and Travel.

Schneider (R.), L'Ombrie, 3fr. 50.

Philology.

Kruisinga (E.), A Grammar of the Dialect of West Somerset, 6m.

General Literature.

Aymard (C.), La Profession du Crime, 3fr. 50.

Foville (J. de), Servitude, 3fr. 50.

France (A.), Sur la Pierre Blanche, 3fr. 50.

Georget (A.), Émancipées, 3fr. 50.

Tallenay (J. de), Vivra Perpetua, 3fr. 50.

Vaudère (J. de la), L'Amante du Pharaon, 3fr. 50.

A VETERAN SCHOLAR.

AN interesting gathering took place in the Combination Room of St. John's College, Cambridge, on January 28th, the purpose of which was to do honour to Prof. J. E. B. Mayor on his eightieth birthday. The chair was taken by Prof. Sir Richard Jebb, who presented to Prof. Mayor a congratulatory address, written in Latin, and signed by about 170 scholars, chiefly members of the Cambridge Philological Society and Classical Society, along with some others who have been prominent in research into the history of Cambridge and its colleges, for which the venerable Professor has himself done much. The introductory speech of the Chairman was faultless; it touched happily on all the varied activities of Prof. Mayor's life, and on the features of his unique character. Admirable speeches were also delivered by the Master of Trinity and the Vice-Chancellor. The reply of Prof. Mayor, couched partly in Latin, partly in English (both alike racy), was rich in interest for the audience. It ranged discursively over many topics, but the keen attention of the listeners was never relaxed. Many of the personal reminiscences were picturesque. The Professor, for example, spoke pathetically of the difficulty which he experienced as schoolboy and undergraduate in obtaining access to books. College libraries were not open to undergraduates, and when, on one or two occasions, the Professor tried to "slink in" to the University Library, he was seized and turned out "by the scruff of the neck." Altogether, the meeting was memorable. The following is the address, which was, we believe, due to the pen of Dr. J. S. Reid:—

IOHANNI EYTON BICKERSTETH MAYOR
 LITTERARUM LATINARUM PROFESSORI
 AMICI AMICO
 S.P.D.

Hodie tibi octogensimi aetatis anni finem auspiciis felicebus attingenti nos communium studiorum uinculo coniuncti gratulamur et omnibus faustis prosequimur. Quanta admiratione, quam grato animo, doctrinae tuae ubertatem uarietatem sub-tilitatem recordamur! Quot scriptoribus Romanis, praesertim Ciceroni Plinio Iuuenali, lumen attulisti!

 Nec tamen ita his litteris deditus fuisti ut patriae nostrae monumenta neglegeres. Baedae quidem historiis insigni fructu eruditionem singularem adhibuisti; et in factis uirorum et feminarum illustrium commemorandis, qui rem publicam nostram Cantabrigiensem aut opibus auxerunt aut pietate coluerunt aut ingenio illustrarunt, tu prae-cipue operam nauasti. Nec praetereundi sunt tot labores tui in linguae Latinae usu occultiore erundo et in memoria doctissimorum hominum renouanda consumpti. Nomen ergo tuum inter clarissimos
 Cantabrigienses, Bentleium Marklandum Porsonum
 Munronem, et uiget et uigebit. Quorum rerum causa, hoc tam felici die, te quasi Nestora quendam studiorum nostrorum salutamus, et multos in annos sospitem exoptamus, ut amplissimi illi doctrinarum thesauri, qui adhuc in serinis tuis latent, eum magno studiosorum hominum emolumento in lucem prodeant.

Datum Cantabrigiae A.D.V. Kal. Feb. A.S. MCMV.

CROMWELL ON SIR JOHN PALGRAVE.

Tremvan, Pwllheli.

THE following is a copy of an autograph letter of Oliver Cromwell which is not included in Carlyle's collection, nor otherwise printed as far as I know. It adds two new names to those in command, and shows that Cromwell anticipated no serious difficulties at Stamford. The place of writing and the year are not given, but a contemporary has docketed it close to the seal: "Collonell Cromwells letter 13 Junij 1643." It is addressed:—

To my honourd freinds the Commissioners for the Association p'sent theisse att Cambridge
 June the 13 [1643].

Gentlemen, because I vnderstood of John Pal-graue was resolved to come to you, and knowinge Hee is very much mistaken in my Lord Generalls meaninge concerninge the comeinge of his Regiment, to the Armie, and findinge too too many delays therein, excuses sometimes putt vpon the Leif<sup>ant</sup> Collonell, sometimes vpon the Capitaines, sometimes vpon want of monie, vpon Leif<sup>ant</sup> Hotham and my selfe, vpon misvnderstanding his Excellency, by all w<sup>ch</sup> the seruice is neglected and delayed, and the kingdom endangered. least you vpon his comeinge should bee ledd allsoe into mistakes vpon pretences, I make this short addresse to you, desiringe you to beleue mee itt exceedingly imports the kingdom the Association, and you all that Hee hasten to vs. lett noe words whatsoever leade your resol<sup>utions</sup> any other way, I maintaine and affirme to you, as I would deale faythfully with you, and loue the Association, two or three-hundred men in those parts are enowe. Holland is frou teen [sic] to itt. Horsea biidge ouer the riuier out of Huntington sheire beinge* made a draw bridge makes the aduance theither altogether† fearelesse. If the enimies horse aduance to Stamford what can they doe. nothinge att all as to that place, if wee bee stronge in the feild, you are very well secured, and bee assured if the enimie aduance towards you, wee shall followe him in the heeles. for s<sup>r</sup> miles Hobart and my selfe doubt not, wee shall not bee soe vnfaythfull to you, to giue the enimie leaue to march into the Association, and tarrie behinde. my Lord Generalls expresse com<sup>and</sup> is, that wee all aduance if Hee drawe towards the south with his Armie.
 His care is for you, soe wee trust shall our fayth-fullnesse. lett noe words therefore from s<sup>r</sup> John Palgraue preuaile but com<sup>and</sup> him to march vp wth all the volunteers, both the two companies w<sup>ch</sup> you send, and all the rest of the volunteers. if Hee cannot bee spared lett s<sup>r</sup> Edward Ashlye bringe them. lett him not keepe a volunteer att wisbeach
 I beseech you doe not. Hee hath a minde to this companie and the other companie, to please himselfe in composinge his Regiment. this is not a time to picke and choose for pleasure. seruice must bee don<sup>e</sup>, com<sup>and</sup> you, and bee obeyed. the Queene is marching with 1200 horse, and 3000 foote. wee are† much vnder that number. wee trust to indenor our duties wth these wee haue, but it will not bee good to lose the vse of any force god giues vs, by negligence. The Lord giue you, and vs zeale,
 I take leaue and rest
 Your faythfull seruant
 OLIVER CROMWELL.

[P.S.] I beseech you informe your selues fully of the numbers of your men. att wisbech, and send * "Walled" originally written, but cancelled.

† "Impossi" originally written, but left incomplete and cancelled.

‡ A word crossed out which was apparently "but."

what you thinke may well be spared, you need few when wee are in the feild, wherof doubt not when his comes vp to vs.

The original letter is the property of Mrs.
 Gough, of Gelliwig, in Carnarvonshire. It came to her in 1903 with papers from Pennant
 "in Erethlyn," in Denbighshire, the seat of a family of the Hollands from the time of Henry VII.

J. GWENOGVRYN EVANS.

MR. COX AND THE EXAMINER.

Greencroft, St. Albans, January 30th, 1905.

THE mention of the late Mr. H. F. Cox's connexion with The Examiner in 1872 in last week's Athenæum is not quite correct. Mr.
 Cox joined the staff of that paper in the latter part of 1872, and rendered valuable assistance to it; but he was at no time either editor or proprietor, and it was before his connexion with it that it made, as you are good enough to say, "a spirited push for renewed youth, dropping its price from sixpence to threepence, and securing J. S. Mill as one of its writers." Mill, by the way, scarcely ought to be called "one of its writers," although he took a great interest in the paper and helped me with occasional contributions.

H. R. FOX BOURNE.

THE BRITISH MUSEUM READING-ROOM.

West View, Pinner, January 28th, 1905.

WHILE I warmly sympathize with those—be they many or few—whose other avocations will not permit them to make use of the British Museum Reading-Room except at a late hour,
 I wish at the same time emphatically to endorse the argument of your correspondent, "A Reader of over Forty Years' Standing," against a later hour of opening. I myself am a reader of over fifty years' standing, and I hope I have used the Reading-Room to some purpose. I may, therefore, tell what the result of such a change would probably be; for I can give a practical example. If the Reading-Room between thirty and forty years ago had opened only at ten o'clock instead of nine, my editions of the 'Paston Letters' could not possibly have appeared. The difficulties I had to contend with otherwise were serious enough; but the work was a labour of love, and I managed to get over them simply by the sacrifice of my whole leisure for several consecutive years.
 Day after day I was due in Chancery Lane at ten o'clock; but day after day I managed to get half an hour's work done before office, and on Saturdays had two or three hours in the afternoon to compare proofs with the original MSS. or to look up books in the Library. On official holidays, of course, I could get much more done; and in summer I could sometimes get a little time, after office as well as before, on other days than Saturdays. But without some opportunity of doing at least a little every day, in winter as well as in summer, the work could never have been achieved. And how little it was sometimes that I was obliged to be content with, let your readers judge.
 Something like the following was quite a commonplace experience:—

Monday.—Looked up two books in Library Catalogue, and made out tickets. Cross-references, and perhaps mistakes or imperfect information, exhausted all the time. Left at 9.45 with tickets.

Tuesday.—Sent in tickets, perhaps about 9.10. Occupied till the books came consulting Blomefield's 'Norfolk' or some other book in Reading-Room. Volumes placed on my table about 9.30. Unable to dismiss Blomefield till 9.40. Obligated to go, but place papers in volumes that they may be kept for me.

Wednesday.—Begin the study of the books which I looked out in the Catalogue on Monday.

In point of fact, it generally took me three days to make even the slightest use of a book that was in the General Library; and this from no defect in the arrangements, and certainly from no want of kindly assistance on the part of officials or attendants in our great national library.

Well, I have been rewarded—certainly not in coin, but in seeing that I have made some parts of English history more lucid, as the foot-notes in Stubbs and Ramsay and other historians testify. But if the Museum Reading-Room had only opened at ten, instead of nine, what these authorities tell us about the Wars of the Roses would certainly have been a far less perfect and, I may add, a far less accurate tale.

JAMES GAIRDNER.

THE SPENSERIAN STANZA.

I OBSERVE that in The Athenæum for January 21st, p. 73, we are told that the Spenserian stanza is from the seven-line stanza of the 'Mirror for Magistrates,' because "for six lines the two metres are identical."

It is rather from the eight-line stanza of Chaucer's 'Monk's Tale,' because for eight lines the metres are identical. All that Spenser did was to add an alexandrine line to rhyme with the eighth.

This very obvious fact is clearly set forth in my edition of Chaucer's 'Works,' 1894, vol. vi. p. lix.

WALTER W. SKEAT.

SCHOOL OF IRISH LEARNING, DUBLIN.

A MEETING of the Board of Governors and Trustees of this School was held at 28, Clare Street, Dublin, on Saturday afternoon last.

The Director presented a Report on the work of the session. Classes in Old and Middle Irish were conducted by Dr. Meyer and Prof. Strachan at Easter, and during the months of July and August. The texts studied included 'The Vision of MacConglinne,' and portions of the 'Tain Bo Cuailnge' and the 'Bruiden Da Derga.' A special class was held for the study of Old Irish Glosses, for which a selection specially edited by Dr. Strachan served as a text-book. The classes were attended by twenty students, some of whom came from remote parts of Ireland.

The first part of Eriu, the periodical publication of the School, containing contributions by the editors, Prof. Meyer and Prof. Strachan, and by several of the students, appeared in August last, and was welcomed by scholars in Ireland and abroad. It was announced that the second portion, completing the volume, would be ready in a few days.

Mrs. J. R. Green intimated her intention of continuing for a second year the scholarship of 100*l.* awarded to Mr. O. J. Bergin, of Cork, who is now studying with Prof. Zimmer at Berlin. She also offered additional scholarships similar to those given by her last year, provided that suitable candidates were forthcoming. A scholarship of 10*l.*, given by Prof. W. P. Ker, was awarded to Mr. Timothy Lewis, of Brecon, to enable him to attend the summer course of this year. Promises of donations for a similar purpose were also made by the Rev. Dr. Delany, Sir Anthony MacDonnell, and Mr. W. P. Geoghegan.

Mrs. Green reported that during her recent visit to America she approached several of the Universities there with a view to inducing them to make Irish a subject of University study. As a first step towards the realization of this object, several of the Universities decided to send students to attend the forthcoming session of the School.

It was agreed to continue the series of School Texts initiated by Dr. Strachan's 'Old Irish Gloss Reader' with a Reader of Middle Irish poetry by Prof. Meyer.

The Treasurer, in presenting his financial statement, pointed out that further funds would be necessary if all the objects of the School were to be carried out. Among them, the publication of facsimiles and catalogues of Irish MSS. was deemed of prime importance, and to this end support was invited.

Finally, the programme of studies for next session was discussed. It was arranged that Prof. Strachan should hold a short course in Irish Palaeography and the reading of MSS. at Easter, and another in July and August, the latter to include elementary and advanced instruction in Old and Middle Irish. The syllabus of these classes will be issued at an early date.

SALE.

MESSRS. HODGSON included in their sale last week the following: Graves and Cronin's History of the Works of Sir Joshua Reynolds, 4 vols., 49*l.* Engravings from the Works of Sir Thomas Lawrence, 20*l.* 10*s.* Ruskin's Architecture of Venice, 1851, 9*l.* 10*s.* Berenson's Drawings of the Florentine Painters, 2 vols., 10*l.* 15*s.* Gould's Mammals of Australasia, 3 vols., 28*l.* 10*s.* Smith's Historie of Virginia (some leaves repaired), 1632, 26*l.* 10*s.* Enderbie's Cambria Triumphans, with illuminated coats of arms, 1810, 10*l.* 5*s.* The Huth Library, 29 vols., large paper, 13*l.* Hakluyt's Voyages, 12 vols., 7*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.* The Tudor Translations, 38 vols., 24*l.* Lytton's Works, Edition de Luxe, 32 vols., 10*l.* 15*s.* Journal of Botany from the commencement in 1863 to 1904, 18*l.*

Literary Gossip.

MR. JOHN MURRAY will publish a little posthumous work by Lady Dilke which she called 'The Book of Praise,' and with it in the same volume two of her fanciful tales, 'The Last Hour' and 'The Mirror of the Soul.' These latter were ready for an intended volume of stories, and bear on the same subjects as 'The Book of Praise.' A memoir will be prefixed by Sir Charles Dilke, relating chiefly to the life and letters between 1858 and 1884 inclusive.

MRS. HUMPHRY WARD's novel 'The Marriage of William Ashe,' which is appearing serially in Harper's Magazine, will be published in book form on March 9th by Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co. in this country, and by Messrs. Harper & Brothers in the United States. The social and political setting in which the characters move, and the unconventional element in the rising statesman's marriage, which deeply affects his private and public career, inevitably suggest for their foundation passages from the career of a famous minister of three generations ago, though transferred to another period. The work will include nine full-page illustrations from drawings by Mr. Albert Sterner.

MRS. HENRY DE LA PASTURE has chosen the title 'Peter's Mother' for her new novel, which will be published by Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co. on the 10th inst. In this book she breaks fresh ground, presenting, with more than one love current, the story of the relations between a young heir and his widowed mother. The scene is laid in a Devonshire country house, the titular mistress of which is Peter's mother.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & Co. have in the press a new book by Prof. J. B. Bury on 'The Life of St. Patrick, and his Place in History.' The work has grown out of the Professor's study of the subject as an appendix to the history of the Roman Empire. He then found that the material had never been critically sifted. The new book concludes that the Catholic conception of St. Patrick's work is nearer, generally, to historical fact than the views of anti-Papal divines.

MR. FISHER UNWIN will shortly add a new volume (the eleventh) to his "First Novel Library." The title of the book will be 'A Pagan's Love,' and the author is Miss Constance Clyde, a young Australian. The story deals with Australian city life from a new and realistic point of view, and an attempt is made to depict the Australian woman as a national type, and to show both her strength and her weakness. The interest of the novel lies specially in its revelation of the freer range of thought and action which characterizes the younger nation.

WE notice with regret the death on Saturday night of the Provost of King's College, Cambridge. The Rev. Augustus Austen Leigh came of a family well known at Eton and King's, and as Fellow, Tutor, and Vice-Provost he was so intimately and favourably associated with the college that his election to the headship on the death of the aged Dr. Okes was generally expected. An excellent man of business, he had the ease and charm of manner which go far, and accordingly was much sought after as an ideal member of the various bodies which manage the life of the University. A history of his college was his sole publication.

MESSRS. F. E. ROBINSON & Co. will publish this month an illustrated and popular 'History of the University of Wales and its Constituent Colleges,' by Mr. W. Cadwaladr-Davies, Standing Counsel of the University, and Mr. W. Lewis Jones, Professor of English Language and Literature, University College, Bangor. The volume will be uniform with the well-known series of College Histories.

A STRONGLY worded protest against the punishment and possible murder of Maxim Gorki for taking the side of the people in the recent Russian crisis has been organized by The Morning Leader, which has secured in a very short time a remarkable list of names in literature, science, and art, headed by those of Swinburne, Meredith, and Hardy.

THE autobiography of Mr. Andrew D. White, formerly United States Ambassador at St. Petersburg and Berlin, is promised this spring by Messrs. Macmillan & Co. It will be issued in two volumes, with numerous photogravure portraits, and will include many sketches of European rulers and statesmen.

THE centenary of Hans Christian Andersen on April 2nd will be celebrated by various publications and festivities in Odense, his place of birth, and Copenhagen. The Danish poet Holger Drachmann has written a short play for the occasion.

SIR HENRY C. BURDETT has promised to preside at the sixty-sixth annual general meeting of the Newsvendors' Benevolent and Provident Institution on Tuesday, February 28th.

THE Duc de la Trémoille is producing the correspondence of Madame des Ursins and of his grandfather Walsh at the Court of Louis XV. and Louis XVI.

THE Paris journal L'Éclair of January 27th publishes some interesting particulars concerning the gains and losses as an author of Henri Beyle (Stendhal). By the publication in 1817 of Beyle's two books, 'Vie de Haydn, Mozart et Métafaste,' and 'Histoire de la Peinture en Italie,' both produced at the author's expense, there was a loss of 3,560 francs. On the six works which he published from 1826 to 1839 he received a grand total of 9,260 fr., so that, after deducting the loss on the first two works, Beyle's earnings from his books amounted to 5,700 fr., which works out at 250 fr. per annum, or 75 centimes per day. Fortunately for him, Beyle was not entirely dependent on his book-writing.

M. MARCEL BOULENGER, says M. Bidou in the Débats of last Tuesday, has been fixing a critical finger on the four maladies of style at the present day. The first is an abuse of the genitive, "de" having nearly banished "par" and "avec" out of existence. The second is the abuse of neologisms, which after all, as the writer says, are necessary for new ideas. The third malady is the monotony of the syntax. It is true, the writer adds, that we no longer know a word of grammar, and this ignorance leads to invertebrate writing, while a reaction against symbolistic vagueness has led to a stupid simplicity. The fourth malady is "la veulerie du récit..... on tartine..... on énumère quand il faudrait montrer." We fancy that across the Channel we are also open to most of these charges. But the English abuse of the noun put for an adjective is worse than that of the French genitive. Neologisms are hideously and ignorantly formed by people without education, and it is clear that the mass of writers are in a position to echo the Pharisaism of Mrs. Squeers, who declared that she was "no grammarian, thank God."

WE note the publication of the following Parliamentary Papers: Report on the Manuscripts of the Earl of Mar and Kellie, preserved at Alloa House, N.B. (2s. 7d.); and Reports from University Colleges, 1904 (11d.).

SCIENCE

The Unveiling of Lhasa. By Edmund Candler. With Illustrations and Map. (Arnold.)

MR. EDMUND CANDLER was the first newspaper correspondent to reach Chumbi in January last year, and he is again the first to bring out a description of the expedition to Tibet from that early period when it was doubtful, to use the language of the Gurkha mess at Gnatong, if there would be "the ghost of a show," down to the entry into Lhasa and the signature of the treaty. For a work of this character there is merit in quick production. The scenes are still fresh in the memory, the interest of the public in the subject has not had time to wane before other distractions and excitements, and the author retains a vivid impression of what he saw and heard. The correspondent's narrative may not be history, but refurbishing may not increase its value in that sense, while the delay the process would entail must greatly diminish its interest. Much of Mr. Candler's story appeared in the daily paper for which he was acting, and, as he states, "the greater part of the book was written on the spot while the impressions of events and scenery were still fresh." Two chapters dealing with the bombardment and relief of Gyantse are written by Mr. Henry Newman, Reuter's correspondent, because Mr. Candler was incapacitated during that part of the campaign by the severe wound he received in the affair of the Hot Springs. By the aid of his colleague Mr. Candler is able to include the small part of the campaign in which his unfortunate wound did not allow him to take part, and thus the reader is provided with a complete narrative where a gap in the story might have proved confusing and irritating.

The first five chapters deal with what may be called preliminary matter, ranging from the causes of the expedition to the transport difficulties, which at one moment seemed as if they would render any advance a physical impossibility. The mind is inclined to picture the Tibetan expedition as having passed exclusively through an elevated region under Arctic conditions. It was the heat in the Sikkim valleys that threatened in the first stage to bring our force to an abrupt halt. With the active co-operation of the Nepal durbar a yak corps was raised in that Himalayan state, and four or five thousand of these beasts were collected on the frontier under Nepalese drivers. The animals, after being decimated by anthrax and rinderpest, were almost exterminated by the heat in Sikkim. Mr. Candler says "no real yak survived the heat of its valleys." Nor were the pack bullocks much more fortunate, and it was only by overworking the few ponies and mules sent in the first place that the advance force in the Chumbi valley could be kept supplied. New means of carrying had then to be organized, and in their difficulty the Indian Government fell back on their own mule transport service. Mr. Candler is the latest to sing the praises of this patient and enduring animal, indifferent to extremes of heat and cold alike. There can be no doubt that on this occasion he extricated the authorities from an exceedingly awkward predicament, and when the author merely records that 2,600 mules reached Lhasa in as good condition as possible he sufficiently emphasizes the contrast with the thousands of yaks and bullocks that had perished in the valleys below. The mules must not, however, monopolize the credit. The Balti and Ladaki coolies may fairly claim their share. In some places (over the Jelap Pass, for instance) they even displaced the mules, being surer-footed, and carried the loads on their backs. They sang at their work even in the highest altitudes, and cheered like schoolboys on reaching the summit of a pass. To these auxiliaries of flesh and blood must be added the ekka, a light cart carrying four hundred pounds of supplies. The difficulties of transport were the real obstacles in the path of the expedition, and Mr. Candler's description of how they were overcome is very vivid and interesting.

The expedition was largely assisted by the loyal co-operation in every way of the Maharaja of Nepal, whose services were recognized at the close of the campaign with the honour of a G.C.S.I., and by the active participation of the Tongsa Penlop, ruler of Bhutan, who accompanied the mission to Lhasa and took a prominent part in the final negotiations. Mr. Candler descants upon the splendid physique and martial qualities of the Bhutanese, but we do not find any mention of the fact that the ruling and military classes in this mountain territory are the descendants of the Red Caps, or old military caste of Lhasa, who were expelled from Tibet in the earlier part of the seventeenth century by the lamas. Mr. Candler, who was himself one of the principal sufferers by the affair at the Hot Springs, describes it without prejudice, and acquits the Tibetans of intentional treachery. His criticism of the collision is probably very near the truth:—

"It is easy to criticise after the event, but it seems to me that the only way to have avoided the lamentable affair would have been to have drawn up more troops round the redan..... But to send two dozen sepoy into that sullen mob to take away their arms was to invite disaster. Given the same circumstances and any mob in the world of men, women or children, civilized or savage, and there would be found at least one rash spirit to explode the mine and set a spark to a general conflagration. It was thought at the time that the lesson would save much future bloodshed. But the Tibetan is so stubborn and convinced of his self-sufficiency that it took many lessons to teach him the disparity between his armed rabble and the resources of the British Raj. In the light of after-events it is clear that we could have made no progress without inflicting terrible punishment. The slaughter at Guru only forestalled the inevitable. We were drawn into the vortex of war by the Tibetans' own folly. There was no hope of their regarding the British as a formidable Power and a force to be reckoned with until we had killed several thousand of their men."

In July an advance to Lhasa was sanctioned, and Mr. Candler, barely recovered from his wound, succeeded in reaching Gyantse two days before the expedition began the final stage of its march. He gives a graphic description of the forcing of the Karola Pass, which occurred a few days later. This formidable position, if properly defended, might have proved impregnable, but the outflanking movement executed by the Gurkhas discouraged the Kham warriors, who evacuated it after a very feeble defence as compared with that offered at Kangma. Mr. Candler pays a well-deserved tribute to the Gurkhas, who have been called of late the Japanese of India, which is worth quoting:—

"There is a saying on the Indian frontier: 'There is a hill, send up a Gurkha.' These sturdy little men are splendid mountaineers, and will climb up the face of a rock while the enemy are rolling down stones on them as coolly as they will rush a wall under heavy fire on the flat. Their arduous climb took three and a half hours, and was a real mountaineering feat. The cave fighting, in which they had three casualties, took place at 19,000 feet, and this is probably the highest elevation at which an action has been fought in history."

After the Karola fight the Tibetan resistance came to an end. The succession of reverses in which they had lost so many heroic but ignorant men had, to use the author's words, "put the fear of God into them." There was an end also to the painful necessity of turning the weapons of modern warfare upon a helpless multitude of fanatical and unreasoning men. Notwithstanding that the road from the Karola Pass to Lhasa bristled with formidable positions, the last shot had been fired, and the lamas thought only of delaying the expedition by negotiation instead of force. But in this direction the lamas found Col. Younghusband as irresistible as their warriors had found General Macdonald's force. Mr. Candler pays the chief of the mission a tribute which may partly compensate for government censure. He writes that Col. Younghusband was equal to every emergency, and that it would have been impossible to find in the British Empire another man with a personality so calculated to impress the Tibetans. He sat through every durbar, a monument of patience and inflexibility, impassive as one of their own Buddhas. And so the expedition, overcoming every obstacle, came into sight of its goal at Lhasa on July 31st. Mr. Candler sums up the situation: "Our journey has not been easy, but we have come in spite of everything."

And when the expedition reached the Sanpu, after all its experiences of rock and ice, glacier and avalanche, it found Arcadia, "not a detached oasis, but a continuous strip of verdure," and, still more astonishing, all the flowers that blossom in English gardens. There were surprises of other kinds. For instance, the lamas who resisted us so stoutly had long known that we were coming, because in a book written centuries ago, and still on sale in the Lhasa bookshops, a sage had predicted that the Europeans would come and conquer the country. Well, the Europeans have come in the person of the English, and all they have done is to fasten Tibet, by a fresh application of gum, to the decrepit political body called, for the sake of politeness, China.

In concluding our notice of Mr. Candler's bright and moving narrative, which seems so full of incident as to create some curiosity as to what his successors will find left to describe, we may place on record his picture of our late antagonist, the Dalai Lama, drawn by the aid of that cheery mortal the Gurkha or Nepalese Resident at Lhasa. The latest news from Mongolia indicates that we have not done with this dignitary, and in that event Mr. Candler's description of him deserves to be remembered:—

"From various sources, which differ surprisingly little, I have a fairly clear picture of the man's face and figure. He is thick set, about five feet nine inches in height, with a heavy square jaw, nose remarkably long and straight for a Tibetan, eyebrows pronounced and turning upwards in a phenomenal manner—probably trained so to make his appearance more forbidding—face pock-marked, general expression resolute and sinister. He goes out very little and is rarely seen by the people.....His face is the index of his character. He is a man of strong personality, impetuous, despotic, and intolerant of advice in State affairs. He is constantly deposing his ministers, and has estranged from himself a large section of the upper classes, both ecclesiastical and official, owing to his wayward and headstrong disposition. As a child he was so precociously acute and resolute that he survived his Regent, and so upset the traditional policy of murder, being the only one out of the last five incarnations to reach his majority. Since he took the government of the country into his own hands he has reduced the Chinese suzerainty to a mere shadow, and, with fatal results to himself, consistently insulted and defied the British. His inclination to a rap-prochement with Russia is not shared by his ministers.....The Nepalese Resident told me a story to illustrate the dulness of the man, for whom he evidently had no reverence. The Maharaja of Nepal had given him a phonograph to present to the Priest-King. The impious toy was introduced to the Holy of Holies, and the Dalai Lama walked round it uneasily as it emitted the strains of English band music and raucously repeated an indelicate Bhutanese song. After sitting a long while in deep thought, he rose and said he could not live with this voice without a soul; it must leave his palace at once. The rejected phonograph found a home with the Chinese Amban."

The Philippine Islands, 1493-1898, now in course of publication by the Arthur H. Clark Company, of Cleveland, Ohio, is a collection of documents designed to illustrate the social, economic, political, and religious conditions subsisting in these islands since their discovery by Magelhães in 1521. Prof. E. G. Brown, of Yale University, in an introduction, points out that the American people are confronted in the Philippines by a race problem imperatively demanding intelligent and unremitting efforts for its mastery, such as can best be gained from a study of history. He eschews all references to recent events, but deals fully with the administration of the islands in the olden times. His desire to do justice to the Spanish rulers is evident, and he does not hesitate to affirm that the treatment of dependent peoples by the Spaniards was far more humane than either the French or the English systems. The Catholic missionaries, three centuries ago, not only christianized the Malays, but also trained them to labour, and the native villagers of that age fared much better than the peasants of contemporary Europe. The conquest, he maintains, was effected by missionaries rather than by warriors; the sway of Spain was benevolent; slavery was discouraged or even prohibited; and if this clerical government produced intellectual apathy, it resulted, at all events, in a condition of internal prosperity. An unbiassed study of the documents now published hardly bears out these eulogistic opinions.

The documents in the first four volumes which are before us have been selected with care; they fully illustrate the various aspects of the subject, and have been conscientiously edited and judiciously annotated by Miss Emma Helen Blair and J. A. Robertson. The editors acknowledge the generous help extended to them by numerous translators, transcribers, and decipherers of old manuscripts, American as well as foreign, lay and clerical. The archives of Spain and Portugal have been visited in search of materials for this work, and many documents printed here see the light for the first time. The arrangement is strictly chronological, and the series opens with the Papal Bull of 1493 which laid down the famous line of demarcation between the possessions of Spain and Portugal. After an account of Magelhães's voyage, as given by Maximilian Transylvanus, and not according to an unpublished manuscript by Pigafetta in the Bibliothèque Nationale, as promised in the prospectus, the editors present us with highly interesting reports on the expeditions of Garcia de Loaisa (1525-6), Alvaro de Saavedra (1527-8), Ruy Lopez de Villalobos (1541-8), and Miguel Lopez de Legazpi and Urdaneta (1559-73), who were the founders of the power of Spain. Then follow letters and reports by missionaries and public officials, royal decrees, ordinances, and warrants in diversified succession. Of special interest just now are the relations between the Spaniards and the Chinese and Japanese. In 1576 the Governor of the Philippines actually advised that an expedition should be sent to China, in order not only to liberate the Chinese from their tyrannous oppressors, but also (and chiefly) to compel them to admit foreigners to their country. Ten years later the Junta of Manila actually proposed that the Spaniards should marry Chinese ladies, who are lauded for their modesty, beauty, and submissiveness, and thus bring about an era of peace, when "all would be united in fraternal love and the faith of Christ." Japan is first mentioned in 1592, when the Emperor Hideyoshi, the conqueror of Corea, sent an embassy calling upon the Spaniards to pay tribute.

The illustrations, and especially the maps, which accompany this sumptuously printed collection of documents are disappointing, and are, moreover, reduced by photography to such an extent as to be illegible. Surely something better than Linschoten's map of South America could have been found to illustrate the voyage of Magelhães through the strait which now bears his name. The collection is to be completed in fifty-five volumes, the last of which is to appear in 1907.

UNDER the title of "Early Western Travels" the same publishing company is issuing a series of annotated reprints of works of permanent historical value, and only procurable at extravagant prices, if at all. Mr. Reuben Gold Thwaites is the editor. The series opens with Weiser's Tour to the Ohio in 1748, and is to end with General Palmer's 'Journal of Travels over the Rocky Mountains,' published in 1847. The famous 'Voyage' of Maximilian, Prince of Wied, will be a reprint of the London translation of 1893, and is to be accompanied by facsimile reproductions of the atlas of eighty-one plates, which was published originally at Coblenz in 1838-41, and not at Paris, as the editor appears to believe. On the other hand, such well-known works as the 'Travels of Captains Lewis and Clarke,' Schoolcraft's 'Sources of the Mississippi,' Washington Irving's 'Astoria,' Fremont's 'Rocky Mountains,' &c., have not been admitted. Altogether, this important series of republications will fill thirty-one volumes, and is to be completed in the course of 1906. It ought to find a place in every geographical or historical library not fortunate enough to possess the original editions.

ASTRONOMICAL BOOKS.

Astronomical Discovery. By Herbert Hall Turner. (Arnold.)—In this work astronomical discovery is treated of in such a way as to render it of great interest to general readers as well as to professed astronomers. It is founded on a course of lectures delivered by the author at the University of Chicago whilst travelling through a large part of the United States last summer, and visiting the magnificent observatories which have been founded there in recent years, the largest of those being the Yerkes, which belongs to the Chicago University, though it is eighty miles distant, near Lake Geneva, in the State of Wisconsin.

The lectures were delivered in August, at the invitation of Prof. Harper, President of the University. They were six in number, and the chapters of the work before us are also six, corresponding approximately to the lectures. It is very interesting by their aid to trace the way in which astronomical, like other scientific, discoveries have been made—some stumbled upon, as it were, almost fortuitously, others sagaciously sought after, and others again brought to light by a combination of chance and intelligent research. Naturally Herschel's discovery of Uranus stands first, and in the same chapter that of Eros, which, though not by any means the largest of the small planets, approaches the sun much nearer than any other, and is, therefore, of unexpected utility in determining the distance of the luminous centre of the system, for which it is, on several accounts, much better adapted than transits of Venus, and would be even if the latter were much more frequent than they are. The memorable circumstances relating to the discovery of the most distant known planet, Neptune, in 1846 (the place of which in the heavens was indicated both by an English and a French astronomer in consequence of the effects produced by its attraction on the motion of Uranus), before it was actually seen, are narrated in the second chapter. The third deals with the discoveries of the observation of light and the nutation of the earth's axis made by Bradley, the third Astronomer Royal, about the time of the death of Newton. In the fourth chapter Prof. Turner treats chiefly of the recent discoveries of variable stars, referring particularly to that of Nova Persei (one of the most remarkable of these) by Dr. Anderson, of Edinburgh, in the month of February, 1901, and modestly alluding to the circumstances which led to his own detection more recently of a less conspicuous variable star in the constellation Gemini. The interesting way in which the persevering records of sun-spots by Schwabe, of Dessau (which began nearly eighty years ago), resulted in the discovery of an eleven-year period in these phenomena, forms the subject of the fifth chapter; whilst the sixth and last fittingly closes the volume with an account of the discovery (chiefly due to the American astronomer Mr. S. C. Chandler) that the earth's axis is subject to small periodical variations of its position, leading to variations in the observed latitudes of places. This illustrates in a most striking manner the minute accuracy of modern observations.

The typography of this admirable work is excellent; there are no fewer than fifteen plates (five of which are portraits, one giving those of all the Astronomers Royal), and there is a careful index.

The Mathematical Theory of Eclipses. By Roberdeau Buchanan. (J. B. Lippincott Company.)—The present writer was once observing a partial eclipse of the sun with a portable telescope in a garden. Two domestics stood contemplating the proceedings at some distance; and, during an interruption caused by passing clouds, one of them approached, and said: "I can't think how they [meaning astronomers] can know so long before that an eclipse is coming." The answer was: "Perhaps if you had known the amount of long-continued labours they had previously gone through, you would not be so much surprised." The labours alluded to were those by which the theory of gravitation was established, and the subsequent improvements in the knowledge of the elements of the system by which the lunar, solar, and planetary tables were formed, and brought at last to the accuracy on which modern predictions are based. But even after these tables are formed, the work to be gone through in their application to the determination of the circumstances, duration, and locality of eclipses (now always prepared three or four years beforehand) is very considerable. For many years past Mr. Buchanan has had the care of these matters for the 'American Nautical Almanac,' which is still connected, as ours formerly was, with the National Observatory, from which its data are chiefly derived. The peculiarity of his book consists in the graphical description which he gives of the way whereby the shadows of the moon and earth cause obscurations on the earth or moon, the former of which can only be total over a zone not exceeding 160 miles in diameter, whilst the latter frequently involve the whole moon for upwards of an hour. The entire theory is here, in fact, clearly explained, part by part, geometrically, and, being thus presented to the eye, will be readily understood. It is well known (or should be) that eclipses usually repeat themselves at the end of a period of eighteen years and about eleven days. Much may be learnt, as Mr. Buchanan remarks, by comparing the successive eclipses of one series.

Thus the eclipse which will be total in Spain on the 30th of next August was total over parts of Sweden and Norway on the 28th of July, 1851, and in other localities on the 7th of August, 1869, and the 19th of that month in 1887, on which last occasion so much disappointment was suffered owing to the unfavourable state of the weather in the greatest part of the line of totality. Mr. Buchanan applies his method of explanation to occultations of fixed stars by the moon, and transits of Mercury and Venus over the sun's disc, as well as to eclipses of the sun and moon. Naturally a large number of plates and diagrams are requisite.

RESEARCH NOTES.

THE supreme importance in biology of the glue-like substances or colloids has just been discussed by M. G. Stodel, of the Sorbonne, in two admirably clear and concise articles. All non-crystallizable solutions consist of extremely small granules held in suspension by the containing liquid, which, on the passage through the solution of an electric current, become attracted, some to the cathode and the rest to the anode. Hence, as before stated in this column (see The Athenæum for March 29th, 1904), all colloids may be divided into positive and negative, the sign being always opposite to that of the pole to which they are attracted. They can be further cross-divided into those which absorb water—one of the foremost in this respect being silica or quartz—are with difficulty precipitated from the solution, and are therefore called stable colloids, and the unstable colloids, which do not absorb water, and are easily precipitable, of which the colloidal gold, platinum, and the like, which we are just learning to make, are the type. This enables us, says M. Stodel, to precipitate either class of colloids at will. As the behaviour of the granules of the unstable colloids shows that they bear either a positive or a negative charge, it is sufficient to employ an electrolyte containing free ions of the opposite sign. The stable colloids, on the other hand, can best be precipitated by quantities of neutral salts, which act by osmotic tension, the same being increased in proportion to their concentration. It also follows that all colloids whose granules bear an electric charge can enter into combination with those bearing the opposite sign; but the compounds thus formed are not chemical compounds in the sense of containing a fixed proportion of molecules on each side. The proportion of their constituents depends, on the contrary, on the greater or less concentration of the reagents employed.

Armed with these facts, which are in great measure due to the joint researches of M. Victor Henri and M. André Mayer, M. Stodel finds himself able to give a guess at the structure and life-history of the mysterious protoplasm which is the lowest expression or fundamental substance of all living matter. Protoplasm itself contains colloids, the granules of which are endowed with amoeboid movements strongly resembling the "Brownian" or automatic and continuous shiftings observed in the granules of colloidal metals. But each cell or sac of protoplasm is divided not only from other cells but also from its own nucleus by a membrane which is itself composed of colloids, and the permeability of these membranes has hitherto been a matter of dispute. While it is generally admitted, since the observations of Naegeli in 1855, that they are permeable, some have thought that they only give passage to certain substances, such as water, and that their permeability was the same at all times. But now it is seen that this is not so. The permeability is in some cases an osmotic phenomenon, and in others—which is perhaps nearly the same thing—an electrical, and depends in all upon the condition of the electrolyte in which both cells and nuclei are bathed. Hence is explained the fact announced by Dr. Loeb, of Chicago, that certain animal cells, such as muscular and cardiac ones, as also the eggs of sea-urchins and other creatures, die at once if plunged into a concentrated solution of common salt, but absolutely increase in vitality if there be present a tiny quantity of metallic salts of a certain valency.

The biological interest of colloids is not, however, thereby exhausted. M. Victor Henri has shown that the action of ferments, or bodies which bring about chemical changes without themselves undergoing any apparent alteration, can be regarded as but one instance of the combinations into which the granules of colloids can enter, and conversions like that of starch into sugar seem to coincide with the fact that the reagent producing them is always a stable colloid. But this is nothing compared with the phenomena attending the death of protoplasm, which show that at the moment of death the electric resistance of the tissues undergoes a marked change. If a non-colloidal solution be heated gradually, the curve of its conductivity rises regularly and in the same ratio. With the living tissues of warm-blooded animals, however, the curve of conductivity rises regularly up to 95° F., then remains stationary until 104° is reached, at which point the behaviour of a non-colloidal solution is resumed. Hence, says M. Stodel, we are forced to conclude that there is taking place within the protoplasm of the living cell a transformation of the colloids composing it which does not occur with other solutions. If this is accepted, we are not far off the explanation of life itself, and those who would have it to be something brought from the outside, and essentially different from the cells which it animates, are answered.

The electrical resistance of the human body as a whole is also beginning to receive attention, with some unexpected results. Herr E. K. Müller, in a paper contributed by him to a Swiss technical journal, tells us, as the outcome of some careful experiments made by him, that it is by no means uniform with all individuals, although it is for the most part somewhere near to 3,000 ohms. So wide are the variations that he is led to believe that every person has a normal resistance peculiar to himself or herself. But apart from this, it varies from moment to moment in response to every emotion from within, and nearly every sensation coming from the outside world. By carefully insulating his subjects, Herr Müller found that the entrance of a stranger into the room where the experiments were conducted caused an instant variation, as did the exertion of speaking, the falling of a ray of light upon the eye, the attempt to listen, or the perception of a powerful smell. He thinks, with apparent truth, that this hitherto unsuspected sensitiveness of the body accounts in great part for the images seen in dreams. He finds, too, that the resistance is very low with whole classes, such as persons accounted "nervous," and smokers and drinkers. With the hypnotized there is a wonderful tranquillity, or invariability of the resistance, so long as the patient is undisturbed, coupled with an increased sensitiveness to external sights and sounds.

Sir James Dewar's lecture on 'Low-Temperature Phenomena,' at the Royal Institution last week, was one of the most successful that he has delivered for some time. The very numerous experiments were well thought out and went without a hitch. The fact which they illustrated was that the faculty possessed by charcoal for absorbing, or, as chemists say, occluding gases is largely increased by subjecting it to abnormal cold. The lecturer succeeded in showing that by the use of liquid hydrogen not only hydrogen itself, but even the stubborn helium is absorbed in large quantities. The lowest temperature produced was 23° absolute, or - 250 Centigrade.

While helium behaves thus at abnormally low temperatures, MM. A. Saquerod and L. Perrot have shown in a communication to the Société de Physique of Geneva that at about 1,160° (Centigrade) it diffuses through silica with great ease, the rapidity of the diffusion being apparently proportional to the pressure. When once established, the diffusion persists, and does not disappear until 220° C. is reached. It might throw some additional light on the source of helium if we knew that silica always occurs in the rocks near which are found springs containing traces of helium, as at Bath and elsewhere. That most of, if not all, the helium present on the earth has once been radium appears likely enough since Sir William Ramsay discovered the changes which take place in the emanation of the last-named element. Mr. Soddy's theory that uranium is ultimately the parent element of the radio-active metals would, if accepted, carry the transmutation of elements one stage further back, but has hitherto been discredited by his own remark that the radio-active emanation from uranium is at once too slight and too irregular to support such a view. After eight months' observation of a kilogram of uranium nitrate solution, he came to the conclusion that the emanation was only one ten-thousandth part of what he expected. He now writes to a contemporary that there was an error in the experiment, and that he has obtained from the solution about one five-hundredth part of the radium that his theory requires. It is nothing against this that M. Danne has communicated to the Académie des Sciences his discovery of a radio-active mineral at Issy l'Évêque which contains no trace of uranium. For he mentions in his communication that his new mineral occurs near a large deposit of uranium ores, and the intervening strata show signs of helium.

The recently announced publication of Dr. Gustave le Bon's theories on the evolution of matter will be looked forward to with much pleasurable expectation by all English physicists.

F. L.

SOCIETIES.

BRITISH ACADEMY.—Jan. 25.—Lord Reay, President, in the chair.—A special meeting was held in commemoration of the tercentenary of 'Don Quixote.' Mr. James Fitzmaurice-Kelly, Corresponding Member of the Royal Spanish Academy, delivered an address on 'Cervantes in England.' The paper traced the influence of appreciation of the book in this country from the first decade of the seventeenth century, and illustrated how, from the beginning, England had been foremost in paying tribute to the masterpiece of Spanish literature.—Mr. Edmund Gosse, Mr. Maurice Hewlett, Sir Theodore Martin, Mr. Cunningham Graham, Mr. Bryce, and Sir R. C. Jebb took part in the discussion.—An interesting feature of the meeting was the reading of a message, rendered into English, which had been received by the Academy from Señor Marcelino Menéndez y Pelayo, the eminent Spanish scholar, expressing the gratification felt by the Spanish Academy, and Spain generally, in the British Academy's commemoration.—Mr. Fitzmaurice-Kelly's address, to which we refer elsewhere to-day, can now be obtained by Mr. Frowde, who has been appointed publisher to the Academy.

GEOLOGICAL.—Jan. 18.—Dr. J. E. Marr, President, in the chair.—Mr. W. G. Fearnside, in exhibiting a series of Llandovery-Taraunon graptolites from Llanystumdwy, near Criccieth (Caernarvonshire), remarked that the graptolites were beautifully preserved in pyrites, and were in full relief. They were from shales of the Birkhill or Stockdale-Shale type. This was the first record of Llandovery-Taraunon rocks in the Lleyn Peninsula since the time of Salter's catalogue, which recorded Llandovery fossils of May-Hill type from the Hollies Farm, Pwllheli.—Mr. C. F. Herbert Smith, in exhibiting a hand-refractometer, remarked that he had endeavoured to produce a refractometer which should be portable, and at the same time should furnish results of sufficient accuracy for the practical requirements of the mineralogist and the petrologist. It had been made by Mr. J. H. Steward.—The communication read was 'On the Geology of Arenig Fawr and Moel Llynant,' by Mr. W. G. Fearnside.

SOCIETY OF ANTIQUARIES.—Jan. 26.—Lord Avebury, President, in the chair.—Mr. Reginald Smith read a paper on the iron currency of the ancient Britons. According to one reading, a well-known passage in Caesar's 'Commentaries' refers to the native use of iron bars (talce) as well as of bronze and gold coins at the time of his invasion, and it has hitherto been supposed that either he was misinformed, or that every currency-bar had been entirely destroyed by rust. There are, however, in the British Museum and elsewhere a number of iron ingots which have always been regarded as unforged swords, but they contain too much metal for a sword of the first century B.C., and have been found together in large quantities, arranged in a manner suggesting a hoard of treasure, often in the centre of British earthworks. Examples are recorded from the counties of Hants, Wilts, Somerset, Gloucester, and Worcester, and are of three denominations, in the proportion by weight of 1, 2, 4. At Spettisbury Fort, Dorset, two of the smallest size were found with many double the weight; and in the Thames at Maidenhead Bridge seven or eight of the largest size were found in a bundle. A bronze weight of 4,770 grains, marked with the Roman numeral I, was recently found in an Early British hoard in Glamorgan; and with a trifling allowance for loss by oxidation, this agrees well enough with the smallest iron bars, and almost exactly with an isolated basalt weight, similarly marked, at Mayence. These two weights may represent a half-mina of the Attic commercial standard, the use of which was for centuries widespread in the Mediterranean and Western Europe. Further discoveries may throw more light on the commercial relations of the Britons before the last Belgic invasion, which drove the native population into the interior, away from the south-eastern maritime district; but it is meanwhile permissible to regard these bars as an exclusively British currency, and to settle once for all the true reading of Caesar's statement.—Four specimens of the medium iron bars from Dorset were exhibited by Mr. Read, and Prof. Gowland reported on his analysis of the metal. In the 2,000 years at least which had elapsed since its deposit, the specimen examined had undergone a structural change, and had become crystalline, resembling meteoric iron. Slides of the micro-sections were shown and explained, and it was surmised that the change had been accelerated by the large proportion of phosphorus in the metal. Nickel was also present in some quantity, and the ore seemed to have been derived from bogs, not from the iron-fields of the Sussex Weald or the Forest of Dean. An interesting discussion followed.

LINNEAN.—Jan. 19.—Prof. W. A. Herdman, President, in the chair.—Mrs. C. Crisp, Mrs. C. P. Sladen, Miss E. A. Willmott, Miss E. L. Turner, Mrs. M. A. Stebbing, Miss S. M. Silver, Mrs. L. J. Velej, Miss M. Benson, Miss A. Lorrain Smith, Miss G. Lister, and Miss E. Sargant were admitted Fellows.—Mr. E. W. B. Holt and Miss E. F. Noel were elected Fellows.—The Rev. T. R. R. Stebbing exhibited and explained specimens of Crustacea in various ways remarkable for structure, habits, habitat, or colouring, collected by Dr. Gilchrist (South Africa), Mr. W. R. Forrest (West Indies), Dr. C. Hose (Borneo), Mr. C. J. Saunders (Singapore), Mr. P. W. Bassett-Smith (Diego Garcia), Mr. W. Boyd, Mr. W. Bruce, Mr. E. Mello Saunders (Northern and Arctic localities), and Mr. G. Eddison (Nottinghamshire). The specimens included many representative crabs, some with tall sponges growing on their backs, some equipped for vigorous motion; a "calling crab" with one arm abnormally large; an old truculent-looking land-crab; a new stone-crab from the South Atlantic; a West Indian "hermit" of exceptional size; a "mother-lobster" with its gastric apparatus inverted; several crawfishes; the little red Cape lobster; crayfishes; a new African river-prawn of a beautiful blue colour; the gigantic South American prawn, Palaeomon jamaicensis; Squillidae, Isopods, and Amphipods, with a thread-like Caprellid from Kerguelen among them. The series was intended to illustrate the wonderful diversity of forms developed in the Malacostraca, all traceable, by modifications easily intelligible, to a very simple original. Various crustacean parasites of northern and southern whales were also exhibited, and a curious mimetic parasite from the sunfish. Mr. Stebbing made an appeal for information in regard to the distribution of the river crayfish in the Midland and Northern counties of England.—A discussion followed, in which the Rev. J. Gerard, Mr. H. J. Elwes, the Treasurer, the President, and Mr. V. I. Chamberlain took part.—Dr. Augustine Henry gave a discourse on 'Botanical Collecting.' The actual methods were briefly alluded to, stress being laid on truthful labelling of the specimens at the moment of collection, instead of months afterwards, when identical numbers were often given to plants of different provenance. With the aid of nearly fifty lantern-slides, he showed his travels in China, demonstrating that the popular idea of that country as one vast rice-field was fallacious, as it mainly consisted of vast mountain ranges cut up by deep valleys.—Prof. S. H. Vines, Mr. H. J. Elwes, and Dr. Tempest Anderson (a visitor) contributed some remarks.—Dr. W. G. Ridewood presented a paper on 'The Cranial Osteology of the Fishes of the Families Osteoglossidae, Pantodontidae, and Phractolemidae,' being a fourth instalment of the results of an extensive investigation upon the skull of the lower Teleostean fishes begun in 1896. Descriptions were given of the skulls of Osteoglossum, Heterotis, Arapaima, Pantodon, and Phractolemus.

MICROSCOPICAL.—Jan. 18.—Annual Meeting.—Dr. Dukinfield H. Scott, President, in the chair.—The Chairman said that amongst the deaths that would be referred to that evening there was one of recent occurrence which the Fellows would hear of with very painful interest, that of Prof. Abbe, of Jena, who had been an Honorary Fellow of the Society since 1878. There was perhaps no one whose loss would be more felt by a society such as their own, for Prof. Abbe's name was familiar to every one acquainted with the microscope, and even those who were not able to follow the details of his work could not fail to recognize the remarkable services which he had rendered to optical science.—The Secretary then read the Annual Report, and the Treasurer read his annual statement of accounts and the balance sheet.—It was announced that the President had been re-elected, and that all the Fellows proposed for the Council had been elected.—The chair having been taken by Dr. Woodward, the President delivered his annual address, entitled 'What were the Carboniferous Ferns?' At the commencement of his remarks the President referred to the recent death of Prof. B. Renault, the illustrious paleo-botanist who was elected an Honorary Fellow of the Society in June last. The address was illustrated by a large number of lantern-slides and actual sections of fossils from the coal measures shown on the screen; and attention was called to a number of specimens lent by Prof. F. W. Oliver, and to beautiful models, on a very enlarged scale, exhibited by Mr. Smedley.

INSTITUTION OF CIVIL ENGINEERS.—Jan. 31.—Sir Guilford L. Molesworth, President, in the chair.—The paper read was 'Floating Docks,' by Mr. Lionel E. Clark.

PHYSICAL.—Jan. 27.—Dr. R. T. Glazebrook, President, in the chair.—A paper on 'The Action of a Magnetic Field on the Discharge through a Gas' was read by Dr. R. S. Willows, who also read one on 'The Action of Radium on the Electric Spark,' by himself and Mr. J. Peck.—A paper on 'The Slow Stretch in India-rubber, Glass, and Metal Wires subjected to a Constant Pull' was read by Mr. P. Phillips.—A paper entitled 'Determination of Young's Modulus (Adiabatic) for Glass,' by Mr. Chichester A. Bell, with an appendix by Dr. C. Chree, was read by the latter.—A paper by Dr. Boris Weinberg on 'Some Methods for studying the Viscosity of Solids' was taken as read.

CHALLENGER.—Jan. 25.—Sir John Murray in the chair.—Mr. T. V. Hodgson was elected a Fellow.—Mr. E. W. L. Holt exhibited and made remarks on some rare and interesting deep-water fish and Crustacea from West Ireland.—Dr. R. N. Wolfenden exhibited and made remarks on some Copepoda from the Gauss (German Antarctic) Expedition. Their large size, up to 10 mm., was remarkable, as also the fact that of forty-two species from the Gauss and Belgica, five were common to sub-polar seas, and continuous by way of the meso-plankton.—The Chairman spoke on 'The Relation of Oceanography to other Sciences.' He pointed out that recent expeditions had made only inconsiderable alterations in the contour-lines of the sea-bottom published in the Challenger Reports, and was of opinion that no great changes were likely to be made by the soundings of future expeditions. He expressed his belief that the great ocean basins had been practically unaltered through geological time, but that the continents (including a zone not more than 200 miles seaward of their present outline) had frequently altered their levels, supporting this belief by the fact that all known sedimentary rocks are of "terrigenous" character, to the exclusion of deep-sea material. The meteorology of mid-ocean, where the diurnal temperature range of the water is about 2° F., was contrasted with the meteorology over land-masses, where absorption and radiation are high, and the diurnal atmospheric range may amount to 80° F. As an example of the far-reaching effects of temperature, the speaker cited the range of animal variation where hot and cold currents are at war, amounting in some cases to over 40° F.; in such regions the animal death-rate is very high, and the dead organisms decomposing on the bottom start the formation of glauconite, a well-known constituent of sedimentary rocks. As another result of temperature, it has been estimated that a tropical copepod lives twenty-four times as fast as an Arctic copepod in the same period of time. This may explain the predominance of specimens and paucity of species in the Arctic as compared with the tropical fauna. In connexion with chemistry, the speaker pointed out the gradual transference of lime from the poles to the tropics by organic agency; and in connexion with physiology, the possible relation between the serous and similar fluids of existing animals, and the constitution of the primeval sea in which life first began upon our earth.

MEETINGS NEXT WEEK.

- MON. Royal Academy, 4.—Lecture by Prof. A. Gilbert. London Institution, 5.—'The Wallace Collection,' Mr. M. H. Spielmann.
- TUES. Society of Engineers, 7½.—President's Address. Aristotelian, 8.—Lecture by Prof. W. R. B. Gibson. Society of Arts, 8.—'Reservoir, Stylographic, and Fountain Pens,' Lecture III., Mr. J. P. Maginnis. (Cantor Lectures.) Royal Institution, 5.—'The Structure and Life of Animals,' Lecture IV., Prof. L. C. Miall.
- WED. Society of Arts, 8.—'Time Development in Photography and Modern Mechanical Methods of Carrying It Out,' Mr. R. Child Bayley.
- THURS. Royal Academy, 4.—Lecture by Prof. A. Gilbert. Royal, 4½.
- FRI. Institution of Civil Engineers, 8.—'Reconstruction of the Santa Lucia River Bridge, Uruguay,' Mr. P. J. Risdon. (Students' Meeting.) Physical, 8.—Annual Meeting; 'Radiation Pressure,' Prof. J. H. Poynting.
- SAT. Royal Institution, 9.—'The Art of the Ionian Greeks,' Dr. C. Smith. Royal Institution, 6.—'The Bohemian School of Music,' Lecture II., Sir A. Mackenzie.

Science Gossip.

THERE are some interesting details from India about the geographical results of the West Tibet expedition. It is already perceived that the two survey officers, Capts. Ryder and Wood, R.E., will have an exceptionally interesting collection of facts upon which to base their report. Among other items may be mentioned the crossing of the Miriam-Là Pass, 16,600 feet, which marks the watershed between the Sanpu and the Sulej. A new, or rather an unknown lake, which is called Rakas Tal, was discovered between it and the Mansarowar lake. The principal work was done at the great lake just named. The main conclusion arrived at was that the Sulej does not rise in it, as has been supposed, and that its source must be placed considerably to the westward. Gartok itself appears to have been disappointing, as only a few dozen people were found there in winter quarters. Finally, the expedition regained India by the Ayi-Là Pass at an altitude of 18,400 ft.

A VERY large spot has been visible on the southern hemisphere of the sun during the present week, and is now apparently below the centre of the disc.

M. FAYET, of the Paris Observatory, has calculated elliptic elements for Borrelly's comet (e, 1904), by which it would appear that its period is even shorter than that of Encke's. As the perihelion passage took place on the 16th ult., the permanent designation will probably be comet II., 1905, Encke's at the recent return reckoning as comet I., 1905.

THREE new small planets have been photographed at the Königstuhl Observatory, Heidelberg: two by Prof. Max Wolf and Dr. Götz on the 14th ult., and one by Prof. Wolf on the 22nd. The last was the object which, as was stated in our 'Science Gossip' last week, was thought to be probably identical with that discovered by Prof. Perrine at the Lick Observatory, and supposed to be a sixth distant satellite of Jupiter. Information has, however, since been received of a later observation (on the 18th ult.) of the latter, which proves that it is not identical with the small planet in question, but is a veritable satellite. It was first noticed in December, though the discovery was not announced until the 4th ult.

A NEW variable star has been detected in the constellation Cassiopeia by Herr A. Tass, of the O-Gyalla Observatory, Hungary. A gradual change of more than a magnitude was noted in the month of December. The observations were interrupted after the 20th, on account of the necessity of sending the lamp of the photometer to Budapest for repair, but Herr Tass hopes the star will be observed as soon as possible in other places, as it is probably a short-period variable. It will be reckoned as var. 190, 1904, Cassiopeia.

WE have received the eleventh number of vol. xxxiii. of the Memorie della Società degli Spettroscopisti Italiani. It contains a table by Signor Bemporad of the amounts of atmospheric absorption at different altitudes as resulting from observations made at the Catania Astrophysical Observatory; elements with ephemerides, by Dr. Bianchi, of the small planets Venetia (No. 487) and Brixia (No. 521); and an account of observations obtained at Pavia of the Perseid meteors of last August.

FINE ARTS

The Oresteia of Aeschylus. Edited by Robert Proctor. (Chiswick Press.)

THE publication of this magnificent piece of printing will serve to remind those interested in Greek studies that among the most promising of the directions in which Robert Proctor's activity was turned was the improvement of Greek typography. His monograph on 'The Printing of Greek in the Fifteenth Century' gave evidence not only of that minute study of the relationship between early founts of type which we had grown to expect from his vigilant eye, but also of a grasp of the principles of design by which these creations are to be judged, of an exceptional character. A succeeding paper, tracing the origin and history of the Eton Chrysostom types, just published, carries on the sadly unsatisfactory story to the end of the sixteenth century.

The problems which presented themselves to the first designers of Greek type were much more complicated than those which faced the printers of Latin. Fine Latin manuscripts of the time were based on the book-hand of the twelfth century; the letters were discrete, even formed by two or more strokes of the pen, and so at the invention of printing the first type designers were under no temptation to imitate an effect of continuity which the public did not demand, and the few contractions in use could be treated as alternative forms of letters. Greek writing was not, however, in so happy a condition. The demand for Greek manuscripts was active, and had produced a large number of scribes. Two main schools existed: one based on twelfth-century models, writing chiefly for liturgical purposes, using vellum, and therefore discrete in tendency; the other modern, using paper, a running hand, filled with complex abbreviations.

Neither of them was well adapted as a model for type, and the practical difficulties were greatly increased by the breathings and accents. A Greek alpha, for example, may occur in twelve different combinations without counting the iota subscriptum. Unfortunately, the first Greek printers fell into the error of striving after the effect of continuity, sometimes by a system of ligatures which brought up the number of "sorts"—different kinds of type necessary to make up the complete alphabet—to over twelve hundred, sometimes by a system of cutting the type as it was being set up.

This worse than Chinese complexity was obviously unfit for printing on any large scale, and printers soon gave up the attempt to reproduce the continuity of a manuscript. The further question of the accents and breathings was dealt with on four different lines. In the simplest the accents were left out altogether; in the second the accents were cast on the letter, usually two at a time, the superfluous one being cut off before the type was used, though words like ἡριόχως are not uncommon with certain printers, the compositor having forgotten to destroy the superfluous accents, &c. In a third the letters and the accents were cast as separate types, which were combined in setting the page very much as modern music is; and in a fourth, separate punches were cut for letters and accents, but were combined to form matrices for the type.

With Aldus a new era in Greek printing began. His sound commercial instincts led him to bid for popularity with a type modelled on the current modern hand. The characteristics of his types are, as Proctor describes them,

"an absence of dignity, a restlessness expressed in the want of restraint in the voluminous curves, endless variety in the form and size of the letters, and an incredible complexity of abbreviation."

In the Gaza of December, 1495, for instance, words like παρατατικός, παρακειμένος, κεφάλαιον, are represented by a single intricate and unmeaning convolution. Its resemblance to the ordinary script of the day—involved and contracted to a degree, but not without merit for the free and flowing lines which made it unsuited for the rigidity of type—won an immediate victory for the Aldine type, and drove all the older forms out of the market. After Aldus the types which influenced the printing of Greek most were those cut by Claude Garamond (based on Aldine methods) and used by the Estiennes. The type of Sir Henry Savile's Eton Chrysostom of 1610-13, the "greatest monument of Greek printing in England," is a derivative of these, and the "Fell" type at Oxford is a Dutch variation.

Modern Greek types in England are based on the Baskerville, slightly modified by Porson in the direction of legibility and simplicity; but the legend of a type cut from his handwriting is apparently apocryphal. The continental types in ordinary use owe their form largely to Didot, and differ for the worse from ours in evenness and legibility. A very interesting uncial type was designed in 1827 by an amateur, Julian Hibbert, who published in it a small edition of the Orphic hymns and Plutarch 'De Superstitione.' He drew the type from the inscriptions in the British Museum with some aid from the facsimiles in Montfaucon. It was entirely an experiment and an unsuccessful one. Of modern types two only are of great importance: that of Messrs. Decker, of Berlin, which English readers may be familiar with in H. T. Wharton's 'Sappho,' and Mr. Selwyn Image's, which loses unfortunately much of its effect by its smallness of scale.

In designing his new type, therefore, Mr. Proctor had a clear field before him, and he went back unerringly to the best models. In his monograph he had already called attention to the Alcalá type of 1514:—

"To Spain belongs the honour of having produced as her first Greek type what is undoubtedly the finest Greek fount ever cut, and the only one of which it can be affirmed with certainty that it is based on the writing of a particular manuscript. It was designed for use in the New Testament of the Polyglott Bible of Cardinal Ximenez, and appeared in its earliest state (no breathings and only acute accent) in the text of that volume,.....dated 10 January, 1514.....The type was cut on the model of the writing in the 'archetypa tantae vetustatis, ut fidem eis abrogare nefas videatur,' sent to Cardinal Ximenez by Leo X. from the Vatican library."

This type Mr. Proctor took as the basis of his own, as far as regards the lower case, or small letters; but as it had no capitals except a II, he designed the others himself. The letters are a little deeper than his model, but as they are cast on a much larger body, the accents being on the type instead of being inserted ("kerned"), more white space is left between the lines, and the readableness of the type has been correspondingly increased. The capitals, seen in bulk, are especially fine, the iota being perhaps the only one to which exception could be taken owing to its slanting serif. As they are printed in red in the text at the head of each fresh speech and in the shoulder notes, they enliven and decorate the page with the brilliancy of their colour. The names of Messrs. Walker, Cockerell, and Pollard, who are responsible for the publication, are a sufficient guarantee that the printing is worthy of Mr. Proctor's memory and their reputation.

As regards the text of the three tragedies, it may be briefly described as that of the Oxford edition with the manuscript readings restored as far as possible. The proofs of the greater part of the work, after Mr. Proctor's death, were read by his colleague Dr. Kenyon. Its value as the record of the judgment of a widely read and independent scholar is great, and as such it will appeal to many a student of the poet; to Mr. Proctor's friends it is a most appropriate memorial as the permanent embodiment of a wish which lay very near his heart to do for Greek type something of the work which was done by Morris for Roman and Gothic; but it is as a successful attempt to clothe the highest achievement of Greek tragedy—one of the half-dozen great books of the world—in a noble and worthy form, a form for the first time approaching in dignified beauty the matter it enshrines, that we chiefly welcome this book. It will, we hope, mark an epoch in the history of Greek printing in England.

Borough Seals of the Gothic Period. By Gale Pedrick. (Dent.)—On a book such as this it is difficult to pronounce a decisive verdict, for the good and the bad are curiously blended. In the first place, however, it will be well to put on record its undoubted merits. The fifty plates of seals, giving double that number of examples, are exceptionally good specimens of careful photographic illustrations. They are well worthy of the undeniable beauty, artistic excellence, and historical interest that pertain to the town seals of England from the thirteenth to the fifteenth centuries. Most of these reproductions, taken from casts prepared by Mr. Ready, of the British Museum, come out, in view of their age, with almost startling clearness.

The claim of the work is that the selection of seals illustrated and described in these pages was made solely on account of artistic value, in order that the very best and finest examples might be given, and that this was not done until after "a careful and exhaustive examination" of all the borough seals or impressions now extant. Most of the best seals, such as the well-known instances of Rochester, Canterbury, and Winchelsea, are certainly included; but in several respects Mr. Pedrick's selection seems at fault. For instance, a small and insignificant seal of the official of the Provost's Court of Beverley—surely ecclesiastical and not civil—appears, and also equally poor ones of Salisbury and Boston. Their places might easily have been taken by far superior examples of English seal-cutting. The seals of Gloucester are unusually varied and interesting; it is difficult to understand on what grounds Mr. Pedrick has selected as the only one for illustration a small and comparatively insignificant one pertaining to the city bailiffs.

The technical descriptions of the seals are for the most part carefully done and accurate, and follow those given by Dr. de Gray Birch in the Museum Catalogue of Seals, which is duly acknowledged in the preface. There is an apparent mistake, however, in the account of the fine example of the fifteenth-century communal seal of Wallingford, where an equestrian royal figure is passing a ford. The initial letter below the horse's head is said by Mr. Hope to be v, not h; and it is amusing to find that Mr. Pedrick thinks that the king, who bears a quartered shield of France (modern) and England, may be intended for Edward the Confessor. Apparently Mr. Pedrick has no knowledge of the two excellent volumes on 'Corporation Plate and Insignia,' by Messrs. Hope and Jewitt, issued in 1895; but almost every seal given in these pages is carefully described in that work, whilst many of them, as well as others not here named, are accurately engraved.

The introduction has a variety of good and useful remarks on municipal seals, treating respectively of architectural composition, of the diversity of ships depicted on those of seaports, and of ecclesiastical and heraldic devices. It might with advantage have been pointed out that many of the seals supposed to bear castles carry in reality conventional representations of the chief gate or entrance of the walled town. Two successive corporate seals of Northampton, the one c. 1200 and the other c. 1300, which might with advantage have been included in this work, undoubtedly illustrate the town gateway before and after the enlargement of its walled area. More, too, might well have been said of the few municipal seals which departed from the usual circular form and adopted the pointed oval shape, generally associated with ecclesiastical devices. A particular reason for this can generally be found. The whole subject of the great influence of the Church in special boroughs comes out remarkably in the designs as well as the shapes of certain seals. There was, for instance, no town in the whole kingdom more thoroughly under the control of a great ecclesiastic than the borough of Reading. Down to the Dissolution of the Monasteries the Abbot of Reading chose the mayor out of three names submitted to him by the commonalty. The thirteenth-century seal is a pointed oval, bearing the remarkable device of the head of Edward, King and Martyr, in the centre of four other heads. This is well illustrated by Mr. Pedrick, but not a word is said as to the remarkable subjugation of the town to the abbey, nor is the exceptional device in any way discussed. The town of Leominster was dominated by its priory, which was, in its turn, an important cell of Reading Abbey. The town seal in that case is also a pointed oval, with an effigy of St. Peter; but there is no reference to it in these pages.

As to the letterpress, the style adopted in the introduction and preface is both stilted and affected. Tiresome and strained conceits after would-be original phrases and odd arrangement of sentences tend to spoil various passages in which some real information respecting seals is conveyed. The opening sentence of the preface is very clumsy:—

"Their selection having been made entirely with that view, and after a careful and exhaustive examination of Borough seals yet extant, and of impressions from lost originals still available, I may fairly claim that the examples displayed in this work include the finest specimens of their order produced in the thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth centuries."

But this sentence is lucidity itself compared with a number of instances that occur in the introduction. One example must suffice; it is culled from p. 3, where Mr. Pedrick is writing of the influence of the Gothic spirit:—

"In degrees, however, which varied with (generally speaking, inasmuch as lines of absolute demarcation cannot be drawn), and were largely determined by, the divisions into which it fell, and with a richness of result, varying similarly, which greatly depended upon the extent to which that influence was felt and those models were employed."

The greater part, however, of the letterpress, which covers 137 quarto pages, consists of brief accounts of all the towns whose seals are cited. In such a book as this it would have been an advantage if certain statements had been given in elucidation of the devices of the shields and their particular connexion with various towns or patrons. Instead of this, Mr. Pedrick has carelessly strung together sketchy accounts of the various places, which one hardly expects in a high-priced book such as this. Those who are likely to purchase or consult this work can only be amused by reading, for instance, that Cambridge is

"the county town, and seat of a renowned University which stands upon the Cam. In the magnificent buildings connected with the University lie the chief of its attractions," &c.

Or when the seals of Canterbury city are discussed, who can want to read such questionable statements as this?—

"Canterbury Cathedral is a beautiful and splendid pile, exhibiting every successive style from Early Norman to latest Gothic. It is justly celebrated and conspicuous for richness of decoration and accuracy of detail no less than for justness of proportion," &c.

Moreover, various of the assertions made in these brief outlines of a town's history are not correct, as when we are told, under Salisbury, that that see was established at Wilton at the beginning of the tenth century, "where it continued under the government of eleven successive prelates."

All who are interested in the history and art of English seals will desire to possess such a book as this on account of the fine series of plates. There are also some useful statements and summaries of facts pertaining to the seals of civil corporations in the introduction; but it will be wisest on the whole to eschew the letterpress, and to rely for real descriptions on the two volumes of Messrs. Hope and Jewitt, and the second volume of the Museum Catalogue of Seals.

FRENCH IMPRESSIONISTS AT THE GRAFTON GALLERY.

(First Notice.)

THE present exhibition at the Grafton Gallery is of unusual magnitude and completeness. It is not, perhaps, entirely representative in the case of one or two artists, but it may be fairly described as representative of the Impressionist School as a whole, and the thanks of all art-lovers are due to M. Durand Ruel for providing Londoners with a magnificent opportunity of studying the painters in whom for the last thirty years he has taken so courageous an interest. For ourselves we have only one thing to regret in connexion with the exhibition—namely, the time of its appearance. Apart from the fact that January days in London are often too dark for the proper seeing of pictures, the Impressionist show coincidences with the splendid exhibition of Watts at Burlington House, and later will overlap for a few days the Memorial Exhibition of the work of Whistler.

The all-important question for English visitors to the show is, What will be the verdict of the future upon Impressionist painting? What will its position be in relation to other recognized schools of painting when it is viewed from an independent standpoint a quarter of a century hence? Is it an art comparable in every way to the art of the great old masters? or is it merely a momentary freak of fashion, which will be valued as slightly as the painting of certain unlucky periods in the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries?

The reproach that the great men of the movement were charlatans or incapables can no longer be levelled at them. No intelligent person can any longer have doubts as to the sincerity of the apostles of Impressionism. They proved it by sacrificing for years, in some cases for their whole lives, all chance of worldly success, and the modest degree of estimation for which, in France, even well-trained mediocrity can hope.

Their aim from first to last was realism. We see Manet beginning with work on the lines of the one realistic school of painting known to him. We see Degas begin as the obedient pupil of Ingres, while Claude Monet, almost from the first, set himself to imitate the light and air of nature, at the expense, if necessary, of all the other qualities for which painters previously had sought.

Will it be safe, then, to forecast the future of such a painter as Manet on the analogy of the Spaniards who occupy a prominent place in this artistic pedigree? If so, we must make certain allowances. Velasquez has earned the reputation of an immortal artist, not only by his sincerity and by the directness of his expression, but also by the completeness of his sense of taste. If the truth and sincerity of his work be due to his native genius and to his Spanish blood, the outward beauty of his best pictures is certainly due to his study of Titian, and to this beauty he owes much of his reputation even among painters. Ribera was also an exceedingly skilful and practised painter, yet his reputation in comparison with that of Velasquez is but small in proportion to his accomplishment, simply because his great technical powers were not directed by the sense of beauty which Velasquez possessed. Even Goya, with all his fire and character—qualities which, perhaps, appeal to the artist of the present day even more directly and forcibly than the more meditative and deliberate science of a Titian—even Goya has gained but slowly his moderate share of fame, because, with all his rare insight and inventiveness, his sense of beauty is recondite or capricious.

How can we presume, then, that the earlier works of Manet, famous as they are, will survive the test of time better than the work of Ribera or Goya? It would not be an altogether untrue criticism, though it would be an unkind one, to say that these famous works of Manet are for the most part little more than imitations of the great Spanish realists, and that, although they possess great artistic merit, they are not greater than the work which inspired them, and their importance in the future must therefore be to a large extent historical. The critic might add that in the three famous pictures The Spanish Dancers (No. 85), The Bull-Fight (86), and The Beggar (97), the realism of Spain is not enlivened, strengthened, or beautified. Rather is it slightly deadened by a hint of the heavy handling of Courbet. The airless landscape in The Races at Longchamps (84), in its way, and for its period, a masterpiece, might also be mentioned as a proof that Manet, even when most bent on painting life, was unable to get the effect of life. Thus Manet, though a great painter, is unlikely to be regarded as an artist of quite the first rank, although his name will always be famous upon historical grounds, since he had to bear the brunt of the attacks directed against the Impressionist movement.

Degas stands on a different plane. As a draughtsman he is a worthy pupil of his great master Ingres, and his early work is almost beyond criticism, even from the classical point of view. Even when his subject is ostensibly trivial, as in the Carriage at the Races (57), his unflinching sense of design and his accuracy of eye and hand enable him to achieve success where a painter trained in a less dignified tradition would produce only a 'Derby Day.' Several other admirable examples of this perfect treatment will be found in the exhibition, but lack of space makes it impossible to deal with them in detail. One, however, The Rehearsal at the Foyer de la Danse (75), is so entirely excellent, alike in design, in execution, and in the feeling of light and air which pervade it, that it would have to be admitted as a masterpiece in any collection of painting. The sense of atmosphere rendered so perfectly in this little grey painting explains the change brought into the art of Degas by the more luminous work of Claude Monet. The later pastels by which Degas is chiefly represented have these same qualities of design and atmosphere, although their outward appearance is so different. A change in the pitch of the tone and colour is not, however, the only change to be noted. To any one who has even a superficial knowledge of Japanese colour prints, it is evident that Degas was greatly influenced by them, in departing both from conventional arrangements and from conventional harmonies of colour. This change was accompanied by a change, or rather a development, in the painter's temper. In many cases the satirist almost overwhelms the artist, and his work suffers from excess of emphasis. For this reason it may remain always a thing alien to our national taste, since emphasis is precisely the quality in which British character and British art alike are deficient. To those, however, who can place themselves outside the prejudices of national feeling, Degas must always appear a fine artist, since as a draughtsman, a designer, and a colourist he had few equals during the past century, and neither the slightness of much of his work nor the comparative failure of an experiment such as the Zaza at the Cirque Fernando (72) can detract from the remarkable quality of his achievement.

We must leave for a second article the interesting series of pictures by Claude Monet, Camille Pissarro, Sisley, and Renoir, which, though associated in period and in history with those of Manet and Degas, are based upon entirely different æsthetic principles.

SALES.

MESSRS. CHRISTIE'S sale on Saturday comprised, as announced in The Athenæum of last week, the important pictures by old masters and of the Early English School, also a few fine works of modern artists, the property of Messrs. Lawrie & Co., of 159, New Bond Street, in consequence of the dissolution of partnership. The two partners in the firm, Mr. Lawrie and Mr. Sulley, are each resuming business on their separate accounts, and the greater portion of their stock was acquired by one or other of the partners. The sale was interesting as showing the large amount of capital invested in a first-class business of picture dealing. It is well known that many of the more important pictures in Saturday's sale realized considerably less than had been originally paid for them by Messrs. Lawrie & Co.; but this result was inevitable in the circumstances. The total of the 120 lots amounted to no less than 34,859l. 12s. A list of the more important works dispersed is as follows:—

Drawings: T. Gainsborough, Portrait of Miss Haverfield, pastel, 230 guineas. L'Hermite, Meal-Time, 1903, 230 gs.

Modern Pictures: Woody Landscape, with old watermill, 240 gs. W. Etty, Mars, Venus, Cupid, 1837, 180 gs. E. van Marcke, Cattle in a Pasture, 1,640 gs. A. T. J. Monticelli, Party of Ladies under trees in a garden, 140 gs. E. Verboeckhoven, Pony, Ewes, and Lambs on the Coast, 1868, 350 gs.

Early English School: T. Gainsborough, Woody Landscape, with buildings and figures, 450 gs.; Portrait of Christopher Anstey, author of 'The New Bath Guide,' 410 gs. J. Hoppner, Portraits of George, John, and Richard Brown Robinson, 400 gs.; a Lady in blue dress and black hat, 500 gs. Sir T. Lawrence, Portrait of a Young Lady in white dress and blue sash, 150 gs. H. Morland, Mrs. Elizabeth Ridge, in white dress, 90 gs. J. Northcote, Mrs. Lane, in red cloak, 420 gs. J. Opie, Portrait of a Lady in white dress, 280 gs. Sir H. Raeburn, Miss Margaret Campbell (afterwards Mrs. MacLeod) when a young girl, 950 gs.; Master Hay (afterwards Capt. Hay), 900 gs.; Alexander Shaw, 470 gs.

French School: François Clouet, Equestrian Portrait of Henri II., 1559, exhibited at the Primitifs Français, Paris, 1904, 2,300 gs. J. M. Nattier, Marie Leczinska, 380 gs. Italian School: Giovanni Bellini, Madonna and Child with a Donor, signed, 190 gs. Francia Bigio, Portrait of a Young Man, 125 gs. Giulio Campi, Portrait of Franchino Gaffurio, 75 gs. C. M. da Cotignola, Christ bearing the Cross, signed and dated 1514, 70 gs. Benedetto Diana, Salvator Mundi, 85 gs. G. B. Moroni, Portrait of a Lady in black and white dress, 1,000 gs. Francesco da Rimini, The Madonna, in blue and red dress, supporting the Infant Saviour, signed and dated 1483, 480 gs. Romanino, Portrait of a Youth, 130 gs. P. Veronese, Portrait of a Venetian Lady in yellow dress, 100 gs.

Dutch, Flemish, and German Schools: F. Bol, Portrait of a Lady as Diana, signed and dated 1647, 65 gs. Gonzales Coques, A Family Group, 150 gs. A. Cuyp, The Tulip-Seller, 1,200 gs.; A Winter Landscape, with dead swan, eagle, and other birds, 2,200 gs. Holbein School, Portrait of a Nobleman, dated 1565, 170 gs. T. de Keyser, Portrait of a Gentleman, signed and dated 1656, 230 gs. Karel du Jardin, Portrait of a Physician, 190 gs. S. Koninek, Solomon's Idolatry, 200 gs. J. de Mabuse, The Virgin and Infant Saviour, 600 gs. N. Maes, Portrait of a Gentleman, 800 gs. The Master of 'The Death of the Virgin,' Portrait of a Gentleman, 160 gs. G. Metsu, Portrait of a Lady, in blue dress bordered with ermine (Smith's 'Catalogue,' No. 89), 1,850 gs. D. Mytens, Portrait of Queen Henrietta Maria, 320 gs. Rembrandt, The Evangelist, 2,100 gs.; A Sibyl, 3,200 gs. Rubens, Portrait of Isabella Clara Eugenia, Archduchess of Austria, 380 gs. J. Ruysdael, A Waterfall (Smith's 'Catalogue,' No. 216, and 'Supplement,' No. 5), 1,250 gs.; A Woody Road, with two figures, 500 gs. S. Ruysdael, Battle on a Bridge, 1658, 420 gs. Sir A. van Dyck, Portrait Group of Charles I., Queen Henrietta Maria, and their sons Charles and James, one of the several duplicates (see Smith's 'Catalogue,' No. 224) of the original picture at Windsor, 1,700 gs.

On Monday the same firm sold the following:—Early English School, Portrait of a Lady, in white dress and blue sash, large hat with feather, and blue ribbons, 231l. G. Morland, A Meet of the Berkeley Hounds, 136l.

Fine-Art Cossip.

At the Dowdeswell Galleries last Thursday was the private view of cabinet pictures in oil by Mr. Oliver Hall.

MR. W. B. PATERSON is showing at 5, Old Bond Street, drawings by contemporary artists of the English and Scottish Schools.

MESSRS. CARFAX are holding to-day a private view at their gallery of sketches in water colour by Mr. Walter Crane of Sicily and Normandy.

AN exhibition of drawings in colour and line, illustrating 'Hunting and other Sports,' by Mr. G. D. Armour, is to be opened to-day at the Leicester Galleries, Leicester Square. Mr. Armour's drawings for Punch are well known.

THIS month Mr. Wynford Dewhurst invites us to view his pictures at the Knödler Gallery, 15, Old Bond Street.

MR. GUTEKUNST has open from to-day till March 4th a collection of etched work by Maxime Lalanne.

AT the Fine-Art Society's Rooms to-day is the private view of 'The Thames a Century Ago,' as depicted in contemporary engravings.

IN the Vienna archives an interesting document has just been found giving a list of prices of some pictures and sculptures that were sold by auction in Germany in 1643. Among the works are pictures by Titian, Correggio, Dürer, and Cranach, works now to be found in Vienna, Munich, and elsewhere.

THE Paris Académie des Inscriptions et Belles-Lettres has elected M. Élie Berger, Professor of Palæography at the École des Chartes, to fill the vacancy caused by the death of M. Henri Wallon. There were four candidates, and at the second ballot M. Berger was first by 23 votes out of 36. The new Academician is the brother of M. Philippe Berger (who was elected to Renan's seat in 1892), and is the author of a number of learned works on manuscripts, on the history of Blanche de Castille, and concerning the reign of St. Louis. This is the fifth occasion on which M. Élie Berger has offered himself as a candidate for election to the Académie.

MR. FRANK J. SCOTT has presented his collection of busts of Julius Cæsar to Harvard University, where it was on loan some months ago. For many years Mr. Scott has made a special study of the subject, and has travelled all over Europe in pursuit of his hobby. He had casts made or photographs taken of all the busts in public museums and private collections where permission could be obtained. He embodied the results of his studies in his book on 'The Portraits of Julius Cæsar,' which was reviewed in The Athenæum two years ago. In this work he describes upwards of eighty different heads, all of which are claimed to represent Cæsar at various periods in his life.

MUSIC

THE WEEK.

QUEEN'S HALL.—Symphony Concert.
ALBERT HALL.—Berlioz's 'Childhood of Christ' and Sir A. Mackenzie's 'The Witch's Daughter.'

THE programme of the fourth London Symphony Concert last Thursday week at the Queen's Hall included two works by British composers: Sir Hubert Parry's Symphonic Variations in E minor, and Sir Charles Stanford's 'L'Allegro ed il Penseroso' Symphony (Op. 56). It was, of course, becoming on the part of Sir Charles, who was the conductor of the afternoon, to place his work at the end of the programme, but it deserved a better place. The symphony was produced at a Philharmonic Concert in 1894, and has not since been heard. The title shows clearly the source whence the composer sought inspiration. The music is remarkably clever and effective, but phraseology and form point to the past rather than to the present; and for that very reason it is difficult to appreciate it at its true worth. Music written on old lines runs the danger of comparison with standard works; on the other hand, music on modern lines, owing to peculiarities of rhythm and colour, at first hearing often appears more original than it proves to be in the long run. Sir Charles is master of the technique of his art, and if he chose could write sensational music; that he refrains from so doing must certainly be set down to his credit. We do not, however, for a moment wish to disguise the fact that this symphony appears to us too formal in structure; the poetic matter indicated suggests treatment of a different kind. The Variations by Sir Hubert Parry show intellectual strength rather than emotional warmth. The concert began with Saint-Saëns's not very exciting symphonic poem 'Phaëthon,' written more than thirty years ago. Mr. Borwick played the solo part of Brahms's Second Pianoforte Concerto in B flat, and was heard at his very best.

The performance of Berlioz's 'Childhood of Christ' at the Albert Hall, under the direction of Sir Frederick Bridge, last week, was interesting, although the work is not well suited to so large a choir, neither is the hall itself the best place for music of such delicate character. No one else, however, pays heed to that sacred trilogy, so that Sir Frederick may be praised for reviving it. The choral singing was good, though the "Chorus of unseen Angels," not given according to the composer's intention, failed to impress: the Angels were visible, and the organ much too prominent. The soloists, Madame Sobrino, and Messrs. Ffrangcon Davies, Dan Price, Lloyd Chandos, and F. Ranalow, acquitted themselves well. The duets between Joseph and Mary were ably rendered, while the trio for harp and two flutes in the third part was beautifully played, and pleased the audience more than many a page in which the individuality of the composer is even more fully revealed.

The second part of the programme was devoted to Sir A. C. Mackenzie's cantata 'The Witch's Daughter.' The work was noticed in these columns on the occasion of its production at the recent Leeds Festival. We then recognized its merits, but all the composer's skill and picturesque writing cannot prevent us from feeling that he has to a large extent wasted his strength on a dull poem. Sir A. C. Mackenzie conducted, and was received with cordiality. The vocalists, Madame Sobrino and Mr. Ffrangcon Davies, did full justice to their important parts.

Musical Gossip.

IN the Crystal Palace Concert-Room last Saturday afternoon was given the first of three "Albani Concerts." The Canadian artist won her way to success by her admirable rendering of Mozart's "Non temer," the violin obbligato being played by Lady Hallé. She also sang pieces by Gounod, Mr. Edward German, and Mr. Charles Willeby, and with Miss Ada Crossley a duet from Offenbach's 'Les Contes d'Hoffmann.' Lady Hallé played Tartini's sonata 'Il Trillo del Diavolo'; and Mr. Leonard Borwick pianoforte solos by Bach, Scarlatti, and Chopin.

THE programme of the fourth concert of Old Chamber Music, given by Miss Grace Sunderland and Mr. Frank Thistleton at Broadwood's on Tuesday afternoon, contained many works of interest. There were two concertos for pianoforte and strings, one by Dall' Abaco, the other by Johann Stamitz—two composers, as Dr.

Hugo Riemann has recently shown, of importance in the history of the development of chamber music. A quartet sonata by J. F. Fasch, a contemporary of Bach, and a pupil of Johann Kuhnau, deserves mention. The first two movements may be somewhat rococo, but the Largo is highly expressive, and the finale quaint and crisp. The work is written for flute, violin, cello, and harpsichord. A fine sonata for violin and harpsichord by Antonio Vivaldi served to remind one of a composer whom Bach held in high esteem. The performances were very good.

MISS MARIE HALL will give a concert at the Queen's Hall on Tuesday afternoon, February 21st, with Mr. Egon Petri as solo pianist.

A FIRST public performance of two Rhapsodies, Op. 92, for pianoforte, by Sir Charles Villiers Stanford, will be given at the pianoforte and cello recital of Messrs. Percy Grainger and Herman Sandby at the Bechstein Hall on the evening of February 13th. They have been inspired by pages in Dante's 'Inferno.'

SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE will deliver the Gresham College Lectures on February 7th, 8th, 9th, and 10th, the respective subjects being 'Music, and Peacham's "Compleat Gentleman";' 'Purcell's "Ayres for the Theatre";' 'Schubert's Songs'; and 'British Naval Songs of Three Centuries.' The first will take place in the Theatre of Gresham College, the other three in the Great Hall of the City of London School.

SIR ALEXANDER MACKENZIE delivers the first of his three lectures on the music of Bohemian composers at the Royal Institution this afternoon.

A TWO-ACT lyrical drama, 'Daria,' libretto by MM. Adolphe Aderer and Armand Ephraïm, music by M. Georges Marty, was produced at the Paris Opéra yesterday week.

ON January 22nd a fine performance was given at the Paris Conservatoire of Handel's 'Saul,' under the direction of M. Georges Marty. Mesdames Georges Marty, Auguez de Montalant, and Mary Garnier, and MM. Caze-neuve and Frölich were the principal singers. M. Alexandre Guilmant presided at the organ.

A WORK on Anton Bruckner by Rudolf Louis has just been published by Georg Müller, of Munich and Leipzig. The author's monographs on Berlioz and Liszt are well known, and this first appreciation in book form of the Austrian composer, concerning whose merits opinions differ considerably, ought to prove both interesting and instructive.

SOME violins recently sold by Messrs. Glendinning & Co. fetched remarkable prices. A violin by Nicolas Amati, of Cremona, went for 105*l.*; another by Antonio Stradivari, 1706, 600*l.*; another by Joseph Guarnerius, 230*l.*; an old Italian violin by Gasparo da Salò, of Brescia, 110*l.*; and one by Lorenzo Guadagnini, 120*l.*

Le Ménestrel of January 29th states that the programmes of the four days' Beethoven festival at Paris in May will include the nine Symphonies, under the direction of Herr Felix Weingartner, the Violin Concerto, and the Pianoforte Concerto in G. It is to be hoped that the scheme, when completed, will also include a performance of 'Fidelio' at the Opéra-Comique.

THE Allgemeine Musik-Zeitung of January 27th confirms the report that the Wagner-Vereeniging at Amsterdam intends to give a performance of 'Parsifal.'

PERFORMANCES NEXT WEEK.

SUN. Concert Club, 3, Bechstein Hall.
— Sunday Society Concert, 3.30, Queen's Hall.
— Sunday League, 7, Queen's Hall.
MON. Miss Nora Clench's Quartet, 8.30, Aeolian Hall.
TUES. Miss Maud MacCarthy's Orchestral Concert, 3, Queen's Hall.
— Miss Ethel Barns and Mr. C. Phillips's Concert, 3, Bechstein Hall.
— Mr. Charles Williams's Orchestral Concert, 8.45, Queen's Hall.

WED. Madame Roger-Mielns and Johannes Woll's Pianoforte and Violin Recital, 3, Eolian Hall.
 — Wessely Quartet, 8 30, Bechstein Hall.
 THURS. Broadwood Concert, 8 30, Eolian Hall.
 FRI. London Ballad Concert, 3, Queen's Hall.
 SAT. Symphony Concert, 3, Queen's Hall.
 — Dr. Theo. Lieberhammer's Vocal Recital, 3, Bechstein Hall.

DRAMA

The Sin of David. By Stephen Phillips.
 (Macmillan & Co.)

THE anticipated and more than half-promised performance of 'The Sin of David' has not been witnessed, nor does there seem any prospect that the play will shortly see the footlights. More obviously than any previously printed work from the same source it is intended for stage production. To placate, it may be supposed, a muddled, meddlesome, and erratic censure, the action is transferred from Syria to England; and to conciliate the conventional playgoer a moderately sympathetic dénouement is substituted for the tragic issue which offended justice demands. The title chosen is in no sense a misnomer. Precisely similar in character to the crime of the Israelitish monarch with Bathsheba and Uriah the Hittite is that of Sir Hubert Lisle, the commander of the Parliamentary forces in the Fenlands. Arriving at headquarters at the moment when the fate of Lieut. Joyce, self-convicted of having violated a maid, is in the balance, he gives a casting vote for a death penalty in place of simple expulsion from the ranks of the faithful. It is for the sake of showing

Dear liberty to righteousness affianced that the soldiers of the Puritan host have girded themselves.

For this the noble hath disdained his ease,
 For this the gentleman forsworn his hearth,
 For this the yeoman left his glebe unploughed.

In answer to the bidding of the victim to be very sure of his own soul, the newly arrived commander utters a solemn imprecation:—

And judge me, Thou that sittest in Thy heaven,
 As I have shown no mercy, show me none!
 Deal Thou to me what I have dealt to him;
 Nay more; not the mere death that he shall die;
 Strike at the heart, the hope, the home of me,
 If ever a woman's beauty shall ensnare
 My soul unto such sin as he hath sinned.

As the guilt in question amounts to rape, such language is of no disproportionate strength. Before, however, the muskets have rung out the knell of the doomed man, Sir Hubert has met his fate. Miriam, a Jewess apparently, of French descent, who has contracted with Col. Mardyke, his host, a half-enforced and wholly joyless marriage, brings him the wine of welcome. At once his heart goes out to her, and hers thrills to him in immediate and fervent response. In the second act nothing but the husband stands in the way of consummated happiness. Then comes from Lord Willoughby the demand for a man of tried courage and resolution, who will lead at daybreak a forlorn hope against the castle of Bolingbroke. After some self-communing and torture, Sir Hubert, warmed by the presence and maddened by the caresses of Miriam, sends Mardyke to his death. Turning as he does so to the Bible of the "murdered man," he comes upon the passage that tells how "there fell some of the people of the servants of David; and Uriah the Hittite died also."

Five years later Sir Hubert, still fighting with the Puritan troops, is at Wakefield with Miriam, now his wife, and with Hubert, his and her infant son. On the anniversary of the departure of Mardyke to his death, the child is smitten with an inexplicable illness, to which, in spite of medical help, he succumbs. In his nervous and overwrought condition, Sir Hubert sees in this death a revenge of his victim, and supplicates that he himself, and not his offspring, may pay the penalty of his crime. Miriam sees in this death a mandate of eternal separation, and conjures him:—

Let us fly each other.
 Between, an angel stands with flaming sword,
 And at his feet the body of our babe.

With some eloquence, but more sophistry, he pleads in answer:—

Dear, in a deeper union are we bound
 Than by the earthly touch of him, or voice
 Human, or little laughter in the sun.
 We by bereavement henceforth are betrothed,
 Folded by aspirations unfulfilled,
 And clasped by irrecoverable dreams.

Her answer to this is to fall with a cry on his heart, where he holds her fast.

The first two acts of 'The Sin of David' seem susceptible of histrionic interpretation. It is doubtful whether the closing act has grip enough. The character of Miriam is strongly conceived and capably drawn, and reveals more passion than is common in English workmanship. Wholly discontented with her elderly husband, whose relations at the outset have been those of guardian, she has been, in her intercourse with his successor, more of the temptress than the tempted. To her lover she says, with passionate abandon:—

For thee alone came I into this world,
 For thee this very hair grew glorious,
 My eyes are of this colour for thy sake.
 This moment is a deep inheriting,
 And as the solemn coming to a kingdom.

When he speaks of peace she responds:—

Doth the world seem cold?
 A woman's peace,

It hath all fire in it and burneth white.

And while her husband still lives, and her lover, abashed, says to her half rebukingly,

How thy speech wantons, while I stare at life!

she continues:—

Thou hast my spirit, be content.
 O, all that in me wanders and is wild
 Gathers into one wave that breaks on thee!

As in other dramas of Mr. Phillips's, there are many strong, imaginative, and poetical lines, but the liaison of the verses is not wholly satisfactory. 'The Sin of David' scarcely justifies the inflated eulogy of which the author has been the recipient. It is, however, creditable accomplishment, and up to the level of Mr. Phillips's previous work.

THE WEEK.

COURT.—Afternoon Performance: 'Great Friends,' a Comedy in Three Acts. By G. S. Street.

THE new comedy of Mr. Street, given under the direction of the Incorporated Stage Society, is exactly characteristic of the class of piece with the non-production of which managers are constantly rebuked. It is the work of a clever and capable man, destitute apparently, as are ninety-nine out of a hundred persons, of dramatic sense. That such will not arrive as the result of practice we may not say. The present work, however, though it has a certain kind of prettiness, discloses no form of dramatic aptitude. Characters shuffle on to and off the stage, according to the Juvenalian maxim, "Hoc volo, sic jubeo, sit pro ratione voluntas." An attempt at character-drawing is attended by a certain amount of success, but that is no more than is to be expected in the case of a man of culture. The language is witty, and sometimes appropriate, though never good enough to compensate for the absence of action. Especially weak are the concluding scenes, justifying the assumption that the author, who scarcely knew how to begin, did not in the least know how to end.

"Great friends," in the title, is a phrase used sometimes between those of opposite sexes to defend an intimacy on the point of developing into something more close. Such intimacy exists between Sydney Baldwin, M.P., and Lady Raffin—he a man for whom, on account of aristocratic birth, influential surroundings, and general infirmity of purpose, his friends predict Cabinet rank; she a woman, mated with a fool, who strives hard, and for a while successfully, to obtain an ascendancy over a fledgling statesman. Though affianced to a young and charming girl, whom in his heart he loves, Baldwin flies in the face of his friends and his interest, and persists in compromising himself and the partner in his follies. It might almost be supposed that he broke his leg for the mere sake of being ministered to by her and prolonging hours of idle and virtually purposeless dalliance. If either has any serious design upon the other, it is carefully concealed. It is difficult, indeed, to conceive of any woman having serious use for so inept a philanderer. The hero's cure is wrought when he sees himself threatened with serious rivalry for the hand of his betrothed. The risk of losing her is sufficient to bring him once more to his senses, and to effect between himself and Lady Raffin a separation which on his part has no element of chivalry, if it has any of common courtesy. Very far are we from objecting to marivaudage, or protesting against the idle song of an empty day, to pervert a well-known Morrisian refrain. Dramatically, however, the story is naught, and the interest it stirred in a friendly audience was the mildest conceivable. Mr. Dawson Milward played the hero, and Miss Gertrude Kingston the heroine.

Dramatic Gossip.

'ZWEI GLÜCKLICHE TAGE,' a four-act farcical comedy of Herren F. von Schönthan and Gustav Kadelburg, two frequent collaborators, has been given by the German comedians at the Great Queen Street Theatre. It is a bright and moderately ingenious piece, showing the sort of inflections that may weigh upon the residents in a suburban house. So burdensome are those which spring from the unexpected and undesired intrusion of acquaintances that the only two pleasurable days of the new proprietors are those respectively spent in looking over the new possession and in quitting it. In a generally excellent performance Fräulein Rosie Grawz and Camilla Dalberg, Herr Bruno Wilburger, and Herr Hans Stock were noteworthy.

'MASKERADE,' a four-act play of Herr Ludwig Fulda, given so recently as November 28th at the Deutsches Theater, Berlin, will be the next novelty of the Andresen-Behrend company, being underlined for presentation on Thursday next.

SELDOM has a piece with so little story as 'A Maker of Men,' a one-act play by Mr. Alfred Sutro, produced on January 27th at the St. James's Theatre, had a more conspicuous success. It is, indeed, scarcely to be counted as drama, though it presents a faithful thumbnail sketch of lower middle-class life. A bank clerk, disappointed of the promotion which has once more passed him by, gives way to self-rebuke and despair, and is cheered and heartened by his wife. There is sincerity enough in the dialogue to compensate for absence of story, and, as the whole was well played by Miss Edyth Olive and Mr. Graham Browne, it obtained a warm reception, and must be held to strengthen a bill, the remainder of which consists of 'Lady Windermere's Fan.' In the cast of the piece last named Mr. Eric Lewis is now counted.

'THE LADY OF LEEDS' is the title at length bestowed on Capt. Marshall's new piece due on Tuesday next at Wyndham's.

FOR Saturday next is promised at the Royalty 'The Diplomats,' a two-act comedy by Mr. Sydney Grundy, to be produced under the direction of the author with a cast comprising Mr. E. W. Garden, Mr. Charles Groves, and Misses Marie Illington, Florence St. John, and Lily Grundy. With it will be given 'A Case of Arson,' adapted from the Dutch of Herman Heyermans. In this Mr. de Vries, a Dutch comedian, will play seven different characters, all witnesses summoned before a Court of Inquiry.

In the forthcoming production at the Court of 'The Trojan Women' of Euripides, Misses Edyth Olive, Gertrude Kingston, and Marie Brema will take part.

TOWARDS the end of the month may be expected at the Avenue 'Mr. Hopkinson,' a farcical comedy, the hero of which will be played by Mr. James Welch.

In the cast of 'Du Barry,' an adaptation from M. Jean Richepin by Mr. Brookfield, to be given forthwith at the Savoy, Mrs. Brown Potter, as the heroine, will be supported by Misses Audrey Ford and Elsie Chester and Messrs. Abingdon, H. B. Warner, Blakiston, Devereux, and Gilbert Hare.

A FORTHCOMING production of the Incorporated Stage Society will consist of 'The Three Daughters of M. Dupont' ('Les Trois Filles de M. Dupont') of M. Brieux, translated by Mr. St. John Hankin.

MR. CHARLES HIGHAM writes:—

"In connexion with the Swedish Shakespeare 'find' described by Mr. Evald Ljunggren in your issue for the 21st ult., it may be interesting to note that the reputed possessor, a century ago, of the 1594 'Titus Andronicus,' was obviously the Carl Robsahm hitherto known chiefly as a contributor to the biography of Emanuel Swedenborg. A brief sketch of Robsahm and his biographical details are included in the three volumes of 'Documents concerning Swedenborg,' edited by the Rev. R. L. Tafel, Ph.D., and published in 1875-7."

MISS ADA NEILSON, who died on the 25th ult. in her sixtieth year, was better known in the country than in London. She is remembered, however, as Queen Elizabeth in 'The Armada' of Sir Augustus Harris and Mr. Hamilton, September 22nd, 1888; as Lady Cholmondeley in 'The Royal Oak' of the same authors, September 23rd, 1889; as Janet Felton in 'Sunlight and Shadow,' by Mr. R. C. Carton, Avenue, November 1st, 1890; as Virginie in a revival of 'Drink'; and in a few other parts.

'ADREA' is the title of a play by Messrs. David Belasco and John Luther Long, produced by Mrs. Leslie Carter at the Belasco Theatre, New York, on January 11th. Its action is placed in 500 A.D. in an imaginary island of the Adriatic, and introduces some miracles, presumably pagan.

'MODELL,' a sentimental comedy in four acts, by Herr Hermann Katsch, is the latest novelty at the Berliner Theater. It shows the misadventures, succeeded ultimately by marriage, undergone by a young lady, who in pure good nature consents to be the Trilby of a sculptor, and sit to him but slightly veiled. The amiable and accommodating heroine was played by Fräulein Rocco.

RECENT Parisian novelties have been of the lightest description. Of these the most successful is 'Les Merlereau' of M. Georges Berr, produced at the Bouffes-Parisiens. It owes some suggestions to 'Le Père Prodigue,' translated by the younger Mathews as 'My Awful Dad.' 'Le Chopin,' a three-act farce by MM. Keroul and Barré, given at the Palais Royal, has a plot incapable of explanation to an English public. 'Le Gigolo,' by M. Miguel Zamacoïs, is a work not widely dissimilar in nature, which has made a prosperous start at the Nouveautés. Mlle. Jeanne Granier has appeared at the Théâtre des Capucines as the heroine of 'La Bonne Intention,' a two-act comédietta of M. de Croisset.

IN 'La Gioconda' of Gabriele d'Annunzio, translated into French by M. Georges Hérèle, and produced at the Théâtre de l'Œuvre, M. Lugne-Poe was Cosimo; M. Burguet, Lucio; and Madame Suzanne Desprès, Silvia Settata.

MISCELLANEA

COLERIDGE'S POEMS: NEW INFORMATION.

Weston-super-Mare.

THOSE of your readers who are acquainted with the published works relating to the poetry of Samuel Taylor Coleridge may be interested in hearing that in the course of a search of Felix Farley's Bristol Journal for the year 1818, in quest of information relating to a matter of local interest, I happened to notice, in the number bearing date February 7th, a sonnet with headlines as follows: "Fancy in Nubibus; Or, The Poet in the Clouds. A Sonnet composed by the Seaside, October, 1817," and signed "S.T.C."

It so happens that I possess not an inconsiderable number of publications relating to Coleridge, including the very comprehensive work of the late James Dykes Campbell, and the very valuable work on the poetry edited by Dr. R. Garnett, C.B. When I referred to these two works I found that both writers state that this sonnet was first printed in Blackwood's Magazine for November, 1819; consequently it is clear that I have made a literary discovery.

The words "A Sonnet composed by the Seaside, October, 1817," which appear not, I believe, in any of the published works, seem to point out that it was composed when Coleridge was staying at Little Hampton, Sussex, in 1817.

In the issue of the same journal for February 21st, 1818, there appears a poem by Coleridge, in seven stanzas, with the following headline: "Written in a Blank Leaf of Faulkner's Shipwreck, presented by a friend to Miss K—," which differs so materially from that which appears in 'Sibylline Leaves,' published in 1817, that it appears to me to be a revised edition. Campbell has substituted the name of "Falconer"—the correct name of the author of 'The Shipwreck'—in the place of Faulkner (Falkner). The words in the headline appear not, so far as I am aware, in any of the published works relating to Coleridge. It would be interesting, I think, to establish the identity of "Miss K—." G. E. WEARE.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.—H. W.—P. A. S.—F. L.—D. S.—H. St. G. G.—E. W.—received.
G. P.—We cannot enter into this.
C. S. (Firenze).—We have no opening of the sort.
No notice can be taken of anonymous communications.

MESSRS. BELL'S NEW BOOKS.

COMPLETE CATALOGUE POST FREE
ON APPLICATION.

Post 8vo, 5s. net.

NAPOLEON and ENGLAND, 1803-

1818. A Study from Unprinted Documents. By P. COQUELLE. Translated from the French by GORDON D. KNOX, Balliol College, Oxford. With a Preface by Dr. J. HOLLAND ROSE, Author of 'The Life of Napoleon I.,' &c.

"In discussing one of the most controverted questions of modern history, M. Coquelle has collected a number of interesting documents, which form a most valuable addition to the sources available to a student of the Napoleonic period. He has, however, done more than merely provide us with material, for by concentrating his attention solely on the diplomatic relations between France and England he has fully proved his contention that Napoleon alone was responsible for the continuance of the war, and has furnished a most valuable monograph on Napoleon the diplomatist."—St. James's Gazette.

Crown 8vo, 8s. net.

The NIBELUNGENLIED. Translated into Rhymed English Verse in the Metre of the Original. By G. H. NEEDLER.

BOHN'S HISTORICAL LIBRARY. NEW VOLUMES.

CARLYLE'S FRENCH REVOLUTION. Edited, with Introduction, Notes, and Appendices, by J. HOLLAND ROSE, Litt.D., Author of the 'Life of Napoleon I.' 3 vols. small post 8vo, 5s. each. [Ready February 8.]

Crown 8vo, limp cloth, 1s. net.

ITALIAN RECIPES for FOOD

REFORMERS. Translated and Arranged by MARIA GIRONCI. [Ready February 8.]

A CHEAPER EDITION OF WHEATLEY'S PEPYS.

The DIARY of SAMUEL PEPYS,

M.A. F.R.S. Transcribed from the Shorthand MS. in the Pepysian Library, Magdalene College, Cambridge, by the Rev. MYNORS BRIGHT, M.A. With Lord BRAYBROOKE'S Notes. Edited, with Additions, by HENRY B. WHEATLEY, F.S.A. In 8 vols. Post 8vo, 5s. net each.

[Vols. I.—VI. now ready; Vol. VII. February 8.]

* * This reprint contains the whole of the text of the Diary, and the Notes and Index, as given in the ten-volume edition, the volume entitled 'Pepysiana' only being omitted.

"Mr. Wheatley has easily distanced all previous editors, both in the completeness of his matter and his annotations, and there is little doubt that this new classic edition of a classic will be a great success."—Athenæum.

THE YORK LIBRARY.

A NEW SERIES OF REPRINTS ON THIN PAPER. Small 8vo, 2s. net in cloth, and 3s. net in leather.

NEW VOLUMES.

CERVANTES' DON QUIXOTE.

Motteux's Translation, Revised. With Lockhart's Life and Notes. 2 vols.

EMERSON'S WORKS. Edited and

Collated by GEORGE SAMPSON. Vol. IV. Containing Miscellaneous Pieces.

COLERIDGE'S TABLE TALK and

OMNIA. Arranged and Edited by T. ASHE, B.A.

DRAPER'S HISTORY of the INTELLECTUAL DEVELOPMENT of EUROPE

2 vols. Others to follow.

London: GEORGE BELL & SONS,
Portugal Street, Lincoln's Inn, W.C.

OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS.

HYPERION. A Facsimile of Keats's Autograph MS. With a Transliteration of the MS. of THE FALL OF HYPERION, A DREAM. With Introductions and Notes by ERNEST DE SÉLINCOURT. Limited Edition, printed on Pure Linen Paper. Subscription Prices: 2l. 12s. 6d. in boards, and 3l. 13s. 6d. in leather.

TIMES.—"The manuscript of 'Hyperion' is of extreme interest as an example of the manner in which Keats brought his work up to its highest pitch of excellence.....The revisions make the poem an infinitely finer thing. They are more interesting than the excisions, and they are made the more interesting by Mr. de Sélinecourt's excellent notes, which often give the most convincing reasons for them.....This book adds to our knowledge of Keats's mind, and, if possible, to our regret for his early death."

SPEAKER.—"The manuscript is of extreme interest, as revealing to us the working of Keats's mind in the very process of composition. We are present, not indeed at the first birth of his ideas, but at the final labour over their perfect expression.....All the changes made are vast and obvious improvements, and the reasons why Keats made them and why they are improvements are admirably analyzed by Mr. de Sélinecourt."

The LETTERS of HORACE WALPOLE. Edited by Mrs. Paget Toynbee. In 16 vols. Vols. I.-XII. now ready. Special Limited Edition, of which only a few Copies remain, demy 8vo, on Hand-made Paper, 16l. net in boards; in 8 double vols. crown 8vo, on Oxford India Paper, 17s. net each; in 16 vols. crown 8vo, on ordinary paper, 6s. net each.

ATHENÆUM.—"The value of Mrs. Toynbee's work, as we have pointed out before, does not lie in fresh discoveries so much as in the patient devotion with which she has sifted and sorted the whole correspondence. The notes, once more, are unobtrusive, and admirable in clarity and conciseness, and, as editing goes, this collection of letters could not be bettered."

The VIENNESE PERIOD. Vol. V. of the "Oxford History of Music." By W. H. Hadow, M.A. 8vo, cloth, 15s. net.

NINETEENTH CENTURY.—"A pure delight."

TIMES.—"Certainly, if Mr. Hadow's object was to write a readable book to bear witness to the glory of great musicians, he has achieved it splendidly. We have never seen a more readable book on a musical subject, nor one that shows a deeper insight into the difference between great art and small, tendency and achievement, progress and permanence. Nor have we seen one more admirably proportioned (from this point of view), nor more skilfully arranged."

The OXFORD ENGLISH DICTIONARY. A New English Dictionary on Historical Principles. Founded mainly on the Materials collected by the Philological Society. Edited by Dr. JAMES A. H. MURRAY. Treble Section, PARGETER to PENNACHED. 7s. 6d. Complete Part, P to PENNACHED, 12s. 6d. Reissue in Monthly Parts, No. 68, INTROIT-I-WITE, 3s. 6d.

OXFORD MODERN FRENCH SERIES.

Crown 8vo, cloth. Edited by LEON DELBOS.

TWO NEW VOLUMES.

LES NORMANDS en ANGLETERRE et en FRANCE. From La Conquete de l'Angleterre par les Normands, by AUGUSTIN THIERRY. Edited by A. H. SMITH, M.A. Pp. 162, 2s. 6d.

Le SERMENT. By Jules David. Edited by Cecile Hugon. Pp. 94, 1s. 6d.

The EUTHYDEMUS of PLATO. With Revised Text, Introduction, Notes, and Indices. By EDWIN HAMILTON GIFFORD, D.D. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

The PRAYER-BOOK VERSION of the PSALMS. Printed Parallel with a New Version by S. R. DRIVER. Second Edition. Fcap. 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. net.

The BLAZON of EPISCOPACY: being the Arms borne by, or attributed to, the Archbishops and Bishops of England and Wales, with an Ordinary of the Coats described and other Episcopial Arms. By the late Rev. W. K. R. BEDFORD. Second Edition, with 1,000 Illustrations. 4to, buckram, 31s. 6d. net.

A PLEA for the HISTORICAL TEACHING of HISTORY. An Inaugural Lecture delivered on November 9, 1904, by C. H. FIRTH, M.A., Regius Professor of Modern History in the University of Oxford. 8vo, paper covers, 1s. net.

SATURDAY REVIEW.—"In publishing in pamphlet form his Inaugural Lecture, the Regius Professor does a real public service.....The few who read will find delight and true profit in this little pamphlet of thirty pages or so. It is almost as good as the matter in Aetion's occasional letters on historical subjects, in imagination—without which in good measure there can be no written history—in the depth of knowledge and the breadth of perspective."

GAI INSTITVTIONES; or, the Institutes of Roman Law. By Gaius. With Translation and Commentary by the late E. POSTE, M.A. Fourth Edition, Revised and Enlarged by E. A. WHITTUCK, M.A. B.C.L. With an Historical Introduction by A. H. J. GREENIDGE, D.Litt. 8vo, cloth, 16s. net.

The FACE of the EARTH (Das ANTLITZ DER ERDE). By Eduard Suess, Professor of Geology in the University of Vienna. Translated by HERTHA B. C. SOLLAS, Ph.D., Heidelberg, under the direction of W. J. SOLLAS, Professor of Geology in the University of Oxford. With a special Preface for the English Translation by Prof. SUESS. Vol. I. With 4 Maps and 50 other Illustrations. 25s. net.

STANDARD.—"English students are deeply indebted to Miss Hertha Sollas, who, under direction of her father, Prof. Sollas, is translating the 'Antlitz der Erde.' So well have they executed this difficult task that we frequently find ourselves forgetting the book was not originally written in English.....Prof. Suess has accumulated, by his unwearied labours, a vast store of facts, has marshalled them with a master's hand, and has given all who make a study of this planet's history a work exceptionally valuable, if only for its suggestiveness."

The ANCIENT RACES of the THEBAID. Being an Anthropometrical Study of the Inhabitants of Upper Egypt from the Earliest Prehistoric Times to the Mohammedan Conquest, based upon the Examination of over 1,500 Crania. By ARTHUR THOMSON, M.A. Oxon. M.B. Edin., Professor of Human Anatomy in the University of Oxford, and D. RANDALL-MACIVER, M.A. Imperial 4to, boards, with buckram back, with 6 Collotypes, 6 Lithographic Charts, and other Illustrations, 2l. 2s. net. [Immediately.]

ANNALS of BOTANY. Edited by Isaac Bayley Balfour, M.A. M.D. F.R.S., of the University of Edinburgh, D. H. SCOTT, M.A. Ph.D. F.R.S., of the Royal Gardens, Kew, W. G. FARLOW, M.D., of Harvard University, U.S.A., assisted by other Botanists. Vol. XVIII. No. LXXI. royal 8vo, paper covers, with 5 Plates and 1 Figure in the Text, 14s.

Contents.—H. M. WARD. Recent Researches on the Parasitism of Fungi.—J. ERIKSSON. On the Vegetative Life of some Uridineae.—A. J. MASLEN. The Relation of Root to Stem in Calamites.—F. CZAPPEK. The Anti-ferment Reaction in Tropistie Movements of Plants.—G. J. PEURCE. The Dissemination and Germination of Arceuthobium occidentale, Eng.—Miss E. SARGANT and Miss A. ROBERTSON. The Anatomy of the Scutellum in Zea Maïs.—E. S. SALMON. Further Cultural Experiments with 'Biologic Forms' of the Erysiphaceae.—S. H. VINES. The Proteases of Plants (III.).—Notes.

GEOMETRICAL POLITICAL ECONOMY: being an Elementary Treatise on the Method of Explaining some of the Theories of Pure Economic Science by means of Diagrams. By H. CUNYNGHAME, C.B. M.A. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d. net.

SCHOOL WORLD.—"The book ought to be in the hands of every student of political economy; the presentation of the graphical method is exceedingly clear, and should be well within the comprehension of any one who studies the science of economics."

The ELEMENTS of RAILWAY ECONOMICS. By W. M. Acworth, M.A. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. net.

London: HENRY FROWDE, Oxford University Press Warehouse, Amen Corner.

NOW READY.

Price 10s. 6d. net.

THE

NINTH SERIES

GENERAL INDEX OF NOTES AND QUERIES.

With Introduction by

JOSEPH KNIGHT, F.S.A.

This Index is double the size of previous ones, as it contains, in addition to the usual Index of Subjects, the Names and Pseudonyms of Writers, with a List of their Contributions. The number of constant Contributors exceeds eleven hundred. The Publisher reserves the right of increasing the price of the volume at any time. The number printed is limited, and the type has been distributed.

Free by post, 10s. 11d.

JOHN C. FRANCIS, Notes and Queries Office,
Bream's Buildings, E.C.

NOTES AND QUERIES.

GENERAL INDEXES.

THE FOLLOWING ARE STILL IN STOCK:—

|                    | £. | s. | d. |
|--------------------|----|----|----|
| GENERAL INDEX,     |    |    |    |
| FOURTH SERIES ...  | 3  | 3  | 0  |
| GENERAL INDEX,     |    |    |    |
| SIXTH SERIES ...   | 0  | 6  | 0  |
| GENERAL INDEX,     |    |    |    |
| SEVENTH SERIES ... | 0  | 6  | 0  |
| GENERAL INDEX,     |    |    |    |
| EIGHTH SERIES ...  | 0  | 6  | 0  |

For Copies by post an additional Three-pence is charged.

JOHN C. FRANCIS,
Notes and Queries Office,
11, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

TENTH EDITION, price Two Shillings.

CELESTIAL MOTIONS:

A Handy Book of Astronomy.

Tenth Edition. With 3 Plates.

By W. T. LYNN, B.A. F.R.A.S.

"Well known as one of our best introductions to astronomy."—Guardian.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & CO., LIMITED, St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, E.C.

SIXTH EDITION, fcap. 8vo, cloth, price Sixpence.

REMARKABLE ECLIPSES:

A Sketch of the most interesting Circumstances connected with the Observation of Solar and Lunar Eclipses, both in Ancient and Modern Times.

By W. T. LYNN, B.A. F.R.A.S.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & CO., LIMITED, St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, E.C.

THIRD EDITION, Revised to 1904, fcap. 8vo, cloth, price Sixpence.

ASTRONOMY FOR THE YOUNG.

By W. T. LYNN, B.A. F.R.A.S.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & CO., LIMITED, St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, E.C.

ELEVENTH EDITION JUST OUT, price Sixpence, cloth.

REMARKABLE COMETS:

A Brief Survey of the most interesting Facts in the History of Cometary Astronomy.

By W. T. LYNN, B.A. F.R.A.S.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & CO., LIMITED, St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, E.C.

SECOND EDITION, fcap. 8vo, price Fourpence,

NEW TESTAMENT CHRONOLOGY:

The Principal Events Recorded in the New Testament, Arranged under their Probable Respective Dates.

By WILLIAM THYNNE LYNN, B.A. F.R.A.S.,

Associate of King's College, London; Lay Reader in the Diocese of Rochester.
Author of 'Celestial Motions,' 'Remarkable Comets,' 'Remarkable Eclipses,' 'Astronomy for the Young,' &c.

London: SAMUEL BAGSTER & SONS, LIMITED, 15, Paternoster Row.

THIRD EDITION, REVISED AND ENLARGED.

THE PENNY CHRONOLOGY:

A Series of Important Dates in the History of the World from the Reign of David to the Present Time.

By W. T. LYNN, B.A. F.R.A.S.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & CO., LIMITED, St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, E.C.

DIGBY, LONG &amp; CO.'S NEW LIST.

THE ADVENTURES OF A NAVAL OFFICER.

By Capt. CHARLES HUNTER, R.N.
 Edited by Sir SPENSER ST. JOHN, G.C.M.G.
 In crown 8vo, cloth gilt, price 6s.

Morning Post.—"The story of Capt. Hunter's experiences is one of the most thrilling we have ever read. It is vivid in the extreme.... It is delightfully readable from beginning to end."

NEW SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.

BY THE AUTHOR OF 'THE CHAMELEON.'

THE DOLL'S DANCE.

By C. FORESTIER WALKER.

Pall Mall Gazette.—"A well-told and exciting story."

The LUCK of BELLA BARTON. By

G. W. APPLETON, Author of 'François the Valet.'
 With 6 Full-Page Illustrations by C. KEMP TEBBY.

Scotsman.—"An exciting bit of fiction."

Pall Mall Gazette.—"As a specimen of the galloping novel of police adventure and mystery, 'The Luck of Bella Barton' commands unstinted admiration. If we must have sensational literature, it would be pleasant to find more of it so cleverly designed as 'The Luck of Bella Barton.'"

The REDEMPTION of DAMIAN

GIER. By WINEFRIDE TRAFFORD TAUNTON,
 Author of 'Silent Dominion,' &c.

Morning Advertiser.—"An absorbing story. The authoress has already made a name for herself as a clever writer, but she has surpassed herself in the present instance.... A book which will not easily be forgotten."

CELIA'S FORTUNE.

Times.—"A well-told story." By ADELINE SERGEANT.

Scotsman.—"Celia is a sweet and lovable heroine."

Outlook.—"The novel shows Miss Sergeant's power at its ripest."

Manchester Courier.—"Well written, and full of vigorous interest."

The MANDARIN'S FAN.

By FERGUS HUME.

Scotsman.—"A story of absorbing interest."

FAVOURS from FRANCE.

By SARAH TYTLER.

World.—"Miss Sarah Tytler is always acceptable, and has seldom been more certain to please than by her latest novel. Miss Tytler has evolved a charming story."

Daily News.—"The book is well worth reading."

NEW BOOK ON PRISON LIFE.

BOLTS and BARS. By F. C. VERNON
 HARCOURT. In demy 8vo, specially designed cloth cover, with 14 Full-Page Illustrations, 3s. 6d.

Daily Telegraph.—"No better pictures of prison life have ever been written in this country."

London: DIGBY, LONG & CO. 18, Bouverie St., E.C.

NOW READY, with Illustrations, 2s. 6d. net; by post, 2s. 9d.

X RAYS: their Employment in Cancer and other Diseases.

By RICHARD J. COWEN, L.R.C.S.I. L.R.C.P.I., &c.

London: H. J. Glazier, 57, Wigmore Street, W.

NATIONAL PROVIDENT INSTITUTION

Estab.] 1835.

FOR MUTUAL LIFE ASSURANCE.

|                          |     |     |             |
|--------------------------|-----|-----|-------------|
| Accumulated Fund over    | ... | ... | £3,000,000  |
| Paid in Claims more than | ... | ... | £12,400,000 |

PROFITS.

These are divided every five years solely amongst the Assured. At the 1902 Division a Cash Profit of £761,602 was apportioned amongst the members, being considerably more than one-third of the amount paid in premiums during the previous five years.

ENDOWMENT-ASSURANCE

Policies are issued, combining Life Assurance at minimum cost with provision for old age, and are singularly advantageous.

L. F. HOVIL,

Actuary and Secretary.

48, Gracechurch Street, London, E.C.

Applications for Agencies invited.

VINO LIA

CREAM

relieves face-spots and itching.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

The best remedy for
 ACIDITY of the STOMACH, HEADACHE, HEARTBURN,
 GOUT, And INDIGESTION.

And Safest Aperient for Delicate Constitutions,
 Ladies, Children, and Infants.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

DAVID NUTT,

57-59, LONG ACRE.

JUST ISSUED TO SUBSCRIBERS.

THE MODERN LANGUAGE QUARTERLY.

Edited by WALTER W. GREG.

Vol. VII. No. 3 (Completing the Volume). 3s. 6d. net.

Contents.

KARL BREUL. SCHILLER as an HISTORIAN.

CONSTANCE BRUCE LOW. WIELAND and RICHARD-SON.

W. W. GREG. A DRAMATIC FRAGMENT.

DE V. PAYEN-PAYNE. JERSEY FRENCH.

OBSERVATIONS.—G. C. MOORE SMITH, Notes on 'Queen Hester.'—W. BANG, Hobson.—G. C. MOORE SMITH, Scattered Notes.

REVIEWS.—GEORGE SAINTSBURY, A History of Criticism and Literary Taste in Europe from the Earliest Times to the Present Day.—G. GREGORY SMITH, Elizabethan Critical Essays.—ARTHUR TILLEY, The Literature of the French Renaissance.—FRANCIS E. SANDBACH, The Nibelungenlied and Gudrun in England and America.—LOUISE VON COSSEL, A History of Theatrical Art.—LEWIS WAGER, The Life and Repentance of Marie Magdalene.—K. BRUNHUBER, Sir Philip Sidney's Arcadia und ihre Nachläufer.

MODERN LANGUAGE TEACHING:—

MODERN LANGUAGE ASSOCIATION.

FIRST REPORT of the 'MODERN LANGUAGE QUARTERLY' SUB-COMMITTEE.

SUPPLEMENTARY REGISTERS for TEACHERS.

The INTERNATIONAL PHONETIC ASSOCIATION.
 De la LITTÉRATURE dans les ÉCOLES.

COMMON FAULTS in METHOD, with some SUGGESTIONS.

EXAMINATIONS.

FROM HERE and THERE.

TITLE and CONTENTS to VOL. VII.

Vols. III. - VII. of the MODERN LANGUAGE QUARTERLY, the only Journal issued in the British Empire devoted to the scholarly investigation of the languages and literature of modern Europe, are now on sale in strong and handsome cloth covers, at 12s. net each. The five volumes will be offered to libraries and students up to June next, so far as the small stock allows, at 11. 10s. Possessors of odd volumes, who desire to complete the collection, are requested to communicate with the Publisher.

JUST ISSUED TO SUBSCRIBERS.

ZEITSCHRIFT für CELTISCHE

PHILOLOGIE. Vol. V. Part II. Demy 8vo, 230 pp.
 8s. net (8s. 4d. post free).

* * This Part contains the first accessible and scholarly edition of the most remarkable product of Irish Eighteenth-Century Literature, BRIAN MERRIMAN'S CUIRT AN MHEADHOIN OIDICHE (The Midnight Court), with German Translation, and elaborate Study on the Language, Metre, and Subject Matter of the Poem, by Dr. CH. L. STERN.

List of Contents of the ZEITSCHRIFT für CELTISCHE PHILOLOGIE, which comprise numerous Articles in English and English Translations of Irish and Welsh Texts, sent post free on application.

W. C. BENNETT'S POEMS.

The GOLDEN LIBRARY.—Square 16mo, cloth, 2s.

SONGS FOR SAILORS.

Morning Post.—"Spirited, melodious, and vigorously graphic."

Daily News.—"Very spirited."

Pall Mall Gazette.—"Really admirable."

Morning Advertiser.—"Sure of a wide popularity."

John Bull.—"Very successful."

Metropolitan.—"Instinct with patriotic fire."

Illustrated London News.—"Right well done."

News of the World.—"There is real poetry in these songs."

Mirror.—"With admirable felicity he embodies national sentiments and emotions which stir the hearts of the people."

Echo.—"These songs are literally written for sailors, and they are precisely the kind of songs that sailors most enjoy."

Nonconformist.—"These songs bear a true literary mark, and give out the genuine ring."

Leeds Mercury.—"There is no one nowadays who can compete with Dr. Bennett as a popular song-writer. In his volume of sea songs we find the qualities which must secure his success."

Liverpool Mail.—"Dr. Bennett has devoted his lyrical powers to a noble object in this comprehensive yet inexpensive work. This gem deserves to be patronized not only by our entire Royal Navy, but by all our Sailors' Homes and all our Mercantile Marine Associations."

Examiner.—"Full of incident and strongly expressed sentiment, and having a simple, dashing, musical roll and movement that reminds us of some songs that are favourable with all sailors, and the touches of humour he introduces are precisely of the kind that they will relish."

Scotsman.—"Dr. Bennett's heart is thoroughly in his work.... All spirited and vigorous. There is a healthy, manly, fresh-air dash about them which ought to make them popular with the class for whose use and pleasure they are designed."

Chatto & Windus, 111, St. Martin's Lane, W.C.

In 2 vols. crown 8vo, with 2 Portraits, 24s.

JOHN FRANCIS and the 'ATHENÆUM.'

A Literary Chronicle of Half a Century.

By JOHN C. FRANCIS.

Macmillan & Co., Limited, London.

MR. EDWARD ARNOLD'S NEW BOOKS.

THIRD IMPRESSION IN THE PRESS.

THE UNVEILING OF LHASA.

By EDMUND CANDLER.

With a large number of Illustrations and a Map.

Demy 8vo, 15s. net.

WESTMINSTER GAZETTE.—"The everyday incidents and accidents make the real romance of the enterprise. They are set forth in Mr. Candler's account with a vividness and charm which make the whole volume delightful reading."

STANDARD.—"Of interest from cover to cover."

MORNING POST.—"This lively account of a highly remarkable undertaking, and of a land, a city, and a people of extraordinary interest."

ST. JAMES'S GAZETTE.—"An extremely interesting story, as well as a record of events."

ALESSANDRO SCARLATTI:

His Life and Works.

By EDWARD J. DENT,

Fellow of King's College, Cambridge.

Royal 8vo, with 100 Musical Illustrations, 12s. 6d. net.

THE EVOLUTION THEORY.

By AUGUST WEISMANN,

Professor of Zoology in the University of Freiburg.

Translated by Prof. J. ARTHUR THOMSON.

2 vols. royal 8vo, with many Illustrations, 32s. net.

STANDARD.—"Whether the Evolution Theory does or does not command our allegiance, we close the book with the sense that we have been listening not only to a man of exceptional learning, but also to one of great intellectual power. It is permeated by the same serene, judicial, and philosophic spirit as the writings of our own Darwin."

London: EDWARD ARNOLD,

41 and 43, Maddox Street, W.

JARROLD &amp; SONS' PUBLICATIONS.

FOURTH EDITION.

TALES FROM GORKY. 6s.

Translated from the Russian by R. NISBET BAIN. With Photogravure Portrait and Biography of Maxim Gorky.

"There is no photograph here, all is drawn and selected. One feels that he felt Maxim Gorky has all the notes of a genuine and unmistakable literary genius. Half-a-dozen deft touches, and there is your picture. In a paragraph he has infected you with the emotion he himself experienced at the moment he presents."—Daily Chronicle.

FOURTH EDITION.

TALES FROM TOLSTOI. 6s.

Translated from the Russian by R. NISBET BAIN. With Biography and Portrait of Count Leo Tolstoi.

These tales include some of the finest fruits of Count Tolstoi's genius. They are vivid pictures of the life of the lower classes of Russia, showing us what manner of men the Muscovite peasant and the Muscovite trader really are.

"The book is well worth reading; it is absorbing."—Daily Express.

THIRD EDITION.

MORE TALES FROM TOLSTOI. 6s.

Translated from the Russian by R. NISBET BAIN. With the latest Photograph of Count Leo Tolstoi and Biography brought up to date.

"No admirer of Tolstoi is likely to miss reading this book. 'The Snowstorm' is a brilliant piece of writing. Every page is living and full of colour."—Daily Mail.

JOKAI'S FAMOUS RUSSIAN NOVEL.

EIGHTH EDITION.

THE GREEN BOOK; 6s.

Or, Freedom under the Snow.

By Dr. MAURUS JOKAI. Translated by Mrs. ELLEN WAUGH. With Photogravure Portrait of Dr. Jokai.

"Is truly an astonishing book, dealing with the empire of Russia. All the superficial culture and essential barbarism of the country are depicted in these pages."—Daily Telegraph.

THE STORY OF A PERILOUS QUEST IN RUSSIA.

THIRD EDITION.

CALLED BACK TO TSARLAND. 6s.

By FRED WHISHAW.

Deals with the clever contrivance of a band of nihilistic conspirators. Russian local colour is a strong point in the volume, and here Mr. Whishaw's footing is of the surest.

"A good story, with plenty of incident, ingenious and lively."—Athenæum.

London:

JARROLD & SONS, 10 and 11, Warwick Lane, E.C.

SMITH, ELDER &amp; CO.'S PUBLICATIONS.

With a Frontispiece, crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

TO LHASSA AT LAST.

By POWELL MILLINGTON,

Author of 'In Cantonments,' 'In and Beyond Cantonments,' &amp;c.

WORLD.—"Mr. Millington's breezy narrative.....carries the reader along with it."TIMES.—"A cheery, discursive little book."STANDARD.—"For an entertaining description of what might be called the social side of the expedition it is excellent."

SHORTLY, with a Portrait Frontispiece, small demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

TRACKS OF A ROLLING STONE.

By the Hon. HENRY J. COKE,

Author of 'A Ride over the Rocky Mountains,' 'Creeds of the Day,' &amp;c.

The STORY of an INDIAN UPLAND. By F. B. Bradley-Birt,

B.A.Oxon. F.R.G.S. I.C.S., Author of 'Chota Nagpore: a Little-known Province of the Empire,' &amp;c. With an Introduction by the Hon. H. H. RISLEY, C.S.I. C.I.E., Home Secretary to the Government of India. With 20 Full-Page Illustrations. Demy 8vo, probably 12s. 6d. net. [Shortly.]

PROBLEMS in MANŒUVRE TACTICS, with SOLUTIONS, for OFFICERS of ALL ARMS. By Major HOPPENSTEDT, Instructor at the War School, Potsdam. Translated and Adapted by Major J. H. V. CROWE, R.A. p.s.c., Instructor at the Royal Military Academy. With Maps. Small demy 8vo, 6s. net. [Shortly.]

HISTORICAL MYSTERIES. By Andrew Lang. With a

Frontispiece in Photogravure. Small demy 8vo, 9s. net.

WESTMINSTER GAZETTE.—"All are excellent 'mysteries,' and such as attract the curious or speculative mind."SPECTATOR.—"These stories are quite as sensational as any romance, and are told with a wit and a vivacity which few writers of fiction can hope to attain to."ST. JAMES'S GAZETTE.—"Rich and absorbing is the entertainment provided for the lover of the strange and obscure in this volume."COLONIAL MEMORIES. By Lady Broome, Authoress (as Lady Barker) of 'Ribbon Stories,' 'Stories about ———,' &amp;c. Large post 8vo, 6s. net.

PUNCH.—"Very pleasant reading, being imbued with the unaffected art of a traveller's letters home."TIMES.—"Written with first-hand knowledge and a pleasing sense of humour."LEAVES from the DIARY of HENRY GREVILLE. Third Series.

By ALICE, COUNTESS OF STRAFFORD. 8vo, 14s.

TRUTH.—"Excellent reading from the first page to the last. There are many very good and quite new stories about well-known people."MANCHESTER COURIER.—"The book contains several good and pungent anecdotes, and has scarcely a dull page, for it is full of keen observation, vivid expression, and kindly wit."NEW AND CHEAPER EDITIONS OF TWO POPULAR BOOKS.

SHORTLY, crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. each.

The TRAGEDY of the "KOROSKO."

By A. CONAN DOYLE. With 40 Full-Page Illustrations.

SPEAKER.—"It is dangerous to describe any work of fiction in these days of a prolific press as a masterpiece, yet there cannot be any doubt that the work is strictly applicable to Mr. Conan Doyle's 'Tragedy of the "Korosko."'"The GREEN FLAG, and other Stories of War and Sport. By A. CONAN DOYLE. With a Frontispiece.

YORKSHIRE POST.—"There is not a weak story or dull page in this volume. Constructive skill, genuine humour, and a masterly style combine to make this the most attractive volume of short stories we have for some time seen."NEW NOVEL BY MRS. HENRY DE LA PASTURE.

On FEBRUARY 10, crown 8vo, 6s.

PETER'S MOTHER.

By Mrs. HENRY DE LA PASTURE,

AUTHOR OF 'DEBORAH OF TOD'S,' 'ADAM GRIGSON,' 'CORNELIUS,' &amp;c.

JULIA. Second Impression.

By KATHARINE TYNAN. Crown 8vo, 6s.

WESTMINSTER GAZETTE.—"A delightful picture of Irish life."LADIES' FIELD.—"A fine Irish novel.....A sweet and wholesome love story, which we are thankful to say ends happily. We have read the novel with real enjoyment."TWO POPULAR NOVELS.
THE TRUANTS.

BY

A. E. W. MASON,

Author of 'Miranda of the Balcony,'
'The Four Feathers,' &c.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

SATURDAY REVIEW.—"A thoroughly good piece of work. The story is interesting and admirably worked up. The characters are well described, and the style is forcible and direct."SPECTATOR.—"Mr. Mason's new book confirms us in our opinion as to the real sphere for his talents. It is a pleasure to find an author with so keen an eye to the romantic accessories of life, so robust a philosophy, and the power of drawing character so shrewdly and sanely."MORNING POST.—"The story is one of unusual interest, and it is told with the restrained force of a man who has strength, and, with strength, the power to control it."GUARDIAN.—"A book full of true human interest and sympathy, and with a fine lofty tone; and it deserves to be widely read."FANTASY FAIR.—"Mr. Mason's story takes a good hold on the reader's interest, and does not let go till the end."THE LAST HOPE.

BY

H. SETON MERRIMAN.

THIRD IMPRESSION (SECOND EDITION).

Crown 8vo, 6s.

SPECTATOR.—"The motive of 'The Last Hope' is excellently adapted for the display of Mr. Merriman's peculiar qualities. It is the tale of a Pretender, but of a Pretender malgré lui. The portraiture of the story is varied and well contrasted. In the hero Mr. Merriman has well indicated the conflicting elements due to his mixed nationality, and invested him with a charm which engages the sympathy of the reader throughout."GUARDIAN.—"We like Mr. Merriman's description of the sea and the sailor as well as anything he has ever written, and we read this last book with mingled admiration and regret."WESTMINSTER GAZETTE.—"In characterization and invention, and in the charm that holds us throughout to the very last line of the story, we do not think 'The Last Hope' is excelled by any previous novel of his, excellent as some of these are."TRUTH.—"Your interest in his character and his exploits, and in the tangle of breathless adventures and enterprises of which he is the inspiration and object, never flags for a moment from the start to the sad finish of this fine novel."RAPID REVIEW.—"It is very enjoyable from the first page to the last, and always a book in which we feel that we need not be ashamed of being absorbed."THE CORNHILL MAGAZINE

For FEBRUARY. Price ONE SHILLING.

Contents.

ROSE of the WORLD. Book II. Chaps. 16-18. By Agnes and Egerton Castle.

The LUNGS of the HOUSE of COMMONS. By Henry W. Lucy.

A RUSSIAN NAPOLEON. By Maurice Church.

KINGSTON, JAMAICA. By Frank T. Bullen, F.R.G.S.

OLD-TIME NEWFOUNDLAND. By his Honour Judge Prowse.

CLIMBING the (JOINT-STOCK) TREE. By George Yard.

ON WEIGHING ATOMS. By W. A. Shenstone, F.R.S.

SYLVESTER EVE. By L. H.

SOME RECOLLECTIONS of ACTIVE SERVICE. By Major-General T. Maunsell, C.B.

The TWO HARES. By W. H. Rainsford.

The KING'S REVOKE. Chaps. 3-5. By Mrs. Margaret L. Woods.

London: SMITH, ELDER &amp; CO. 15, Waterloo Place, S.W.

Editorial Communications should be addressed to "The Editor"—Advertisements and Business Letters to "The Publisher"—at the Office, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

Published Weekly by JOHN C. FRANCIS at Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C., and Printed by JOHN EDWARD FRANCIS, Athenæum Press, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

Agents for Scotland, Messrs. Bell &amp; Bradburn and Mr. John Menzies, Edinburgh.—Saturday, February 4, 1905.

THE ATHENÆUM

Journal of English and Foreign Literature, Science, the Fine Arts, Music and the Drama.

No. 4033.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 11, 1905.

PRICE
THREEPENCE
REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER

BRITISH ARCHÆOLOGICAL ASSOCIATION,
32, Sackville Street, W. — EVENING MEETING, FEBRUARY 15, at 8 o'clock. The following Paper will be read:—
"London, Monastic and Ecclesiastical," by ANDREW OLIVER, Esq., A.R.I.B.A., with Lantern Illustrations.
GEO. PATRICK, Hon. Secretary.

GEOLOGICAL SOCIETY of LONDON.
The ANNIVERSARY MEETING of this Society will be held at the SOCIETY'S APARTMENTS, BURLINGTON HOUSE, on FRIDAY, February 17, at 3 o'clock.
The Fellows and their Friends will DINE together at the CRITERION RESTAURANT, Piccadilly Circus, at 7.30 p.m. Tickets to be obtained at the Society's Apartments.

ROYAL HISTORICAL SOCIETY.
(Incorporated by Royal Charter.)
The ANNIVERSARY MEETING of the SOCIETY will be held on THURSDAY, February 16, at 5 p.m., in CLIFFORD'S INN HALL, FLEET STREET, when the President will deliver an Address.

THE FOLK-LORE SOCIETY. — The NEXT MEETING of the SOCIETY will be held at 22, ALBEMARLE STREET, PICCADILLY, on WEDNESDAY, February 15, at 8 p.m., when a Paper, entitled "The Ragnarok and Valhalla Myths, and Evidence from which they date," will be read by Mr. A. F. MAJOR.
F. A. MILNE, Secretary.
11, Old Square, Lincoln's Inn, W.C., February 3, 1905.

FRENCH MASTERS.—DURAND-RUEL & SONS,
of Paris.—EXHIBITION of 315 PICTURES by BOUDIN, CÉZANNE, DEGAS, MANET, MONET, MORISOT, PISSARRO, RENOIR, SISLEY.—GRAFTON GALLERIES, Grafton Street, Bond Street, DAILY (till February 25), 10-6. Admission 1s.

ETCHINGS by MAXIME LALANNE, 1827-86.
The late Artist's magnificent Collection.
Now on view at Mr. R. GUTENKUNST'S,
10, King Street, St. James's, S.W., 10 to 6 DAILY. Admission 1s.

TO TRUSTEES and Others. — A LADY of experience and highly recommended can RECEIVE into her own HOME a young WARD in CHANCERY or the CHILDREN of ONE FAMILY for reliable guardianship and capable supervision of Education.—Write, first, RICHARD, Box 977, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

PARIS.—Prof. HERBERT, 11, Rue Treilhart, near Champs Élysées, is open to ACCOMMODATE ONE PUPIL above 18 to attend any High School. Best London Reference.

EDUCATION.
Parents or Guardians desiring accurate information relative to the CHOICE of SCHOOLS for BOYS or GIRLS or TUTOR in England or Abroad are invited to call upon or send fully detailed particulars to MESSRS. GABBITAS, THRING & CO.,
who for more than thirty years have been closely in touch with the leading Educational Establishments.
Advice, free of charge, is given by Mr. Thring, Nephew of the late Head Master of Uppingham, 36, Sackville Street, London, W.

RHODES UNIVERSITY COLLEGE,
GRAHAMSTOWN, CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.
Established by Act of Parliament, 1901

Applications are invited for the following Professorships, viz.:—
1. LATIN and CLASSICAL LITERATURE and PHILOLOGY. Salary, 500l. per annum.
2. PHILOSOPHY and HISTORY. Salary, 500l. per annum.
3. APPLIED MATHEMATICS and PHYSICS. Salary, 500l. per annum.
4. GEOLOGY. Salary, 350l. per annum.
5. ZOOLOGY. Salary, 350l. per annum.
The Professors of Geology and Zoology will also hold appointments in connection with the Albany Museum, for which they will receive an additional salary of 150l. each per annum.
Further particulars may be obtained from the AGENT GENERAL for the CAPE of GOOD HOPE, 100, Victoria Street, Westminster, London, to whom applications, with copies of Testimonials, should be sent on or before March 15, 1905.
Applicants must be under forty years of age, and must furnish a certificate of good health.
Successful Candidates will be required to enter upon their duties at Grahamstown on July 25, 1905.

DIOCESAN TRAINING COLLEGE, YORK.
VICE-PRINCIPAL REQUIRED for NEXT TERM. Must be in Holy Orders, Unmarried, and a good Teacher and Disciplinarian. Salary to begin with 200l. per annum, along with Board, Residence, and Washing.—Applications, with Three Testimonials only, to be sent to
J. T. WARE, Esq.,
6, New Street, York.

GOSPORT and ALVERSTOKE SECONDARY SCHOOL.
Applications are invited for the post of an ASSISTANT MISTRESS in the SCHOOL. Duties to commence at the beginning of MAY.
Candidates should be well qualified in ordinary Form Subjects, Needlework, and Physical Exercises, and should be registered, or qualified for registration, in Column B of the Register of Teachers.
The salary will commence at 110l. per annum, and will come under a scale of salaries to be adopted shortly.
Further particulars may be obtained from the HEAD MASTER, by whom applications should be received not later than FEBRUARY 23 NEXT.

EAST HAM TECHNICAL COLLEGE.
SECONDARY SCHOOL FOR BOYS AND GIRLS.
The COMMITTEE invite applications for the post of ASSISTANT MISTRESS, who must be qualified to give instruction in French in addition to the usual English subjects. Salary offered 100l. per annum.—Applications must be made on the Printed Forms, which may be obtained from the undersigned. Canvassing Members of the Committee, directly or indirectly, will be a disqualification.
W. H. BARKER, B.Sc.
Technical College, East Ham, E.

CITY of HULL.

EDUCATION COMMITTEE.
The above COMMITTEE require the services of an ASSISTANT ART TEACHER at the MUNICIPAL SCHOOL of ART, who will be required to devote the whole of his time to the service of the Committee. Salary 55l. per annum.
Applications, stating age, qualifications, and experience, accompanied by copies of three recent Testimonials, must be sent to Mr. J. H. Parkyn, A.R.C.A., Head Master, School of Art, Albion Street, Hull, on or before FEBRUARY 28, 1905.
Canvassing will be considered a disqualification.
J. T. RILEY, Secretary of Education.
Education Offices, Albion Street, Hull, January 23, 1905.

COUNTY BOROUGH of BELFAST.

BELFAST PUBLIC LIBRARY.
The COMMITTEE are prepared to receive applications for the post of CURATOR of the ART GALLERY and MUSEUM from competent persons, at a salary commencing at 150l. per annum. Age not to exceed 40.
The Gentleman appointed will be required to give his entire time to his official duties.
Apply, stating experience, and enclosing copies of Testimonials, to be sent to the undersigned on or before WEDNESDAY, February 22, 1905.
SAMUEL BLACK, Town Clerk.

BOROUGH of LOWESTOFT.

EDUCATION COMMITTEE.
The COMMITTEE invite applications for the appointment of CHIEF LIBRARIAN for the LOWESTOFT FREE LIBRARY.
Applicants, between 25 and 40 years of age, must give evidence of practical experience in Public Library Work.
Preference to Applicants experienced in the Indicator System.
Salary 100l. per annum.
Applications, marked "Chief Librarian," stating age, qualifications, and experience, with copies of not more than three recent Testimonials, should reach the undersigned by FEBRUARY 25.
Canvassing, directly or indirectly, will disqualify.
R. BEATTIE NICHOLSON, Town Clerk.
Town Hall, Lowestoft, February 6, 1905.

YOUTH, aged 19, seeks post as LIBRARY ASSISTANT to Institute, Society, or Club (or similar post).—Apply H. T. H., 23, South Audley Street, W.

ADVERTISER, who has been in the service of a well-known Literary Man for nineteen years, is anxious to obtain a post as an ASSISTANT in a LIBRARY or BOOKSELLER'S SHOP. Can be highly recommended. Age 30.—Box 982, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

ASSISTANT EDITORSHIP WANTED by a GENTLEMAN. Has had great experience, and was four years Editor of a Colonial Daily. Special knowledge of Far East.—Address Box 963, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

ADVERTISER desires post as LITERARY ADVISER to PUBLISHING FIRM. University Classical Honours Man.—Address A. H. S., Box 962, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

UNIVERSITY MAN (27), with knowledge of Anglo-Saxon, &c., and of Oriental Subjects, desires, after Easter, APPOINTMENT as READER, or in other suitable capacity, to Firm publishing Educational or similar Works.—Address X. Y. Z., care of 10, Oat Lane, Wood Street, E.C.

JOURNALISM GRATIS.—OXFORD UNDER-GRADUATE, Scholar of his College, OFFERS his SERVICES to a LONDON PAPER or MAGAZINE. Has already had experience in Office of one Journal, Editor of which will give Reference.—Box 985, Athenæum Press, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

GENTLEMAN, young and energetic, desires RE-ENGAGEMENT as PUBLISHER'S REPRESENTATIVE. Suburbs and Country. Highest references.—Address Box 983, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

PUBLISHING.—ADVERTISER, 30, energetic, with fourteen years' all-round experience of Publishing, Advertising, Indexing, Cataloguing, Book Production and Advertising, and Accounts, SEEKS SIMILAR POSITION. Good references. Accept moderate salary if prospect of advance.—Apply by letter F. J., care of Street's, 8, Serle Street, W.C.

LADY, Anglo-German, Shorthand Typist, excellent French, desires ONE to TWO HOURS' SECRETARIAL WORK (MORNINGS), preferably with Literary Lady or Gentleman. Would also work for Translation Bureau.—O., 23, Adamson Road, South Hampstead.

TRANSLATION, REVISION, RESEARCH, REVIEWING, INDEXING, and other LITERARY WORK, or non-resident Secretaryship. Classics, French, German, Italian. Special Subjects, Mythology and Literature. Varied experience.—Miss SELBY, 53, Talbot Road, W.

LITERARY RESEARCH undertaken at the British Museum and elsewhere on moderate terms. Excellent Testimonials.—A. B., Box 910, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

NEWSPAPER PROPERTIES BOUGHT, SOLD, VALUED, and supplied with every requisite. Write for The COMPLETE JOURNALIST, sent post free.
The Imperial News Agency.
London 22 and 1, Fodor Street, E.C.
America: 700-706, Fourteenth Street, N.W., Washington, D.C.

C. MITCHELL & SONS, Agents for the Sale and Purchase of Newspapers, and undertake Valuations for Probate or Purchase, and Audit of Accounts, &c. Card of Terms on application.
Mitchell House, 1 and 2, 11, Holborn Viaduct, E.C.

Yearly Subscription, free by post, Inland, 15s. 3d.; Foreign, 18s. Entered at the New York Post Office as Second Class matter.

FRANCE.—The ATHENÆUM can be obtained at the following Railway Stations in France:—

AMIENS, ANTIBES, BEAULIEU-SUR-MER, BIARRITZ, BORDEAUX, BOULOGNE-SUR-MER, CALAIS, CANNES, DIJON, DUNKIRK, HAVRE, LILLE, LYONS, MARSEILLES, MENTONE, MONACO, NANTES, NICE, PARIS, PAU, SAINT RAPHAEL, TOURS, TOULON.

PARIS: W. H. SMITH & SON, 248, Rue de Rivoli; and at the GALIGNANI LIBRARY, 224, Rue de Rivoli.

OCCUPATION with INVESTMENT.—A capital opportunity presents itself for acquiring a HALF SHARE in a well-known PUBLISHING BUSINESS for 2,000l. Salary 250l., plus half share of the profits. Principals or their Solicitors only, write.—Box 984, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

BOOKSELLER'S, STATIONER'S, and PUBLISHER'S BUSINESS FOR SALE by PRIVATE TREATY.

The STOCK-IN-TRADE and GOODWILL of a first-class old-established BOOKSELLER'S, STATIONER'S, and PUBLISHER'S BUSINESS in an important Town in Scotland is FOR SALE by PRIVATE BARGAIN. The turnover last year amounted to over 3,000l., and is capable of considerable extension.
The Stock will be taken over at mutual valuation.
A Lease of the Shop will be granted at a fair rent.
This is an excellent opportunity for the acquisition of a first-class Business.
Satisfactory reasons will be given for the disposal of the Business.
Apply to Messrs. HENRY & SONS, W.S., 20, St. Andrew Square, Edinburgh.
Edinburgh, February 6, 1905.

SHORTHAND and TYPE-WRITING.—Authors' MSS., Plays, Sermons, Reports, &c., 9d. per 1,000. Legal and General Copying. Accuracy and Despatch guaranteed.—Miss N. E. ROBINSON, 8, Westover Road, Wandsworth Common, London, S.W.

TYPE-WRITING promptly and accurately done. Ten years' experience. Excellent references. 10d. per 1,000 words. Reduction for quantity.—Miss MASON, The Orchard, Cotterill Road, Surbiton, S.W.

TYPE-WRITING undertaken by highly educated Women (Classical Tripos; Cambridge Higher Local; Modern Languages). Research, Revision, Translation.—THE CAMBRIDGE TYPE-WRITING AGENCY, 10, Duke Street, Adelphi, W.C.

AUTHORS' MSS., SERMONS, PLAYS, ENVELOPES, CIRCULARS, and all kinds, TYPED at home (Remington), 9d. per 1,000. Good paper. Orders promptly executed.—M. L., 7, Vernon Road, Clapham.

TYPE-WRITING.—MSS., SCIENTIFIC, and of all Descriptions, COPIED. Special attention to work requiring care. Dictation Rooms (Shorthand or Type-writing). Usual Terms.—Misses E. B. and I. FARRAN, Donington House, 30, Norfolk Street, Strand, London.

TYPE-WRITING.—SERMONS, AUTHORS' MSS., &c., carefully and promptly executed. 8d. per 1,000 words, paper included.—Miss A. MASON, Strathairny, Southfleet Avenue, Longfield, Kent.

TYPE-WRITER.—AUTHORS' PLAYS, MSS., &c., of every description. Carbon and other Copies. MS. from Dictation quickly and accurately.—Miss E. M. TRICK, 5, Maidland Park Road, Haverstock Hill, N.W. Established 1881.

TYPE-WRITING.—The WEST KENSINGTON OFFICES. Authors' MSS., Translations, &c. Legal and General Copying. Circulars, &c., duplicated. Usual terms. References. Established twelve years.—Sims & Sims, 220, Hammersmith Road, W. (Private Address: 13, Wolverton Gardens, Hammersmith.)

AUTHORS' MSS., NOVELS, SERMONS, PLAYS, REVIEWS TYPE-WRITTEN accurately and promptly, 9d. per 1,000 words. References to well-known Writers.—M. STUART, Thirlbank, Roxborough Road, Harrow.

AUTHORS' MSS., SERMONS, REVIEWS, NOVELS, &c., accurately TYPED, 6d. per 1,000 words. Satisfaction guaranteed. Highly recommended.—C. S. W., 11, Primrose Terrace, Gravesend.

PROPRIETORS of BOOK PUBLISHING, Newspaper, or kindred concerns requiring active PARTNERS, INVESTORS, or to SELL.—Publishers' Readers, Editors, Managers, &c., seeking PARTNERSHIPS, sound INVESTMENTS, or to PURCHASE, write MAX GERR, 20, Yukon Road, Balham. Established 1872.

MR. GEORGE LARNER, Accountant and Licensed Valuer to the Bookselling, Publishing, Newspaper, Printing, and Stationery Trades. Partnerships Arranged. Balance Sheets and Trading Accounts Prepared and Audited. All Business carried out under Mr. Larner's personal supervision.—25, 29, and 30, Paternoster Row, E.C. Secretary to the Bookellers' Provident Institution.

THE AUTHOR'S AGENCY.—Established 1879. The interests of Authors capably represented. Agreements for Publishing arranged. MSS. placed with Publishers.—Terms and Testimonials on application to Mr. A. M. BURNES, 24, Paternoster Row.

ATHENÆUM PRESS.—JOHN EDWARD FRANCIS, Printer of the Athenæum, Notes and Queries, &c., is prepared to SUBMIT ESTIMATES for all kinds of BOOK, NEWS, and PERIODICAL PRINTING.—13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

J. M. DENT &amp; CO.'S LIST.

TO BE COMPLETED IN 12 MONTHS.
DENT'S

COMPLETE
TOLSTOY.

SPECIAL NOTE.—Not only will Dent's 'TOLSTOY' be completed in 12 Months, but it will contain everything written by the great Russian Author up to 1905, including a Thought-Index to all the important thoughts and ideas in the works, together with a Biography, Bibliography, and Critical Analysis.

Large crown 8vo, illustrated, 3s. 6d. net per vol. (sold separately).

Edited and Translated by Prof. LEO WIENER, Professor of Slavic Languages and Literature at Harvard University, and Author of 'An Anthology of Russian Literature,' 'Yiddish Literature in the Nineteenth Century,' &c.

FIRST FOUR VOLUMES NOW READY.

Vol. I.—CHILDHOOD, BOYHOOD, YOUTH. 1852-1857.

Vol. II.—The COSSACKS, SEVASTOPOL, &c. 1852-1855.

Vol. III.—A MOSCOW ACQUAINTANCE. The SNOWSTORM, DOMESTIC HAPPINESS, &c. 1856-1859.

Vol. IV.—P E D A G O G I C A L ARTICLES, The LINEN MEASURER. 1861-1862.

Also Large-Paper Edition. Sets only, 10s. 6d. net per vol.

FIRST NOTICE.

The ST. JAMES'S GAZETTE says:—"The translator appears to have produced a good, serviceable translation, devoid of affectation and the obtrusion of Russian words—the latter a rock on which certain of his predecessors have split—and faithful, as he claims, to the author's rugged strength."

Les Classiques Français.

Edited by DANIEL S. O'CONNOR.

Pott 8vo, cloth, 1s. 6d. net; limp lambskin, 2s. 6d. net.

PAUL et VIRGINIE. By Bernardin DE ST. PIERRE. Préface de Vicomte MELCHIOR DE VOGÜÉ, de l'Académie Française.

ATALA, RENE, et Le DERNIER ABENCÉRAGE. Par CHATEAUBRIAND. Préface de Vicomte MELCHIOR DE VOGÜÉ, de l'Académie Française.

CONTES CHOISIS de BALZAC.

Préface de PAUL BOURGET, de l'Académie Française.

Please write for Prospectus.

MEDIÆVAL TOWNS.

The DAILY TELEGRAPH, speaking of the Series generally, says:—"Admitted to be quite the best of its kind, and combining with much scholarship and critical investigation the most valuable features of a guide-book."

NEARLY READY. NEW VOLUME.

VENICE. VENICE. VENICE.†

By THOMAS OKEY.

Illustrated by NELLY ERICHSEN.

ASSISI.* BRUGES.† CAIRO.† CHARTRES.† CONSTANTINOPLE.* FERRARA.† FLORENCE.† LONDON.† MOSCOW.* NUREMBERG.* PERUGIA.* PRAGUE.* ROME.† ROUEN.† SEVILLE.† SIENA.† TOLEDO.* VERONA.†

Pocketable, * cloth, 3s. 6d. net; roan, 4s. 6d. net.

† Cloth, 4s. 6d. net; roan, 5s. 6d. net.

COMPANION VOLUME.

Cloth, 2s. 6d. net; roan, 3s. 6d. net.

THROUGH THE CASENTINO.

Prospectuses and Lists post free on application.

London:

J. M. DENT & CO. 29 and 30, Bedford Street, W.C.

FROM DUCKWORTH &amp; CO.'S LIST.

CRITICAL ESSAYS AND FRAGMENTS.

By the late S. ARTHUR STRONG. With Memoir by LORD BALCARRES. Royal 8vo, with 24 Illustrations. [In preparation.]

A LIFE OF WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE.

By Dr. W. J. ROLFE. Demy 8vo, 8 Illustrations, 10s. 6d. net.

[Just out.]

ALBERT DURER.

By T. STURGE MOORE, Author of 'The Centaur's Booty,' &c. With four Copperplates and 50 Half-tone Engravings. Pott 4to, 7s. 6d. net. [Just out.]

A BOOK OF THE SEASON. FULL OF GOOD STORIES.
IN DEMAND EVERYWHERE.

THE REMINISCENCES OF AN IRISH LAND AGENT.

Being those of SAMUEL H. HUSSEY. Compiled by HOME GORDON. Royal 8vo, with 2 Photogravure Portraits, 12s. 6d. net.

"Wherever you open his book you will find a good story or a flash of wit."—Daily Mail.

"A more vivacious, candid, or indiscreet recital we have seldom encountered. A human document, a storehouse of anecdote and of shrewd obiter dicta. Very entertaining book."—Spectator.

METAPSYCHICAL PHENOMENA.

By Dr. JOSEPH MAXWELL. Translated by Mrs. FINCH. With Prefaces by Sir OLIVER LODGE and Prof. CH. RICHEL. Large crown 8vo, 10s. net. [In the press.]

This book is probably the most important contribution of recent years in the way of a scientific and methodical examination of the phenomena variously known as "spiritistic," "occult," or, to use the term now suggested by M. Richet, "metapsychical."

NEW BOOK BY G. S. STREET,

WHOSE WITTY PLAY HAS JUST BEEN PRODUCED BY THE STAGE SOCIETY.

"Of all light essayists there are few more consistently engaging. Mr. Street never writes a foolish thing—seldom, indeed, anything that is not remarkably clever."—Daily Chronicle.

BOOKS AND THINGS.

A Volume of Essays. By G. S. STREET. Crown 8vo, 6s.

PROGRESS.

PROGRESS.

By R. B. CUNNINGHAME GRAHAM. Crown 8vo, 6s.

[Just out.]

"In 'Progress' he is himself from beginning to end.....He is an artist.....The book cannot fail to absorb..... There is that which not only arrests, but imprisons the imagination."—Daily Chronicle.

THE GREY BRETHREN.

By MICHAEL FAIRLESS, Author of 'The Roadmender.' Uniform with 'The Roadmender.' Cloth, 2s. 6d. net; leather, 3s. 6d. net. [Immediately.]

AUGUSTE RODIN.

By CAMILLE MAUCLAIR, Author of 'The Great French Painters,' 'French Impressionists.' With 40 Illustrations. Photogravure Frontispiece. Crown 4to, 10s. 6d. net. [Next week.]

VELAZQUEZ.

By AUGUSTE BREAL, Author of 'Rembrandt.' With 45 Illustrations. Cloth, 2s. net; leather, 2s. 6d. net. [In the Press.]

NEW FICTION.

SECOND IMPRESSION NOW READY.

THE PURPLE LAND.

By W. H. HUDSON, Author of 'Green Mansions.' Crown 8vo, 6s.

"This enchanting romance. Extraordinary charm. A more romantic recital of adventure it would be difficult to imagine.

"Has no competitors and need fear no rivals."—Spectator.

THE CHILD.

JOHN NEILSON LAUVRIK. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

GOSSIP.

By KARIN MICHAËLIS. A Psychological Study of the Child Mind. Translated from the Swedish by BENJAMIN SWIFT, Author of 'In Piccadilly.' 6s. [Next week.]

THE VICISSITUDES OF EVANGELINE.

By ELINOR GLYN, Author of 'The Visits of Elizabeth,' and 'The Reflections of Ambrosine.' 6s.

[Ready March 8.]

THE HOUSE OF BARNKIRK.

By AMY McLAREN, Author of 'From a Doves Balcony.' 6s.

[In the press.]

DUCKWORTH & CO. 3, Henrietta Street, W.C.

CHATTO &amp; WINDUS, PUBLISHERS.

MR. SWINBURNE'S
POETICAL WORKS.THE COLLECTED LIBRARY EDITION IN SIX
VOLUMES, price 36s. net, is NOW COMPLETE.NEW NOVEL BY THE AUTHOR OF 'THE ENDLESS HERITAGE.'HEIRS OF REUBEN.

By CHRIS HEALY.

Author of 'Confessions of a Journalist.'

Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

[Feb. 16.]

TALES of the FIVE TOWNS. ByARNOLD BENNETT, Author of 'The Grand Babylon Hotel,' &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s."This delightful volume."—Vanity Fair."Admirably clever work."—St. James's Gazette.

"Pleasant and amusing reading from cover to cover."

Daily Express.FLEUR-de-CAMP: A Daughter ofFrance. By A. GODRIC CAMPBELL. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s."A strong and picturesque book."—Glasgow Herald.

"Fleur-de-Camp is a very winning heroine, whose adventures and whose love story have a compelling interest."

Week's Survey.WORKS BY RICHARD A. PROCTOR.

CHEAPER ISSUE.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. each.

EASY STAR LESSONS. With Star

Maps for Every Night in the Year.

FLOWERS of the SKY. With 55

Illustrations.

FAMILIAR SCIENCE STUDIES.*MYSTERIES of TIME and SPACE.

With 24 Illustrations.

The UNIVERSE of SUNS. With

11 Illustrations.

SATURN and its SYSTEM. With 13 Plates. Demy 8vo, cloth, 6s.

NEW THREE-AND SIXPENNY NOVELS.*The MASSARENES. By Ouida.*The LADY of LYNN. By Sir Walter
BESANT. With 12 Illustrations by G. DEMAIN
HAMMOND.*AS LUCK WOULD HAVE IT. By WILLIAM WESTALL.*THE ST. MARTIN'S LIBRARY.Printed in clear type on fine paper; full size of page, 6½ by 4½ inches. Pott 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 2s. net each; leather, gilt edges, 3s. net each.*Important Series of Eleven Volumes now in the press.MACAULAY'S

HISTORY of ENGLAND. In 5 vols.; and

JUSTIN MCCARTHY'S

The REIGN of QUEEN ANNE. In 1 vol.

A HISTORY of the FOUR GEORGES and of WIL-LIAM IV. In 2 vols.; andA HISTORY of OUR OWN TIMES, from the Accession of Queen Victoria to 1850. In 3 vols.THE OTHER VOLUMES OF THE SERIES ARE AS FOLLOWS:—By SIR WALTER BESANT. By RICHARD JEFFERIES
London. The Life of the Fields.

All Sorts and Conditions.

The Open Air.

By HALL CAINE.

Nature near London. [Mar. 16]

The Deemster.

By CHARLES READE.

By WILKIE COLLINS.
The Woman in White.The Cloister and the Hearth.
Never Too Late to Mend.By DANIEL DEFOE.
Robinson Crusoe. Illustrated
by GEO. CRUIKSHANK.By ROBERT LOUIS
STEVENSON.
Memories and Portraits.By THOMAS HARDY.
Under the Greenwood Tree.Virginibus Puerisque.
Men and Books.By BRET HARTE
Condensed Novels.New Arabian Nights.
Across the Plains.By OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES.
The Autocrat of the Breakfast Table. Illustrated by
J. G. THOMSON.The Pocket R. L. S.
Sketches.By MARK TWAIN.
By WALTON and COTTON.
The Complete Angler.

London: CHATTO &amp; WINDUS, 111, St. Martin's Lane, W.C.

MR. MURRAY'S NEW BOOKS.

SECOND IMPRESSION NOW READY.

THE LIFE OF THE MARQUIS OF DUFFERIN AND AVA

By Sir ALFRED LYALL, P.C.

With Portraits, &amp;c. Demy 8vo, 2 vols. 36s. net.

THE LIFE AND TIMES OF LIEUT.-GEN. SIR JAMES BROWNE, R.E. K.C.B. K.C.S.I.

("BUSTER BROWNE").

By Lieut.-Gen. J. J. MCLEOD INNES, R.E. V.C. With Portraits, Illustrations, and a Map of the N.W.
Frontier. Demy 8vo, 18s. net.The biography of the distinguished Engineer of the Sukkur Bridge and the Hurnai Railway; whose varied experiences on the North-West Frontier, in the Egyptian Campaign, and as Quartermaster-General of the Indian Army, culminated in his appointment as successor to Sir Robert Sandeman, in the control of the Beloochistan Border Districts.THE BALKAN QUESTION.A Series of Studies of the Present Condition of the Balkans and of European Responsibilities. By Various Writers. Edited by LUIGI VILLARI. With a Map. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.THE AWAKENING OF JAPAN.

By OKAKURA-KAKUZO, Author of 'The Ideals of the East.' Crown 8vo, 5s. net.

A CHEAP EDITION OF CHARLES DARWIN'S WORKS.

Uniform with 'Origin of Species,' 'Descent of Man,' &amp;c.

THE VARIATION OF ANIMALS AND PLANTS UNDER DOMESTICATION.

With Illustrations Large crown 8vo, 2 vols. 5s. net. [Ready next week.]

THE GREEK THINKERS.A History of Ancient Philosophy. By Prof. THEODOR GOMPERZ, of Vienna University, Hon. LL.D.
Dublin, Ph.D. Königsberg, &c. Vols. II. and III. SOCRATES, the SOCRATICS, and PLATO. Translated by G. G. BERRY, M.A., Balliol College, Oxford. Demy 8vo, 14s. net each vol.
Vol. I. already published, 14s. net.IN LOCO PARENTIS.Chapters on Institution Life and Work. By the Rev. MARSHALL G. VINE, Warden and Resident
Chaplain of the Philanthropic Society's Farm School, Redhill, Surrey. With a Preface by JAMES GRANVILLE LEGGE, His Majesty's Chief Inspector of Home Office Schools. Large crown 8vo,
2s. 6d. net.THE INVENTOR'S GUIDE.By JAMES ROBERTS, M.A. LL.B., Author of 'The Grants and Validity of British Patents for Inventions.' Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. net.TWO NEW WORKS BY BLISS CARMAN,

Author of 'The Pipes of Pan,' 'Songs of the Sea Children,' &amp;c.

SONGS FROM A NORTHERN GARDEN.

Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. net.

THE FRIENDSHIP OF ART.

With Portrait. Large crown 8vo, 6s.

NEW EDITION.*HANDBOOK—INDIA, BURMA, AND CEYLON.

FIFTH EDITION. With 78 Maps and Plans. Crown 8vo, 20s.

JOHN MURRAY, Albemarle Street, W.

MESSRS. METHUEN have just published a New Novel by Mr. HENRY JAMES, entitled

THE GOLDEN BOWL.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

The Second Edition is nearly exhausted of Mr. EDEN PHILLPOTTS'S remarkable Novel,

THE SECRET WOMAN.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

Kindly write to Messrs. METHUEN for particulars of their Two New Series, "METHUEN'S HALF-CROWN LIBRARY" and "METHUEN'S SHILLING NOVELS."

ROYAL and HISTORIC GLOVES and ANCIENT SHOES.

Profusely illustrated in Colour and Half-Tone, and Described by W. B. REDFERN, Author of 'Ancient Wood and Iron Work in Cambridge,' &c. 4to, 2l. 2s. net. The Edition is limited to 250 Copies.

"A book of quaint and curious interest in which the collector and connoisseur will take delight. It is a sumptuous volume, valuable for its excellently executed pictures, and full of information."—Daily Telegraph.

"The book is one which will be examined with keen enjoyment and often referred to. The pictures are most beautifully and artistically executed, and form an exceedingly interesting picture gallery of royal gloves and shoes."—Scotsman.

GASPARD de COLIGNY, ADMIRAL of FRANCE. By

A. W. WHITEHEAD. With many Illustrations and Maps. Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d. net.

"It is a good piece of writing, this book about Coligny. It is careful and judicious, and shows on not a single page the hasty dogmatism of youth. Especially valuable in Mr. Whitehead's book is his clever disentanglement of the complex threads which surround notorious incidents like the murder of Francis, Duke of Guise, and the great massacre of St. Bartholomew."—Daily Telegraph.

"An important and original contribution."—Daily Chronicle.

"A fine piece of historical portraiture, vivid in individual characterisation, and conceived in a spirit of impartiality."—Academy.

"The book is a thoroughly good one in every respect."—Guardian.

ENGLAND UNDER the STUARTS. By G. M. TREVELYAN,

Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge, Author of 'The Age of Wyclif.' With Maps and Plans. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

This is the Fifth Volume, though the first published, of the Six Volumes of a New HISTORY of ENGLAND (Edited by Prof. C. W. C. OMAN), from the earliest times down to the year 1815.

"Mr. Trevelyan has performed a great literary feat. No one who begins the volume will be tempted to leave it unread."—Speaker.

"This book is the most fortunate sign of the times that has been seen since Mr. J. R. Green's 'Short History.' The book is eminently readable. Master of a style which is stimulating and brilliant, and with a power of pointed antithesis which his great-uncle would not have disdained. Mr. Trevelyan writes in a way that is certain to attract those whom it is intended to attract. His clear and rapid writing, his strong and imaginative grasp of personalities, his deep human sympathy, his sense of the greatness and dignity of life and the glory of liberty, all make him eminently the man for such a task as this, provided, of course, that he have an adequate acquaintance with the authorities, and this is evident on every page. There is a true and artistic proportion preserved throughout, and the reader is constantly kept on the alert by the freshness and epigrammatic vigour with which the author tells his tale. It is no mere summary of results we have here, but the salient features of a period as they present themselves to a reflecting mind."—Guardian.

A HISTORY of the ART of WAR. By C. W. OMAN,

M.A., Fellow of All Souls', Oxford. Vol. II. The Middle Ages, from the Fourth to the Fourteenth Century. Illustrated. A New and Cheaper Issue. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

The THEORY of KNOWLEDGE. By L. T. HOBBHOUSE,

Fellow of C.C.C., Oxford. A New and Cheaper Issue. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

A HISTORY of ROME: during the Later Republic

and the Early Principate. By A. H. J. GREENIDGE, M.A. In 6 vols. Vol. I. (133-104 B.C.). With Maps. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

A history of Rome from the period of Tiberius Gracchus to the accession of Vespasian. It is to be a general history of the period in the widest sense of the words. Social life, military history, politics, law, personal narrative, eventually literature, will all be represented. It is also to be a work of reference on a minute scale.

"A worthy introduction to Gibbon. Mr. Greenidge is a deep political thinker and an admirable writer."—Outlook.

"His diction is clear and pleasant, his judgments based upon definite conceptions of persons and things."—Manchester Guardian.

The LIFE of FATHER IGNATIUS, O.S.B. By the

BARONESS DE BERTOUCH. Illustrated. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

"A unique book of a strange arresting figure."—St. James's Gazette.

"A striking and extraordinary book, more romantic even than a romance."—Daily Chronicle.

"Full of miracles and prodigies."—Daily Mirror.

"A curious and remarkable volume."—Daily Telegraph.

"The book is a most readable one and introduces us to an undoubtedly remarkable character."—Bystander.

SCOTLAND in the TIME of QUEEN MARY. By P.

HUME BROWN, Fraser Professor of Ancient (Scottish) History at the University of Edinburgh. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

"The whole of the chapters on town life and on town trade are as instructive as they are amusing. Many chapters are a distinct and valuable addition to the history of Scotland. We do not know anywhere such a succinct, lucid, and yet copious account of the relations between the crafts and the merchant guilds."—Athenæum.

SHRINES of BRITISH SAINTS. By J. C. WALL. With

numerous Illustrations and Plans. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d. net. [The Antiquary's Books].

SIX GREAT SCHOOLMASTERS. By F. D. HOW. With

Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

The Masters are Hawtrey of Eton, Kennedy of Shrewsbury, Moberly of Winchester, Vaughan of Harrow, Temple of Rugby, Bradley of Marlborough. There are no previous memoirs of any except Dr. Hawtrey.

OLD GORGON GRAHAM. Crown 8vo, 6s.

This is a pendant to Mr. Lorimer's 'Letters of a Self-made Merchant,' a book which has had, both here and in America, an almost unprecedented success. In this book the father tells the story of his own rise with the same inimitable wit and racy wisdom.

"There is not a line in it to be neglected. The whole book is a fascinating stimulant."—Morning Leader.

"A thoroughly entertaining and sparkling book. Open the pages where he will the reader will come upon some pregnant sentence that deserves committing to memory."—Birmingham Post.

ENGLISH SEAMEN. By ROBERT SOUTHEY. Vol. II.

RICHARD HAWKINS, GRENVILLE, ESSEX, and RALEIGH. Crown 8vo, 6s.

The Second Volume of a well-known Series of Lives by Southey, the First Volume of which was published by Messrs. Methuen some years ago.

A MODERN CAMPAIGN; or, War and Wireless Telegraphy in the Far East. By DAVID FRASER, the Times Special Correspondent.

With Illustrations and Maps. Crown 8vo, 6s.

SICILY. By DOUGLAS SLADEN. With 234 Illustrations.

Crown 8vo, 5s. net.

ANECDOTES of SOLDIERS. Edited by J. H. SETTLE.

Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

This book contains over 1,500 stories of soldiers in peace and war.

GAMONIA; or, the Art of Preserving Game;

and an Improved Method of making Plantations and Covers. Explained and Illustrated by LAWRENCE RAWSTORNE, Esq. With 15 Coloured Drawings by T. RAWLINS.

Fcap. 8vo, 3s. 6d. net. [The Illustrated Pocket Library].

WINSTON SPENCER CHURCHILL. By A. M. SCOTT.

With Portraits and Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

A MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM. By WILLIAM

SHAKESPEARE. Edited by H. CUNNINGHAM. Demy 8vo, 2s. 6d. net.

[The Arden Shakespeare].

The LIFE of JOHN RUSKIN. By W. G. COLLINGWOOD,

M.A. With Portraits. Fourth Edition. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. net. [Half-Crown Library].

Messrs. Methuen are publishing a series of books under the above title which will contain many books of general interest and first-rate quality at the low price of 2s. 6d. net. They are well printed and bound uniformly in cloth.

NEW NOVELS.

The SYSTEM. By PERCY WHITE, Author of 'The West

End,' &c. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"Very lifelike and intensely readable."—Daily Mail.

"A very bright story, full of cleverness, and equal to anything Mr. White has produced."—Morning Post.

The GATE of the DESERT. By JOHN OXENHAM, Author of 'Barbe of Grand Bayou.' With a Frontispiece. Second Edition. Crown 8vo, 6s.

HIS ISLAND PRINCESS. By W. CLARK RUSSELL. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, 6s.

The TEMPESTUOUS PETTICOAT. By ROBERT BARR,

Author of 'The Countess Tekla,' &c. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, 6s.

The MYSTERY of the MOAT. By ADELINE SERGEANT.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

"Highly sensational, bright, and vivacious."—Scotsman.

"An excellent specimen of Miss Sergeant's powers, very fascinating and entertaining."—Morning Leader.

"Full of excitement from start to finish."—Lloyd's.

The WEANS at ROWALLAN. By K. FITZPATRICK.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

HE that EATETH BREAD with ME. By H. A. MITCHELL.

KEAYS. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"A really interesting and remarkable novel."—Guardian.

"A remarkable book and of much solid power."—Morning Leader.

"Great is the power of atmosphere and greater still the charm of good writing."—Daily Graphic.

HEART of MY HEART. By ELLIS MEREDITH. Crown

8vo, 6s.

"Curious, unique, informing, and obviously the outcome of experience."—Standard.

"Delicate fancy, descriptive vigour, and uplifting moral survey."—Glasgow Herald.

"A book of unusual merit, written with genuine literary charm and distinction."—Daily Mail.

The VIRGIN and the SCALES. By CONSTANCE COTTERELL.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

"Written with freshness of inspiration. The story is good, very good, and captures the mind with the freshness of early flowers."—Black and White.

"Bright and lively and clever."—Speaker.

MACMILLAN & CO.'S LIST.

VOL. III. NOW READY.

DIARY & LETTERS OF MADAME D'ARBLAY

(1778-1840). As Edited by her Niece, CHARLOTTE BARRETT. With Preface and Notes by AUSTIN DOBSON. With Photogravure Portraits and other Sketches. In 6 vols. Vol. I, 1778 to June, 1781. Vol. II., 1781-83. Vol. III., August, 1783, to June, 1788. 8vo, 10s. 6d. net each.

SHAKESPEAREAN TRAGEDY.

Lectures on 'Hamlet,' 'Othello,' 'King Lear,' and 'Macbeth.' By Prof. A. C. BRADLEY, LL.D. Litt.D. 8vo, 10s. net.

SPECTATOR.—"We have no hesitation in putting Prof. Bradley's book far above any modern Shakespearean criticism that we know, worthy to rank very near the immortal work of Lamb and Coleridge. It is, indeed, difficult to praise it in language which shall do it justice, and yet seem free from exaggeration. For it is more than a study of Shakespeare: it is a unique piece of constructive criticism, which, from its freshness of method and distinction of form, deserves to rank as the most important exercise in the craft since Matthew Arnold's 'Essays in Criticism.'"

ENGLISH MEN OF LETTERS.—New Series.

Crown 8vo, gilt tops, flat backs, 2s. net each.

SYDNEY SMITH.

By GEORGE W. E. RUSSELL.

DAILY NEWS.—"Mr. Russell has written an interesting, sane, appreciative study, which should introduce Sydney Smith's exuberant spirit and triumphant humour to a new generation of readers, and prove not the least successful of this successful series."

THOMAS MOORE.

By STEPHEN GWYNN.

TIMES.—"An admirable book.....Mr. Gwynn has surely said the last word about this warm-hearted, volatile personage, whose tact and taste in writing verse were for so long mistaken for passion."

SECOND AND CHEAPER EDITION.

FREE TRADE.

By the Right Hon. LORD AVEBURY. Demy 8vo, 2s. 6d.

MACMILLAN'S NEW NOVELS.

Crown 8vo, gilt tops, 6s. each.

GERTRUDE ATHERTON.

THE BELL IN THE FOG,
And other Stories.

ALFRED TRESIDDER SHEPPARD.

THE RED CRAVAT.

OWEN JOHNSON.

NICOLE; or, in the Name of Liberty.
A Story of the Terror.

A BOOK OF WIT AND HUMOUR.

THE WORKS OF

ARTHUR CLEMENT HILTON

(Of Marlborough and Cambridge). Author of 'The Light Green.' With 2 Illustrations, together with HIS LIFE AND LETTERS, by Sir ROBERT EDGEUMBE. Fcap. 8vo, 5s. net; vellum, gilt top, 12s. 6d. net.

SPECTATOR.—"We have always had a special affection for the irresistible audacity of 'The May Exam.'.....We have nothing but congratulations to offer Sir Robert Edgecumbe on his pious act of homage to the memory of his friend and contemporary A. C. Hilton. To a collection of Hilton's Cambridge brilliant jeux d'esprit he has added a number of other pieces."

DAILY CHRONICLE.—"The champagne of parody..... A born humourist."

PALL MALL GAZETTE.—"Wit on the wings of metre. Highly remarkable. Sir Robert Edgecumbe's memoir is a model of affectionate and tributary sympathy. There are parodies brilliant enough to persuade one almost that the same hand wrote the parent and the parasite. There are things in this delightful little book that will live among the best examples of English wit."

ATHENÆUM.—"This record of a bright, short life was well worth making, and Sir Robert Edgecumbe has told us with modesty and grace just what we wanted to know. A parodist, classic at his best, and long since promoted to that rank by the dignity of frequent misquotation."

SPEAKER.—"Will be welcome."

SCOTSMAN.—"Sunny collection."

MACMILLAN & CO., LIMITED, London.

HURST & BLACKETT'S LIST.

MR. PERCEVAL LANDON'S GREAT WORK.

NOW READY.

In 2 vols. royal 8vo.

With over 250 beautiful Illustrations some in Colour from Paintings by Countess Helena Gleichen and the Author, Photogravures, and Half-Tones.

With Portraits of Lord Curzon and Col. Sir Francis Younghusband, K.C.I.E.,

7 Maps, and in a specially designed Cover, buckram gilt.

Price £2 2s.

LHASA.

An Account of the Country and People of Central Tibet, and of the Progress of the Mission sent there by the English Government in the Year 1903-4.

Written, with the help of all the principal persons of the Mission,

BY

PERCEVAL LANDON,

Special Correspondent of the Times.

With an Introduction by

Col. Sir FRANCIS YOUNGHUSBAND,
K.C.I.E.

An Illustrated Prospectus sent free on application.

DR. OTTO NORDENSKJOLD'S GREAT WORK ON THE SOUTH POLAR REGIONS.

READY NEXT WEEK.

In 1 vol. medium 8vo.

Illustrated by over 250 Reproductions of Photographs taken especially for this Work, 4 Coloured Plates from Paintings, and 3 Maps.

Price 18s. net.

ANTARCTICA.

Two Years Amongst the Ice of the South Pole.

BY

Dr. OTTO NORDENSKJOLD.

London: HURST & BLACKETT, LIMITED,
182, High Holborn, W.C.

OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS.

HYPERION. A Facsimile of Keats's

Autograph MS. With a Transliteration of the MS. of 'The FALL of HYPERION: a Dream.' With Introductions and Notes by ERNEST de SÉLINCOURT. Limited Edition, printed on pure Linen Paper. Subscription prices, 2l. 12s. 6d. in boards, and 3l. 13s. 6d. in leather.

OXFORD MODERN FRENCH

SERIES. Edited by LEON DELBOS. Crown 8vo, cloth. TWO NEW VOLUMES.

Les NORMANDS en ANGLETERRE et en FRANCE. From 'La Conquête de l'Angleterre par les Normands,' by AUGUSTIN THIERRY. Edited by A. H. SMITH, M.A. Pp. 162, 2s. 6d.

Le SERMENT. By Jules David. Edited by CECIL HUGON. Pp. 94, 1s. 6d.

SELECT DOCUMENTS ILLUSTRATIVE

of the HISTORY of the FRENCH REVOLUTION (May, 1789—September, 1791). Edited by L. G. WICKHAM LEGG, M.A. 2 vols. crown 8vo, cloth. [Immediately.]

JOWETT'S TRANSLATION of

ARISTOTLE'S POLITICS, with Introduction, Analysis, and Full Index added by H. W. C. DAVIS, M.A. Extra fcap. 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. net. [Immediately.]

The EUTHYDEMUS of PLATO.

With Revised Text, Introduction, Notes, and Indices. By EDWIN HAMILTON GIFFORD, D.D. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

The PRAYER-BOOK VERSION of the PSALMS PRINTED PARALLEL WITH A NEW VERSION by S. R. DRIVER. Second Edition. Fcap. 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. net.

The COPTIC VERSION of the NEW

TESTAMENT, in the NORTHERN DIALECT, otherwise called Memphitic and Bohairic. With Introduction, Critical Apparatus, and Literal English Translation. Vols. III. and IV. (completing the Work), 8vo, cloth, 2l. 2s. net.

CANTONESE LOVE-SONGS:

Chinese Text, Edited, with English Translation and Notes, by CECIL CLEMENTI, M.A., of the Hong Kong Civil Service. 2 vols. [Immediately.]

CAIN ADAMNAIN. An Old Irish

Treatise on the Law of Adamnan. Edited and Translated by KUNO MEYER, Ph.D. ('Anecdota Oxoniensia,' Mediaeval and Modern Series. Part XII.) Crown 4to, paper covers. [Immediately.]

The ELEMENTS of RAILWAY

ECONOMICS. By W. M. ACWORTH, M.A. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. net.

A GEOMETRICAL POLITICAL

ECONOMY. Being an Elementary Treatise on the Method of explaining some of the Theories of Pure Economic Science by means of Diagrams. By H. CUNYNGHAME, C.B. M.A. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d. net.

ALSO PUBLISHED BY HENRY FROWDE.

WORCESTERSHIRE PLACE-

NAMES, by W. H. DUIGNAN. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. net. [Ready February 13.]

London: HENRY FROWDE,

Oxford University Press Warehouse, Amen Corner.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 11, 1905.

CONTENTS.

|   |         |
|---|---------|
| PROF. SAINTSBURY'S HISTORY OF CRITICISM ... ..  | 167     |
| EUROPE AND THE FAR EAST ... ..  | 168     |
| THE ANCIENT KALENDAR OF OXFORD ... ..   | 169     |
| STUDIES IN THE PHILOSOPHY OF RELIGION ... ..  | 170     |
| ADVENTURES OF JAMES II. ... ..  | 171     |
| NEW NOVELS (Three Dukes; The Mystery of the Moat; The Apple of Eden; The Rebellion of the Princess; The Informer; Fleur-de-Camp; Lord of Himself) ... ..  | 172-173 |
| LOCAL HISTORY ... ..  | 173     |
| SHORT STORIES ... ..  | 173     |
| OUR LIBRARY TABLE (Port Arthur—Three Months with the Besiegers; The Truth about Russia; Winston Spencer Churchill; To Lhasa at Last; The Adventures of a Naval Officer; Divorce; Memoirs of the Verneys; Memoirs of General Gonave; Umbria; Bryce's Holy Roman Empire; England a Nation; The Dickensian) ... .. | 174-176 |
| LIST OF NEW BOOKS ... ..  | 176     |
| THE UNIVERSITY LIBRARY, CAMBRIDGE; THE SECOND PRAYER-BOOK OF EDWARD VI.; BIBLIOGRAPHICAL DEFINITIONS; DRUMMOND AND GIAMBATTISTA MARINO; COLERIDGE'S "IMITATION" OF AKENSIDE ... ..  | 176-177 |
| LITERARY GOSSIP ... ..  | 178     |
| SCIENCE—THE STORY OF WIRELESS TELEGRAPHY; WANDERINGS IN THE FORESTS OF BORNEO; GEOGRAPHICAL BOOKS; SOCIETIES; MEETINGS NEXT WEEK; GOSSIP ... ..   | 179-183 |
| FINE ARTS—THE GOLDEN AGE OF CLASSIC CHRISTIAN ART; THE POETICAL WORKS OF MILTON; OLD COTTAGES IN THE COTSWOLD DISTRICT; THE ANCESTOR; FRENCH IMPRESSIONISTS AT THE GRAFTON GALLERY; SALES; GOSSIP ... ..  | 183-186 |
| MUSIC—MISS MACCARTHY'S ORCHESTRAL CONCERTS; MR. LAMOND'S BREITHOVEN RECITAL; GOSSIP; PERFORMANCES NEXT WEEK ... ..  | 187     |
| DRAMA—ROSE BERND; GOSSIP ... ..   | 187-188 |

LITERATURE

A History of Criticism. By George Saintsbury. Vol. III. (Blackwood & Sons.)

WE must begin by congratulating Prof. Saintsbury most sincerely on the completion of his great undertaking—that of passing in review the phases of literary taste, as indicated by the spoken and written opinions of the most representative literary tasters, from the earliest time when men began to take stock of their own thoughts about literature, down to the close of the nineteenth century. The first two volumes brought the survey through ancient, mediæval, and revived-classical periods. We have witnessed the beginning of formal and scientific criticism with Aristotle; the bold flight of Longinus in the effort to get to closer grips with the true inwardness of literary delight than the Master of those who know had felt the need of; the relapse of the "Dark" and Middle Ages into the use of books for purposes of study only, not for pastime, and the consequent carelessness about literature as such; and the disappearance of any desire to estimate literary values, until the revival of poetry in the thirteenth century set the mind of Dante to work on the old problem, under the guise of philological investigation. Then we have seen how, in great measure owing to the fact that the revival of classical learning and the stimulus which it gave to literary discussion came into Western Europe by way of a people in whom the head was stronger than the heart, criticism became, and long remained, an affair of rule and precept, of "right" and "wrong," of "if you like this, you have no business to like that." Yet again, we have seen how the true criticism, the "appreciative" (or why not say "perceptive"?), was not left without a witness even in unlikely quarters—as Mr. Saintsbury points out in discussing Dryden, or, in the present volume, in his account of Hume. Finally, the first way of salvation seems to have been shown qua minime reris among the nation which we are apt to think of as the chosen home of pedantry, forgetting that it is also the nation of the mystics. The present volume opens with the Germans—Lessing, the Schlegels, and other "dissolvents of Neo-classicism"; passes on to an appreciation of Bishop Hurd's noteworthy 'Letters on Chivalry and Romance'; steps back to the eighteenth century in Vico, Hume, and Burke; and finally emerges upon the French Romantics of the early nineteenth; and so to Wordsworth and Coleridge. The last named, as might be expected, takes a very high place. "So, then, there abide these three, Aristotle, Longinus, and Coleridge," we are told. The verdict may surprise some, and would, we fancy, hardly have been accepted by one critic to whom later deserved praise is awarded, H. D. Traill. Yet when one comes to look again even at the 'Table-Talk,' one sees how powerful a champion Coleridge is of the cause which Prof. Saintsbury supports.

Hallam as a classicist in spirit does not meet, perhaps, with so much favour as we should be inclined to show him for his candour, his lucidity, and his knowledge of the literature which his generation admired. His atmosphere is always clear and bracing, though his light may be a little dry. Matthew Arnold is faithfully dealt with, as we rather expected he would be. His work is open to objections. He often comes dangerously near to the "stop-watch and plumbline" (we quote from memory) style of criticism, and he does not escape the pitfalls that gape for all the professors of it, as for all who rely on "theory divorced from history." Yet no student of literature can afford to neglect him.

We used to think that we should like a clear summing-up of the great question. The Classical and Romantic opposition in criticism corresponds undoubtedly to a fundamental difference in human characters; it is not far from the "hammer and anvil" distinction. But we can understand Prof. Saintsbury's reluctance to formulate. Our readers may perhaps remember that in reviewing his second volume we suggested that a tabular statement of the fundamental differences between what are known as the "Classical" and the "Romantic" tendencies in criticism would be of service to students of literature. This, in a friendly note, he altogether declines to furnish. So, as he will doubtless remember, did Salvation Yeo decline to be sworn. But just as Yeo had his own form of asseveration, far more constraining, as Sir Richard pointed out, than any formula appointed by law, so does Prof. Saintsbury in the present volume, by his frequent recurrence to the terms "preceptive" and "appreciative" criticism, by his insistence on the doctrine that the tree is known by its fruits—or, in other words, that the criterion of merit is the effect produced—by his theory of what he calls "the Poetic Moment," show as clearly as any one can desire what he deems of the matter. He even goes further; he sets out in special type the articles of what he calls a more catholic creed than that of the "Classical" school. Of these, two seem to be those more especially on which the rest of the law hangs:—

"The object of literature is Delight; its soul is imagination; its body is Style."

"A man should like what he does like; and his likings are facts in criticism for him."

To these there is the obvious objection that if they are adopted it is hard to see where any safeguard against anarchy is to be found; or if not anarchy, at any rate polukoiranie. The alternative is clearly, as we suggested in noticing the second volume, between authority and the length of the critic's foot; nor do we after this need any tabular statement. We do not, indeed, quite understand a distinction which Prof. Saintsbury elsewhere makes, when adverting to the eternal problem of the extent to which the critic's judgment of the work is to be affected by his approval or otherwise of the subject—or, as he states it, borrowing a phrase from Peacock, "the principle that you 'must take pleasure in the thing represented before you can derive any from the representation.'" This he calls a weakness, mentioning Froude, Kingsley, and Ruskin as examples of it. And he goes on:—

"It has, like other dubious spirits, been let loose by 'the anarchy.' That you may and should 'like what you like' is open to the twist of its correlative—that you may dislike what you choose to dislike."

What he means, we presume, is that you should not affect to dislike a writer's style because you disapprove of his morals, politics, or whatever it may be—that you should not find fault with the cut of his clothes because you think him a bad fellow. But that is surely only part of the universal duty of sincerity, and applies just as much to likes as to dislikes. Nor, to go back for a moment to the first volume, need we think less well of the Fathers because, in the circumstances in which they found themselves, they thought conduct a matter of more importance than Delight, with ever so big a "D." The Renaissance took the opposite view; and we are not sure that Europe was, on the whole, either the better or the happier in the long run.

To return once more to the "articles" of the "Romantic" faith. Among some which the "extremes men" are credited with upholding, we find:—

"The first requisite of the critic is that he should be capable of receiving impressions; the second, that he should be able to represent them."

Has any one seriously maintained this? If so, he must suppose the number of critics to be very large. Of course, in a sense we are all critics; that is, we all "like what we like." But a quality in such "wide commonalty spread" surely ceases to be distinctive. What differentiates the critic from the mass of appreciative persons seems to be just the power of expressing the effect of the work upon himself in such a way as to be intelligible to them. If at the same time he succeeds in putting into words what they, or the majority of them, are feeling (perhaps we should add, or think they ought to be feeling) about it, he becomes an eminent critic. "I do not know," says Mr. Saintsbury himself, "that 'to define feeling' is not as good—it is certainly as short—a definition of at least a great part of the business of the critic as you can get."

He is quoting a phrase of Pater's; and that distinguished critic is as good an instance as any of what we mean. The present writer—in a matter of this kind one must take one's own responsibilities—may frankly admit that he never could get very far with Pater; not the least from any sympathy with Mr. Saintsbury's supposed objectors, who say,—“We don't believe in these ecstatic moments, analyzed and interpreted in tranquillity; we don't feel them, and don't want to feel them,” but largely because he has always been unable to answer the cui bono? question in regard to his method. To the reader who is capable of feeling the “Rapture”—who can feel the magic of “the sunset-touch, the chorus-ending from Euripides”—the elaborate refinements of “the single word” seem superfluous. Any word will do for him, so that it awakens the right association. In the original author, who wants to create a particular feeling or image in the reader's mind, the elaboration of the phrase until he is satisfied that it will produce the effect he desires, is excusable; but with the critic, especially the Romantic critic, whose business is “mehr erwecken als bezeichnen,” the necessity for the exquisite is not so apparent. On the other hand, the class of persons who “don't feel them and don't want to feel them” simply do not understand, as they would say, what it is all about; and the choicest words say no more to them than the first come. It is of no use to “define feeling” for people who have not the organ of the feeling, and do not want to have it. We are not denying that the mot juste is capable of giving much pleasure to such as are able to recognize it; but in so far it belongs to the creative rather than to the critical “kind.” Also the quest of it is terribly apt to lead to preciousness, euphuism, seicentismo, and other undesirable things, while the Paterian method generally at least abuts upon what has been called “signpost” criticism, and may lead to gush. Not that Pater gushed himself—his artistry in words saved him; but he has undoubtedly been the cause of a good deal of gush in others, less articulate, whose only means of “conveying the charm” if they feel it (or again, think they ought to feel it) is a shriek.

But we must not linger for ever over these interesting topics; nor need we repeat the minuter criticisms of Prof. Saintsbury's form; though in this volume, no less than in its predecessors, we have often regretfully wondered why a writer with such command of words should choose to marshal them so perversely, or one who undoubtedly knows a good model when he sees it should take such delight in not following it. Allusions that have to be explained in footnotes, girds at unnamed reviewers of his former works, odd little petulances—all these things really mar the best-disposed reader's pleasure, and will, it is to be feared, stand in the way of recognition of the book as what it is—the most stimulating and valuable aid to the student of literature which has been produced in English—perhaps in any language—for three-quarters of a century or nearly.

On one small detail we should like to break a little lance with the Professor. We cannot accept the view that “Ueber allen Gipfeln” has any connexion of suggestion or otherwise with Lucan's “Pacem summa tenent.” The resemblance does not extend beyond the first few words; and Lucan's emphasis is clearly on the “summa.” (Was he countering Horace's “feriuntque summos”?) If Goethe had any ancient in his mind it was surely Aleman.

The book concludes with two appendixes: one on the Oxford Chair of Poetry, in which Keble receives the high praise he deserves, while Shairp calls forth a suggestion that a statute “forbidding any citation from this Chair of critical or creative literature less than thirty years old would not be bad.” We fully agree. The other appendix contains a sketch of American criticism, in which Lowell naturally has the largest space. Longfellow comes in for notice rather as an implicit critic than in virtue of much direct work in that line; but he gives occasion for a parenthesis from which we learn that Prof. Saintsbury is himself “a lifelong lover of Longfellow's poetry,” an admission which not every one in these days of the superior person would have ventured to make “urbi et orbi.”

---

Cambridge Historical Series.—Europe and the Far East. By Sir Robert K. Douglas. (Cambridge, University Press.)

At the present juncture a survey of the whole relations of Europe with the empires and kingdoms east of India is timely, and the editor of the series may be congratulated upon his choice of the pen to which he has entrusted it. As one who spent a great part of his youth in the Chinese Consular service, Sir Robert Douglas has had a better chance than most of getting to know the Oriental side of the case, while his views upon it have been deepened and ripened by his lifelong acquaintance with Chinese literature. The book is also benefited by Mr. Prothero's own able and exhaustive essay on ‘The Revolution in Japan,’ here reprinted from The Quarterly Review, and contains a full bibliography and fine maps. Of these, two deal, among other things, with the northern and southern provinces of China, which is thereby split into two parts—an arrangement which makes them somewhat tedious to consult. The others show the environs of Peking, the peninsula of Liaotung, and the provinces of Japan in the year 1860. There is no very distinct reference to this last in the text, and it might have been advantageously replaced, perhaps, by a map of Japan as it is. Otherwise, the book seems complete enough, and Sir Robert Douglas's easy style, together with his dissertation on Chinese names, which first appeared in The Times, and is here given as an appendix, should make it invaluable to the general reader.

As for the story as a whole, it is difficult to read it without a certain feeling of shame. From first to last the one motive which has governed the European nations in their dealings with Eastern Asia seems to have been the thirst for plunder, and none of us has here any right to cast stones at our neighbours. We did, indeed, lead the way by insisting on the cession of Hongkong after the First Chinese War of 1840, and followed it up by the annexation of Burma in 1886, and the thinly disguised lease of Kowloon and Wei-hai-wei in 1898.

In the meantime Russia, beginning with Saghalien about 1850, “ate up” the province of Primorsk (including Vladivostok) in 1860, and entered Manchuria, under the pretence of railway making, in 1897, her raid culminating with the treacherous seizure of Port Arthur the following year. During the same period France has forcibly established a protectorate over Annam and Tonquin, and has received the cession of a great part of Siam; while Germany, with even less pretence of right, has taken possession of Kiaochow, and Italy has been with difficulty stalled off from claiming a port on the Pacific at the expense of China. Nor have these aggressions any of the excuses with which Europeans have sought to justify their earth hunger in other parts of the globe. Instead of introducing civilization into barbaric lands, they have in the Far East met with a culture older than, and as firmly established as, their own; and their efforts to convert it to Christianity have not hitherto been attended with such success as to enable them to be seriously considered. If the Oriental regards Europe as the home of rapacious and unscrupulous banditti he can hardly be blamed.

Yet the Far East has produced one small nation which has not only successfully resisted all aggression, but even shown herself capable of turning the weapons of the West with fatal effect against her. The sudden and dramatic manner in which Japan, waking from her long sleep, has suddenly won for herself a foremost place among modern nations, has often been told of late, but seldom more concisely and with better effect than in this book. The exact relations between the Shogunate, or rule of the maires du palais, and the Mikado, or spiritual chief of the nation, are here well worked out, and Sir Robert Douglas shows clearly how much the downfall of the Shogun was associated with the discredit into which Buddhism had sunk, while the regaining of the supreme power by the Mikado was assisted by the revival of the old religion of Shintoism. He also shows that so early as 1854 the policy of learning Western arts and sciences, and thus becoming able to hold their own against the nations that they saw crowding in upon China, was discussed by the Shogun and his council of nobles, and was adopted instead of the counter-proposal of resisting by force of arms the opening of Japan. Perhaps Mr. Prothero is right when he quotes from Sir Ernest Satow the notion that the ‘Dai-Nihon-Shi,’ or ‘History of Japan,’ an encyclopædic work composed by Komar, Prince of Mito, in 1715, by showing the origin of the Shogun's usurpation, really paved the way for the rise of the Mikado's power, and that its composer was “the real author of the movement which culminated in the Revolution of 1868.”

But it should be noted that neither Sir Robert Douglas nor Mr. Prothero troubles himself as to the ultimate aim of this Revolution, and that they pass over without mention the murder by Japanese of the Empress of Korea and the awful massacre at Port Arthur in 1894. These incidents may, of course, be only sudden reversions to an earlier and, as we think, lower stage of culture; but they may also be indications that our ally, with the wonderful self-control that she has always exhibited, has managed to conceal behind the mask of humanitarian methods the ferocity which seems innate among Mongolian peoples.

Of the burning question of missions in the Far East, Sir Robert Douglas takes a moderate and what appears to be a just view. For some reason or other the Mongoloid race, though more superstitious than most, has never shown the fanatical attachment to one religion which has distinguished at different times the Semite and the Aryan; and he appositely quotes the dictum of Taokwang, Emperor of China during the second quarter of the last century, that "all religions are nonsense, but the silly people have always believed in ghosts and after-life, and therefore, in order to conciliate popular feeling, we are disposed to protect every belief, including Christianity, so long as there is no interference with the old-established customs of the State."

In Japan, also, the advent of Christianity was at first welcomed, and it is here said that as early as 1581 she boasted 200 churches and 50,000 converts. It is true that this state of things was followed in the next century by a revulsion of feeling which led to the expulsion of the missionaries and to a persecution of their flocks; but all such tendencies have long since died away, the ministry of public worship founded by the restored Mikado has been suppressed, and the Constitution of 1890 has decreed the absolute equality of all religions before the law. Christianity has therefore had, at one time or another, a perfectly free hand both in China and Japan, and it is interesting to inquire why in these circumstances it has made so little headway. Sir Robert Douglas's explanation is that the Jesuits and other foreign missionaries who first attempted to evangelize the Far East grasped at political power, and thus made their suppression a necessity. This is partly borne out by an article in one of the monthly reviews by a Japanese writer, who states that the Shimbara revolt of 1637, in which 100,000 souls are said to have perished, was in fact an uprising of the Christian converts against the State. In modern times the assumption by missionaries of judicial functions—in which they do but follow the example of the Primitive Church—no doubt causes them to be rightly regarded as centres of disaffection, and, although Sir Robert Douglas makes this complaint against Roman Catholics only, we fancy it extends to all denominations. But an even stronger cause is sectarian jealousy. This receives it may be unconscious illustration in the list here given of books circulated in China by what is here called the "Christian Knowledge Society." They include Prof. Goodspeed's 'Messianic Hopes,' 'The History of the Reformation,' 'The Life of Wickliffe,' and 'How We got our Bible.' What can the Chinese think of a faith which thus emphasizes the points on which it is divided against itself?

With regard to the future, it is pointed out that the so-called Central Government at Peking does not really govern, but only checks the rule of the different viceroys, and that all pressure brought to bear upon China must, therefore, be local to be effective. The policy of "Butcher and bolt" is strongly condemned, and it is shown that constant evacuations of territory, after peace has been concluded, have told against us. It is shown also that the opening of Tibet will, by the consequent introduction of Assam teas, inflict a serious blow upon China's trade, and that we must, therefore, expect further more or less concealed opposition in that quarter. The acknowledgment of the supposed hegemony of Germany by the appointment of Count Waldersee to the chief command of the Peking Relief Force is also admitted to have been a fatal mistake; and it is pointed out that, while Portugal is merely incurring useless expense by retaining her hold on Macao, France in Indo-China has hitherto worked mainly for the benefit of English and German traders. But all such questions shrink in immediate importance before the success of our ally against Russia, and our ignorance as to her real aims and methods. Generally, it may be said that Sir Robert Douglas has produced a most valuable text-book on a very difficult subject, and one that should be studied as well as read.

---

The Ancient Kalendar of the University of Oxford. Edited by Christopher Wordsworth. (Oxford, Clarendon Press.)

THE purpose of this volume is, first, to make accessible the text of the brief 'Compotus Manualis,' which was printed at Oxford in 1520, as a text-book for Arts students, but of which only a single copy survives; and, secondly, to give an annotated text of the principal manuscripts of the Ancient Kalendar of the University of Oxford, as found in the old proctorial books, &c., written about the year 1400. To this has been added by the learned editor some account of the earlier history and later developments of this kalendar.

Canon Wordsworth has done great service, which is sure to be keenly appreciated by the members of the Oxford Historical Society, by the pains he has taken in the editing of these exceptionally interesting and rare records; but it is to be regretted that the diverse matter contained in this volume has not been arranged on some methodical plan. A clearly written introduction is also much needed. The indexes, however, are unusually full and complete, and the matter contained in these pages is so valuable to those interested in academical lore that feelings of gratitude for the book far outweigh complaints as to its arrangement.

A list of the printed editions of the 'Compotus Manualis'—it was printed at least thirty times between 1486 and 1529—together with an admirable list of the books and manuscripts that treat of the 'Compotus,' are set forth in detail. It consists of a metrical text, ascribed to "Magister Amanus," a Latin poet and astronomer of the fourteenth century, and runs to about 250 hexameter lines, treating of the solar cycle, the lunar cycle, the movable and immovable feasts, and the seasons. Under these headings occur accounts of leap year, the planets, the signs of the Zodiac, and kalendar order of holy days expressed in memorial lines, the epacts, the terms and quarters of the year, the vigils, &c.—in fact most of that which is now included under the term "almanac." From 1490 onwards all the editions include from four to eight diagrams of open and closed hands, with words, letters, or syllables inscribed on the several joints of each finger. It is from the use of this explicit form of memoria technica that the 'Compotus Manualis,' i.e., hand kalendar, derived its name. This, too, seems to be the derivation of the common term "hand-book." Not one in a thousand who now use that term has probably any true idea of its origin; it is usually explained to signify a small book readily carried in the hand, as opposed to the heavier treatises that rest on the desk or table; but the use of the diagram of a hand for the ready reckoning of times and seasons certainly goes back, in England, to the tenth century.

The 'Compotus Manualis ad Usus Oxoniensium' of 1520 has four diagrams of a man's left hand, two of them showing the open palm, two of them exhibiting the knuckles of the closed hand, each joint being duly lettered.

"Apparently the learned clergy and the clerks of Oxford were not above using their hands as a natural abacus. In the Leofric Missal there is an Anglo-Saxon kalendar, written in the southern province of this country, about the year 970, which contains what is called imago manus humane. It is Manus Dei with the joints and parts so inscribed with nineteen dates, from March 21st to April 18th—i.e., the places of the golden numbers of Paschal Term.....At the present day we rarely use more than the tips of our fingers for counting, but in past generations, when paper was scarce, or where the winds blew high, it was found convenient to tell off threes upon the joints of the thumb of the left hand. To reckon the seven days of one week the forefinger was in request. Double it down upon the palm and work up from the nail; you get three days ('A. B. C. sunt extra,' says the 'Compotus'); open it out and you get the other four, G at the tip, F, E on the middle joints, and D the joint in the palm."

Take the other fingers, continues Canon Wordsworth, and you get a month of twenty-eight days, or of thirty-one if the three joints of the thumb are included. So too, as explained in the 'Compotus,' by different arrangements the hand came in for calculating the years of the solar cycle, the golden numbers of the lunar cycle, and even the prime of the moon in each month.

In addition to the manual diagrams, this Oxford handbook, printed by C. Kyrforth in February, 1520, and sold for a penny, had a most interesting woodcut frontispiece, here reproduced. It represents a young Master of Arts, in a richly wrought gown, with hood or tippet, and a laureated cap. He is lecturing from an open book that rests on a table well provided with cupboards. Seven students are shown with their books, whilst various articles of furniture of the lecture-hall or schools are depicted, such as a clock, terrestrial and celestial globes, &c. But perhaps the most curious and somewhat surprising details are those that relate to the discipline of the students. The Master of Arts, who has a most benign expression, grasps firmly, in his extended left hand, a fine example of a birch-rod of ten twigs:—

"A more awe-inspiring scutica or tawse, loaded with a bullæ of leather (if not of lead), reposes in reserve beneath his pen-knife to his right."

The accounts of the various old kalendars pertaining to Oxford University begin with an early manuscript, circa 1337, preserved at Trinity College, Cambridge, and include printed kalendars of the Chancellor, and of a senior and junior proctor. Although the missals in use at Oxford colleges appear to have been generally after Sarum Use, the books provided for University officials had certain peculiarities over and above the additional entry of holidays from lectures and exercises, and the obits of benefactors or special worthies. Such was the 'Missa Burgensium' on St. Scholastica's Day (February 10th) in memory of the affray of 1354, when certain scholars were slain in an affray with the townsmen. The interdict imposed upon the town by the Bishop of Lincoln in consequence of this outrage was removed on condition of the mayor, the two bailiffs, and sixty of the burghers attending Mass at St. Mary's on the anniversary, and each offering a silver penny. Canon Wordsworth cites an Oxford kalendar of 1822 showing that this customary penance was then paid at the appointed day and place by the officials and burghers of the city, the service of Litany being substituted for that of the Mass.

Twenty holy days were entered in the old Oxford kalendars that had no place in the usual Sarum books. Among them were those of SS. Anthony of Padua, Osithe, Wilfrid, and William of York—names well known in York or Lincoln Use, and doubtless introduced and maintained by scholars of the North or Midlands. Such names as St. Thomas Aquinas, the Translation of St. Dominic, and the two days of St. Francis were doubtless introduced through the influence of monastic scholars. The Invention and Translation of Frideswyde, the local virgin saint, naturally found a place in the University kalendar. It was considered desirable to bind the grammar masters and the students to keep uniformity in the observance of holy days in accordance with their common kalendar. The only exception permitted was in favour of each man's parish feast, wherein he was himself allowed to join.

Studies in the Philosophy of Religion. By George Galloway, B.D. (Blackwood & Sons.)

THEOLOGIANS expert in philosophy are rare, and might almost rank as the speciality of Scotland. Mr. Galloway modestly puts forward, under the title and in the form of "studies," a philosophy of religion which the "mere" philosopher can welcome as the work of a man and a brother—a philosophic welcome, bien entendu, being always an affair of brickbats. Mr. Galloway, in a word, plays the game. He "follows the argument whithersoever it leads," and, contrary to what the philistine might expect, it does not lead to the devil. Moreover, whilst his (that is to say, Mr. Galloway's) philosophy is sound, it is likewise modern. For years back the established Scottish thinkers (with one notable exception) have been given over to Hegelianism, from which point of view pretty well the last word has been said on philosophy of religion. But Mr. Galloway is a child of the new age. All the world over psychology pushes its claim to be the propædæutic of metaphysics, with dire results to intellectualism. What is in pretension adequacy of pure thinking proves in performance sheer inadequacy of psychological analysis. Will and feeling are found to have as good a right as thought to contribute to the theory of experience as a whole. So far Mr. Galloway is with the movement. He will not, however, go to such lengths in his disparagement of the work of the intellect as some. He dissociates himself, for instance, from the standpoint of Prof. James's 'Varieties of Religious Experience'—which standpoint, however, being more or less exclusively psychological, is, we would suggest, not strictly comparable with his own. At any rate, if he is in some sense a "personal idealist"—reviewers with little space at their command must be allowed the use of such labels—he is no "pragmatist." "We reject the gospel which some at present preach, that reason is only the slave of feeling or the hired servant of will." "We are satisfied that thought is an essential aspect of a developed personal life." His is, in short, a via media, somewhat on Lotze's lines. We must go to epistemology for the "that" of God, and to the value-judgment, offspring of will and feeling, for the "what." Let us consider this doctrine from each of its two sides in turn.

Mr. Galloway starts from the reality of the self, though he does not end there. A system of selves or individual centres of experience provides those fundamenta relationis apart from which the relationing work of thought were a tying of knots in the wind. In a suggestive essay (reprinted from Mind) "On the distinction between inner and outer experience," it is argued, first, that "just because experience is richer than thought" I am more than a thought-construction; and, secondly, that I must of necessity acknowledge other beings who are similarly real for themselves, since their claim to be such is, in point of fact, there for me, and cannot, by any means, be thought away. Thus we reach a pluralism. It is, however, the pluralism, not of Leibnitz, but of Lotze. The monads are not absolute, but interact. Hence "the intellectual necessity we are under of striving after unity in all experience" forces us to infer a ground of their interaction. Whence, looking backwards and downwards, we perceive that our pluralism was but a stage on the way to the ultimate reality which is God. Our reality has "degree." God is partly immanent, partly transcendent, in that partly from within, but partly likewise from without, we are "determined"—as the phrase goes—are somehow accounted for finally and completely. Now clearly we have not, so far, penetrated very deeply into the secret of what occurs when something somehow finally accounts for us. We need a perfectly colourless noun and verb to express the process (if it can be called a process)—That that's, let us say. Substance, meaning, purpose, activity, will, are strictly equivalent at this point, but only because they have severally ceased to mean anything in particular when but serving as would-be answers to the bare logical craving for "unity," as Mr. Galloway terms it, or, as we should prefer to say, "totality," of experience. Mr. Galloway, however, does not pretend to much knowledge of his absolute as world-ground. His, he proclaims, is no Hegelian "gnosticism." On the other hand, he rejects the opposite extreme—a speculative agnosticism such as that of Ritschl. His absolute has just this much of positive nature, that when, for other reasons, you fling adjectives at it, they somehow stick. Convergence implies consilience. And now for the other reasons.

Viewed comprehensively, these other reasons—raisons du cœur, as Pascal termed them—amount to this, that we insist on a Reality which can "satisfy our whole nature." This is the "value-judgment" about which the philosophy which seeks to rehabilitate will and feeling is nowadays so eloquent. Our "whole" nature here means our "higher" nature; and, for the purposes of Mr. Galloway's argument, this consists in an ethical consciousness and a religious consciousness. The value-judgment they contain is discoverable in their "normal" import for man. We may disregard "temporary" aberrations as being "not grounded in the nature of things." What, then, is the normal import of our ethical striving? Mr. Galloway is not for putting ethics and religion on a par. In the essay entitled 'The Natural Sciences, Ethics, and Religion' his point seems to be that, as ethics compared with natural science, so religion compared with ethics constitutes another and a higher "level" whence a wider prospect is to be obtained. The distinctively ethical ideal, according to Mr. Galloway, is self-realization:—

"And yet, when we try to give an ultimate expression to the ethical end, we find ourselves entangled in contradictions. It seems to me that the only solution to this difficulty lies in the recognition that the ethical consciousness itself is not ultimate, and must be transcended. Self-realization as an ethical principle is not at fault. It is a good working idea of the ethical end, and up to a point satisfies the needs of a theory on the subject. It only becomes contradictory when we try to state it as an absolute principle of spiritual life. For no working out of the moral ideal brings man to the fulfilment of his destiny in the real universe. The Eternal and Perfect Self exists, but by no process of self-realization can the individual become identical with it. The endeavour of the developing moral life comes to its goal not in the sphere of morality, but in that of religion, and here spiritual life takes a new and higher form. In communion with God, the Perfect Good, man finds, in principle at least, that completion of himself which by no effort of his own after the good has he been able to gain."

By sheer power of writing Mr. Galloway, in the pages immediately following, shadows forth this notion of "an inward completion and harmony wrought by union with God" in a way that is likely to appeal strongly to his readers' religious sentiment. And if the notion will not "think out" so completely as it "feels out," that is precisely, he might urge, what is to be expected when, passing beyond logic with its bare category of "ground," we put our faith in the value-judgment. At the same time mysticism—for it is surely a mysticism which thus merges thought in feeling—would seem to be a very subjective affair, if only because the forms it may take are so many. Pantheism, for instance, is not fairly represented as the outcome of mere intellectual synthesis run wild, but is, we contend, as mystical in its essence as Mr. Galloway's supra-personalism. Nor, again, is it fairly to be classed (with fetishism!) as a retrograde, and presumably aberrant, phase of religion, but, in view of the part it plays in history, is apparently just as "normal" a fruit of the religious value-judgment as the other. But, says Mr. Galloway, pantheism does not minister, directly at all events, to progress. Or, again, "the message of Buddha" compares unfavourably with Christianity "as an ethical and spiritual religion." Quite so. But is not this to invert the relation previously established between ethics and religion? Good authorizes God, and that a Good in process. And Good—ethical Good, at any rate—we seem to know fairly well for what it is; but of God, the ultimate of the religious consciousness, there are, as we have said, many forms.

Meanwhile Mr. Galloway does not shirk this side of the question. His chapter on 'Religious Development: its History and Interpretation,' was necessary to the argument, since the value-judgment must show normality, or be dismissed as subjective illusion. Mr. Galloway finds certain constant factors to generate all religion:—

"Stated in their most general form, these factors are the subject and object, and religion—from religare, to bind—denotes a bond between them."

He goes on to quote Schelling: "Religion means that action is bound, obliged, that there is no choice between opposites, but supreme decidedness for the right without option." The point he is leading up to is that the sense of dependence on a higher power is at the bottom of religion. But the reference to religio, curiously enough, rather gives away his case. If religio, as is most likely, is to be compared with κατάδεσμος, it is the god, not the man, who is bound. Questions of philology apart, it is by no means clear that in early religion the feeling of dependence is to the fore. Magic, for example, enters largely into it, and magic, pace Dr. Frazer, is not "natural," but occult, science, a manifestation of the sense of the mysterious, and, as such, strictly germane to religion. Meanwhile, magic probably gives rise to communion, not excepting totemistic communion, if indeed there be such a thing. Besides, a man may be a god, which somewhat complicates the theanthropic relation. But the subject is endless, and Mr. Galloway's anthropology seems hardly strong enough to cope with it in all its historical variety. What we miss especially is an adequate recognition of the fact that, in Dr. Tylor's words, "the connexion between religion and morality is secondary and late." A certain modicum of sound ethics has been present to guide man ever since he began to feel his way for himself. But at many a stage of his journey religion in one or another form has been but a burden on his shoulders, a burden as heavy as sin. Even now the traditional religion shows itself lamentably unselective—an unweeded garden. Small wonder, then, if ethics, relatively unperplexed, pushes on ahead, half inclined, if not to be self-sufficient, at any rate to develop a religion directly out of itself. From history, then, we seem to derive cold comfort. But philosophy comes to the rescue, bidding us trust less to the dead past than to living personal experience. And philosophy, pursued along lines such as Mr. Galloway lays down, may well be judged—always, to be sure, at our own personal risk—to point truly to where above the mists the sun shines glorious.

Adventures of King James II. By the Author of 'The Life of Sir Kenelm Digby,' &c. (Longmans & Co.)

WE regret that we do not feel able to pitch what must be said about this book in the key of congratulation. A careful and repeated reading compels us to say that while we can give the author unstinted praise for a diligent use of such material as has been gathered, and for an evident desire to be impartial, we miss that intimate acquaintance with authorities, and that clear sense of proportion arising from prolonged study, which are necessary for a satisfactory performance. No mere transcript of James's memoirs or of Clarke's 'Life'—and, indeed, a large part of this book is little more—can suffice. Nor is it enough to refer to Clarendon's 'History,' when the Clarendon Papers are neglected; to quote Knapton or Miss Strickland, and to leave out of account such vivifying sources of information as the letters of Hatton, Essex, Lauderdale, and many others. The result of this restricted familiarity with contemporary authorities is that we find the book very dull; nobody—James least of all—appears to be alive; nobody stands out from the background; and the background, such as it is, is flat and drab. Often, while reading these 'Adventures,' we have caught ourselves longing for just five minutes of Macaulay.

The blame for this dullness must be shared between the author and his subject. James was a dull man—dull beyond hope—dull in his virtues and in his vices alike. He was brave—that is, he was without fear in danger, brave enough to secure the respect of Turenne; but there was no sparkle in his bravery; his desire was animal, bovine; he had not so much wit as would serve to avoid the contempt of an ugly mistress, and when he was drunk he gave out no gleam of humour in his cups. He was a painstaking administrator of the navy, without a spark of constructive genius; so blindly loyal to the creed which he at length adopted that he was unable to see through the walls of his confessor's closet; and when the age for desire was all but past, he became an uxorious husband to a wife whom, in his heavy way, he had always loved, but to whom, from the first month of his marriage, he had been notoriously and continuously unfaithful. He lost the love of children to whom he was affectionately devoted, as he lost the fidelity of ministers, because he could not retain their respect; and he lost the throne upon which, in spite of his religion, he might have remained securely seated to his death, because he did not possess one touch of the bonhomie, one gleam of the imagination or the humour, which—far more than any virtue or any unscrupulousness—preserved for his brother, throughout one of the most critical periods in our history, absolute security of place and the positive affection of his people.

It is, of course, open to our author to plead that in order to write the 'Adventures' of James, no detailed acquaintance with contemporary authorities or with the feelings of the time was necessary. But the plea cannot for a moment be admitted; and, in any case, such knowledge would have prevented the existence of numerous misstatements which annoy the reader, even while provoking a smile. We should not then find the writer quoting Macpherson doubtfully as to the time and place of James's marriage to Anne Hyde, when the Fairfax correspondence would have revealed the depositions of James and Anne themselves, of the clergyman who married them, of Anne's servant, and, best of all, of Ossory, who gave the bride away; or naming the place as "Worcester, where Clarendon at that time had a house": it was, of course, Clarendon's residence in London, Worcester House. Very faulty is the estimate of the magnitude and the direction of the forces at work which speaks of the Test Act as due to Arlington, and ascribes the Exclusion Bill and the "No Popery!" cry to the dread, on the part of Clarendon's enemies, of the resentment of James for their treatment of his father-in-law. The "mystery" which "surrounds the manipulation" of the Treaty of Dover would have been dissipated by an acquaintance with Mignet's superb work on the 'Documents inédits,' &c., or, if time pressed, even with Mrs. Ady's 'Madame'; and a consultation of the text of the treaty would have saved the mistake of saying that Charles undertook to make Catholicism the established religion of England, and assuming that both he and Louis XIV. were fools. The Royal Charles was not, we believe, destroyed by the Dutch in the Medway, but was carried off and made a public show at Amsterdam: at any rate, before the war of 1672 the Dutch endeavoured to conciliate Charles by altering the name of the vessel. There was no such person as the Duke of Newburg; nor do we think that Charles took the hand of Louise de Kéroual when he asked his sister to leave him that particular jewel, because she is not mentioned as present at the interview. What the authority may be for accusing William of causing scandal by his flirtations with two of Mary's maids of honour during the few days he spent in England after his marriage we do not know; nor for the statement, in support of the claim of lenity for James, that he gave Ferguson a free pardon. The name of Ferguson will, we think, be found among those excepted from the amnesty of March 10th, 1686, and of those excluded from the general pardon 1688.

To go a little back, the writer may feel assured that Russell, Essex, and others whom he mentions never met at the Rye House, and had no participation in the Rye House Plot.

It would, however, be ungracious to produce more evidence than is necessary to justify our general criticism of want of the accurate knowledge which, while it cannot by itself secure a satisfactory result, is without question necessary to it. The brilliance, the literary taste and power, the gift of picturesque comparison and contrast possessed by Macaulay himself would never have availed to create his matchless picture of James had he not realized by intense study, directed by extraordinary intuition, the times in which James lived, the characters of nations and of men, the strength of various currents of thought. The writer of the work before us criticizes many details of Macaulay's picture; he asserts, directly or implicitly, that James was neither so contemptible nor so brutal as he is there portrayed; that he was more honourable, more modest, more true to friends, more forgiving; less silly, and less under the dominion of priests. We have no space to discuss these points. It is possible that our author, who is by no means blind to James's faults, and who does not hold a brief for him, as Macaulay undoubtedly held one against him, occasionally takes the juster view; but to convince the jury, the new counsel must make them feel that he has a mastery of his subject at least comparable with that of the opposition. At any rate, such provoking substitutes for knowledge as phrases like "Anglicans, Presbyterians, and Dissenters of various descriptions, who did not know their own minds," might be avoided; nor should we be left, at the end of a passage otherwise apt and reasonable, pondering, and pondering in vain, over so cryptic an utterance as the following:—

"In short, until about a year or more after he had ascended the throne, James may be described as having been, from a religious point of view, rather an 'Old Testament sort of character.'"

To describe Cardinal Mazarin as "far from faultless, but possibly less faulty than historians represent him"; or to say of the Duchess of Portsmouth that "like the devils, she believed, although we have no evidence as to whether she trembled"—such deliverances as these are calculated to create unseemly mirth rather than a trust in the authority of the utterer.

We do not, therefore, think that this book can ever rank as an authoritative work upon the subject, honest and well-meaning though it be, at any rate, upon the period of James's life which lay between the Restoration and the Revolution. It brings, however, though even here with many blemishes, the facts of his boyhood, of his escape from England, and of his career as a soldier of credit under Turenne, and against Turenne, when he was described by Clarendon—sore at Charles's idleness and debauchery—as "a most glorious young prince"—into a convenient form and compass; while the sympathetic sketch of the dethroned and defeated exile, of his remorse for the sins of his adulterous youth, his anxieties, of his resignation, his trust in his pious and forgiving wife, his love of surrounding himself with children, forms a fitting and a pleasing close.

NEW NOVELS.

Three Dukes. By G. Ystridde. (Fisher Unwin.)

UNPRETENTIOUS is a eulogistic adjective when applied to home-made Russian fiction, prolific as it is in solemn limelit caricatures; and although the novel under notice was printed in America, we think its unpretentiousness is none the less remarkable. It possesses, however, positive merit as well, containing as it does some vivid portraiture, full of humorous individuality duly coloured by race. The title is an allusion to some nonsense verses about three dukes "a-riding" in search of wives; in the text the dukes are merely a dissipated guardsman, a professor of meteorology, and a country gentleman whose mother is a duchess. The most interesting characters are not these suitors, but the eccentric and violent proprietor of the Yellow Castle, whose steward has to wash his tenants' money in hot water before he will condescend to touch it. His perverse nature appeals pathetically to the reader, who sees in his arrogance a disease produced by the humbleness of others, and laments a fine talent misdirected into absurdity. His wife is a capital study in pettiness, and her English, which reads like a literal translation of defective French, is extremely funny. The English is spoken for the benefit of a British governess, from whose point of view we observe much that happens in this clever story. As there are fifty or more Russian words employed by the author, we recommend a glossary as a useful adjunct to a future edition.

The Mystery of the Moat. By Adeline Sergeant. (Methuen & Co.)

MOATS and mysteries are almost synonymous terms, firmly associated in the popular fancy. Moats have provided sensation-mongers in fiction and in real life (which is said to follow suit) with many "situations." To mention a moat is almost to connote mystery, a victim, and a villain. The late Miss Sergeant made great use of these opportunities, and offers a liberal supply of such wares. Critical readers (who, like the angels, desire to look into things) might take exception at several things. The laws of possibility and probability are defied on several occasions, also the workings of average, even of exceptional human nature. Want of adequate motive for some of the action is conspicuous, but it does not much matter to those ready and willing to be convinced. The arch-plotter (an M.D. as they frequently are) smiles and smiles, and is a villain of the deepest and darkest dye. Why in these circumstances he fails to draw the veritable "delicious shudder" pursuers of his machinations may, or may not, discover for themselves.

The Apple of Eden. By E. Temple Thurston. (Chapman & Hall.)

THE novel with a purpose always stands in danger of being wrecked by its purpose. It is very difficult to subordinate the moral design to the canons of art. And this is particularly difficult when the writer is a beginner, without a proper knowledge of the rules and limitations of his art. Yet, on the whole, Mr. Thurston's book comes out of the ordeal fairly well. His novel is a diatribe against celibacy in the priesthood, and he has selected a theme which gives his case the utmost strength it could have. In other words, he tests his conclusions by extremes. It is obvious that all Roman Catholic priests are not in the position in which the Rev. Father Everett found himself; but it is equally obvious that the case may have occurred. Mr. Thurston's opinion seems to be that a young man of the age at which priests are ordained is not in a position to judge of his ability to renounce certain passions. But he probably makes the mistake of letting Father Everett develop his error too quickly. The priest only escapes finally because to him "the sacrament of matrimony was ordained by God; the vow of celibacy was ordained by man." It seems, then, that had not the sacrament stood in the way he would have fallen from his vows. And that appears to be what Mr. Thurston would justify. Such questions are, naturally, not for consideration here; but we may say that in working out his problem the author reveals large powers of intuition and realization. He is also skilful in his delineation of a woman, and in rendering Irish life. When he drops his problems he will probably write a very good novel.

The Rebellion of the Princess. By M. Imlay Taylor. (Isbister & Co.)

THE field of second-rate "romanticism," as Mr. Marion Crawford would have us call it, is wide, and Mr. Taylor has produced therein a work which may be ambiguously praised as better than many of its kind. The princess of the title is Peter the Great's sister Sophia, and her rebellion is the successful one which made her Regent, not the second which deprived her of her liberty and almost the whole body of the Strelitz of its existence. The story is told by a fugitive French marquis, who, in the guise of a goldsmith's apprentice, forms the acquaintance of a princess much lovelier than Sophia, whose jealousy forces her into a hurried marriage. The marquis takes the place of the intended and detested bridegroom, and by the usual pyrotechnical heroism, in which a dwarf plays a wise part, escapes with her from her tyrannous father and his friend, the historical Prince Galitzin. An atmosphere of ruthlessness and peril is cleverly suggested, and as there is no padding, the indulgently gullible reader will assert that the interest never flags.

The Informer. By F. Whishaw. (John Long.)

THE last time we stepped into Mr. Whishaw's Russia the century was the sixteenth, and he was pulling the strings of a terrible puppet called Ivan. On this occasion we find ourselves under the sway of Alexander III., and follow the career of an Anglo-Russian employed in the Secret Service. His duty obliges him to arrest an indiscreet poet who is his friend, and his wife is terrorized into betraying his confidence. Although the informer's relations with his department are incredibly genial, the story contains evidence of unusual knowledge of the facts regarding its depressing subject. Mr. Whishaw fails to invest them with atmosphere, but his lucid and orderly method of writing is attractive. Among sensational episodes he describes the flooding of an imprisoned woman's cell at the rising of the Neva. A striking death by force of imagination would be yet more striking if Mr. Astor had not written 'The Ghosts of Austerlitz.'

Fleur-de-Camp. By A. Godric Campbell. (Chatto & Windus.)

A NOVEL which is at once technically new and thoroughly old-fashioned is rather rare, and if there be a demand for the article, Mr. Campbell deserves success in the market. 'Fleur-de-Camp' is a Napoleonic romance, which displays considerable graphic skill in its descriptions of the battles of Austerlitz and Eylau. In construction and characterization it is not so much romantic as operative. In fact, Donizetti's librettist produced its prototype in 'La Figlia del Reggimento.' The heroine is a lovely vivandière, who repeatedly comes under the notice of Napoleon, and duly blossoms into the granddaughter of a marquis, after passing for years as a sergeant's child. Her father conspires against her life in ignorance of her identity, and a fratricide endeavours to marry her by means of a false impersonation. Such as it is, the web of plot is neatly woven, and even the critical reader surprises himself in a naïve curiosity. The Napoleon of these pages is as sympathetically drawn as Lever's; the Josephine is the charming martyr whom we erroneously imagined to be incapable of surviving the publication of the memoirs of Barras.

Lord of Himself. By Mrs. Aylmer Gowing. (John Long.)

THIS story scarcely masters the reader's attention. For the most part it treats of undergraduate life. Though motors and other modern appliances are introduced, an air as of the sixties hangs over it all. It is rather a vapid tale, and the hero is somewhat of a prig, though he occasionally lapses into unexpected colloquialisms. The general diction is also a little confused, a florid style alternating with slanginess. One has doubts as to whether people of the position assigned to them would, in real life, express themselves as they are here made to do.

LOCAL HISTORY.

DR. G. C. WILLIAMSON makes no claim to have written a history of Guildford, but he has certainly collected some most interesting notes on that ancient borough in his volume on Guildford in the Olden Time (Bell). Guildford was the residence of kings of England so far back as the tenth century, when Ethelred II. was on the throne, and the palace, which has now disappeared, was used as a royal seat until the Tudor times. This venerable and historic town also possessed a royal mint, and the earliest coins bear the name of the famous Dunstan. Dr. Williamson's chapter on the coinage is quite elaborate. It is evident that he is ardently attached to the town, which is his birth-place; and there can surely be no one better fitted or equipped to write the history of it which he tells us he is contemplating. Guildford, indeed, is one of our most interesting towns, and probably dates back to long before the Anglo-Saxon epoch. It is curious to learn that in Market Street stood a theatre in which most of the famous players of old days appeared, such as Mrs. Jordan, Edmund Kean, Miss Foote, Master Betty, and the great Macready. The problem of the fourteenth-century crypts in the High Street, one being beneath the Angel Inn, has never been solved, and Dr. Williamson's notes on them are very suggestive. It has, we believe, recently been in contemplation that one of these frescoed crypts should serve as an underground buffet! At present it is in use as a cellar for the storage of lumber. As Dr. Williamson points out somewhat bitterly, there is no overweening disposition in Old Guildford to preserve her ancient relics such as exists in her daughter town in Connecticut. Guilford, Conn., was founded in 1639 by a party which included Whitfield, a preacher from Ockley, in Surrey. Dr. Williamson, it seems to us, throws unnecessary doubt on the parentage of the American Guilford. He tells us that the early emigrants left it on record that "they called the place Guilford in remembrance of Guildford, a borough town, the capital of Surrey, where many of them had lived." And then he suggests that there is "a place in Sussex now called Guilford," which might explain the name. As three Guildford men at least were known to be among the forty emigrants, there seems no need for this. It is wanton, particularly as we are informed that the American town was almost called Milford, after a village a few miles from the Surrey town. Dr. Williamson has provided his book with an admirable index of names as well as of places, and might have added one of subjects.

The King's Homeland. By W. A. Dutt. (A. & C. Black.)—The ancient hundreds of Norfolk find themselves much "translated." Not long since somebody applied the word "Poppyland" to the Erpingham district; soon somebody else followed suit with "Broadland," which still has a vogue; and now Freebridge Lynn or its neighbourhood, the upland part of North-West Norfolk, is glorified with a royal style. If any place can be said to be more especially our monarch's home than another, Sandringham certainly is entitled to the honour; and the selection of a seat in that breezy and bracing country was probably as wise as the description of its amenities and the incidental lights thrown upon the life of the sovereign as a country gentleman are pleasant to read. Mr. Dutt is already known as a competent guide to his native county, having an eye for scenery and for wild life, and being no mean proficient as an ecclesiastical antiquary. In his present book his good qualities are again prominent, and his notes on heath and woodland—Anmer Mink and Dersingham, the Peddar's Way, and the ancient timber which marks old Rising Chase, a part of which survives in the King's park—are full of interest.

We notice some slips; the ancient family of Elwin, the legitimate descendants of Pocahontas, whose portrait is here given, should not have been called the "Elvins," and the literary reputation of Whitwell Elwin should be familiar to a Norfolk man. But Mr. Dutt is not great on genealogy, though his notes on the Walpoles at Houghton, and on some of the former possessors of Sandringham, are adequate and informing. From a remark on p. 201, in connexion with that fine relic of mediævalism Castle Rising, one would gather that he takes Henry VIII.'s Duke of Norfolk to have been executed in Elizabeth's day.

But he is not alone in his lapses. Mr. Rider Haggard, who contributes a readable preface, oddly quotes the Shakspearean "She-wolf of France," &c., in reference to Isabella, the queen of Edward II. Mr. Haggard proposes a legal conundrum, What is the meaning of the terms "that I colour no Bargain or Sale contrary to the Privilege" of the town of Lynn, in the oaths administered to a freeman in 1766?

While awaiting the opinion of the town clerk on the subject, we suggest that if Mr. Haggard had looked at that wonderful repository of word and phrase the 'New English Dictionary,' he might have been able to solve his difficulties. For under 'Colour' (verb) we find that "to colour strangers' goods" is "to enter a foreign merchant's goods at the custom-house under a freeman's name, for the purpose of evading additional duties." The book is well worth reading.

York: the Story of its Walls and Castles. By T. P. Cooper. (Stock.)—The four gates or bars of York are among the most impressive features of the ancient city, whilst the actual remains of walls and towers are considerable. Mr. Cooper has shown much diligence in collecting material relating to the erection and maintenance of the important fortifications of York throughout successive historic periods, together with many incidents connected with their assault and defence. Considerable and systematic use has been made of the admirable printed calendars of the Patent, Close, and other national records still under process of gradual publication. As this is a monograph on the defences of a single city, it would have been far better if the original records had been consulted instead of these printed abstracts, as thereby many interesting little details might have been cited that are perforce excluded from mere English summaries of their contents. Another drawback is that the author is left unprovided with material for those periods for which calendars have not yet been issued, such as the latter half of the reign of Edward III. or the reign of Henry VII. Thus the first appendix to this book gives abstracts from the Patent and Close Rolls pertaining to the fishpond of the Fosse or the King's Pool. As these extracts are entirely dependent upon the printed calendars, there is a blank between the years 1343 and 1378; though we happen to know that there are many and various entries of particular interest concerning the Fosse between those dates. In fact, the printed calendars have been carried somewhat further since this part of the book was sent to press, so that it is not up to date. Now it would not have been very difficult for Mr. Cooper to spend a few weeks at the Public Record Office (or to employ an agent if he cannot read the rolls himself) to recover all the uncalendared entries relative to York walls.

It may seem a little ungracious to fasten on such a feature as this of a book that is well illustrated and presents much that has hitherto been unprinted of the story of York and its defences; but both prospectus and preface state that "the author claims to be the first to thoroughly and systematically search these authorities [Patent and Close Rolls and other State Papers preserved in H.M. Record Office] for the authentic history of York."

This has, however, certainly not been done, and therefore the book can hardly satisfy a competent antiquary.

SHORT STORIES.

Love and Twenty. By John Strange Winter. (John Long.)—When a lady produces her nineteenth volume of fiction, one's first thought is of the manual feat she has accomplished. In the case before us the first thought may be charitably repeated in the last, for at least fifteen of the twenty-one stories in this collection were not worth printing. How many more times, we wonder, will fictitious furniture disgorge long-hidden treasure, and fictitious young ladies meddle criminally with the correspondence of lovers? Imagination has atoned before now for lack of invention; but there is nothing of that rare gift in Mrs. Stannard's mixture of perkiness and sentimentality. Two stories of unhappy marriage have the merit of addressing themselves to grown-up intellects; that of the demi-mondaine who was so bored by the respectability she had coveted that she eloped from her husband reads like a transcript from life. We regret the snobbish note which is struck in an amusing tale of a clerical smoker whose fuses ignited in his pocket while he was officiating before royalty.

Tales of the Five Towns. By Arnold Bennett. (Chatto & Windus.)—This is a distinct improvement upon 'Teresa of Watling Street,' and something of a return to its author's more sincere and ambitious method in 'Anna of the Five Towns.' The inspiration of his smartness in extravaganzas he may draw from London, but that of his best work has come so far from the Potteries. Eight of the stories in this book have really homely backgrounds; but five carry us further afield, though still among familiar characters. Here, as elsewhere, Mr. Bennett's imagination seems to favour the extravagant and fantastic, so soon as he gets away from the smoke of the Staffordshire manufacturing centres. Outside the Potteries the world would seem to be not merely a stage to this writer, but a stage upon which a sort of everlasting harlequinade is in progress. But one cannot deny that he is entertaining in his caricatures. His besetting fault lies in his unrelenting effort after smartness. When serious and unaffected his work is pleasing.

The Woman-Stealers. By J. H. Knight-Adkin. (Isbister.)—The author in his preface apologizes for an anachronism, in that he represents the Vale of Evesham as being submerged at the period of these ingenious tales of the House of the Otter. But he might have gone further and extended his apologies, for the book is largely anachronistic. The stories concern "our earliest Celtic ancestors," to whom he gives such names as Gwen and Caradoc. And not only is the Vale of Evesham submerged, but the mammoth is still to be hunted, and the ichthyosaur is, so to speak, alive and kicking. These facts surely strain credulity. It would have been wiser if Mr. Knight-Adkin had frankly thrown overboard science and history, and depended entirely on his imagination. For the art of his stories has nothing to do with their accuracy; and he has succeeded in giving an atmosphere of his own to them, not so convincing as that Mr. Wells created in his tales of the Stone Age, but effective all the same. At this period the Celtic settlers lived on the fringe of Aryan civilization (or barbarism), and were at least superior to the cave-dwellers. Lake-dwelling, as is well known, was a later and more advanced stage in evolution. These earth-dwellers, or Iberians, are gruesomely suggested. They are Morlocks whose name spells terror to the tall, fair Aryans. Mr. Knight-Adkin manages to suggest the desolation and wildness surrounding these outposts of the superior race, and his trajectory of the ignorance of primitive man on this unknown immensity is very impressive. As the tales appear to be a maiden effort, it is likely that we shall hear a good deal more of the writer, whose considerable gifts are shown on almost every page.

The Confessions of a Young Lady, by Richard Marsh (John Long), is light and vivacious. The style and expression show in the author want of thought, and give food for it to the reader, and all this cannot quite be laid to the account of the "young lady" who unfolds her tale. She has a rather bright and amusing personality of her own, and one regrets that her revelations take up only a part of the volume. The rest of the stories are neither amusing nor instructive. In the young-lady part each chapter is a complete episode, and may be read as such, though it is at the same time progressive. The old, old trick of broken ice and an immersion are used to bring the girl's love affairs to a happy conclusion. We had begun to think we had seen the last of this and the once popular sprained ankle or infuriated cattle.

OUR LIBRARY TABLE.

MESSRS. LONGMAN publish a vivid picture of war by Mr. Frederic Villiers, who did not wait for the fall of Port Arthur, but saw a great deal now recorded in Port Arthur: Three Months with the Besiegers. We need not tell our readers, who are doubtless well acquainted with the quality of the work done by Mr. Villiers, that the illustrations by sketch and photograph are excellently chosen, and that, taken together with the text, they bring the siege before us with perfection. The best of all the descriptions of Mr. Villiers, one may almost assert, is his dream. Some readers of 'Man and Superman' think the dream of Mr. Bernard Shaw the least admirable part of his best book. No one will say the same of the Port Arthur of Mr. Villiers. He had been so long outside Port Arthur that at last he dreamt that he was in it. The Russian Commander-in-Chief received him and gave him the best of drink and smoke. The general was, however, surrounded by all the Plevna heroes, including Skobelev and Todleben, who have long been dead, and by many distinguished Russian ladies, including one well known in London—the jewels and decorations being illuminated by searchlights and star shells. Mr. Villiers was delighted to meet "a famous Russian lady diplomatist of many years ago":

"My dear Madame," I cried, 'this is indeed a pleasure. Why, it is quite a quarter of a—'

"Stop!" she almost shrieked; 'don't trouble about dates.'

The Russian general cut in, and was rebuked by the lady for talking "shop.....Mr. Villiers will wish himself back with his friends the Japanese." The general explained that he had forgotten them, but added that his "august master cabled" the White Cross of St. George that morning for successes against the foe. On cross-examination by the correspondent as to the cable being cut, a confused explanation that the cross had come by wireless telegraphy was broken in on by a Russian shout, "Holy saints!" and Mr. Villiers woke with the first shot from the Japanese eleven-inch mortar. A mortar of more literary interest was developed by the siege, "made of wood and strengthened with thongs," and worked "by two soldiers to each piece." It is indeed curious that after many centuries the most scientific of armies has returned to the big gun depicted in the Plantagenet illuminations as used in the siege of "the strong town of Africa."

MR. NASH sends us a second volume on Russia—The Truth about Russia, by "Carl Joubert." The choice of pseudonym is odd. The names are common in French Protestant places of refuge in Prussia or in Holland, and it is hardly decent for one who is not a Prussian or a Dutch Choubert to pick for himself so peculiar a name. The contents do not please us more than does the title. The war is producing a crop of books as plentiful as was the South African harvest; but while most of the South African books were more or less good, most of the Russo-Japanese books are thoroughly bad. The author seems to have a peculiar prejudice against the "Greek Church," and no one would judge from his pages that the Orthodox Church of Russia, and that of the so-called "dissenters," the Old-Believers, are, like the Greek Church under the Patriarch of Constantinople, the Bulgarian Church, the Servian Church, and many others, branches of the Eastern Church, with history and traditions even more venerable to most English Churchmen than those of the Western Church itself. The nature of the persecution under Nicholas is also misunderstood. The words used as to "Roman Catholics" suggest that there was a general persecution of the adherents of the Western Church. We are not prepared to defend the doctrines or the methods of the Russian autocracy. The point is that no one would gather from "Carl Joubert's" pages the fact that Roman Catholicism, Lutheranism, and Mohammedanism were "recognized religions of the Empire" all through the time of Nicholas I., as they are now. The persecution of the Jews in Russia has always been shameful, and never so bad as at the present moment. The author gives a very different picture of Alexander III. from that formerly accepted in this country. It is hardly well expressed, though it may be truthful: "He could swear like a.....and drink like a fish.....he would behave himself in the presence of ladies of the Court with all the abandon of a bargee." The Grand Duke Serge, his brother, still Governor-General of Moscow, and closely related by marriage to our Royal family, is described as a swindler. The dowager-empress, sister of our Queen, is virtually attacked for "shady" company-promoting. Queen Alexandra is herself dragged in as interfering at the wish of her sister on behalf of Russia. We agree in the author's low estimate of the Russian Government, though we think the epithet "good," which he applies to De Witte, considered as "a man," almost ludicrous. But we cannot approve of his treatment of the Emperor's mother, which we believe to be based on ignorant calumny.

MESSRS. METHUEN publish Winston Spencer Churchill, by Mr. McCallum Scott, a political biography not in the line of The Athenæum. It is a strong statement, even for a book of this kind, to attribute to Mr. Churchill the disruption of the Unionist party: "He has.....rent in twain a great political party," and the "he" is Mr. Churchill. Not enough is made of the Malakand book, of which we wrote on its appearance seven years ago that it contained one of the finest passages in the field of English letters. The way in which Mr. Churchill has mixed correspondence and fighting has, on the contrary, been blamed in Athenæum notices of other volumes, and is glossed over by Mr. Scott. It is difficult to discover whether Mr. Churchill fought for Spain against the Cubans, or why, if not, he received, as we are twice told here, the First Class of the Order of Military Merit from Spain, being at the time a British officer. In the Malakand war correspondents took the usual liberties, and Mr. Churchill was in fact attached to the force as an officer. In the Transvaal he was a correspondent, not a soldier; but he fought, and had the Boers been Russians they would have shot him, to the loss of the House of Commons. The doubtful episode of the escape is treated without much sense of humour or much tact: after it "The friend was in prison—and safe."

MR. POWELL MILLINGTON's little volume on the recent Tibetan expedition, To Lhasa at Last (Smith & Elder), will appeal to a wide circle of readers who have not the time or the means of following its history in the larger and costlier works of other chroniclers. Mr. Millington's experiences are racily written, and he tells a story of ills borne with a light heart. The picture he presents of the difficulties of all kinds encountered on the way to Lhasa will tend to correct the impression, somewhat more prevalent than might have been expected, that the whole affair was a mere promenade without difficulty or danger. Mr. Millington refers to the transport service, with which he was himself connected, in several passages, and in one he speaks of the difficulty of getting this "five-mile-long serpent to crawl through Red Idol Gorge" and to "wriggle over a certain very narrow, rather rickety, bridge." He also protests against the idea that there was no danger, and includes a very vivid description of the gallantry with which the officers and their men pursued the enemy through narrow streets and dingy courtyards into buildings of all kinds, generally pitch dark, where they were liable to be fired on by an unseen foe at close quarters. Besides all these considerations, it should be remembered that the fighting took place after racing up steep slopes in rarefied air, and Mr. Millington is justified in contending that for these reasons "Tibetan warfare should not be despised." The closing scene of the signing of the treaty in the Throne or Audience Room of the Potá-lá is well described. There is just enough about politics to prevent the reader from forgetting the serious side of the subject, but Mr. Millington's main purpose is to amuse his readers, and he is most at home when telling them the best way for two men to ride one horse, or recounting the frolics of a Bhutya pony.

SIR SPENSER ST. JOHN would have been better advised if he had written The Adventures of a Naval Officer, by Capt. Charles Hunter, R.N. (Digby), as avowedly a work of fiction. Publishing it as he has done—in a form with title-page and preface, all suggesting that it is a chapter of autobiography—it is certain to annoy those readers who know anything of the internal history and traditions of the navy during the last century; for many of the incidents related have been well known and talked of, with many different surroundings, for the last hundred years or longer, while a casual reference to a shelf of old Navy Lists will show that there is not, and never was, in the navy, a Capt. Charles Hunter, or any captain whose career corresponds with that described. More captains than one may have imprisoned a refractory midshipman in the hen-coop. Many years since the present writer heard it told as having happened on the African station; old naval officers say it used to be told of Sir Thomas Troubridge in the Blenheim; and very possibly the contemporaries of Troubridge were in the habit of telling it of Griffin, or Hervey, or any one else whom tradition described as a taut hand. But once put aside the idea that the book is in any sense an autobiography, or an account of the naval usages of the day—of which indeed it is a travesty—and the book is thoroughly enjoyable. No one knows Borneo better than Sir Spenser St. John; and though naturalists may question the extraordinary statement that the alligators there have a dorsal fin, the stories of adventure are probably based on fact; they are excellently told, and will delight many young readers, as they have delighted one who is no longer young.

HAD the translation which is before us of one of M. Bourget's novels, Divorce (Nutt), been merely a translation, we should have done our best. It is not easy to bring the reviewer to read through a translation of a book he knows, and the translation of which seems to him unnecessary. Who is there capable of understanding a French point of view, and fit to read a French modern novel, who knows no French, and who wants to read a book which must be full of French idioms, lost upon him by the nature of the case? No translation can give a picture, unless it is so "free" that it ceases to be mere translation. We cannot say that E. L. Charlwood's is a satisfactory performance. His preface is against him, in which he takes quite seriously M. Bourget, the "eminent layman" who "has preserved a lofty impartiality" in this "study of the evils entailed by any departure from the strictest monogamous standard." This is not the view of M. Bourget which is taken in France, either by the public or by his friends. We may share his supposed view as to the evils of divorce, but we reject this polemical study, and M. Bourget as a moral teacher.

MESSRS. LONGMAN have sent us a new edition of the Memoirs of the Verney Family during the Seventeenth Century. Dr. S. R. Gardiner's excellent introductory note, explaining how the late Lady Verney came to sort the old papers at Claydon House, and by-and-by to weave them into a story, has, of course, been retained. To her daughter-in-law, the present Lady Verney, it fell to continue the work, vols. iii. and iv. appearing under her sole editorship, while she was practically responsible for vol. ii. We now have a reissue by her of the first two volumes, somewhat abridged and carefully corrected. Lady Verney appears to have been fortunate in her correspondents, English and American, who have supplied her with additional information, or rectified misstatements such as inevitably occur in the annotation of memoirs dealing with such a tangled age as the seventeenth century. The result is in all respects satisfactory; and the Verney correspondence in its revised form may be freely commended to all who take interest in bygone manners and the vicissitudes of old families.

M. JULES CLARETIE has prefixed to the Mémoires de Général Govone, translated by Commandant Weil (Fontemoing), an interesting preface. The general, who played at an early age a considerable part, was much heard of at the time of the peace negotiations between Austria and Prussia in 1866. He was, in fact, the Italian agent who was sent to watch on behalf of the allies of Prussia. After this he was chief of the staff in Italy, and then Minister of War in the Sella Ministry. He prepared the occupation of Rome, retired in ill-health immediately after that event, and died in 1872, aged only forty-six. The French edition of the life of General Govone by his son is justified and explained by the fact that, for his situation, Govone was as friendly as he could be to the French, and belonged rather spiritually to the days of 1859 or to those of the Barrère dispensation than to those of the Prussian alliance. There is not much light thrown by the Govone memoir on historical events. The general does not seem to have left papers of his own which bear upon the Hohenzollern candidature. What we find about the events of 1869 seems to come rather from the son. We are told, truthfully, that Austria and France carried on with Italy slow negotiations, which were in the hands of the two emperors and the king, and were rather in the nature of a personal agreement between the three than of treaties between the Governments. The reason given in the book before us lies in Italian ministerial instability. There was another reason, to be found in the relations between the Hungarian advisers of the Emperor of Austria and the Prussians. We are here told that in 1869 the exchange of ideas had arrived at such a point that it became possible to prepare a formal agreement between the Governments, and that such a proposition was made to the Italian Ministry. We already knew that they were sounded by the Emperor of the French, and that the conclusion of an alliance was prevented by the Italian condition of the withdrawal of the French troops from Rome. We did not know, so far as the writer of the present notice is aware, that there were direct negotiations between Italy and Austria in June, 1869; but the statement on the subject in the Govone memoirs is not clear, and adds little to our knowledge. There is, indeed, one Italian who could throw light upon it, but the discretion which has marked his diplomatic career is unlikely to be marred by any future revelations to be made by Count Nigra. Commandant Weil has done excellently the work of translation, and, as in all his valuable books, there is a careful list of errata. We do not think, however, that he has checked the references in the index, for it so happens that the two which we looked at were wrong.

IN a pleasant book on L'Ombrie, l'Ame des Cités et des Paysages, just now published by the Librairie Hachette et Cie., the author, M. René Schneider, explains to the French that we English alone trouble ourselves about Assisi and St. Francis, and that we really understand both landscape and "the primitives"—a deserved tribute. The writer's surprise at the more or less cultivated English he met at Perugia and elsewhere in Umbria, whose conversations he records, seems to show that he thought previously that all Britons since the Elizabethans and Milton were of the "John Bull" type.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN have sent to us Mr. Bryce's Holy Roman Empire, which has reached its twentieth and, we gather, its final edition. The author has carefully revised it, adding interesting accounts of Marsilius, Arnold of Breseia, and the East Roman Empire. Perhaps the most valuable of all the additions is the insertion of a brief account of the famous "reception" of Roman law in Germany in 1495. No praise of the work, now a classic, is needed from us.

England a Nation: Papers of the Patriots' Club. Edited by Lucien Oldershaw. (Brinley Johnson.)—We welcome this book, not for the opinions of the authors, but for the spirit which they express. The need of the civilized world at this moment is for ennobling ideals. Years ago the greatest of modern Imperialists expressed his weariness of a race of men who had "mistaken comfort for civilization." The strange nostalgia of Disraeli, weeping by the waters of the modern Babylon and demanding with the insight of genius ideas to regenerate a world sunk in commercialism, with its soul throttled by luxury, is in a certain sense paralleled by Mr. Oldershaw and his comrades. All alike cry out against the sordid materialism which is slowly eating the life out of Western Europe and bringing a dry-rot into the edifice of humane culture. All alike desire to reinspire their countrymen not merely with noble ideals, but also with those particular ideals of liberty and justice which Englishmen believe, or did believe, to be the cachet of the nation that made the "glorious Revolution." All alike desire that quiet pleasures, homely interests, and unostentatious society shall take the place of the fevered rush for excitement which destroys life through the intensity of the love of living, and of the prevailing worldliness which seeks in every social duty only the means of advertisement. A profound disgust has overtaken at least a few for the unrelieved monotony of selfishness which is the ideal of the modern world.

For this reason we welcome the book, and trust that it will do good. Mr. Chesterton is at his best in a paper on 'The Patriotic Idea,' in which, like Mr. Law in the paper on 'Ireland,' he seeks to show that between Imperialism on the one hand, and Cosmopolitanism on the other, there is a place for those who love "the soul of a people" and find in the living nation a reality of personal identity which makes it far more than a mere aggregate of individuals. We think Mr. Chesterton's essay not only the most brilliant, but also the most illuminating in the book. It is, however, hard run by Mr. Ensor's charming paper on 'The English Countryside.' The writer is perfectly justified in pointing to this as the real distinction of England, its real ground of superiority to foreign lands. He is also correct in his analysis of the causes which are rapidly destroying this character. Mr. Masterman's paper has some excellent practical suggestions, but it is marred by the monotony of its rhetoric. To close every paragraph with a pathetic dying fall of similar cadences destroys the charm of what ought to be a rare effect of emotion.

Into the substance of these papers we cannot enter, for obvious reasons. It is noteworthy, however, that Mr. Law defines independence as the goal of Irish nationalism. One other point we may notice, since it is one of fact. Mr. Chesterton denies that there is such a thing as the patriotism of empire. We can hardly suppose the writer ignorant of such a book as Mr. Bryce's noticed above. But he certainly has not pondered over it. That work shows this kind of patriotism strong enough to survive the sack of Rome—survive the barbarian conquests—survive in some sort the feudal system, and alike in East and West Europe to be the means whereby culture and civilization were preserved in ages of violence, and some notion of ideal justice inspired the political relations of mutually hostile states. It may be doubted whether any nationality ever inspired a patriotism grander or more enduring than that summed up "in the first name of the world's names, Rome."

THE copy of The Dickensian sent to us was mislaid. However, our late notice of it enables us to announce the pleasant fact that a second edition of the first number before us will be ready this week, the first having been already exhausted. The cover of the magazine is reproduced from the original green wrapper of 'Pickwick'—a good idea. Mr. Arthur Waugh writes well on the late F. G. Kitton, and there are a number of interesting early criticisms and records concerning Dickens. Altogether the editor, Mr. B. W. Matz, is to be congratulated on a capital beginning.

WE have on our table A Magisterial Handbook, by W. H. Foyster (Eldingham Wilson),—John Milton, by M. K. Roberts (Burleigh),—Catalogue of British and American Book-Plates bequeathed to the Trustees of the British Museum by Sir A. W. Franks, Vol. III. (Trustees British Museum),—Personal and Ideal Elements in Education, by H. C. King (Macmillan),—Handbook on the Municipal Enterprises of the Corporation of the City of Glasgow (Glasgow, Anderson),—The Science of Palmistry, by E. Lawrence (Kegan Paul),—The Æneid of Vergil, Book III., edited by A. Sidgwick (Cambridge, University Press),—Chinese Art, by S. W. Bushell, Vol. I. (Wynan & Sons),—The Museums Journal, edited by E. Howarth, Vol. III. (Dulau),—Practical Methods in Modern Navigation, by Comte de Miremont (Philip),—The A B C of Compass Adjustment, by E. W. Owens (Philip),—Illustrated Notes on Manks Antiquities, by P. M. C. Kermod and W. A. Herdman (Liverpool, Tinsling),—The Prometheus Bound of Æschylus, edited by J. Case (Dent),—Darwinian Fallacies, by J. Scouller (Simpkin),—The Commission of H.M.S. Pandora, 1901-4, by W. A. Wheeler (Gerrards, Ltd.),—The Strollers, by F. S. Isham (Ward & Lock),—The Secret of Wold Hall, by E. Everett-Green (Hutchinson),—When the World went Wry, by M. F. Wilson (Sonnenschein),—The Reckoning: a Dramatic Poem, by Oliver Brett (Humphreys),—The Life Everlasting, by the Rev. D. Purves (Edinburgh, T. & T. Clark),—Religion for all Mankind, by the Rev. C. Voysey (Longmans),—and The Great Religions of India, by the Rev. J. Murray Mitchell (Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier). Among New Editions we have The Age of Shakespeare, by T. Seccombe and J. W. Allen, 2 vols. (Bell),—The Island of Tranquil Delights, by C. W. Stoddard (Chatto & Windus)—and A Laboratory Guide in Elementary Bacteriology, by W. D. Frost (Macmillan).

LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

ENGLISH.

Theology.

Do We Believe? with Introduction by W. L. Courtney, 3/6 Law.

Micklethwait (St. J. C.), The Licensing Act, 1904, 2/6 net. Urban Police and Sanitary Legislation, 1904, compiled by F. N. Keen, 10/6 net.

Fine Art and Archaeology.

Macquoid (P.), A History of English Furniture, Vol. 1, Part 4, folio, sewed, 7/6 net.

Tintoretto, roy. 8vo, 3/6 net.

Year's Art, 1905, cr. 8vo, 3/6 net.

Music.

Scarlatti (Alessandro), his Life and Works, by E. J. Dent, imp. 8vo, 12/6 net.

Political Economy.

Deville (G.), The People's Marx, cr. 8vo, 6/ net.

History and Biography.

Bain (R. N.), Scandinavia, cr. 8vo, 7/6

Daly (A. A.), The History of the Isle of Sheppey, 2/6 net.

D'Arblay (Madame), Diary and Letters (1778-1840), Preface and Notes by A. Dobson, Vol. 3, 8vo, 10/6 net.

Douglas (Sir R. K.), Europe and the Far East, cr. 8vo, 7/6

Evans (H. R.), The Napoleon Myth, 8vo, 3/6 net.

Fitzgerald (P.), Lady Jean, 8vo, 12/ net.

Lazare (B.), Anti-Semitism: its History and Causes, 8/6 net. Port Arthur: Three Months with the Besiegers, by F. Villiers, 8vo, 7/6 net.

Smith (Sydney), by G. W. E. Russell, cr. 8vo, 2/ net.

Geography and Travel.

Sicily, by D. Sladen, cr. 8vo, 5/ net.

Uganda and its Peoples, by J. F. Cunningham, 24/ net.

Sports and Pastimes.

Sandringham: the Royal Home of Sport, folio, 10/6 net.

Education.

Gunn (J.), The Infant School: its Principles and Methods, cr. 8vo, 3/6

Science.

Ambidexterity, by J. Jackson, 8vo, 6/ net.

Archives of the Middlesex Hospital, 8vo, 5/ net.

Parr (A.), Machine Tools and Workshop Practice, 10/6 net.

General Literature.

Atherton (G.), The Bell in the Fog, and other Stories, 6/

Awakening of Japan, by Okakura-Kakuzo, cr. 8vo, 5/ net.

Burdett's Hospitals and Charities, 1905, cr. 8vo, 5/ net.

County Councils, Municipal Corporations, and Local Authorities Companion, 1905, 8vo, 10/6

Cleeve (L.), Stolen Waters, cr. 8vo, 6/

Crowe (H. S. W.), In Defence of a King, cr. 8vo, 6/6 net.

Gibbs (P.), Facts and Ideas, cr. 8vo, 3/6

Graham (R. B. C.), Progress, and other Sketches, cr. 8vo, 6/

Green (E. Everett-), The Secret of Wold Hall, cr. 8vo, 6/

Grundy (M. Barnes-), The Vacillations of Hazel, cr. 8vo, 6/

Gull (C. Ranger-), A Story of the Stage, cr. 8vo, 6/

Hart's Annual Army List for 1905, roy. 8vo, 21/

Kelly's Handbook to the Titled, Landed, and Official Classes for 1905, cr. 8vo, 16/

Lane (E. M.), Nancy Stair, cr. 8vo, 6/

Lawrence (E.), The Science of Palmistry, 4to, 3/6 net.

McCutcheon (G. B.), The Sherrods, cr. 8vo, 6/

Middlemass (J.), Count Reminy, cr. 8vo, 6/

Millar (T. J.), Building Society Finance and Statistics, 8vo, 3/6 net.

Mott (F. B.), Before the Crisis, cr. 8vo, 6/

Oxenham (J.), The Gate of the Desert, cr. 8vo, 6/

Pilkington (L. L.), Purple Depths, cr. 8vo, 3/6 net.

Riego (Mile.), The Selected Works, edited by Mrs. R. Turnbull, Vol. 1, roy. 8vo, 2/6 net.

Russell (W. C.), His Island Princess, cr. 8vo, 6/

Skinner (T.), The Directory of Directors for 1905, cr. 8vo, 15/

Threlfall (T. R.), Long Live Love, cr. 8vo, 3/6

Tracy (L.), The Sirdar's Sabre, cr. 8vo, 6/

Tweeddale (V.), Lord Eversleigh's Sins, cr. 8vo, 6/

Vine (M. G.), In Loco Parentis, 8vo, 2/6 net.

Wilson (M. F.), When the World went Wry, cr. 8vo, 6/

FOREIGN.

Theology.

Alès (A. d'), La Théologie de Tertullien, 6fr.

Hagen (M.), Lexicon Biblicum, Vol. 1, 14m. 40.

Tixeront (M. J.), Histoire des Dogmes: I. La Théologie Anténiéenne, 3fr. 50.

Zahn (T.), Der Brief des Paulus an die Galater, ausgelegt, 5m. 70.

Fine Art and Archaeology.

Grienberger (J. R. v.), Vasa et Supellectilia Liturgica Novis Artis Formis Exhibita, Part 1, 20m.

Gruel (L.), Manuel Historique et Bibliographique de l'Amateur de Reliures, Vol. 2, 100fr.

Mommsen (T.), Hirschfeld (O.), u. Dessau (H.), Ephemeris Epigraphica, Vol. 9, Part 2, 8m.

History and Biography.

Audollent (A.), Carthage Romaine, 25fr.

Hauser (F.), L'Affaire Syveton, 3fr. 50.

Hauvette (A.), Archiloque: sa Vie et ses Poésies, 7fr. 50.

Herriot (E.), Madame Récamier et ses Amis, 2 vols. 15fr.; Un Ouvrage Inédit de Madame de Staël, 3fr.

Koepp (F.), Die Römer in Deutschland, 4m.

Laurie (A.), Les Chercheurs d'Or de l'Afrique Australe, 3 vols. 9fr.

Martin-Ginouvier (F.), Un Philanthrope Méconnu du XVIII. Siècle: Piarron de Chamousset, 7fr. 50.

Merlette (G. M.), La Vie et l'Œuvre de Elizabeth Brown-ing, 8fr.

Reynaud (L.), N. Lenau, Poète Lyrique, 3fr. 50.

Tour (P. I. de la), Les Origines de la Réforme: I. La France Moderne, 7fr. 50.

Geography and Travel.

Eckert (M.), Grundriss der Handelsgeographie, 2 vols. 11m. 80.

Science.

Frick (P.), Fouilles et Fondations, 3fr. 12fr.

Mense (C.), Handbuch der Tropenkrankheiten, Vol. 1, 12m.

Walther (C.), Dix-septième Congrès de Chirurgie: Mémoires et Discussions, 20fr.

General Literature.

Austruy (H.), L'Eupantophone, 3fr. 50.

Formont (M.), Le Péché de la Morte, 3fr. 50.

Georget (A.), Émancipées, 3fr. 50.

Nau (J. A.), Le Prêtre d'Amour, 3fr. 50.

O'Monroy (R.), L'Amour sans Phrases, 3fr. 50.

Stéphane, Grand' Maman, 3fr. 50.

THE UNIVERSITY LIBRARY, CAMBRIDGE.

THE Library of the University of Cambridge must now be added to the long list of those institutions which are compelled to invoke external aid if they are to maintain their prestige and their usefulness. An appeal "to the members of the Senate and friends of the University," in the form of a pamphlet, produced with all the attractiveness for which the Cambridge Press is justly celebrated, reached us a few days ago. In this document, signed by the Vice-Chancellor, the Librarian, and the Registry, and in course of issue by the University Association, with the approval of the Library Syndicate, the needs of the library are set forth clearly and distinctly, but with commendable moderation. They are summarized as follows:—

1. Bookcases for the rooms of which possession has been recently obtained.
2. Alterations and repairs in some of the older rooms, especially in the direction of preventing risk from fire.
3. Provision of a room for reading and reference, and specially for the consultation of current numbers of periodicals.
4. Introduction of modern appliances for the staff and for students.
5. Increase in the permanent staff.
6. Increase in the sum set apart for purchase of books.
7. Increase in the sum set apart for maintenance.
8. Installation (part) and continuation of the Acton Library.

This summary is succeeded by explanations, under the different heads, of what is wanted, and what it is proposed to do. Into these details, however, we need not enter, for the summary, brief as it is, pleads eloquently on behalf of the appeal. It is easy to see what has happened. The Library of the University of Cambridge is a public library on the mediæval system, belonging to the Senate, as a college library belongs to the Fellows, or a monastic library to the brethren of the House. The Senate has gone on using it year after year, and enjoying the inestimable privileges of access to the shelves and of borrowing ten volumes at a time, without reflecting that a day must come when the beloved institution, to which all Cambridge men are deeply attached, would show signs of decay and need vigorous help in many directions. We are not in love with the phrase, but we feel compelled to admit that this library is not "up to date." The ever-increasing stream of books flows in, but there are no shelves to contain them; scholars give or bequeath their collections, but there are no hands to catalogue them; members of the staff grow old, but there is no money wherewith to pension them; valuable books are offered for purchase, but it is necessary to decline them.

The crisis, if we may so speak, has been brought about by the removal of the geological collections from the ground floor and basement of Cockerell's building to the new Sedgwick Museum. These rooms have now devolved to the library, as have also the rooms lent to the University for public purposes, and the Arts School. The increase of space, so long desired, has come at last; but the appeal makes it clear that, without very substantial pecuniary help from without, it will be impossible to make use of it. The Senate has sanctioned a certain outlay, and the Financial Board, with its usual public spirit, has promised to find as much money as possible; but no board, however generous, can make bricks without straw. The appeal makes it clear that at least 21,200% is required for immediate wants, in addition to what the Financial Board has undertaken to supply; and that 3,800% a year (or a capital sum of 126,700%) could well be spent on maintenance. These two sums give a total of 147,900%.

We wish all success to the gallant persons who have undertaken to collect this sum; and we learn with pleasure that the appeal is being made with the hearty concurrence of many resident members of the University, who have already made liberal donations. Intending donors should communicate with Mr. E. H. Parker, Barclay's Bank, Cambridge; the secretaries of the Association, Mr. H. J. Edwards, Peterhouse; and Mr. H. A. Roberts, 61, St. Andrew's Street, Cambridge; or Mr. J. W. Clark, Registry, Scroope House, Cambridge.

THE SECOND PRAYER-BOOK OF EDWARD VI.

The Library, Trinity College, Dublin.

THERE is in this library a copy of an edition of Edward VI.'s second Prayer-Book which seems to be undescribed. It wants all before "The order how | the rest of Holy Scripture," &c. The fourth extant folio begins the Kalendar (6 ff.). Then follow A (2 ff.), the Act of Uniformity; then A-Z, &, in sixes. It has not the forms of ordination, &c. Many woodcut initials resemble those in the Bibles of 1541 (Grafton and Whitchurch). In addition, there are larger historiated initials about 58 mm. square. For example, at the beginning of the Office of Baptism is a picture of the Nativity; at the beginning of the Communion, a woodcut of the Annunciation; before the Order for Administration of the Lord's Supper, a woodcut of the Widow's Mite; before the Act of Uniformity, H (for W), with arms of Henry VIII. and the words "Kynge Henry the IIII." (sic). There are several errors in the headings. Thus the Athanasian Creed on the second page is headed "The Litanie"; the Litany, again, on the third page, is headed "Euenyng Prayer"; the Order of Matrimony, p. 5, has "The Communion"; the Order for Visitation of the Sick, p. 3, "The Communion"; and p. 7, "Against synners."

There is no copy in the Museum or in the Bodleian, and I should be obliged to any reader who could give me any information about the edition.
T. K. ABBOTT, Librarian.

BIBLIOGRAPHICAL DEFINITIONS.

General Library, British Museum (Natural History).

SOME few years ago the Publishers' Association of Great Britain and Ireland drew up a series of definitions, with the view of ensuring that a precise meaning should be assigned to the word "edition" and other terms in use on title-pages, and added, quite truly, that "it is hardly possible to overstate the importance to bibliographers, librarians, and collectors of books, of accurate information on these heads."

These definitions are as follows:—

Impression.—A number of copies printed at any one time. When a book is reprinted without change it should be called a new impression, to distinguish it from an edition as defined below.

Edition.—An impression in which the matter has undergone some change, or for which the type has been reset.

Reissue.—A republication at a different price, or in a different form, of part of an impression which has already been placed on the market.

For a librarian, however, these terms are insufficient, and in hopes that a set might be drawn up which would prove equally useful to both publishers and librarians, and find general acceptance, the appended series was, through the courtesy of Messrs. Longman, submitted in the first instance to the Council of the Publishers' Association. That body, however, declined to take further steps in the matter. Nevertheless, there is great need for the employment of a more extended and accurate set of terms in cataloguing, to take the place of the much overworked "[Another edition]," &c., with the inevitable explanatory notes.

Under these circumstances, may I ask the kind assistance of space in your columns in order to bring these suggested terms before the notice of fellow-librarians for the purpose of inviting their criticisms, and, if possible, of obtaining their support in securing the ultimate adoption of some such code?

SUGGESTED TERMS FOR DIFFERENT STAGES IN PUBLICATION.

Impression.—A number of copies printed at any one time.

New Impression.—A republication without change (i.e., second 1,000, &c.).

Another Issue.—An impression, already published in one set or serial, that is republished without change of type or setting in another set or serial.

Reprint.—An impression in which the type has been reset, while the matter and date remain unchanged. (This also applies to memoirs in serials, or portions of larger works.)

Reissue.—An impression in which the type and date are changed, but not the matter.

New (second, third, &c.) Edition.—An impression in which the matter has been altered, and the date changed, while the type usually differs from that of previous issues.

Extract.—An impression, without change of type or setting, of some memoir in a serial, or of some portion of a book.

Preprint.—An impression of some memoir out of a serial, or of some portion of a book, published in advance, but in the exact type and setting of the serial or work of which it afterwards forms a part.

Advance Print.—An impression of a memoir for a serial, or of part of a work, published at an earlier date and in different type and setting from that of the serial or work of which it afterwards forms part.

Snatch or Cutting.—A memoir or portion of a work, cut out of the original volume.

B. B. WOODWARD.

DRUMMOND AND GIAMBATTISTA MARINO.

King's College, Aberdeen.

IT seems to have escaped the notice of Mr. W. C. Ward ('The Poems of William Drummond of Hawthornden,' 2 vols., London, 1894), nor has it been pointed out, so far as I am aware, by any one else, that Drummond's longest and best-known composition in verse derives its title, in all probability, from Marino's 'Tebro Festante,' a panegyric and congratulatory poem on the election of Leo XI. (Alessandro de' Medici) to the Papal seat. The work and its occasion are thus described by Menghini ('Vita ed Opere di Giambattista Marino,' Rome, 1888, p. 98):—

"Morto Clemente VIII. nel 1605 gli succedeva per brevissimo tempo Leone XI. per il quale il Marino componeva un panegirico che intitolava il 'Tebro Festante.' Il panegirico si compone di ventotto ottave, e rammenta le glorie degli altri due pontefici di casa Medici, Leone X. e Clemente VII. 'Forth Feasting' appeared in its original impression in 1617, but Marino's poem had already been reprinted, once at least, in his 'Nuove Poesie,' 1614. It is included finally in the 'Epitalami del Sig. Cav. Marino,' Venezia, 1667, pp. 249-58. There is nothing to prove conclusively that Drummond was acquainted with more than the title of the verses, but there is sufficient resemblance between the uprising of Father Tiber and his invocation to the Medici (st. 5-23), and the resonant opening of Drummond's "panegyric to the King's Most Excellent Majesty," to give plausibility to the surmise that he had read this as well as other of his predecessor's writings.

A fuller consideration of Marino's works would also, I think, have persuaded Mr. Ward to reject the date hitherto assigned (on the authority of the late Dr. Laing) to Drummond's well-known letter describing the Fair of St. Germain. The mention of D'Urfé's 'Astrée' clearly hinted a doubt to the editor, hardly dispelled in a foot-note (Introd., xxix), that 1607 was too early. More conclusive, however, is the passage, quoted without remark, on a previous page (xxvii):—

"If Cebes, the Theban philosopher, made a table hung in the temple of Saturn the argument of his rare moralities; and Jovius and Marini, the portraits in their galleries and libraries the subject of some books, I," &c.

Here the reference is undoubtedly, in the case of the latter, to the 'Galleria,' a curious and interesting collection of madrigals and sonnets to pictures, most of them portraits of celebrities ancient and modern, obtained by Marino from fellow-artists, or seen by him in the cabinets of his patrons. It is to be inferred from Menghini's statement (op. cit. pp. 135 et seq.) that the scheme of this work only formed itself in Marino's mind after his coming to France in 1615; and the book was published (at Venice) in 1618-19 (id. p. 141; D'Ancona-Bacci, new ed., iii. 385).

It would seem, then, that from Drummond's explicit allusion, which is not to scattered verses, but to a "book" comparable to Giovin's 'Elogia,' his letter to Sir George Keith cannot have been written during his student life in France, but must be referred to some later visit to the capital.

JOHN PURVES.

COLERIDGE'S "IMITATION" OF AKENSIDE.

Cornell University, U.S.A.

A COMPARISON of the following two poems by Coleridge and Akenside will reveal one of the few inadvertences in the late J. Dykes Campbell's editing; it may also illustrate what Coleridge sometimes means by his "imitations"; and to the observant it will tell something about the practice through which he gradually acquired his art. On p. 31 of Coleridge's 'Works' (Macmillan, 1893) there is an 'Elegy,' written, it is supposed, in 1794, when the poet was a student at Cambridge, and purporting to be "Imitated from One of Akenside's Blank-Verse Inscriptions." The 'Elegy' consists of six stanzas:—

Near the lone pile with ivy overspread,
Fast by the rivulet's sleep-persuading sound,
Where "sleeps the moonlight" on yon verdant bed—
O humbly press that consecrated ground!

For there does Edmund rest, the learned swain:
And there his spirit most delights to rove:
Young Edmund! famed for each harmonious strain,
And the sore wounds of ill-requited love.

Like some tall tree that spreads its branches wide,
And loads the west-wind with its soft perfume,
His manhood blossomed; till the faithless pride
Of fair Matilda sank him to the tomb.

But soon did righteous Heaven her guilt pursue:
Where'er with wildered step she wandered pale,
Still Edmund's image rose to blast her view,
Still Edmund's voice accused her in each gale.

With keen regret, and conscious guilt's alarms,
Amid the pomp of affluence she pined;
Nor all that lured her faith from Edmund's arms
Could lull the wakeful horror of her mind.

Go, Traveller! Tell the tale with sorrow fraught:
Some tearful maid perchance, or blooming youth,
May hold it in remembrance; and be taught
That riches cannot pay for Love or Truth.

In his Notes (pp. 569-70) Campbell gives no sign of having consulted Akenside to learn the nature of the imitation. This does not consist, whatever Campbell may have conjectured, in a mere attempt to copy the earlier poet's manner; it is a reworking of his matter, and ought rather to be called an "adaptation." Coleridge's model or material is easily discovered in Akenside's third 'Inscription,' a poem but two lines longer than the 'Elegy.' Let all Quellenjäger observe:—

Whoe'er thou art whose path, in summer, lies
Through yonder village, turn thee where the grove
Of branching oaks a rural palace old
Embosoms. There dwells Albert, generous lord
Of all the harvest round. And onward thence
A low plain chapel fronts the morning light
Fast by a silent rivulet. Humbly walk,
O stranger, o'er the consecrated ground;
And on that verdant billock, which thou seest
Beset with osiers, let thy pious hand
Sprinkle fresh water from the brook, and strew
Sweet-smelling flowers. For there doth Edmund rest,
The learned shepherd; for each rural art
Famed, and for songs harmonious, and the woes
Of ill-requited love. The faithless pride
Of fair Matilda sank him to the grave
In manhood's prime. But soon did righteous Heaven
With tears, with sharp remorse, and pining care
Avenge her falsehood. Nor could all the gold
And nuptial pomp, which lur'd her plighted faith
From Edmund to a loftier husband's home,
Relieve her breaking heart, or turn aside
The strokes of Death. Go, traveller, relate
The mournful story. Haply some fair maid
May hold it in remembrance, and be taught
That riches cannot pay for truth or love.

Until we have a more specific knowledge of Coleridge's indebtedness to preceding poets against whom he is held to have reacted—an indebtedness that lasted longer in his development than scholars are wont to admit—we shall remain impotent to measure the extent of his reaction. In this instance his unconstrained departures from Akenside, if we can separate these from those that are metri gratia, are no more interesting than what he retains of a genius whose "head and fancy" he admired (see Coleridge's 'Letters,' 1895, p. 197).

LANE COOPER.

Literary Gossip.

MESSRS. SMITH & ELDER will shortly publish 'The Story of an Indian Upland,' by Mr. F. B. Bradley-Birt, an Indian Civilian, whose recent work, 'Chota Nagpore: a Little-Known Province of the Empire,' was well received. This book, like the earlier one, attempts to strike the happy mean between the Blue-book and the novel. It deals with the history of an out-of-the-way district, and the many races that have peopled it. The chapter on Augustus Cleveland recalls the memory of one of those forgotten Englishmen who did much for British empire in India in its early days.

THE Syndics of the Cambridge University Press have decided to undertake the publication of a mediæval history on the same general lines as the 'Cambridge Modern History.' The work will probably consist of six volumes, and will include maps and tables. The first volume will be published shortly after the completion of the 'Modern History.' At the request of the Syndics, Prof. Bury has undertaken to prepare a plan for their consideration. The names of the editors will be announced in due course.

MR. FISHER UNWIN has arranged to publish a volume entitled 'Lucie and I,' by Miss Henriette Corkran. The book is a story cast in the form of an autobiography, and the scenes are laid chiefly in France, Italy, and Switzerland. Its interest lies rather in characterization and dialogue than in plot.

MESSRS. HUTCHINSON are publishing next Tuesday a novel—the first—by the well-known French-American artist, M. André Castaigne, who himself has illustrated the book with over fifty original drawings. For two years M. Castaigne, who is nothing if not industrious, has been working on 'Fata Morgana,' this romance of art student life, and he describes only what he has seen and experienced himself.

MR. COULSON KERNAHAN has resigned the post of literary adviser to Messrs. Ward, Lock & Co., which he has held for very many years. His reason for doing so is that he is anxious to devote himself to his own work. Mr. Kernahan's relations with the directors of Messrs. Ward, Lock & Co. are those of close friendship, and much regret is felt on both sides at the parting. After Lady Day Mr. Kernahan's address will be 16, Norfolk Square, Brighton.

MR. GEORGE ALLEN will publish Mr. George A. B. Dewar's next book, the scene of which is laid in the Solent and largely about Portsmouth and its harbour. The "note" of the work will be national, inspired by an entire belief in things English.

MR. FORD MADOX HUEFFER has recently completed a volume, to which he has given the tentative title of 'The Book of London.' It sets forth the meaning of London as he views it, and will be published at an early date by the Alston Rivers Publishing Company.

LADY MARGARET SACKVILLE has almost ready for the press a second volume of verse. It will be published under the title of 'A Hymn to Dionysus, and other Poems,' by Mr. Elkin Mathews.

A SPIRITED ode on the Presidential inauguration in the United States has been composed by Mr. Blair Thaw. It strikes the note of fraternity, and is to appear under the auspices of the Peace Society in several hundred American papers on an early day next month.

DR. PAGET TOYNBEE's work on 'Dante in English Literature from Chaucer to Cary' is nearing completion, and it is hoped will be ready for publication by Messrs. Methuen in the course of the present year. The number of writers concerned amounts to close on three hundred, of whom upwards of forty are contributed by the sixteenth century, upwards of thirty by the seventeenth, nearly one hundred by the eighteenth, and the remainder mainly by the first four decades of the nineteenth. The record ends with 1844, the date of Cary's death. Concurrently Dr. Toynbee has compiled a chronological list of English translators of Dante from Chaucer to the present day, which, including the authors of incidental and fragmentary pieces, reaches the somewhat surprising total of well over two hundred.

WE regret to announce the death at Halifax, Nova Scotia, of the Rev. John De Soyres, a nephew of Edward FitzGerald and a man of great ability, the variety of whose interests, perhaps, deprived him of the reputation which was his due. Mr. De Soyres won the first Members' Prize offered for English at Cambridge, took a Second in Law in 1872, and won the Hulsean Prize five years later, when he took Orders. In 1881 he was appointed Professor of Modern History at Queen's College, Harley Street, and was Hulsean Lecturer at Cambridge in 1885. In 1888 he took a Canadian living.

He edited Pascal's 'Provincial Letters,' and wrote works on 'The Montanists and the Primitive Church' and 'A Word-Book for Students of English History.' Mr. De Soyres wrote occasionally in our own columns.

Is the art of pamphleteering to be revived? Mr. Balfour set the fashion in his 'Economic Notes.' Then we had a pamphlet on 'National Finance' by Mr. Gibson Bowles; and now Mr. A. M. S. Methuen, whose pamphlet on the Boer War had a very large sale, enters the lists with an attack on Mr. Chamberlain's fiscal policy, entitled 'England's Ruin: Discussed in Sixteen Letters to the Rt. Hon. Joseph Chamberlain, M.P.,' which will be published next week by Messrs. Methuen & Co. The letters are described as "the simple comment of a plain man on the practical issues of a policy." They are addressed to Mr. Chamberlain not because the author believes they will be read by him, but because it is only through his personality that they can reach the man in the street. "It is not without a touch of sympathy," says Mr. Methuen, "that I can speak to you—that is, to him. Who has not felt, late or soon, seldom or often, what you feel—your doubts, your distrust, your morbid fears, your dread of the day when England shall be as Spain? The mood comes to all. Let us see whether it is based on reality."

It is interesting to find a modern publisher assuming the mantle of Junius.

Chambers's Journal for March will include the following amongst other articles: 'Notes from the Diary of a London Merchant,' by Mr. J. B. Drayton; 'Idle Hours in Caesar's City,' by Miss G. G. Chatterton; 'Lough Neagh and Coney Island'; 'An Edinburgh Rat-Catcher of the Olden Time,' by Major-General Tweedie; and 'The Scotts of Ettrick Forest in Olden Time,' by the Rev. J. Sharpe.

WE hear that the printing of one of the large London publishing houses is being withdrawn from the Edinburgh printers and transferred to Glasgow. This means a loss of many thousands of pounds formerly spent in the Edinburgh printing trade.

THE death is announced at Edinburgh, in her eighty-second year, of Mary Anne Cadell, eldest daughter of Scott's latest publisher, Robert Cadell, and widow of Sir William Liston-Foulis of Colinton. Lady Foulis had in her possession several relics of her father's connexion with Walter Scott, including the MS. of 'Redgauntlet,' and five volumes of Scott letters. The MS. of 'The Pirate' went to her younger sister, the widow of Dr. R. H. Stevenson. Lady Foulis supplied Thomas Constable with a good deal of material for his 'Archibald Constable and his Literary Correspondents.' Robert Cadell, who became Scott's publisher after Constable's failure in 1825, made so much out of the connexion that he died a rich man. According to The Athenæum of April 12th, 1851, he paid between 1828 and 1848 37,000*l.* for various Scott copyrights.

A CORRESPONDENT writes from the Oratory:—

"There is a slight mistake in the short review of 'The Life of St. Francis,' by St. Bonaventura, translated by Miss Salyer, in The Athenæum, February 4th. Your reviewer states that the first English translation of this work appeared in 1635. On examining the copy in our library I find it was published in 1610, and that the edition of 1635 is the second. The edition of 1610 is not dedicated to Lady Winefred Englefield, but 'To The Right Worshipfull and most worthy religious gentleman A. B.' by E. H."

MR. GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE'S 'Bygones Worth Remembering' will be published by Mr. Fisher Unwin on Monday next. The veteran agitator will have much to tell about the Anti-Corn Law League and the men who have taken part in the reform movements of the past sixty years.

MR. A. C. MANSTON writes from Ashley Bank, Castle Douglas, N.B.:—

"Your critic of Mr. Gosse's 'French Profiles' says that it contains 'the only account of Barbey [d'Aurévilly—denuded in your columns of his accent] which we remember to have read in English.' On this point your critic's memory must be short or unfurnished, for only last year Prof. Saintsbury dealt with Barbey in his 'History of Criticism,' iii. 433-6."

Two or three pages hardly amount to a substantial account worth recording.

THE Rev. J. P. Mahaffy, C.V.O., has been appointed by the Governing Board to represent the University of Dublin at the coming congress at Athens.

MESSRS. PUTNAM announce that The Critic, their illustrated literary monthly, has absorbed The Literary World of Boston, and will henceforth be known as The Critic and Literary World. Miss J. Gilder continues to control the combined publications.

DR. B. P. GRENFELL and Dr. A. S. Hunt, who resumed the excavations at Oxyrhynchus for the fourth season early in December, have recently been making large finds of Greek papyri. These range from the first century B.C. to the fifth century, the bulk of them belonging to the second, third, and fourth centuries, and include a number of literary fragments. The excavations will be continued, if sufficient funds are forthcoming, until the end of March.

MR. FRANCIS LL. GRIFFITH writes:—

"I find on the title-page of 'Ehnasya,' the memoir just issued by the Egypt Exploration Fund, a statement that the volume contains a chapter written by me. I have looked in vain for any such chapter, and I much regret that I cannot claim the honour of having contributed to Prof. Petrie's latest work. I learn that it is too late to alter the title-page. As it may have puzzled not a few subscribers to the Egypt Exploration Fund, may I ask you to insert this disclaimer in your widely read paper?"

THE death is announced from Paris of M. Henri Germain, who was a capable writer on economic subjects. M. Germain was born at Lyons on February 19th, 1824, and successfully launched the Crédit Lyonnais in 1863 with a capital of twenty million francs, and this great organization has not only branches in every part of France, but is well known all over the world. He was on several occasions elected a member of the Chamber of Deputies, but for the last ten years had taken no active part in politics. In 1886 he was elected a member of the Académie des Sciences Morales et Politiques, in succession to M. Victor Bonnet. The published works of M. Germain include 'Situation Financière de la France en 1886' and 'L'État Politique de la France en 1886.'

THE Société Gaston-Paris, which was founded soon after the death of the well-known savant, will shortly issue a complete bibliography of his works, which is due to two of his pupils: M. Joseph Bédier, professor and successor of Gaston Paris at the Collège de France, and M. Mario Roques, "maître de conférences" at the École Normale Supérieure. This bibliography will show the prolific character of Gaston Paris's literary output in all branches of philology and the literature of the Middle Ages. The total number of his works, articles, and so forth reaches the extraordinary figure of 1,197.

At the meeting of the Sociological Society on Tuesday next two papers, 'Restrictions in Marriage' and 'Studies in National Eugenics,' will be communicated by Mr. Francis Galton. Dr. Westermarck will be in the chair.

AMONG the Parliamentary Papers of the week is a Report (Historical Manuscripts Commission) on the Manuscripts of Mr. Fortescue preserved at Dropmore, Vol. IV. (2s. 6d.).

SCIENCE

The Story of Wireless Telegraphy. By Alfred T. Story. (Newnes.)

THIS little volume presents in a sufficiently popular and interesting manner the various details and systems of wireless telegraphy. The author rightly begins with a substantial reference to Clerk-Maxwell's electro-magnetic wave theory, which suggests the close physical connexion between light and electricity. In 1888, or twenty-five years after Clerk-Maxwell's mathematical demonstrations, Hertz instituted experiments to prove the truth of Maxwell's theories, and by so doing probably gave the first suggestion of communicating through space by means of ether-piercing rays of electricity.

In dealing with his subject the author has perhaps dealt over fully with systems of telegraphy dependent upon induction between wires or dependent upon earth conduction. Both of these are still sometimes spoken of as wireless telegraphy, but they are of a type in no way connected with the present methods for employing electro-magnetic waves. As a matter of fact, nearly half the book is taken up with these obsolete methods, which in no way lead up to or help to explain the Hertzian wave telegraphy of to-day. From an historical point of view, however, a brief reference to them would have been justified, as they formed the first departure from the ordinary direct-wire telegraphy.

Reference is deservedly made here to the pioneer work of Sir William Preece, on behalf of the Post Office, across the Bristol Channel and elsewhere about the year 1890. This was probably the first operation of its sort on a practical scale successfully effected in this country, and, like that of Melhuish across Indian rivers, and Willoughby Smith for communication with lightships and rock lighthouses, was due to the fact that cable communication was difficult to establish or regarded as too expensive. But the foundations for wireless telegraphy as we know it to-day are due to an observation by Hertz that the discharge of a Leyden jar through one of the spirals of an induction coil results in the setting up of an induced current in the other spiral, provided that the first spiral has a small "spark-gap" in its circuit. In that casual observation lay the germ of the effective spark-gap through which (as Mr. Story notes) Hertz was led to his remarkable discoveries. By such a discharge as that referred to a sudden and infinitely rapid disturbance of electrical equilibrium is set up, causing an excitation of electrical vibrations of great velocity in the ether. Vibrations of this description are capable of creating in another circuit of similar construction disturbances of a like nature, and of such energy as to be perceptible when the two circuits—that is the exciter and receiver—are far apart. Here we have the principle of electro-magnetic wave telegraphy—the wireless telegraphy of to-day. It was with the simplest possible apparatus that Hertz made his experiments in this direction. He at the same time reproduced all the phenomena of light, including those of reflection and refraction, and proved that light and electricity, in accordance with Maxwell's electro-magnetic hypothesis, are in essential particulars identical.

Mr. Story does well to bring before his readers the suggestive—not to say prophetic—article of Sir William Crookes in The Fortnightly Review for February, 1892, making special reference to some experiments by the late Prof. D. E. Hughes, for no record of telegraphy through space would be complete without some allusion to these researches.

The next chapter in the 'Story' is devoted to brief descriptions of the apparatus employed in wireless telegraphy. Mr. Story gives a fairly complete history of the evolution of the coherer, originating with Prof. E. Branly, and first followed up in this country by Sir Oliver Lodge. He does justice to the work of Mr. Rutherford and Capt. Jackson, but appears to have overlooked that of Signor Castelli, the inventor of the Italian Navy coherer, which has, for some time, done service for the Marconi system, and is said to be superior to the previous coherer of metal filings. It is sometimes averred, however, that the mercury coherer—or magnetic detector, as it is often called—is due to Prof. Thomas Tommasina, of Geneva.

It may be said in passing that this little book exhibits an excellent sense of unbiassed judgment and suitable proportion in meting out credit to those who have really earned it. Great inventions are almost invariably the work of many hands, and so it is with wireless telegraphy. Sir Oliver Lodge is probably more nearly the pioneer than any man living, for he it was who followed up the researches of Hertz and produced a working system for laboratory and public demonstration purposes; but, as Mr. Story truly remarks,

"no one can take from the young Italian inventor [Marconi] the honour of having been the first to see the commercial possibilities lying hid in Hertz's discoveries, and at the same time to bring them to a practical realization."

Mr. Marconi's contribution to the gradual realization of wireless telegraphy on a practical scale consists mainly in combining, modifying, and improving the various inventions of others in such a way as to form a practical working whole. One of the points in which his assiduous labours have been effective is the value of height for the vertical wire and its application to the degree of distance to which it is desired to transmit signals. According to his views, the limit of transmission increases with the square of the height of the vertical wires or antennæ. Thus, if the distance is quadrupled, the height of the wires at each station requires to be doubled. This is supposed to hold good more or less across expanses of water; but on land, where there are elevations, natural and artificial, a greater length of vertical wire is required for a given distance. It was in 1896 that the young Italian came over to this country at the age of twenty-one, and he has been steadily increasing the distances overcome since he began with wireless communication across the Channel. This was taken comparatively calmly on December 12th, 1901, but the world was excited at the announcement that Marconi had succeeded in transmitting and receiving signals across the Atlantic Ocean independently of the existing cables. This was a shock to many holders of cable stock. The few signals of which there was evidence were soon disputed and explained away, and it is certainly a fact that we have since heard little more of wireless telegraphy between our coast and that of Newfoundland or any part of the United States or Canada. Shortly after, however, an American liner, s.s. Philadelphia, fitted with Marconi apparatus, on her way to New York, received legible messages from the Marconi Wireless Station at Poldhu, Cornwall, up to a distance of 1,551½ miles, and weak signals up to 2,099 miles. On this occasion one very important phenomenon was revealed: by night transmission was possible for some 1,500 miles, but during the day the utmost limit was 700 miles. This was attributed to the discharging influence of sunlight upon the electricity-laden vertical wire of the transmitter.

Another noteworthy cruise in the history of wireless telegraphy was that of the Carlo Alberta during the voyage of the King of Italy to St. Petersburg in July, 1902, when signals were received daily on board from Poldhu. The great feature about the experiments was not so much the distance overcome as the fact that so much of that distance was overland. Then again, on December 22nd, 1902, Mr. Marconi effected a Transatlantic message "through free space" from Gluce Bay, Cape Breton, to King Edward, who graciously replied, though the latter message went by cable.

Then on Monday, March 30th, 1903, The Times announced that it had entered into an arrangement with the Marconi Company for the regular day-to-day transmission of news from the other side of the Atlantic. This announcement was accompanied by about twenty lines of news from New York "by Marconigraph." Nothing has since appeared, and an explanation followed a little later that the apparatus at Cape Breton had had to be placed under repair.

As a matter of fact, the distance at which signals can be transmitted by Hertzian wave telegraphy resolves itself almost entirely into a question of power. It is by the erection of generating stations at Poldhu and Gluce Bay, containing engines and dynamo electric machines of great potentiality, that Mr. Marconi has encompassed the Atlantic Ocean—to the extent of a few words, at any rate. This power requires to be greater by day than at night, in order to overcome the disturbing influence of sunlight above referred to.

In view of the efficiency of long-distance telegraphy by cable, this question of distance, like that of speed, is at present comparatively unimportant; and it seems a pity that those who have worked so strenuously in the field of wireless telegraphy have not devoted themselves more successfully to the question of non-interference as well as to greater accuracy in results. Time after time rival systems have picked up—not to say blocked—each other's messages, sometimes by design and sometimes unavoidably. This was the case during the cruise of the Carlo Alberta, when almost everything transmitted from Poldhu was read off at the Eastern Telegraph Company's station at Porthcurnow, as well as by the Post Office instruments at Penzance; but the same thing has been repeatedly done elsewhere, and up to the present time all attempts at syntony and resonance have been a complete failure.

In the course of a final chapter the author gives brief accounts of most of the other systems of wireless telegraphy now in use. The Slaby-Arco system (like the Braun method, largely used on the Continent) is not, however, described, and the Ording-Armstrong method is favoured with more serious attention than it—at present, at any rate—deserves; for it has scarcely emerged beyond the experimental stage, though freely "puffed" in the non-technical press. For strategic purposes, where cables are not available, a simple, rough-and-ready apparatus dependent on receiving by sound—such as that furnished by the De Forest system, which employs a telephone—has certain advantages. The extra speed of working thereby attained is an advantage in itself, especially in view of the fact that it materially reduces the chances of "eavesdropping." The De Forest system was used with good results by The Times at the seat of the Russo-Japanese war for some considerable time last summer. The Lodge-Muirhead system—which includes some most beautifully devised mechanism, and is distinctly original in character—has also been doing good steady work, in a quiet way, across country from Elmer's End to Aldershot for the War Office. Then, again, the Fessenden system, which, like the De Forest system, has been for some time in active operation in the United States, represents much original research. Altogether, wireless telegraphy is in a tentative stage, and we shall have to wait for some time till it becomes an assured science.

Wanderings in the Great Forests of Borneo. By Odoardo Beccari. (Constable.)—The name of the author is little known in this country except to those who have made a special study of the flora and fauna of the Eastern Archipelago. The translation of his book 'Nelle Foreste di Borneo'—the title is too wide, for Dr. Beccari deals almost exclusively with Sarawak—which has been made with extraordinary command of English idiom by Prof. Giglioli of Florence, brings within the reach of English readers one of the most interesting and suggestive works on the tropical forest which have appeared for many years. Man plays little part in it, though strange tribes and strange customs appear incidentally upon the scene; the protagonist is the forest itself as an expression of the great forces which shape the organic world. Vitality struggling into form as slime, as sap, as fungus, as parasite, as climber, as creeper, as forest giant, as decay, as renewal, this is the real theme of Dr. Beccari's book:—

"Who will ever be able to form an adequate conception of the amount of organic labour silently performed in the depths of the forest? Who can even in imagination realize the untold myriads of living, palpitating cells that are struggling for existence in the tranquil gloom of a primeval tropical forest.....? In short, how can we ever come to know the biology of this vast living world, which even the profoundest philosopher fails to grasp as a whole?"

One of the most striking distinctions between the primeval forests of Borneo and a European forest is the incredible number of species found in the former:—

"I have never counted the number of trees growing on a measured area in a Bornean forest, but the number is certainly very large, both in individuals and species. Naturally it would vary in different localities: thus, on the slopes of mountains the number of individuals of a given species is greater than in the valleys or on the plain; whilst on these the variety of species is larger, for it is here that fruits and seeds, carried by the streams and spread by frequent inundations, accumulate in large quantities. I believe that such, indeed, is the most efficacious of the many ways of dispersion of seeds of forest trees on the plains, the more so as the rainy season corresponds with that of the ripening of their fruits."

Dr. Beccari describes vividly the strange sense of powerlessness and isolation that comes to a wanderer in the forest, the irresistible dread of being overwhelmed by it and lost in its depths. He suggests that animals feel the same horror, and that this accounts for the relative absence of animal life except on the forest edge.

If the forest world is beautiful and terrible by day, night brings a new revelation:—

"Every dead leaf, every branch or twig in a decaying condition, was luminous, showing a pale glow through the slight mist which rose from the humus of the forest soil. The rain of the preceding day had apparently set alight the whole network of mycelium thread, which, invading the ruins of the giant vegetation, slowly disorganized and consumed them. A huge, rotten tree-trunk, a few feet from where I lay, emitted a brilliant phosphorescent light, emanating from certain white fungi belonging to the genus Agaricus. A single one of these enabled me easily to read a newspaper when placed upon it, so strong was the white and very beautiful light it gave off."

More brilliant still are the fireflies, which are everywhere in the forest by night. Dr. Beccari suggests an ingenious explanation of their phosphorescence, which he regards as "the result of a kind of reproduction of luminous impressions received through the eyes," a special form of mimicry:—

"In the same way I do not think it impossible that the attractions for luminous and glittering objects may have been the prima causa of the production of luminous spots and metallic or iridescent colours in many beetles and butterflies. Thus the golden green of Buprestis reproduces, possibly, the shiny surfaces of leaves in strong light, on which they love to rest; and the mother-of-pearl spots on the wings of some butterflies might find an explanation in the fascination which reflected sunlight on a pool of water has for them. Phosphorescence and mimetic luminosity would thus in insects have been derived from a common cause; but in nocturnal insects, in whom the colour of the external portion of the body cannot have originated an ambitious sentiment, the physiological process which has rendered luminous phenomena possible has shown its effects internally: whilst in the others its manifestation is on the external surface of the body."

Like his illustrious predecessors Wallace and Darwin, Dr. Beccari has been led by the contemplation of the great drama of life in the tropical forest to speculate on the problems of evolution, but along very different lines. The question which interests him most is the cause of the disposition to vary, which is postulated as the origin of species. At the present day species are fixed, and so completely is the power of adaptation to environment lost, that they perish sooner than adapt themselves to new conditions of life. The apparent contradiction Dr. Beccari explains by suggesting that the force known as "conservative heredity" is one that acts with cumulative intensity, but that in the primordial epoch of life, when the organic world was young, it was relatively feeble. Organic predestination rules the world to-day, but

"during the infancy of the organic world, there being then no power to counteract the conservation of new characters acquired by organisms, the latter must have been not only susceptible of considerable morphological malleability during their lifetime, but must have also been capable of transmitting to their descendants any new characters of an advantageous kind they had acquired."

Dr. Beccari is disinclined to believe in "the slow and gradual progressive evolution of organisms, and in the formation of species as a result of continuous, but insensible variation from pre-existing forms."

"I am more inclined to admit the sudden appearing of some principal adaptation forms, and I believe that originally hybrids between such prototypes have been the reason of the concatenation of all organisms, and of the apparent descent of one from the other. I hold that hybridism had a large share in the formation of existing species, and it seems to me possible that, in the creative or plasmative period, even widely different types could cross and produce offspring, owing to the very imperfect influence of the force of heredity."

He also suggests that will may have contributed to adaptation: a bold hypothesis, which he supports by reference to the curious habit of Toxodes jaculator, or the "blowpipe fish."

Of orang-utans Prof. Beccari made a large collection in the forests of Sarawak. The orang-utan is a type specialized for arboreal life in forest country, and in such a district he regards it as highly improbable that primitive man, or even an erect anthropomorphic ancestor of man, can have originated. The whole nature of the country was against specialization for terrestrial locomotion and the erect posture, and the "humanization" of the assumed anthropoid, with the physiological and psychological consequences of the change in the position of the brain, must have taken place elsewhere. That fossil remains of Pithecanthropus were found in Java cannot be held to prove, in a country so unstable, that the living creature inhabited that island. Dr. Beccari thinks that

"Tropical Africa—or rather, perhaps, a land of similar climatic conditions interposed between the African and Asiatic continents—must have been the region where man assumed his erect gait and bipedal progression."

Within the space at our disposal it is impossible even to indicate the number of points of interest which Dr. Beccari has raised, and to the consideration of which he invariably brings a highly original and unconventional mind. His book well deserved translation.

GEOGRAPHICAL BOOKS.

Glossary of Geographical and Topographical Terms and of Words of Frequent Occurrence in the Composition of such Terms and of Place-Names. By Alexander Knox. (Stanford.)—It was a good idea to add a supplementary volume, dealing with geographical terms, to Stanford's well-known 'Compendium of Geography.' Mr. Knox has been an assiduous collector of notes on terms encountered in reading geographical works, and these he has arranged alphabetically in this glossary. The terms defined are numerous, but the contents of the author's note-book, rather than any systematic classification of geographical or purely topographical conditions which require and have received names, seem to have controlled the selection. From it we gather that his reading has been mainly in descriptive books of travel, and not in the more precisely expressed, if less thrilling, volumes of systematized geography. As a guide to the growing technical language of the geographer the work is not of much use, but it might be made so by giving, in addition to the popular usage of each term, the special sense in which it is employed by geographers. For instance, fjord is inadequately defined as a frith, or long narrow inlet; ria as the mouth of a river, and liman as an estuary. The selection of terms is very arbitrary. Why is bourne included, but not lavant; why cwm, and not corrie; why glyn, and not glen? and so on. If any natural phenomenon, such as a glacier, a volcano, or a river, or any common geographical object, is taken and the names of the forms conditioned by it are looked for, only a few are found. A perusal, for instance, of almost any standard work on the Alps would have prevented the omission of such terms as Bergschrund and crevasse. In a supplement to the 'Compendium of Geography' the terms mentioned in the other volumes should all have been included, but they are not, and in some cases a more accurate explanation of a term can be found in the text of the other volumes. When a second edition is called for, the existing definitions should be thoroughly considered and revised, while the numerous omissions should be made good. As a pioneer book, however, the volume is welcome and may form a useful basis for a more thorough work.

Regional Geography: the British Isles. By J. B. Reynolds. (Black.)—Miss Reynolds appears to have tried to write a class-book which would do for the middle and upper classes of schools what Mr. Mackinder's 'Britain and the British Seas' has done for more advanced students. As a regional geography it is somewhat disappointing, for the distinguishing characteristics of the natural regions are not systematically discussed. The work, however, is distinctly an advance in the right direction, and should do much to make interesting a subject which is often very badly taught. A number of minor errors occur—for instance, 100 fathoms are not 600 yards, steel is hardly satisfactorily defined as iron with the amount of carbon reduced, and the Scottish valley lochs are more than mere expansions of rivers; but these imperfections can easily be removed in a second edition.

An Elementary Class-Book of General Geography. By Hugh Robert Mill. (Macmillan.)—Dr. Mill's class-book on geography is one of the best planned and most trustworthy of school-books on the subject. It is mainly descriptive, and presents too many details about places, and too little co-ordination of the general characteristics of countries. In this respect it sins rather less than most of its competitors, and in the newly revised form it can be recommended for use in schools, provided that it is not committed to memory. The first purpose of a class-book is to give facts which an intelligent master can make use of in his class, and this the work in question undoubtedly does.

Stanford's Geological Atlas of Great Britain. By Horace B. Woodward, F.R.S. (Stanford.)—This atlas is based upon 'Reynolds's Geological Atlas'—a work which for upwards of forty years has remained without a rival as a collection of small county maps, serving as a convenient guide to the amateur in his geological journeys. In the preparation of this edition—which is the third—Mr. Stanford, who has taken over the work, has wisely placed the revision in the hands of Mr. H. B. Woodward, of the Geological Survey. His extensive and intimate acquaintance with British stratigraphical geology has enabled him to introduce considerable improvement throughout the work. It is not merely a collection of maps, but also includes 134 pages of descriptive geology. We find an excellent sketch of British stratigraphy and a description of the geological structure of the country, county by county. All this has been virtually rewritten, and a noteworthy feature introduced in the shape of a description of the geology of the country seen in travelling along the principal lines of railway. The student of geology traversing any part of the country will find the interest of his journey greatly enhanced by having this convenient work at his side. It is not a large atlas, but a portable work, containing, in addition to the text, 34 geological maps, clearly printed in colours, and 32 plates of characteristic British fossils, mostly from the admirable charts of Lowry, which for accuracy and beauty have never been surpassed.

The Survey Atlas of England and Wales designed by and prepared under the direction of J. G. Bartholomew, and published by the Edinburgh Geographical Institute, is an admirable work which deserves high commendation. The Ordnance Survey has been reduced to the uniform scale of half an inch to a mile, and sixty-seven sections, which are coloured so as to indicate altitudes, offer a wonderful view of the whole country. Besides these maps, which will be invaluable to the increasing class who travel through the country on cycle or motor, the work of the specialist is visible everywhere—in particular maps which deal with such subjects as vegetation, monthly rainfall, railways, commerce, and industry. There are plans, apart from London, of no fewer than fourteen crowded centres of population. The colour-printing is firm and excellent, and the accuracy of detail achieved in names is remarkable. We have tested the volume by looking up several recent changes, and find them in each case duly noted. We have detected no omission worth mentioning, and the atlas is strongly and handsomely bound.

Mr. Murray's Small Classical Atlas, edited by G. B. Grundy, is a good thing, and will undoubtedly supersede atlases now in use among schoolboys and undergraduates. It is well bound and cheap at six shillings, but, better than this, it is clearer and more legible than any similar atlas we have seen. Dr. Grundy has done well to avoid the confusion caused by hachured mountains, and substitute the system of coloured contours, which all cyclists who use Bartholomew's pretty and useful maps have learnt to appreciate highly. Four colours are used to indicate levels up to 600 ft., thence to 3,000 ft., thence to 9,000 ft., and higher levels. We have examined some of these maps carefully, and find that, so far as the number of names inserted is concerned, they are complete, as is also the index printed at the beginning. We would suggest for a new edition, when its time comes, that the number of each map might be printed on the blank page preceding the map, as well as inside the sheet, as is done in Philips' 'Systematic Atlas,' and that some device of colour should be used to distinguish rivers and roads, e.g., in the map of Italy. Of the fourteen sheets, not the least useful will be found to be that containing fourteen plans of famous ancient battlefields. The whole is excellently edited and produced.

SOCIETIES.

SOCIETY OF ANTIQUARIES. — Feb. 2. — Mr. W. Gowland, V.P., in the chair.—Mr. R. Garraway Rice, Local Secretary for Sussex, read a paper entitled 'Palæolithic Implements from the Terrace Gravels of the River Arun and the Western Rother.' Mr. Rice, after indicating the general configuration of the Arun and Rother district by means of maps and lantern-slides, said that it did not appear that any discovery of palæolithic implements in the river gravels of Sussex had been recorded, although a large number had been found in the southern part of the adjoining county of Hants, notably in the neighbourhood of Southampton, in the gravels of the Itchen and the Test. The only recorded discoveries of palæolithic implements which the writer had been able to find were at Bell's Field, Friston, near Eastbourne, by Mr. R. Hilton, who found palæolithic implements on the surface, and of one example at Brighton, by Mr. Ernest Willet in 1876, both finds being recorded in Sir John Evans's 'Ancient Stone Implements of Great Britain.' Mr. Rice first called attention to a flat ovate palæolithic implement found on the surface at Appledram, near Chichester, by William Hayden in 1897, which he thought might be possibly assigned to the terrace gravels of the Lavant. In view of the paper, Mr. R. C. Fisher sent for exhibition an ovate implement found on high ground at Midhurst in 1893; from its appearance it would seem to have been exposed on the surface for a considerable period. This seems to complete the list of Sussex examples prior to Mr. Rice's discoveries, the smallness of which he considers to a great extent due to the fact that until recent years there were but few pits, and excavations were infrequent. The area to which Mr. Rice has mainly confined his researches extends from Selham in the west to Wiggonholt in the east, and in the course of his paper he dealt with no fewer than thirteen pits and sections showing river-drift gravel, several of which, however, are now filled up or disused. He pointed out that the implements which he and others had found in the district have a special interest as adding another of our Southern counties to the list of those in the river gravels of which palæolithic implements have been found. The first palæolithic implement found in the Arun and Rother district appears to be a very nicely chipped ovate implement discovered at Fittleworth many years ago, which was first seen by Mr. Rice in 1898, then in the possession of the late Rev. A. B. Simpson, vicar of that parish. This implement and a beautifully chipped ovate sharp-rimmed one, very thin in proportion to its size, also formerly belonging to Mr. Simpson, and probably likewise found at Fittleworth, were lent for exhibition by Mr. Philip Dawson, the present owner. In the disused pit from which the former implement came, approaching 200 feet above Ordnance datum, Mr. Rice found a small flake with "working" on the edge. In the adjoining parish of Coates, at an altitude of 122 ft., he found in drift gravel a good external flake of an ochreous colour, chipped so as apparently to form a borer, likewise a well-formed tongue-shaped implement, 5½ in. in length and 3½ in. in breadth at its widest part, weighing 1 lb. 4 oz. Further, he found in gravel from the same site a pointed ovate implement, measuring 2½ in. in length by 2½ in. in breadth, of a dull amber colour; like one from Bury St. Edmunds figured by Sir John Evans, though most skilfully chipped, the edge is not in one plane, but when looked at sideways shows an ogival curve. In gravel dug at about 20 ft. above Ordnance datum, at Greatham, Mr. Rice found a fine polygonal flake, 2½ in. in length by 2½ in. in breadth, nicely patinated, of a creamy colour; whilst in gravel obtained at 100 ft. above Ordnance datum at Wiggonholt, Mr. W. Paley Baildon found a fine well-made palæolithic ridged flake, measuring 4½ in. in length by 2½ in. in breadth, of a dark ochreous brown colour. A search made subsequently in the same gravel by the author resulted in the finding of an interesting little ovate implement made out of a flake, the bulb of percussion showing on one side, whilst the other is nicely worked; it measures only 2½ in. in length by 1½ in. in breadth. Mr. Rice dealt at some length with the respective deposits of river-drift gravel in which the implements had been found, the altitudes of the same, and especially with their positions in relation to the rivers, illustrating his remarks by means of slides showing sections and pits, in the examination of which he had been assisted by Mr. C. A. Bradford. Mr. Rice said the special points of interest in this discovery of palæolithic implements in Sussex might be briefly recapitulated thus: the newness of the locality; the great difference of the levels at which the implements were found, e.g., about 20 ft. above Ordnance datum at Greatham, 122 at Coates, and approaching 200 at Fittleworth; and the variety in the type of the implements. The latter facts taken together may suggest a vast difference in the age of the cream-coloured flake from Greatham and the tongue-shaped implement from Coates.—Dr. F. W. Cock exhibited an early eighteenth-century taper-box containing a number of Jacobite and other relics.—The Rev. John Hewett, through the Secretary, exhibited a small silver-gilt cup of German workmanship of the sixteenth century, one of a pair belonging to Babbacombe Church, Torquay.

ARCHÆOLOGICAL INSTITUTE. — Feb. 1. — Sir Henry Howorth, President, in the chair.—A paper on 'Japanese Sword-Blades' was read by Mr. Alfred Dobric, who also exhibited several fine specimens, and gave lantern illustrations.—After remarks by the President, who also exhibited three Japanese swords, the discussion was continued by Lord Dillon, Mr. Rice, and Mr. Worsfold.

LANNEAN. — Feb. 2. — Prof. W. A. Herdman, President, in the chair.—Mr. E. W. B. Holt, Miss E. F. Noel, Miss A. L. Embleton, Mr. W. J. Tutchter, and Mr. S. E. Chandler were admitted Fellows.—Miss L. S. Gibbs, Mrs. H. V. Scott, Mr. C. B. C. Storey, and Mr. R. H. Yapp were elected Fellows.—The President announced that the Queen had consented to become an Honorary Member.—The first paper was by Mr. W. J. Tutchter, entitled 'Descriptions of some New Species and Notes on other Chinese Plants.' The species in question were from Hong-kong, with one from Kowloon, and one from Weihai-wei.—Dr. Stapf, Mr. C. B. Clarke, and Mr. A. O. Walker engaged in a short discussion of some of the points raised.—In the absence of Dr. H. J. Hansen, his paper, 'Revision of the European Marine Forms of the Cirolaninae, a Sub-family of Crustacea Isopoda,' was communicated by the Zoological Secretary. Three new species are described—Cirolana gallica, C. schmidtii, and Eurydice affinis. Comparative tables of the genera and species were supplied, distinguishing eight European species of Cirolana, one of Conilera, and six of Eurydice. From the last genus E. pontica (Czerniavski) is omitted as dubious, and Gourret's Conilera gram-poides is identified with Cirolana cranchii. Some important comments were made on the untrustworthiness of faunistic catalogues, and on the pitfalls which naturalists lay for their colleagues by inadequate descriptions.—The paper was discussed by the President and Mr. A. O. Walker, the Rev. T. R. R. Stebbing replying on behalf of the author.

PHILOLOGICAL. — Feb. 3. — Prof. Lawrence in the chair.—Dr. H. Oelsner read a paper on 'Early French Manuals for English Use.' He began by rapidly sketching the fortune of the French language in this country from the Conquest till 1500, dealing with the Court, nobles, gentry, lower classes, Church, State, law, schools, and literature. It is convenient to adopt the three periods of French in England suggested by Brunot—those of conquest (1150-1250), decline (1250-1350), and survival (from 1350). The meagreness of the native literature when set against the mass of Anglo-Norman works produced in England during those ages is one of the most curious of literary phenomena. There can be no doubt that Trevisa (in his amplification of Higden's 'Polychronicon,' edited by Babington for the Rolls Series, ii. 160) greatly exaggerates when he says that even the peasants endeavoured to learn French. Still, the class just above them must have known French well, for it was for them that Bozon wrote his 'Contes Moralises' (as was pointed out by Paul Meyer in his introduction, p. lv). Trevisa is certainly right in stating (l.c., p. 161) that at about the time of the Plague (1349), Cornwall, Penriche, and their followers reinstated English as the basis of education in the grammar schools. The bad quality of Anglo-French was mocked by the Frenchmen of the time, and acknowledged by the English themselves. This poor French is nowhere more conspicuous than in several of the treatises composed by Englishmen for the use of their countrymen. These cover, roughly speaking, 350 years, from 1150 to 1500. While French was paramount, the manuals dealing with words, their pronunciation, flexion, &c., predominate, and the epistolaries, too, are popular; but when French declined, the manières de langage, which were mainly intended for use abroad, appear more frequently, and were, during the period of "survival," accompanied with English versions. The treatises may be divided into four classes: I. Vocabularies and kindred works. (1) Adam du Petit Pont (d. c. 1150) wrote a Latin epistle, many words of which are glossed in French (ed. by Scheler, 'Lexicographie Latine du XI<sup>e</sup> et du XII<sup>e</sup> Siècle,' 1867). (2) Alexander Neckam (1157-1217), whose treatise 'De Utensilibus' is written in Latin and glossed in French (ed. by Th. Wright, 'A Volume of Vocabularies,' i. 1857, and by Scheler, l.c.). (3) The 'Dictionarius' of John de Garlande (c. 1225) in Latin, with English and French glosses (ed. by Wright, l.c. and by Scheler, l.c.). (4) A Latin vocabulary of the names of plants, glossed in French and English, written 1261-5 (ed. by Wright, l.c.).

(5) The treatise of Walter de Bibbesworth, which is the best known of the set, and probably belongs to the last quarter of the thirteenth century. The only complete edition is that of Wright, l.c., who, however, did not use all the MSS. The little book, which is in French and in rhyme, and glossed in English, was written for the children of a certain Dionisie de Mouchensy (probably the lady of that name who died in 1304). (6) A very curious little manual, still in MS. (Trin. Coll. Camb. B. 14, 39, 40), begins: "Liber iste vocatur Femina quia sicut Femina docet infantem loqui maternam [linguam], sic docet iste liber juvenes rethorice loqui gallicum prout inferius patebit." It was first mentioned by Hickeys ('Ling. Vett. Septent. Thesaurum,' 1705, i. pp. 154-5), who quotes several passages, which were copied from him in the 'Hist. Litt. de la France' (xvii. 1832, pp. 633-5), and by Reiffenberg ('Philippe Mouskes,' 1836, i. pp. xcv-xcvii). P. Meyer refrains from giving details in his account of the French MSS. of Trinity College (Romania, 1903, xxxii. pp. 43-4), as Mr. W. Aldis Wright is editing the MS. for the Roxburghe Club. Suffice it to say for the present that it is in French and English, that it belongs to the beginning of the fifteenth century (not to the thirteenth, as the scholars prior to P. Meyer thought), and that it is full of interest.—II. Grammars and portions of grammars, dealing with orthography, pronunciation, flexions, &c. (1) The 'Orthographia Gallica,' written c. 1300 by an Englishman, who endeavoured to make the Anglo-Norman spelling tally with that of pure continental French (ed. definitively by Stürzinger, 1884). The student is referred to his valuable general introduction, especially to pp. v-x, which deal with the various MSS. containing tables of flexions, &c., for which room cannot be found here). (2) The 'Tractatus Orthographie Gallicane,' put into shape, c. 1400, by Canon T. Cuyfurelly, a doctor utriusque legis of Orleans. This was edited (together with several kindred treatises, mostly from the MS. No. 182 of All Souls' College) by Stengel in the Zeitschr. f. neufr. Spr. u. Lit. (1879), i. pp. 16-22. Stengel attributes several of the other manuals in the MS. to Cuyfurelly (see his notes in The Athenæum of October 5th, 1878). (3) A 'Donait Francois,' written (c. 1400) by several competent clerks, by order and at the expense of Johan Barton (ed. by Stengel, l.c., pp. 25 sqq.). This is the earliest French grammar extant, and, but for certain Anglicisms, a very creditable piece of work. (4) Alexander Barclay's 'Introductory to Write and to Pronounce French,' London, 1521 (partly edited from the unique copy by A. J. Ellis, 'Early English Pronunciation,' 1871, pp. 803-14, who, however, omits the very interesting Prologue, given by Stengel, l.c., p. 23). (5) Palsgrave's famous 'Esclaircissement' (1530). It is interesting and instructive to note of the five works in this section that No. 1 was known by Cuyfurelly, the latter by Barton's clerks, these by Barclay, and he again by Palsgrave.—III. Model Letter-Writers. There are five of these, all still in MS. (three at the British Museum, one in the Cambridge University Library, and one at All Souls'). They range from c. 1327 to 1415, and contain interesting allusions—to the kings of the period, to Avignon and the Popes, to the rising of Owen Glendower, &c. The private letters are no less valuable in their way, and full of quaint touches. The theoretical introductions to these letters were edited in a Greifswald dissertation (1898) by W. Uerkvitz, whose preliminary remarks are likewise instructive. Stengel (l.c., pp. 8-10) published a few samples of the letters themselves.—IV. Manières de langage, or model conversation-books, chiefly for the use of travellers. (1) Perhaps the most fascinating, and certainly the earliest, of these is the one edited by P. Meyer in the Revue Critique (1870, 2<sup>e</sup> semestre, pp. 373-408; a separate tirage in 1873). It is dated 1396, and is probably by the Cuyfurelly named above. Orleans and its university, and the troubles there in 1389, are frequently mentioned. (2) The next in point of date is Cuyfurelly's 'Petit Livre pour enseigner les enfants de leur entreparler comun Francois' (ed. by Stengel, l.c., pp. 10-15). This must belong to c. 1399, Richard II's captivity being given as a piece of news. (3) P. Meyer published another of these manières in the Romania (1903), xxxii. pp. 47-62. This was written c. 1415, as it contains interesting references to Agincourt. Like all the other works of this class, it is full of valuable data concerning contemporary life and manners, and of rare words. The scene is laid in England (mostly at or near Oxford). A fair at Woodstock and the articles bought and sold there form a feature; thus divers cloths, &c., from Abingdon, Witney, Castelcombe, Colchester, and Salisbury are specified. (4) An unpublished manière in the Cambridge University Library (l. i. 6, 17) bears the inevitable mark of a later period: it is composed in English and French. The MS. belongs to the end of the fifteenth century. (5) The valuable 'Dialogues in French and English,' by W. Caxton (adapted from a fourteenth-century book of dialogues in French and Flemish), were edited from Caxton's print (c. 1483) by Bradley for the E.E.T.S., No. LXXIX. (1900). (6) The 'Lytell Treatise for to lerne Englissh and Frensshe,' "emprynted at Westmynster by my [L. me?] Wynken de Worde" (according to Mr. A. W. Pollard, before July 10th, 1499), was searched for in vain by Ellis. Stürzinger, however, saw a copy (apparently unique) at the British Museum (Grenville 7570), and gave a few bibliographical data (l.c., p. ix). The little book will probably be reprinted for the E.E.T.S., with a general introduction treating in detail the whole field covered by the present paper. It is in French and English, and contains word-lists, some dialogues and letters, and a short "book of courtesy," the last practically identical (save for the additional French) with the 'Lytlyle Childrenes Lytil Boke,' edited from two MSS. for the E.E.T.S. by Dr. Furnivall in his 'Babees Book,' &c. (1868, pp. 16-24).—After the paper had been read, Prof. Gollancz, in the name of Prof. Schröder, submitted to the meeting an article which had just appeared in Neuere Sprachen, a tribute by Prof. Schröder to Dr. Furnivall on his eightieth birthday, which fell on the next day, February 4th. The article dwelt in detail on Dr. Furnivall's services to English philology in general, and the feelings of gratitude inspired on the Continent by his generous help and appreciation of the work of students throughout the world. A resolution was unanimously passed, expressing the thanks of the Philological Society to Dr. Schröder, and a hearty vote of congratulation acknowledged Dr. Furnivall's services to the Society since its foundation.

INSTITUTION OF CIVIL ENGINEERS.—Feb. 7.—Sir Guilford L. Molesworth, President, in the chair.—It was announced that 19 Associate Members had been transferred to the class of Members, and that 16 candidates had been admitted as Students. The monthly ballot resulted in the election of 7 Members and 20 Associate Members.

SOCIETY OF ENGINEERS.—Feb. 6.—Mr. D. B. Butler, President for 1904, in the chair.—The Chairman presented the premiums awarded for papers read during the past year, viz.: The President's Gold Medal to Mr. W. E. Storey for his paper on 'Condensing Machinery'; the Bessemer Premium of Books to Mr. R. G. Allanson-Winn for his paper on 'Deep-Sea Erosion and Foreshore Protection'; a Society's Premium of Books to Mr. A. S. E. Ackermann for his paper on 'British and American Coal-cutting Machines'; and a Society's Premium of Books to Mr. F. Latham for his paper on 'Some Recent Works of Water Supply at Penzance'.—Mr. Butler then introduced the President for the present year, Mr. Nicholas J. West, and retired from the chair.—The President then delivered his inaugural address, dealing mainly with the mechanical side of engineering, with reference to the historical use and improvement of pumping and marine engines, and the application of the latter at various periods to vessels of different kinds, including a reference to the latest phase of turbine propulsion.

ARISTOTELIAN.—Feb. 6.—Dr. Hastings Rashdall, President, in the chair.—Mr. F. C. S. Schiller was elected a Member.—Prof. W. R. Boyce Gibson read a paper on 'Self-Introspection.' There are three radically different types of observation: (1) the physical or non-introspective observation of nature, where we observe objects in their relation to each other; (2) sensory introspection, where we observe objects as presented to the observing subject; (3) the spiritual intuition of self-consciousness, in which our subjective activities are present to the subject, realized in their immediacy as subjective activities. This is the point of view of the experient. Here the subject, whether in self-introspection or self-retrospection, knows itself not as object, but as subject. Self-introspection means a realization, self-retrospection a re-realization. The thought of thought is not thought about thought, but the cogito ergo sum. The import of this famous dictum, as Descartes understood it, may be stated as follows: "As a self-conscious being I have the intuitive certainty of my own existence." Hegel's philosophy also presupposes the cogito ergo sum in the same sense, not as a first axiom indeed, but as the ideal implied in the first stirrings of the dialectical method. The positing of being as the first of the thought-forms can be justified only by a dialectic that presupposes the true unity of thought and being in self-consciousness.—The paper was followed by a discussion.

MEETINGS NEXT WEEK.

MON. Royal Academy, 4.—Lecture by Prof. A. Gilbert.
— London Institution, 5.—'Energy: American, British, and Japanese,' Prof. W. E. Ayrton. (Fraser's Lecture.)
— Society of Arts, 8.—'Internal Combustion Engines,' Lecture I., Mr. Dugald Clerk. (Cantor Lecture.)

MON. Surveyors' Institution, 8.—Discussion on 'Urban and Rural By-Laws and Suggested Amendments.'
— Geographical, 8½.—'The Geographical Results of the Tibet Mission,' Sir Frank Younghusband.
TUES. Royal Institution, 5.—'The Structure and Life of Animals,' Lecture V., Prof. L. C. Miall.
— Colonial Institute, 8.—'Problems and Perils of Education in South Africa,' Mr. P. A. Barnett.
— Institution of Civil Engineers, 8.—'Alfreton Second Tunnel,' Mr. E. F. C. Trench; 'The Reconstruction of Moureille Tunnel,' Mr. Dugald McLellan.
WED. Chemical, 5½.—'The Condensation of Anilino-Acetic Esters in presence of Sodium Alcoholate,' Mr. A. T. de Moulpiéd; 'Nitrogen Halogen Derivatives of the Aliphatic Diamines,' Mr. F. D. Chattaway.
— Meteorological, 7½.—'Report on the Phenological Observations for 1904,' Mr. E. Mawley; 'Observations made during a Balloon Ascent at Berlin, September 1st, 1901,' Messrs. Hermann Elias and J. H. Field; 'The Winds of East London, Cape Colony,' Mr. J. R. Sutton.
— British Archaeological Association, 8.—'London, Monastic and Ecclesiastical,' Mr. A. Oliver.
— British Numismatic, 8.—'Idiotcy of England Numismatically Exemplified,' Mr. F. Stroud.
— Folk-lore, 8.—'Ragnarok and Valhalla Myths, and Evidence from which they Date,' Mr. A. F. Major.
— Microscopical, 8.—'Practical Micro-Metallography, with Experimental Demonstration,' Mr. J. E. Stead.
— Society of Arts, 8.—'The Decline of the Country Town,' Mr. A. H. Anderson.
— Dante, 8½.—'Countess Matilda of Tuscany,' Mr. Luigi Ricci.
THURS. Royal Academy, 4.—Lecture by Prof. A. Gilbert.
— Society of Arts, 4½.—'The Indian Census of 1901,' Sir C. A. Elliott. (Indian Section.)
— Royal, 4½.
— Historical, 5.—Annual Meeting. President's Address.
— Royal Institution, 5.—'Recent Work of the Geological Survey,' Mr. J. J. H. Teall.
— Linnean, 8.—'A Revised Classification of Roses,' Mr. J. G. Baker; 'The Botany of the Anglo-German Uganda Boundary Commission,' Messrs. E. G. Baker, Spencer Moore, and Dr. A. B. Rendle.
— Society of Antiquaries, 8½.—'Samuel Mearns and his Bindings,' Mr. Cyril Davenport; 'Some Antiquities recently found in Thames Street, London,' Mr. F. G. Hilton Price.
FRI. Geological, 3.—Annual Meeting.
— Institution of Mechanical Engineers, 8.—Annual Meeting.
— Royal Institution, 9.—'High-Power Microscopy,' Mr. J. W. Gordon.
SAT. Royal Institution, 3.—'The Bohemian School of Music,' Lecture III., Sir A. C. Mackenzie.

Science Gossip.

At the meeting of the Anthropological Institute to be held next Tuesday, Dr. A. C. Haddon will exhibit a series of cinematograph pictures of native dances from the Torres Straits, taken by him when in New Guinea.

A MOST eccentric character has passed away in Hermann Landois, Professor of Zoology and Director of the Zoological Garden at Munster, whose death in his seventieth year took place on the 29th of last month. As a man of science he was much esteemed for his careful work, and he was the author of several valuable books—'Der Mensch und das Tierreich,' 'Das Pflanzenreich,' 'Das Mineralreich,' &c. He was also a novelist, and in his novels, the best known of which is 'Franz Essink,' he displayed his gift of humour and thorough knowledge of the Westphalian peasantry and their dialect. The stories told of his eccentricities are innumerable. Among his achievements was the erection of a statue to himself at his own expense opposite his house at Munster, at the unveiling of which he held a Festrede.

At a meeting of the trustees of the Percy Sladen Fund, held at the Linnean Society's rooms last Friday week, grants varying in amount were awarded to Mr. W. R. Ogilvie Grant towards the expenses of a collector for the British Museum in Central Africa; to Miss Alice L. Embleton to enable her to continue her investigations in insect cytology; and to Mr. J. Stanley Gardiner towards the expenses of an expedition to the Indian Ocean.

THERE is a correction to be made in our note last week about the results of the West Tibet expedition. It was stated therein that the source of the Sulej was not found in Lake Mansarowar, but considerably to the westward. The language of the information on which this statement was based was ambiguous; but apparently what was intended was that the source of the Sulej in Lake Mansarowar had been found considerably westward of what was supposed. The Tibetans stated that the narrow channel from Mansarowar flowed down to the Rakas Tal lake during the four summer months only, and the Survey officers followed this channel throughout its length, and proved what the Tibetans said to be true. They failed to discover the range of hills said by Mr. Savage Landor from personal observation to separate these two lakes. Incidentally, the expedition obtained striking ocular evidence of the right of Mount Everest to claim supremacy among Himalayan peaks, to which we referred in our number for November 12th last. As the party made its way along the Sanpu a splendid view was obtained of the Himalayan range, and

"eventually Everest was seen standing out in all its majesty, and rising several thousand feet above the peaks to east and west of it. It dominated that part of the Himalayas, and there was no possibility of confusing it with any other peak."

THE Gold Medal of the Royal Astronomical Society has this year been awarded to Prof. Lewis Boss, Director of the Dudley Observatory, Albany, N.Y., and the address on presentation was yesterday delivered by the outgoing President, Prof. Turner, who is now succeeded by Mr. W. H. Maw. The medal was received by the American Ambassador, Mr. Choate, on behalf of Prof. Boss, who regretted that he was not able to be present himself.

THE small planets Nos. 509 and 512, which were discovered by Prof. Max Wolf at the Königstuhl Observatory, Heidelberg, on April 28th and June 23rd respectively in the year 1903, have been named Jolanda and Taurinensis.

FINE ARTS

The Golden Age of Classic Christian Art.
By Jean Paul Richter and A. Cameron Taylor. (Duckworth & Co.)

THE mosaics of Santa Maria Maggiore have always been regarded as among the most important remains of early Christian art. They have been the objects of detailed study by Padre Garrucci, De Rossi, and, more recently, by Prof. Ainaloff. Their position, however, above the high cornice of the nave and on the still higher and less visible arch of the tribune, has rendered it extremely difficult hitherto to arrive at any definite conclusions about their claims, either as works of art or as examples of Christian iconography. Dr. Richter and Miss Taylor have, by the courtesy of Mgr. Crostarosa and Mgr. Pinchetti, been enabled to study them in exceptionally favourable circumstances, and the result of their labours, embodied in a sumptuously illustrated monograph, marks a most interesting and important step towards a better knowledge of early Christian art, and, incidentally, of the mental attitude of the early Christian patrons for whom these mosaics were executed. Their conclusions are indeed surprising and revolutionary, and if finally accepted will no doubt lead to a change of opinion with regard to other examples of early Christian design. It has hitherto always been regarded as fairly certain that these mosaics were done in the pontificates of Liberius (352-66) and Nystus (432-40), and that they are of the nature of a continuous narrative composition, such as we find in the Joshua Rotulus and the Vienna Genesis. Such was the view accepted without doubt by the authors when they began their investigations, but they were gradually compelled to throw it aside and to antedate the execution of the works by nearly two centuries. They found, moreover, that the view of them as narrative compositions failed to explain their very peculiar iconography, and they were forced to regard them as didactic works in which the tendencies of Christian thought of the second century were expounded by means of historical symbols. They found, in fact, that the ideas which are suggested in these mosaics—dimly enough to us, but no doubt distinctly to contemporaries—were those of Justin Martyr, Irenæus, and the 'Shepherd' of Hermas, rather than those which Jerome and Augustine promulgated in the fourth and fifth centuries. This view they found, moreover, to be borne out by the stylistic affinities of the work, which are rather with the Column of Marcus Aurelius (161-8) than with the Arch of Constantine (312); still less do the mosaics resemble in style those at Ravenna.

Such in brief is the view which is illustrated by the most minute and exhaustive examination of the mosaics themselves, by the careful elimination of subsequent restorations and alterations, and by a learned inquiry into the predominant ideas of the periods in question. The first difficulty in accepting such a theory is the condition of the Christian community at the early date to which the authors would ascribe the mosaics, and especially the absence of any public Christian basilicas capable of receiving such a decoration. The authors point out that this difficulty is largely due to an erroneous idea of the position of the early Christians, who, in fact, included among their numbers many wealthy patricians, and even members of the imperial household, and who, in Rome at all events, enjoyed a large immunity from persecution. They suppose, therefore, that Santa Maria Maggiore was, from an early time, a private basilica, built on an exceptionally magnificent scale by a wealthy Christian. They show that Liberius did not build it, since it was already known as the basilica of Sicinius, and that Xystus's work, as described in the dedicatory inscription over the entrance doorway, refers not to the mosaics of the nave, but to some additional mosaics, now lost, which he put up when he dedicated the basilica to the Virgin.

Having pointed out that the indications of date which have hitherto been unquestionably accepted—namely, the statement that Liberius "fecit Basilicam" and the dedicatory inscription of Xystus—do not, in fact, refer to the existing mosaics, the authors are free to consider these entirely afresh, and they show by a minute analysis of each composition that the creative ideas which underlie them are those of the second century. The mosaics of the nave, filled with scenes from the Old Testament, are seen throughout to be not merely historical and narrative designs, but didactic Tendenzbilder, in which historical events are used as prototypes of Christ's relation to the Church, the Jews, and to Greek philosophy. In fact, the historical scenes are interpreted in much the same way as the translators of the English Bible interpreted the Song of Solomon. These prototypes of the nave prepare the way for the mosaics of the arch of the tribune, in which the antitypes are discovered. Here, again, the thought is akin to the philosophical speculations of the early Church. Christ is the Logos, "the fulfilment of the prophetic revelations vouchsafed to all peoples of the earth, and accepted as such by Greeks and Orientals, but rejected by the Jews." There is no trace of the dogmatic discussions about the dual nature of Christ and the divine motherhood which occupied the field in the time of Xystus, and in which he took a prominent part.

Two examples—one from the archetypes of the nave and one from the antitypes of the arch—will serve to show the methods of reasoning adopted. In the story of Moses there occurs a composition of an unexpected kind. The youthful Moses stands in a semicircle of men dressed as Stoic philosophers, and clearly intended to represent the philosophy of Greece; with these he is carrying on an animated discussion, himself occupying a central and authoritative position. The composition has affinities with similar Disputas of Hellenistic Alexandrine origin, while in thought its analogues are found in the writings of Philo, to whom Plato, Parmenides, and Empedocles seemed almost superhuman, and at the same time dependent upon Moses. This, therefore, represents an even earlier phase of thought than the remaining pictures, and records a pre-Christian composition which would not have been intelligible to the public of the fifth and sixth centuries.

Our second example, from the mosaics of the arch, depicts a prince, followed by his courtiers, led by a philosopher towards the Child Christ, who advances from the opposite side, attended by Mary and Joseph.

It has generally been assumed that this represents a scene described in the fifth-century compilation, the so-called Evangelium Pseudo-Matthæi, in which the Prince of Hermopolis recognizes Christ's divinity by the fact that when the Virgin carried him into the temple the 365 idols it contained fell from their bases, and lay shattered on the ground. It is, as the authors point out, inconceivable that, were this a narrative picture, so striking and pictorial an incident should have been completely ignored. Moreover, this mosaic, like all the rest in the church, shows an intellectual tendency of a very different kind from the crude thaumaturgy of the Pseudo-Matthew, which we find fully reflected in the miniatures and ivories which it inspired. In the Santa Maria Maggiore picture the thought is philosophical and restrained. It represents in fact the keynote to the whole series—Christ as the goal and fulfilment of pre-Christian philosophy. This mosaic is, moreover, of singular interest, in that the figures of the prince and his courtiers have all the characteristics of fifth or sixth century design; consequently it is only when, on close examination of the mosaic, we find these to be later interpolations, and recognize in the figure of the philosopher undegenerate classic motives, that we can attribute the original composition to a date corresponding to the thought which inspired it.

This brings us to the second method of approach to the questions involved, namely, that of style criticism, and here, by the aid of the admirable reproductions, we are able to follow the argument more closely than in Santa Maria Maggiore itself. After gaining a little familiarity with the different technical methods, nothing can be easier than to follow our authors' division of the various strata of the mosaics, or to distinguish at once the grand style and broad manner of the original workmanship from the hard linear contours of the fifth and sixth century interpolations. It is, in fact, easy to recognize at once the close kinship of such a head as that reproduced in Plate 13, No. 3, with the mosaics of San Vitale at Ravenna. Both of these show an art dependent on outline, without modelling or relief or true chiaroscuro, whereas when we turn to the examples of the original design we find an art in which the design embraces at once all the aspects of nature—an art, that is to say, which is essentially modern, and in which the total visual impression of objects is symbolized. We are, therefore, reminded again and again of the remains of classic art at Pompeii, with its curious mixture of an advanced impressionism with occasional disregard of the true spatial relations of objects. Thus, for instance, on Plate 25, No. 1, we find figures realized naturalistically enough in a landscape wherein a river runs from top to bottom of the picture space, and for a moment we hesitate to give to such a violation of perspective so early a date as the second century, although similar sudden contradictions of the true pictorial idea occur at Pompeii, while the authors are able to adduce an exactly parallel instance from so early a work as the Column of Marcus Aurelius. In any case, the heads of the figures in these mosaics, wherever they are untouched, are interpreted in a pure classical spirit; they have the straight brows, the full, deep-set eyes, the striking frankness of regard, of classic sculpture, and all these features are conveyed not by any laborious translation of the form, but by a brilliant and free impressionistic interpretation which implies the most conscious and mature artistic science. The eyes, for instance, are generally rendered by two cubes, one black and one white. Even in the use of colour the same maturity and perfection of artistic power are evident. The artists who executed these mosaics understood as well as Sir Joshua Reynolds how to compress the strongest accents of local colour into the half tones, how to degrade the local colour in one direction in the shadow, and in another in the lights.

It is to us impossible to resist the conclusion that such works as these belong to a period when the traditions of classic art were as yet scarcely touched by decadence—certainly not to a period such as the sixth century, when barbarian invasion and anarchy had reduced the representative arts once again to that purely conceptual vision in which they take their origin, and to which they inevitably return.

We have given scarcely more than an indication of the wealth of learning, both in theology and archaeology, which distinguishes this remarkable book. No one but Dr. Richter combines the qualifications necessary for its production, since he is both a theologian and an art critic. And while we are asked to correct a misapprehension which has arisen, to the effect that Miss Taylor's share in the work is merely subordinate, we cannot doubt that to Dr. Richter is due the co-ordinate use of iconographic and æsthetic methods of inquiry. It would, in any case, be difficult to praise too highly the scrupulous care with which the whole work has been carried out; and whatever be the ultimate judgment on the theories put forward, the book may be considered as authoritative and final on the condition of the mosaics and on the question of what parts are original and what due to restoration.

This monograph should, we think, have very important results for the study of early Christian art, and stimulate to a revision of the preconceived notions of the few monuments that remain to us of the period. It certainly should throw new light on the extremely interesting and hitherto scarcely explored problem of decadence in art. It is indeed almost as important to æsthetics, though scarcely so agreeable to our feelings, to realize how the artistic vision relapses after a period of maturity, as it is to trace its gradual rise to full powers of expression. The illustrations in a work of this kind are of the utmost importance, and we can say no more than that they are worthy of the text. Never before have we seen the three-colour process used with such complete success as it has been here by Signor Danesi, of Rome. The register in one or two plates of our copy is not quite perfect, but with that exception the reproductions leave nothing to be desired, and one is scarcely conscious in studying them that one is not looking at an original work of art; the praise for this, however, must be shared by Signor Carlo Tabanelli, whose water-colour copies on a photographic basis were employed for reproduction.

WE notice under fine art The Poetical Works of John Milton (The Astolat Press), since the etchings, mezzotints, and copper engravings by Mr. William Hyde are its novel feature. But if, as we presume, the chief mission of this volume is to act as a background for Mr. Hyde's illustrations, it is not without interest of its own. The letterpress, which follows the Oxford text as edited by Canon Beeching, is pleasant to the eye and set in ample margin—too ample, in fact, for greater clearness would have been obtained had some of the marginal space been sacrificed, that the text might have been less congested, both as regards interlinear space and length of line. As it is, not only is the division between the two columns forming the page inadequate, but many of the final words must perforce be diverted to the level of the line above, an unsightly expedient, which by its frequency becomes irritating. The initial letters are commendably clear, and the ornamental designs in general are kept under satisfactory restraint. Mr. Hyde's share of the work cannot be included among his more striking successes. His hand, habituated to the broader feeling of the brush, is somewhat awkward in its management of the needle. Especially is he ill at ease when treating of the human figure. In places the anatomy is at fault, and where this is not the case his figures are sadly lacking in suggestion; his nymphs are solid and occasionally ungainly, his attempts to cope with the supernatural at close quarters inadequate. In mezzotint, as might be expected, he is most successful, frequently exhibiting his powers of tone, atmosphere, and poetic suggestion; while in such views as that of dim cohorts of distant angels, in which the figures are hinted at rather than seen, or, again, of the moon rising through trees and casting luminous shadows among the branches, he is at his best. Fortunately, these occasions are sufficiently frequent to enable one to forget in some measure, when judging of the work as a whole, the deficiencies of the rest.

THE well-merited success of the initial volume in Mr. Batsford's "Old Cottages and Farmhouses" series has led to an extension of the scheme. The latest issue is Old Cottages and Farmhouses in the Cotswold District (Batsford), which the publisher designates as "examples of minor domestic architecture," the counties concerned being Gloucestershire, Oxfordshire, Northamptonshire, and Worcestershire. The particular virtue of these books lies in the fine and carefully selected collotype illustrations, which are from photographs by Mr. Galsworthy Davie. These are admirable, and run to the number of one hundred, exclusive of the pictures in the text. It has evidently been a labour of love with the photographer, and he must be congratulated on having made his selections with taste and judgment. The introduction, which extends to a good many pages of a handsome book, is by Mr. Guy Dawber, who, as an architect, is well qualified to write on the subject, and who, as an antiquary with local knowledge, has given to it his spare hours for years. The Cotswold district, as every one with an inkling of geology knows, is a limestone region, being in the belt of hills which crosses England from Dorsetshire to Yorkshire. As a consequence, the ancient buildings are mainly of limestone, out of the oolite beds. They are of stone, and not, as in some regions as picturesque, of bricks and mortar, which possibly Mr. Dawber unduly depreciates. Yet in the essence of his opinion he is right, for his animadversions are directed against the importation of alien materials. In a phrase, he would keep local buildings "racy of the soil." He complains that continental timber and bricks are imported into the Cotswolds now to furnish forth cottages, whereas three hundred years ago the natives built on plans of their own from local quarries. Certainly there is much to be said for his point of view. It is pleasant, for example, to see the Horsham slate in Surrey and Sussex, and to find the Kentish brick in Kent. Stone ruled the Cotswold region for hundreds of years, and a tradition was evolved out of its use, in its way as valuable as the magic traditions of architecture in the Gothic, Perpendicular, or Early English forms. Mr. Dawber's verdict is that "broadly speaking the recognized Cotswold type belongs to the period between 1580 and 1690. It was a thoroughly common-sense style of building, based on tradition handed down through generations of village craftsmen, and it remained without change for nearly a century. The main bulk of the buildings were without doubt erected by local men, and without any external aid, for we find the same methods adopted, with but slight local variations, many miles apart. It was a style that was gradually evolved: at first retaining a few links with the so-called Perpendicular work of the preceding century, but slowly shaking these off, until in the course of some few years it settled down to be the traditional work of the day, the vernacular of building in which the craftsman expressed his ideas."

The beautiful plates at the end of the volume bear out this judgment. At the same time Mr. Dawber warns the reader against the superstition that the work of old days was "always sound and constructional." The walls were often filled with rubbish, and could not withstand wet or frost. Many of the houses were without foundations, and were even built directly from the turf! But in spite of these defects and vagaries the houses of the Cotswold rank high among the picturesque features of rural England, and this book will be of increasing interest and value in proportion to the intrusion of new methods and the neglect of the old local quarries and traditions.

The Ancestor. No. XII. (Constable.)—

"When this twelfth volume shall have come to our readers' hands The Ancestor will be an ancestor indeed, for as a quarterly review it is about to die, and to join upon the bookshelves the magazines which have been before it."

This paragraph, with which the first page of the last issue of The Ancestor in a quarterly form opens, will cause genuine sorrow among a large class of antiquaries and genealogists. However, the publication is henceforth to appear at Christmastide in a handsome form as an annual. The quarterly castigation of the slips and blunders of the press or of popular novelists, under the title 'What is Believed,' has been enjoyed, even by some of the victims, as Mr. Barron has always written in a kindly and humorous, if severe spirit. "At a time," he writes,

"when English genealogical and armorial studies are sharing the exploitation of the pill and the hair-wash, we have laughed at impudent incompetence, and, if we may believe our correspondents and critics, our readers have laughed with us. In many a merry chase we have hunted that deceitful monster the family legend of ancestry. The coverts still swarm with its brood, as paragraphs in the nearest newspapers will testify, but our twelve plump volumes will remain for a while upon the shelf, and English families of ancient and authentic descent will yet call us blessed for drawing them out of the clamorous press of houses, amongst which every one who derives not from Cedric the Saxon, claims source in a Norman ancestor who landed at Pevensey Bay."

The last volume is as good, both in letterpress and pictures, as any of its predecessors. The portraits of the Fanes, Earls of Westmorland, are admirable reproductions. Heraldry is well to the fore: 'Canting Arms in the Zürich Roll' and 'Fifteenth-Century Heraldry,' both by the Rev. E. E. Dorling, are useful and helpful articles; whilst the conclusion, with an index, of Thomas Wall's 'Book of Crests' is of much value. We are glad that the editor has been able to write another of his articles on 'Costume at the End of the Middle Ages'; in this case the nine page illustrations are taken from the beautiful French work on the life of Little Jehan de Saintré (Cott. MS. Nero, D. ix.). Mr. J. H. Round contributes three brief articles.

FRENCH IMPRESSIONISTS AT THE GRAFTON GALLERY.

(Second Notice.)

THE analogy with Spanish realistic painting which we drew last week in the case of Manet can be applied only to a small part of the work of Degas, and cannot be applied at all to Claude Monet. The late works of Turner and the sketches of Constable are the paintings which most resemble those of Monet, but he differs from them, because, from first to last, his art is uniform in aim, and is unsupported either by the long series of traditional or semi-traditional paintings which Turner produced in youth and maturity, or by the compromises with tradition upon which the popular reputation of Constable depends. Already we have grown so accustomed to landscapes pitched in a high key that the luminous splendour of Monet's earlier works does not come upon us with a shock. We must recognize from the first that his painting has not the delicacy of material and handling which we find in all good painting of the past: and in much of his later work it is evident that the roughness and looseness which, in the beginning, were an unfortunate condition of the method employed, have of recent years become a mannerism.

When these allowances are once made, it is impossible not to admit that many of Monet's pictures are delightful in design and in colour, and from the very accuracy with which they represent transitory moments and transitory effects of nature have an intimacy of feeling which is, perhaps, not less really strong than the more openly dramatic arrangements by which landscape painters in the past were accustomed to charm or to impress their audience. Where so much is good it is difficult to select examples of predominant merit, but Monet's power as a painter of still life might be illustrated by either the Pheasants (No. 133) or the Chrysanthemums (134), and his sincerity by The Blue House, Holland (152), an obvious reminiscence, by the way, of Japanese frankness.

Into the programme of semi-scientific realism with which Monet sets about his work, the variety of the aspects of nature that he approaches introduces a similar variety. The Flood (106) is large and grave in sentiment, while the cliffs in the Stormy Weather, Etretat (108), and in the Pourville (127) have a majesty which we associate with the broader handling and deeper tones of the old masters. To pass from such studies to the Snow Effect, Vetheuil (119), and the charming Environs of Argenteuil (131) is to pass into a very different world, but a world which is nevertheless seen by an artist who has real feeling and is not a mere snapshot photographer. The admirable winter scene, Floating Ice, Vetheuil (151), might also be quoted as an example of the power with which Monet's close observance of nature invests him, while the Saint Lazare Station (145), The Church of Varengeville (147), and The Garden of Monet (149) are notable illustrations of the force and brilliancy of which his peculiar method is capable.

Monet, in fact, is a landscape painter of remarkable force and vividness working in a pitch and with a technique to which our eyes are even now hardly accustomed. That pitch and that technique will not perhaps stand the test of comparison with the finest work produced on traditional lines. Nevertheless, Monet's characteristics have become the characteristics of almost all the painters of our age. Monet is the pioneer, Monet has used them on the whole with greater variety and force than any of his successors; and even if the judgment of posterity decides that the method is not perfect, Monet will, nevertheless, have the fame of being its first and chief exponent.

The characteristic note of the work of Camille Pissarro is earnest, homely sincerity. In the presence of a fortunate subject this quality makes Pissarro do admirable work, in general effect more really like Nature than any other painted image of her which the world has hitherto produced. The things he paints have the solidity and substance of actual, tangible things, and besides this substantial and striking resemblance they are rendered with a peculiar note of intimacy, as by one who has long lived in communion with them. In his company Claude Monet might seem a little loud and assertive. Where his subject is less happily chosen, Pissarro's sincerity makes him just the least bit prosaic, photographic even, though his prose is always sound and wonderful prose.

In virtue of this unfailing sincerity Pissarro's painting is more consistent than that of any of his fellows, so that it is particularly hard to specify examples which stand out prominently. The View of Sydenham (202), dating from the period of the Franco-Prussian war, might serve to illustrate the delicacy of his perception, while the Statue of Henri IV. (210) indicates that he was equally well able to master the most splendid and complicated effects of light and composition. The delightful views at Bazincourt (177, 194, 206, and 219), and two scenes at Pontoise (205 and 216), prove how his intimate affection for the places he painted developed at times into a vein of real poetry, while the pictures of Rouen (199 is perhaps the finest) more than hold their own with Monet's forced and over-stated vision (116).

Sisley, though a less important artist than either Claude Monet or Pissarro, combines to some extent the qualities of both. At times he possesses much of Monet's power in effects of natural sunlight and colour, with something of Pissarro's sympathetic spirit. As a designer he is unequal; his principal merit consists in his tender and delicate colouring, a merit that is less conspicuous in his later work, which, like Monet's, is over roughly handled. It may be noted in passing that the English painters who have worked on impressionist lines have, perhaps, been rather unfortunate in knowing these later works rather than the earlier ones, and in thus acquiring from them the unfortunate idea that roughness, nay even coarseness, of handling was an essential condition in painting the vibration and luminosity of the air. The work of Sisley conclusively proves the fallaciousness of such an assumption. His best works are suave and serene in appearance, and it is only necessary to mention such pictures as Apple Trees in Blossom, Louveciennes (290), A Spring Morning (295), and The Hills of La Celle (300), for the fact to be evident. The River's Edge, Veneux (309), a glowing effect of sunlight, red earth, blue sky, and blue water, though perhaps more powerful than the works which are more delicately handled, is also a little more specious.

The work of Renoir will probably be more puzzling than that of the painters of landscape. His failure in some instances is so marked and so complete as almost to justify the harsh criticism against which he and his friends had to struggle for so many years. It would seem as if his weakness were due to lack of stamina—as if his eye had grown tired of harmony and sweetness of colour and pigment, of design even, and that his fatigued senses could only be stimulated by daring and discordant combinations of the colours and forms which the common consent of all previous artists has condemned as unpleasant or childish.

The change is all the more deplorable because thirty years ago Renoir was painting like a great master. The Ballet Girl (240) of 1874 is a work of which Gainsborough himself might have been proud, so complete, sensitive, and airy is it, so charged with the tremulous sense of budding, half-developed personality, so completely is that sense expressed by the most dainty and masterly handling of the brush. Of several other admirable examples of Renoir's finest work, the famous At the Theatre (224) might perhaps be chosen as a second example of his peculiar gifts, of the feeling for personality which makes each of his figures an inspired portrait, and of his marvellous talent for painting flesh so that it appears the living, palpitating substance that it is, and not a painter's invention of one kind or another. In this respect Renoir stands alone among artists. The quality of vibrant translucency which he attains is a quality which now and then, as with Leonardo, has been made the subject of deliberate study, but no other painter, not even Leonardo, has succeeded in mastering it so well. The specimens of Renoir's landscapes are also delightful, and if, in the course of time, his later work should be forgotten, destroyed, or attributed to some pupil, his personality may appear infinitely more important than it does to us now.

Of Boudin and Cézanne it is needless to say much. Boudin was a sincere, able, and sometimes charming painter, but was limited, and not always fortunate, in his choice of subject, while his feeling for design and colour was, to say the least of it, intermittent. His work is thus good, sound, and unpretentious, rather than fine. Of Cézanne, in spite of comparative successes, such as the two still-life paintings (43 and 45), it is impossible to have so high an opinion. The mere memory of Fantin-Latour makes such an idea impossible. Nor can we wholly sympathize with the high praise accorded by some sections of the press to Madame Morisot. Her work is clever, tasteful, and pretty—its prettiness no doubt makes it appeal to the British public—but we cannot for a moment regard it, from an artistic point of view, as being on the same level as the far more powerful and serious work of Monet, Pissarro, Sisley, and Renoir. Impressionism, in fact, in the hands of its champions, is a notable thing; in the hands of the rank and file it is at least no more important than the work of other second-rate artists who have followed the more shapely and reticent tradition which we associate with the old masters.

SALES.

AT Messrs. Christie's on the 2nd inst. the following engravings were sold: After Rembrandt: The Syndics of Drapers' Corporation, by Koepping, 35*l.* After Meissonier: Partie Perdue, by F. Braque-mond, 35*l.*; The Portrait of the Sergeant, by J. Jacquet, 37*l.*

The same firm on the 4th inst. sold the following works. Drawings: P. De Wint, Grange Bridge, Borrowdale, 55*l.* J. Holland, Innsbruck, 50*l.* Turner, Cumberland Fells, 84*l.*; A View from Richmond Hill, 65*l.* Birket Foster, An Old Cottage at Witley, 110*l.* Pictures: T. S. Cooper, A Summer Day in the Meadows, 199*l.*; Sheep on the Downs, Evening, 194*l.*

Fine-Art Gossip.

YESTERDAY, at the Modern Gallery, Mr. Andrew Colley opened to the press an exhibition of oil paintings of Holland, Italy, &c.

AT the Leicester Galleries an exhibition of paintings by Messrs. T. A. Brown, D. Y. Cameron, and J. C. Michie is open to private view to-day.

WE are also invited to view works in oil and pastel by M. H. le Sidaner at the Goupil Gallery, on the same day.

THE private view of the exhibition of the Royal Society of Painter-Etchers and Engravers will take place next Friday.

NEXT Saturday is the private view of the spring exhibition of the Bristol Academy of Fine Arts.

IN view of the forthcoming Whistler Exhibition, to be opened by M. Rodin on February 22nd, Messrs. Bell will publish immediately a third and cheaper edition of 'The Art of James McNeill Whistler,' by Messrs. T. R. Way and G. R. Dennis.

THE well-known painter Hermann Corrodi, whose death in his fifty-seventh year is announced from Rome, was a native of Frascati. His pictures were chiefly landscapes, the details of the composition were generally carried out on a large scale, and he liked to dwell on the melancholy side of things.

AN eminent sculptor has passed away in Prof. Siemering, Director of the Rauch Museum, whose death took place recently in Berlin, in his seventieth year. His work is remarkable for its grace, simplicity, and firmness of outline. His statue of Friedrich Wilhelm I. is the only really artistic piece of work among the melancholy failures of the Berlin Siegesallee or Puppenallee, as the avenue is designated by popular wit. Among his other statues the monument to the oculist Graefe, and the figure of St. Gertraudt on the St. Gertraudt bridge, are especially deserving of mention.

MESSRS. CHRISTIE'S sale on Tuesday will consist of one of the most extensive and interesting collections of art books which have come up for sale in recent years. It is, in effect, the fine-art library of Messrs. Lawrie & Co., late of 159, New Bond Street. It is exceptionally strong in sale catalogues of pictures, particularly of sales in Paris from 1787 down to last year, and nearly all are fully priced. There are two copies of Smith's 'Catalogue Raisonné,' one of which is interleaved with numerous MS. notes and additions, extended from nine to fourteen volumes. There is also a copy of Messrs. Graves and Cronin's monograph on Sir Joshua Reynolds, and an extended copy of Redford's 'Art Sales,' with three large quarto manuscript books containing the record of art sales to about 1902, alphabetically arranged under the artists' names.

A NEW art review, under the title of L'Art et les Artistes, is announced to appear in Paris, under the capable direction of M. Armand Dayot, Inspector of Fine Arts. The first thousand subscribers are promised a work of art of the value of at least three times the amount of the subscription. M. Dayot will be assisted by some of the best-known writers on art—MM. Léonce Bénédict, Henri Bouchot, Gustave Geoffroy, and Roger Marx, among others.

WE regret to hear of the death, which occurred on Saturday last, of the well-known sculptor Louis Ernest Barrias, who had been for over thirty years a prominent and hard-working member of the artistic fraternity of Paris. Born in Paris in 1841, younger brother (there was an interval of twenty-one years between the two) of Félix Barrias, the artist, and son of a painter on porcelain, Ernest Barrias at a very early age determined to be an artist. He received some lessons from Léon Cogniet, and in 1860 he was successful in winning the Second Grand Prix de Rome; four years later he won the First. His first distinct success was 'La Jeune Fille de Mégare,' exhibited in the Salon of 1870, and now in the Luxembourg; and since that date he had been an incessant worker, constantly with some important commission on hand. Probably the work which on exhibition excited the most attention was his 'Premières Funérailles,' at the Salon of 1878, which is now in the vestibule of the Hôtel of the City of Paris; this secured him a Médaille d'Honneur and the Légion d'Honneur. Six years afterwards he was elected to the Institute. A list of his works would fill a column. The best-known include 'La Défense de Paris,' at Courbevoie; the 'Bernard Palissy' of the little square St. Germain des Prés; 'Mozart Enfant' in the Luxembourg; 'Nature dévoilant son Mystère'; 'La Fileuse'; and the much-discussed monument of Victor Hugo.

SWITZERLAND has just lost its most distinguished animal painter, Rudolf Koller, who was born at Zürich on June 21st, 1828. In 1846 he studied art with his friend Böcklin at Düsseldorf, and later in Paris. In 1850 and 1851 he received lessons in animal painting at Munich from Voltz, and was awarded a Second-Class Medal at the Paris Salon of 1879. Several of his works are in the museums of Basle, Geneva, Dresden, and elsewhere. He published a few years ago his souvenirs of Böcklin.—Another artist who made a special feature of animal painting, Anton Braith, died recently at Bilberach, where he was born on September 2nd, 1836. Examples of his works are to be found in various German galleries, notably at Berlin.

THE Dutch Parliament has approved of the plans for the addition to the Amsterdam Museum of a new room, in which Rembrandt's famous picture 'Night Watch' can be seen to the best advantage. It is hoped that the new room will be inaugurated on July 15th, 1906, when the third centenary of Rembrandt's birth will be celebrated both at Amsterdam and at Leyden. It is proposed on this occasion to have at Leyden an exhibition of the works of old masters associated with this ancient city of learning.

AN international exhibition of fine arts will be opened at Munich during the present year. One section promises to be of exceptional interest—a representative collection of the work of Lenbach.

THE British Numismatic Society, which is already an assured success, will shortly issue to members the first volume of its Journal, and there will be no surplus copies for outsiders. It will be a quarto of from 400 to 500 pages, bound in buckram, with twenty plates and various blocks.

MUSIC

THE WEEK.

QUEEN'S HALL.—Miss Maud MacCarthy's Orchestral Concerts.
BECHSTEIN HALL.—Mr. Frederick Lamond's Beethoven Recital.

THE two orchestral concerts given by Miss Maud MacCarthy at the Queen's Hall on February 2nd and 7th were of marked interest. This clever violinist made her début in London about ten years ago, and then displayed technical and artistic gifts which promised well for her future career. Her recent performance of Beethoven's Concerto at a Symphony Concert, though in many ways meritorious, did not realize the expectations formerly raised. But now she has played the Brahms Concerto, and repeated the Beethoven, with technical skill, soul, and at the same time simplicity, renderings which dissipated all doubts as to her artistic progress. The recent performances of young Vecsey were really wonderful; but there was something uncanny not only in his extraordinary technique, but also in his mature readings; he excited, in fact, just astonishment. Miss MacCarthy, though still young—she is only just out of her teens—is older than Vecsey as regards number of years, but in some respects she is younger. Her tone is not yet at its fullest, and there is something in her conception, especially of the Beethoven Concerto, which made one feel that in a few years it will be not different in kind, but of still greater breadth. There is no meretricious display or seeking after effect; and considering the serious character of the works in which she has chosen to be judged—for with the exception of two short encores, an Adagio of Mozart's and a Largo of Bach's, she was heard only in the two concertos named—we think it clear that she wishes to become not an extraordinary fiddler, but an artist in the highest sense. The London Symphony Orchestra was under the direction of Herr Fritz Steinbach, who as conductor of the Meiningen Orchestra made for himself a reputation as well deserved as it is great. Certain gesticulations which at first appeared to be somewhat exaggerated were soon seen to be the outcome of intense earnestness; they were not for show, but for a purpose. The dignified rendering of Strauss's 'Tod und Verklärung,' the vitality he infused into the Beethoven minor Symphony, and the imposing presentation of the Vorspiel to the 'Meistersinger' will not readily be forgotten.

Mr. Frederick Lamond gave a Beethoven recital at the Bechstein Hall on Saturday afternoon, under the auspices of the Curtius Concert Club. As an interpreter of Beethoven he takes high rank, so that the hall was full, and many were obliged to stand. His reading of the first movement of the c sharp minor Sonata might, perhaps, have been more quasi una Fantasia, but the finale was rendered with emotional power. Mr. Lamond has no doubt some reason for the slow time at which he commences the Allegro of the 'Waldstein,' but to us the effect is weak; for the rest, the sonata was played with all due breadth. The 'Appassionata' came at the end of the long programme—five sonatas and the Andante Favori—so that it was not surprising that in the finale the player showed some signs of fatigue.

Musical Gossip.

At the third and last concert of chamber music by the Nora Clench Quartet on Monday at the Aeolian Hall, the programme included a quartet by S. J. Tanéjew, the Russian composer to whom was recently awarded the Belaïeff Prize of 1,000 roubles for his Symphony in c minor. He was a student at the Moscow Conservatorium under Nicolas Rubinstein and Tschai'kowsky. His quartet consists of a vigorous, though somewhat forced Allegro, and of a delightfully fresh theme with variations, all clever, and many of them very effective. Two movements for a quartet seem scant measure, but the second is very, indeed we may say unduly, long. Mr. Plunket Greene sang Schumann's 'Dichterliebe' cycle with artistic skill, though in some quiet passages the sentiment was exaggerated, while the rendering of 'Ich grolle nicht,' on the other hand, was far too vehement.

THE first London performance of Dr. Cowen's 'John Gilpin,' ballad for chorus and orchestra, will be given this evening at the Crystal Palace by the Palace orchestral society and choir, under the direction of Mr. Walter W. Hedgecock. Among other announcements at the same place is an afternoon concert on March 25th, at which will be performed three new orchestral and choral ballads by Mr. Coleridge-Taylor.

MR. LANDON RONALD has arranged with M. Victor Maurel to give two vocal recitals at the Bechstein Hall on the afternoons of February 16th and March 1st.

MISS FANNY DAVIES gives an orchestral concert at Queen's Hall on March 7th. She plays concertos by Mozart, Brahms, and Saint-Saëns, the first being one in G bearing the Köchel number 453. It was written in 1784, and the composer in his diary noted down the theme of the Rondo as piped by a starling, which afterwards became his pet bird.

THE degree of Doctor of Music has been conferred on Sir Edward Elgar by the University of Oxford, the composer being presented by Sir Hubert Parry.

PERFORMANCES NEXT WEEK.

SUN. Concert Club, 3.30, Bechstein Hall.
— Sunday Society Concert, 3.30, Queen's Hall.
— Sunday League, 7, Queen's Hall.
MON. London Choral Society (The Apostles), 8, Queen's Hall.
— Mr. Percy Grainger and Mr. H. Sandby's Pianoforte and 'Cello Recital, 8, Bechstein Hall.
— Subscription Concert, 8.30, Aeolian Hall.
TUES. Mr. Boris Hambourg's 'Cello Recital, 3, Bechstein Hall.
— Madame Rose Koenig's 'Ring des Nibelungen' Recital, 8, Aeolian Hall.
WED. Miss Gladys Naylor-Carne's Pianoforte and Violin Recital, 3, Bechstein Hall.
— Mrs. Sydney Webster's Vocal Recital, 8, Queen's Hall.
THURS. London Symphony Orchestra Concert, 3, Queen's Hall.
— M. Maurel's Vocal Recital, 3.15, Bechstein Hall.
— Royal Choral Society, 8, Albert Hall.
FRI. Miss Kathleen Parlow's Violin Recital, 3, Bechstein Hall.
— Herr von Dohnányi's Pianoforte Recital, 3, Aeolian Hall.
— Hungarian Orchestra Recital, 8, Queen's Hall.
SAT. Madame Carreno's Pianoforte Recital, 3, Bechstein Hall.
— Chappell's Ballad Concert, 3, Queen's Hall.
— Mozart Society, 3, Portman Rooms.

DRAMA

THE WEEK.

GREAT QUEEN STREET.—'Rose Bernd.' By Gerhart Hauptmann.

It is a subject for regret in the case of the plays of Herr Hauptmann that the æsthetic aspects of the presentation are too often subordinated to the ethical, and that the point in dispute is less, How should a play be given? than, Should it be given at all? The attitude of revolt taken up by the German dramatist is not confined to himself. Taking its rise in Scandinavia, it extends over all Northern Europe, and is witnessed frequently in Italy and occasionally in Spain. In no other writer, however, not even in Zola, are the social problems presented in so hopeless, so cheerless, and so sordid a form. As a type of rustic femininity, Rose, the heroine of 'Rose Bernd,' may almost be compared with Françoise in 'La Terre.' She has the same animal instincts as her predecessor, the same repulsions, and it might easily be believed the same reticences. But, whereas Françoise is a thorough peasant, accustomed to the foulest speech and associations, Rose has mixed with her superiors in social station, and has even a species of cultivation. Her surrender to Flamm is voluntary, the result of affection principally, if not wholly, animal. That which follows—that to Streckmann—is partly due to violence, and has some point of resemblance with the rape of Françoise by Buteau. It is, however, in some respects even more brutal, and is in this "a record," since, outside work deliberately and designedly pornographic, no scene so repellent as that indicated in 'La Terre' exists. Herr Hauptmann, of course, spares us the details on which Zola dilates, and his work is on a different plane from that of the Frenchman. It is none the less unsuited to theatrical exposition, unless the view is taken that everything that belongs to humanity constitutes the domain of the dramatist. A purpose at once satirical and didactic underlies—it can scarcely be said animates—'Rose Bernd,' as other works of the writer. The play is, indeed, a savage attack upon philistinism and convention. That both abound in the life of rural Germany, as in that of other countries, is easily conceded—no one, of course, dreams of contending otherwise. If it be granted that an evil exists, all measures for its extirpation are not necessarily desirable, and it may well be contended that philistinism and conventionality are things against which not only dramatists but gods also fight in vain. Much of the life depicted in 'Rose Bernd' is true—harrowingly true—and the characters depicted are seldom overdrawn. It is doubtful, however, whether the crime of infanticide, to which Rose pleads guilty, is one which she is capable of committing, and we reject and resent the supposition that she could under any conditions have yielded to the species of terrorism exercised over her by Streckmann. A story similar in many respects is told in 'The Heart of Midlothian,' and the advantage in psychology as in romance is on the side of Scott. With one merit, at least, Herr Hauptmann's play may be credited. It furnishes to the actors admirable opportunities, by which the Andresen-Behrend Company were not slow to profit. Whether any moral gain attends the treatment of the subject is to be doubted. The play, at any rate, illustrates with supreme skill a phase of Teutonic thought.

Dramatic Gossip.

'JOHN BULL'S OTHER ISLAND,' by Mr. George Bernard Shaw, given at the Court Theatre on November 1st, was revived at the same house on Tuesday as the first of a second series of afternoon representations, under the management of Messrs. Vedrenne and Granville Barker. Miss Ellen O'Malley reappeared as Nora, the heroine, and Mr. Louis Calvert as Broadbent, the English candidate for Rosculen. The only noteworthy changes in the cast consisted in the substitution of Mr. C. M. Hallard for Mr. J. L. Shine as Larry Doyle, and of Mr. George Trollope for Mr. Nigel Playfair as Hodson.

THE second venture at the Court Theatre of the Vedrenne-Barker management will consist not of a translation from the French, as was originally promised, but of a triple bill, the component parts of which will be Mr. W. B. Yeats's 'Pot of Broth,' Mr. G. B. Shaw's skit 'How He lied to her Husband,' and Schnitzler's 'In the Hospital.' In the first-named piece Mr. Robert Pateman will appear; in the second Mr. Granville Barker and Miss Gertrude Kingston.

THE first change at the Haymarket will consist in the production of an adaptation by Capt. Marshall and Mr. Louis N. Parker of 'Le Secret de Polichinelle' of M. Pierre Wolff. In this Misses Carlotta Addison, Jessie Bateman, and Helen Ferrers, Mr. Cyril Maude, and Mr. Edmund Maurice will take part.

MISS VIOLA TREE, who is happily recovered from her illness, was announced to take last night for the first time the part of Hero in 'Much Ado about Nothing,' selected for her, but taken at the revival of the play by Miss Miriam Clements.

THE production at Wyndham's Theatre of Capt. Marshall's novelty, 'The Lady of Leeds,' was postponed from Tuesday until Thursday.

MR. BENSON will begin on the 20th inst. a short season at the Covent Garden Theatre, in the course of which he will appear in the Orestean Trilogy of Æschylus, translated by Mr. Morshead; seven plays of Shakspeare; and two old comedies.

IN consequence of the indisposition of one or more of the actors cast for 'Maskerade,' the performance of this latest work of Herr Ludwig Fulda, promised for Thursday, has been postponed to Wednesday next, when it is likely to form one of the chief attractions of the German season.

AT the close of the present season Herr Max Behrend will, it is understood, retire from the management of the German plays in London, leaving it in the sole charge of Herr Hans Andresen.

MADAME BERNHARDT has made in Paris a successful first appearance as La Tishé in Hugo's 'Angelo, Tyran de Padoue,' a piece the first performance of which belongs to 1835.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.—O. H.—G. G.—E. W. B.—J. C. C.—C. D.—received.
H. L. B.—Too late. C. K.—Many thanks.

DIGBY, LONG & CO.'S NEW LIST.

THE ADVENTURES OF A NAVAL OFFICER.

By Capt. CHARLES HUNTER, R.N.
Edited by Sir SPENSER ST. JOHN, G.C.M.G.

In crown 8vo, cloth gilt, price 6s.
Morning Post.—"The story of Capt. Hunter's experiences is one of the most thrilling we have ever read. It is vivid in the extreme.... It is delightfully readable from beginning to end."

NEW SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.

The DOLL'S DANCE. By C. Forestier

WALKER, Author of 'The Chameleon,' &c.

Pail Mall Gazette.—"A well-told and exciting story."

The LUCK of BELLA BARTON. By

G. W. APPLETON, Author of 'François the Valet.'

With 6 Full-Page Illustrations by C. KEMP TEBBY.

Scotsman.—"An exciting bit of fiction."

The REDEMPTION of DAMIAN

GIER. By WINEFRIDE TRAFFORD TAUNTON,

Author of 'Silent Dominion,' &c.

Morning Advertiser.—"An absorbing story. The authoress has already made a name for herself as a clever writer, but she has surpassed herself in the present instance.... A book which will not easily be forgotten."

A GAME of LOVE.

By GERTRUDE WARDEN.

Pail Mall Gazette.—"Another of this authoress's brightly written stories."

CELIA'S FORTUNE.

Times.—"A well-told story." By ADELINE SERGEANT.

Scotsman.—"Celia is a sweet and lovable heroine."

Outlook.—"The novel shows Miss Sergeant's power at its ripest."

The MANDARIN'S FAN.

By FERGUS HUME.

Scotsman.—"A story of absorbing interest."

FAVOURS from FRANCE.

By SARAH TYTLER.

World.—"Miss Tytler has evolved a charming story."

Daily News.—"The book is well worth reading."

NEW BOOK ON PRISON LIFE.

BOLTS and BARS. By F. C. Vernon

HARCOURT. In demy 8vo, specially designed cloth

cover, with 14 Full-Page Illustrations, 3s. 6d.

Daily Telegraph.—"No better pictures of prison life have ever been written in this country."

A DELIGHTFUL BOOK FOR CHILDREN.

STORIES from BALLADLAND. By

MAYE H. BLACK. With 12 Full-Page Illustrations

by ROBERT STRANGE. Cloth, 3s. 6d.

Dundee Courier.—"A capital little volume of tales.... Must prove a prime favourite amongst children all the world over."

London: DIGBY, LONG & CO. 18, Bouverie St., E.C.

MESSRS. BELL'S NEW BOOKS.

COMPLETE CATALOGUE POST FREE
ON APPLICATION.

Fcap. 8vo, 2s. 6d. net.

QUEEN ELIZABETH. An Historical

Drama. By W. G. HOLE.

"Excellent in plan and brilliant in execution, again and again he reaches the height of true drama, and the verse is always scholarly, and sometimes eloquent.... Queen Elizabeth should make a good acting play; and in any case the writer has established himself as one of the few literary dramatists of our day who are worth attention."—Spectator.

NEW EDITION, REVISED.—Crown 8vo, 5s. net.

CITIES and SIGHTS of SPAIN. A

Handbook for Travellers. By Mrs. A. LE BLOND (Mrs. Main). With numerous Illustrations and Maps. With a Note by Mr. G. F. CHAMBERS, F.R.A.S., on the coming Total Eclipse of the Sun.

Paper covers, 6d. net; cloth, 1s. net.

HOME TREATMENT of DOGS. By G. LEIGHTON.

[Ready February 15.]

Paper covers, 1s. net; cloth, 1s. 6d. net.

The CARE of HORSES. A Book for all who have Practical Care of Horses. By ADA F. CARTER, Instructress in Riding, and CHARLES CARTER, M.R.C.V.S. Lond. With 56 Illustrations.

Crown 8vo, 1s. 6d.

The PARAPHRASE of POETRY.

For Use in Schools. By EDMUND CANDLER, Author of 'The Unveiling of Lhasa,' &c. With Introduction, Specimens of Paraphrase, and numerous Examples.

BOHN'S LIBRARIES.

NEW VOLUMES.

CARLYLE'S FRENCH REVOLU-

TION. Edited, with Introduction, Notes, and Appendices, by J. HOLLAND ROSE, Litt.D., Author of the 'Life of Napoleon I.' 3 vols. small post 8vo, 5s. each.

SHAKESPEARE DOCUMENTS. A

Chronological Catalogue of Extant Evidence relating to the Life and Works of William Shakespeare. Collated and Chronologically arranged by D. H. LAMBERT, B.A. Post 8vo, with numerous Illustrations and Facsimiles, 3s. 6d.

GRAY'S LETTERS. Edited by

DUNCAN C. TOVEY, M.A. Vol. II. Small post 8vo, 3s. 6d.

"The second volume of Mr. Tovey's edition of 'Gray's Letters' has all the merits which distinguished the first. The letters are transcribed with so scrupulous a care that this latest edition must supersede all others."—Spectator.

A CHEAPER EDITION OF WHEATLEY'S PEPYS.

The DIARY of SAMUEL PEPYS,

M.A. F.R.S. Transcribed from the Shorthand MS. in the Pepysian Library, Magdalene College, Cambridge, by the Rev. MYNORS BRIGHT, M.A. With LORD BRAYBROOKE'S Notes. Edited, with Additions, by HENRY B. WHEATLEY, F.S.A. In 8 vols. post 8vo, 5s. net each. [Vols. I.-VII. now ready.]

* This reprint contains the whole of the text of the Diary, and the Notes and Index, as given in the ten-volume edition, the volume entitled 'Pepysiana' only being omitted.

"Mr. Wheatley has easily distanced all previous editors, both in the completeness of his matter and his annotations, and there is little doubt that this new classic edition of a classic will be a great success."—Athenæum.

THE YORK LIBRARY.

A NEW SERIES OF REPRINTS ON THIN PAPER. Small 8vo, 2s. net in cloth, and 3s. net in leather.

NEW VOLUMES.

CERVANTES' DON QUIXOTE.

Motteux's Translation, Revised. With Lockhart's Life and Notes. 2 vols.

EMERSON'S WORKS. Edited and

Collated by GEORGE SAMPSON. Vol. IV. Containing Miscellaneous Pieces.

COLERIDGE'S TABLE TALK and

OMNIA. Arranged and Edited by T. ASHE, B.A.

DRAPER'S HISTORY of the IN-

TELLECTUAL DEVELOPMENT of EUROPE. 2 vols.

Others to follow.

London: GEORGE BELL & SONS,
Portugal Street, Lincoln's Inn, W.C.

A SELECTION FROM
MESSRS. HUTCHINSON & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

THE ROMANCE OF SAVOY.

Victor Amadeus II. and his Stuart Bride.

By the MARCHESA VITELLESCHI, Author of 'A Court in Exile.'

In 2 vols. demy 8vo, cloth gilt and gilt top, with 24 Illustrations and Facsimiles and 2 Photogravure Plates, 24s. net.

A COMPANION WORK TO SIR HARRY JOHNSTON'S GREAT BOOK,
'THE UGANDA PROTECTORATE.'UGANDA AND ITS PEOPLES.

Notes on the Protectorate of Uganda, especially the Anthropology and Ethnology of the Indigenous Races.

By J. F. CUNNINGHAM, F.R.G.S.

With an Introduction by Sir HARRY JOHNSTON, K.C.B.

In 1 large handsome vol. crown 4to, cloth gilt, and gilt top, printed on English Art Paper, with Map and 212 Illustrations, chiefly from Photographs taken by the Author, and including a Coloured Plate, Maps, &amp;c., 24s. net.

*The Author has spent many years in Uganda in an official position, and has made a special study of its peoples. The Illustrations obtained by the Author are unique, and add largely to the value of the Work, which will form an excellent companion Volume to those written by Sir Harry Johnston.CROSS-RIVER NATIVES.

Being Notes on the Primitive Pagans of Obubura Hill District, Southern Nigeria, including a Description of the Circles of Upright Sculptured Stones on the left bank of the Amyong River.

By CHARLES PARTRIDGE, M.A. F.S.A. F.R.G.S., &amp;c.,

Assistant District Commissioner in Southern Nigeria; Fellow of the Anthropological Institute of Great Britain and Ireland.

In 1 large handsome vol. demy 8vo, cloth gilt and gilt top, with Maps, Appendices, and 74 Illustrations from Photographs taken by the Author, 12s. 6d. net.

A FINELY ILLUSTRATED WORK.

THE REAL NEW YORK.

By RUPERT HUGHES.

In square crown 8vo, cloth gilt and gilt top, with over 100 Illustrations from Drawings by the well-known Artist, HY. MAYER, many being in Colours, 7s. 6d. net.

A DELIGHTFUL BOOK OF TRAVEL PICTURES IN SPAIN.

LETTERS FROM CATALONIA.

By ROLAND THIRLMERE.

In 2 vols. demy 8vo, cloth gilt and gilt top, profusely Illustrated with Coloured and other Plates from Original Drawings by SEYMOUR LUCAS, R.A., FRANK BRANGWYN, A.R.A., GEORGE HAITE, R.I. R.B.A., TREVOR HADDON, R.B.A., GILBERT ROGERS, TOM BROWNE and the Spanish Painter, JOSÉ MX. XIRO, and from Photographs, 24s. net.

THE TRIAL OF JESUS.

From the Italian of GIOVANNI ROSADI.

Edited, with Explanatory Notes and with an Introduction, by Dr. EMIL REICH, Author of 'Success Among Nations.'

In large crown 8vo, cloth gilt and gilt top, with Frontispiece, 6s. net.

An immense success has attended the publication in Italy of this learned and eloquent work, and at the present time it is the most widely-read book there.

A BEAUTIFULLY ILLUSTRATED BOOK.

FATA MORGANA.

A Novel of Art Life in Paris.

By ANDRE CASTAIGNE.

In large crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 7s. 6d. net, with over 50 Full-Page Illustrations by the Author.

TWENTY-SIXTH ANNUAL ISSUE.

THE YEAR'S ART, 1905.

A Concise Epitome of all Matters relating to the Arts of Painting, Sculpture, Engraving, and Architecture, and to Schools of Design, which have occurred during the Year 1904.

Compiled by A. C. R. CARTER.

Considerably Enlarged, with 8 Full-Page Illustrations, 3s. 6d. net.

NOTICE.—Messrs. HUTCHINSON & CO. have made arrangements to publish New Novels by "Lucas Malet," Stanley Weyman, Katherine Cecil Thurston, Jerome K. Jerome, Ellen Thorneycroft Fowler, and Mary Cholmondeley.

THE FOLLOWING IMPORTANT NOVELS ARE IN THE PRESS OR READY.

SIX SHILLINGS EACH.

HEARTS OF WALES.

ALLEN RAINE.

THE REBEL WOOING.J. A. STEUART.
[Ready.]THE WHITE CAUSEWAY.

FRANKFORT MOORE.

QUEER LADY JUDAS.

"RITA."

AUNT PHIPPS.

TOM GALLON.

THE SIXTH SENSE.

ADELINE SERGEANT.

THE MIDDLE WALL.

EDWARD MARSHALL.

GUTHRIE OF THE "TIMES."

JOSEPH ALTSHELER.

MR. CHIPPENDALE OF PORT WELCOME.

CHARLES FELLOWS.

PATRICIA: A MOTHER.

"IOTA."

THE THREE ESSENTIALS.

DOROTHEA GERARD.

THE MARBLE CITY.

G. B. BURGIN.

A PRIMA DONNA'S ROMANCE.

F. W. HAYES.

THE CLAIRVOYANTE.

B. L. FARJEON.

THE GRAND DUKE.

CARLTON DAWE.

LINKED BY FATE.

CHARLES GARVICE.

THE ROSE OF LIFE.

M. E. BRADDON.

THE SECRET OF WOLD HALL.E. EVERETT GREEN.
[Ready.]

London: HUTCHINSON &amp; CO. Paternoster Row.

MR. NASH'S LIST.

MR. JOUBERT'S STARTLING BOOK.
SECOND LARGE IMPRESSION. Price 7s. 6d.

THE TRUTH ABOUT THE TSAR,

AND THE PRESENT STATE OF RUSSIA.

By CARL JOUBERT,
Author of 'Russia As It Really Is' (Fifth Edition).

SOME PRESS OPINIONS.

DAILY TELEGRAPH (Column Review):—"The book is full of interesting and even sensational disclosures; it affords very valuable clues to the causes which have brought about the present state of profound unrest throughout the length and breadth of the Tsar's dominions."

STANDARD (Column Review):—"This book fascinates because it paints terrible contingencies of the near future."

MORNING POST:—"It is certain that at the present moment the course of events bears out a great deal that is forecast in Mr. Joubert's pages."

ST. JAMES'S GAZETTE (Column Review):—"His whole book reads like a prophecy come, or nearly come, true."

PALL MALL GAZETTE (Column Review):—"Unquestionably contains no small amount of curious information."

NOW READY, demy 8vo, price 12s. 6d.

WITH THE RUSSIANS IN PEACE AND WAR.

Recollections of a Military Attaché.

By Col. the Hon. F. A. WELLESLEY.
Formerly British Military Attaché in Russia.

* * For many reasons this Book will be greatly talked about. It is one of the best volumes of reminiscences which have been published during the last ten years. Col. Wellesley has many new and interesting things to tell regarding the relations of Great Britain and Russia during the time he was Military Attaché at St. Petersburg.

A BOOK WHICH SHOULD BE IN EVERY LIBRARY.

NOW READY, large crown 8vo, price 7s. 6d.

SPANISH INFLUENCE ON ENGLISH LITERATURE.

By MARTIN HUME.

Examiner in Spanish in the University of London.

STANDARD:—"Major Hume's volume is a most valuable contribution to literary history, and an example of English critical scholarship at its best."

MORNING POST:—"A fascinating book—fascinating, that is, for readers of literary tastes."

NOW READY, price 6s.

MR. THOMAS COBB'S NEW NOVEL.

SOPHY BUNCE,

By THOMAS COBB,
Author of 'Mrs. Belfort Stratagem,' &c.

NOW READY, price 6s.

THE OTHER WORLD,

By F. FRANKFORT MOORE,
Author of 'The Jessamy Bride,' &c.

London: EVELEIGH NASH, 32, Bedford Street.

THE LIBRARY.

A QUARTERLY MAGAZINE OF BIBLIOGRAPHY
AND LIBRARY LITERATURE.

EDITED BY

J. Y. W. MACALISTER

AND

ALFRED W. POLLARD,

IN COLLABORATION WITH

KONRAD BURGER, LEOPOLD DELISLE,
MELVILLE DEWEY, and RICHARD GARNETT.

A NEW VOLUME BEGINS THIS MONTH.

Among the Contents for 1904 were Articles on

Robert Proctor, by Alfred Pollard; the Perceval Legend, by Jessie L. Weston; Tottel's Miscellany, by W. W. Greg; Notes from the first French Translation of the Vicar of Wakefield, by G. F. Barwick; the Musée Dobrée at Nantes, by R. S. Faber; Bad Books, by R. F. Cholmeley; Secret Printing during the Civil War, by H. R. Plomer; Letters of Henry Bradshaw to Officials at the British Museum; Public Utilization of Existing Libraries, by James Duff Brown; a Cataloguing Bureau for Public Libraries, by Stanley Jast; Reviews of recent French and German Books, by Elizabeth Lee.

Printed at the Chiswick Press.

Single Numbers, 3s.;

Annual Subscription, 10s. 6d.

Bound Volumes, 12s.

A few Complete Sets still in print.

Published by

KEGAN PAUL, TRENCH, TRÜBNER & CO.,
LTD, Dryden House, Gerrard Street, W.C.

THE METAPHYSIC OF EXPERIENCE.

BY

SHADWORTH H. HODGSON.

IN FOUR BOOKS.

Book I. General Analysis of Experience.

Book II. Positive Science.

Book III. Analysis of Conscious Action.

Book IV. The Real Universe.

In 4 vols. 8vo, buckram (the vols. not to be had separately), 36s.

ALSO BY THE SAME.

TIME and SPACE: a Metaphysical
Essay. 8vo, 16s. 1885.

The THEORY of PRACTICE: an Ethical Enquiry. 2 vols. 8vo, 24s. 1870.

The PHILOSOPHY of REFLEC-
TION. 2 vols. 8vo, 21s. 1878.

OUTCAST ESSAYS AND VERSE TRANSLATIONS.

Essays.—The Genius of De Quincey, and De Quincey as Political Economist—The Supernatural in English Poetry, with Note on the True Symbol of Christian Union—English Verse.

Verse Translations.—Nineteen Short Passages, mostly familiar, from Greek and Latin Classic Poets.

Crown 8vo, 6s. 1881.

LONGMANS, GREEN & CO.
39, Paternoster Row, London, E.C.;
New York and Bombay.

THE TRILITHON at BAALBEK; The Control of Street Architecture; Institute of Architects' Meeting—President's Address to Students; How to Attain Original Thought in Architecture; Illustrations of the Trilithon, Baalbek; Part of Temple of Jupiter, Baalbek; Proposed Bridge at Aylesford; Types of Concrete-Steel Structures (Student's Column), &c.—See the BUILDER of February 11 (4d.; by post, 4½d.).—Through any Newsagent; or direct from the Publisher of the Builder, Catherine Street, London, W.C.

THE TECHNIQUE of INDEXING. By MARY PETHERBRIDGE, Nat. Sci. Tripos, Indexer of the East India Company's Records, the Drapers' Company's Records, the Warrington Corporation Records, &c. Price 5s. net.—Published by the Secretarial Bureau, 52A, Conduit Street, London, W.

SUPPLEMENT TO HAIN AND COPINGER'S REPERTORIUM BIBL.
NOW READY.—PROF. DR. DIETRICH REICHLING.

APPENDICES ad HAINII COPINGERI REPERTORIUM BIBLIOGRAPHICUM. PART I. Very important Bibliographical Item, containing a full description of 800 Incunabula, of which 265 are entirely unknown to Hain and Copinger. 206 pp. 8vo, price 10s.

Jacques Rosenthal, Bookseller, 10, Karl Str., Munich, Bavaria.

JUST PUBLISHED, January 14, 1905. Price Two Guineas net.
Limited to 500 numbered Copies.

THE EIGHTEENTH CENTURY ARCHITECTURE of BATH. By MOWBRAY A. GREEN, A.R.I.B.A. With 195 Full-Page Plates and 52 other Engravings, Views, Details, Plans, Sketches, and Facsimiles. Also Articles on Mrs. Piozzi, Bath Theatre, and Thomas Beach. 4to, pp. xvii+263, art. linen, top edges gilt.

Bath: George Gregory, Bookseller to H. M. Queen Alexandra

In 2 vols. crown 8vo, with 2 Portraits, 24s.

JOHN FRANCIS and the 'ATHENÆUM.'
A Literary Chronicle of Half a Century.

By JOHN C. FRANCIS.

Macmillan & Co., Limited, London.

"I'll note you in my book of memory."—SHAKESPEARE.

S E C C O T I N E

S E C C O T I N E Regd. Trade Mark.

S E C C O T I N E

Sticks everything.

FREE SAMPLE

From the Sole Proprietors:

MCCAW, STEVENSON & ORR, LIMITED, Belfast and London.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

The best remedy for

ACIDITY of the STOMACH, HEARTBURN,

HEADACHE, GOUT,

And INDIGESTION.

And Safest Aperient for Delicate Constitutions,

Ladies, Children, and Infants.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

KEGAN PAUL, TRENCH, TRÜBNER & CO., LIMITED.

AMBIDEXTERITY; or, Two-Handedness and Two-Brainedness.

By JOHN JACKSON, F.E.I.S. With an Introduction by Major-General R. S. S. BADEN-POWELL, C.B. With many Diagrams and Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 6s. net.

The SCIENCE of PALMISTRY; or, Readings of the Hand.

A complete Practical Work on the Science of Cheirognomy and Cheiromancy. By EUGENE LAWRENCE. Illustrated. Fcap. 4to, 3s. 6d. net.

The LIFE STORY of CHARLOTTE DE LA TREMOILLE,

COUNTESS of DERBY. By MARY C. ROWSELL. Demy 8vo, with Frontispiece, 6s. net.

SOME DISTINGUISHED VICTIMS of the SCAFFOLD. By

HORACE BLEACKLEY, M.A.Oxon. With 21 Illustrations in Collotype from Old Prints. Royal 8vo, cloth gilt, 10s. 6d. net.

An account of some of the most famous English criminals of gentle birth.

[Shortly.]

A NEW AND POPULAR EDITION OF WELL-KNOWN WORKS BY

LAFCADIO HEARN.

In GHOSTLY JAPAN.

"Thoughts and dreams and observations that are exquisite beyond words."

New Orleans Times Democrat.

EXOTICS and RETROSPECTIVES.

SHADOWINGS.

A JAPANESE MISCELLANY.

Crown 8vo, illustrated, price 5s. net each; the Four Volumes complete in a cloth box, 21s. net.

COINS of JAPAN. By Neil G. Munro. With Coloured

Frontispiece, 61 Plates printed in Photogravure, Gold, Silver, and Colour. 8vo, cloth, 21s. net.

MINERALS of JAPAN. By Tsunashiro Wada. Translated

from the Japanese by Tokudzi Ogawa. Large 8vo, cloth, with 31 Plates, 25s. net.

TRÜBNER'S ORIENTAL CATALOGUE.

No. XVII. THE FAR EAST. In Three Parts.

I. PERIODICALS and MISCELLANEOUS TRANSACTIONS.

II. LANGUAGES.

III. BOOKS on the FAR EAST.

Demy 8vo, 172 pp., price 1s. 6d. net.

The JAPANESE FLORAL CALENDAR. By Ernest W.

CLEMENT. Profusely illustrated. Large 8vo, boards, 2s. 6d. net.

My LITTLE BOOK OF PRAYER. By Muriel Strode. 16mo,

cloth, 4s. 6d. net.

The NAPOLEON MYTH. By Henry R. Evans. Containing a

Reprint of 'The Grand Erratum,' by JEAN-BAPTISTE PÉRÈS, and an Introduction by D. PAUL CARUS. Large 8vo, with 35 Illustrations, boards, 3s. 6d. net.

The FOUNDERS of the MODERN DEVOTION. Being the Lives of Father Gerrard and his Followers. By THOMAS À KEMPIS. Translated by J. P. ARTHUR. Fcap. 8vo, 5s. net.

The LITTLE FLOWERS of SAINT FRANCIS of ASSISI.

With 8 Illustrations by PAUL WOODROFFE. New Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 5s. net.

The LIFE & LETTERS OF R. S. HAWKER

(Sometime Vicar of MORWENSTOW.)

By his Son-in-Law C. E. BYLES. With numerous Illustrations, including a Water-Colour Portrait by the EARL of CARLISLE, Lithographs by J. LEY PETHYBRIDGE, &c. Demy 8vo, 21s. net. [Ready February 21.]

A large amount of new material relating to the Author of 'Cornish Ballads' and 'Footprints of Former Men in Far Cornwall' has recently come to light, including a most interesting account of Tennyson's visit to Morwenstow in 1848, together with a record of his conversation with the Vicar. Some most remarkable finds of Hawker Letters have been made, which have materially assisted Mr. Byles in his task. The present biography is a picturesque record of the man and his environment, both so picturesque in themselves.

A TERCENTENARY MEMORIAL OF 'DON QUIXOTE.'

THE LIFE OF CERVANTES.

By A. F. CALVERT, Author of 'Impressions of Spain' and 'The Alhambra.' With numerous Illustrations reproduced from Portraits, Title pages of early Editions, &c. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

DAILY CHRONICLE.—"The book should not lack readers of the large class to whom it is especially addressed."

WITH THE PILGRIMS to MECCA.

The Great Pilgrimage, A.H. 1318, A.D. 1902. By HADJL KHAN, M.R.A.S., and WILFRID SPARROU. With an Introduction by Prof. VAMBERY, and numerous Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d. net.

THE POEMS OF WILLIAM WATSON.

Edited and Arranged, with an Introduction, by J. A. SPENDER, 2 vols. with Portrait and many new Poems. Crown 8vo, 9s. net.

TIMES.—"William Watson is, above all things, an artist who is proud of his calling and conscientious in every syllable that he writes. To appreciate his work you must take it as a whole, for he is in a line with the high priests of poetry, reared, like Ion, in the shadow of Delphic presences and memories, and weighing every word of his utterance before it is given to the world."

BOOKS AND PERSONALITIES.

By H. W. NEVINSON. Crown 8vo, 5s. net.

THE TWENTIETH CENTURY CHILD.

By EDWARD H. COOPER, Author of 'Wyemarke and the Sea-Fairies.' Crown 8vo, 5s. net.

6s. NEW SIX-SHILLING NOVELS. 6s.

A NEW HUMOROUS NOVEL BY THE AUTHOR OF 'NINE POINTS OF THE LAW.'

HELEN OF TROY, N.Y.

By WILFRID SCARBOROUGH JACKSON, Author of
'Nine Points of the Law.'

A TALE OF THE AMERICAN CIVIL WAR.
BEFORE THE CRISIS.

By F. B. MOTT.

A ROMANCE OF ITALY AND SCOTLAND.

A NEW PAOLO AND FRANCESCA.

By ANNIE E. HOLDSWORTH, Author of 'Joanna Trull, Splinter,' and 'The Years that the Locust hath Eaten.'

A CANADIAN ROMANCE.

CONSTANCE WEST.

By E. R. PUNSHON.

[Ready February 14.]

JOHN LANF, Publisher, London and New York

KEGAN PAUL, TRENCH, TRÜBNER & CO., LTD., Dryden House, 43, Gerrard Street, W.

GEORGE ROUTLEDGE & SONS' NEWEST BOOKS.

NOW READY, large 8vo, 542 pp., half-morocco, gilt top, 7s. 6d. net.

DICTIONARY OF SLANG AND COLLOQUIAL ENGLISH.

By JOHN S. FARMER and W. E. HENLEY.

(Abridged from the Seven-Volume Work.)

THE LITERARY YEAR-BOOK, 1905.

NINTH ANNUAL VOLUME, Revised and Reset throughout, with many New Features.

Cloth extra, gilt, blue and red sprinkled edges, 928 pp., 5s. net.

" 'The Literary Year-Book' is to the reviewer and the writer what 'Whitaker' is to the man in the street, or 'Bradshaw' to the traveller."

Pall Mall Gazette.

1s. net, cloth.]

THE MUSES' LIBRARY.

Under the Editorship of A. H. BULLEN.

Pott 8vo, blue cloth extra, full gilt back, 1s. net, cloth; lambskin gilt, 2s. net.

KEATS. Introduction by Robert Bridges. Notes by G. Thorn Drury. 2 vols.

DONNE. Introduction by Prof. George Saintsbury. Notes by E. K. CHAMBERS. 2 vols.

COLERIDGE. Edited by Richard Garnett, C.B. 1 vol.

MARVELL. Poems, 1 vol.; Satires, 1 vol. Edited by G. A. Aitken.

WALLER. Edited by G. Thorn Drury. 2 vols.

DRUMMOND, of HAWTHORNDEN. Edited by W. C. Ward. 2 vols.

HERRICK. Introduction by A. C. Swinburne. Notes by A. Pollard. 2 vols.

GAY. Edited by J. Underhill. 2 vols.

VAUGHAN. Introduction by Canon Beeching. Notes by E. K. CHAMBERS. 2 vols.

CAREW. Edited by A. Vincent. 1 vol.

BROWNE, of TAVISTOCK. Edited by Gordon Goodwin. 2 vols.

Numerous others in preparation.

[2s. net, leather.]

THE FIRST FOUR VOLUMES ARE NOW READY OF

POETS AND POETRY OF THE NINETEENTH CENTURY.

Edited by A. H. MILES.

12 vols. pott 8vo, red cloth extra, full gilt back, 1s. 6d. net; lambskin gilt, 2s. 6d. net.

A very comprehensive Series of Specimens of the Representative Verse of the Century, with elaborate and judicious Notices of each Poet.

CRABBE to COLERIDGE (including also Blake, Rogers, Bloomfield, Hogg, Wordsworth, Scott). 576 pp.

SOUTHEY to SHELLEY (including also Tannahill, Landor, Lamb, Campbell, Moore, Elliott, Knowles, Tennant, Hunt, Peacock, Procter, Byron, De Vere, &c.). 612 pp.

KEATS to LYTTON (including also Clare, Talfourd, Carlyle, H. Coleridge, Darley, Motherwell, Hood, Thom, Macaulay, Taylor, Wells, Barnes, Praed, Horne, Beddoes, Whitehead, Hawker, &c.). 656 pp.

VOL. IV. TENNYSON to CLOUGH. 688 pp.

[Just published.]

The remaining Eight Volumes to follow rapidly.

LIBRARY OF EARLY NOVELISTS.

Edited by E. A. BAKER, M.A.

With Introductions, &c. Large crown 8vo, dark blue buckram gilt, gilt top, each 6s. net.

1. LIFE and OPINIONS of JOHN BUNCLE, ESQUIRE. By THOMAS AMORY ("The English Rabelais"). (No Edition of this Book has been printed since 1825.) 474 pp.

2. ADVENTURES of DON SYLVIO de ROSALVA. By C. M. WIELAND. 480 pp.

3. The HEPTAMERON of the QUEEN of NAVARRE. Translated by ARTHUR MACHEN. The Complete Text, with Verse Translations of the Verses. 410 pp.

4. BOCCACCIO'S DECAMERON. Translated by J. M. Rigg, M.A. With J. ADDINGTON SYMONDS' ESSAY on BOCCACCIO as Introduction. 800 pp. [Shortly.]

This will undoubtedly form for many years to come the Standard Edition, containing as it does the most Scholarly Translation of the entire Text, with a ripe Scholar's Essay on the Author.

5. OROONOKO. The WANDERING BEAUTY, and her other Novels and Novelettes. By Mrs. APIIRA BEHN. [Shortly.]

LIBRARY OF HISTORICAL LITERATURE.

Large 8vo, dark green buckram, gilt, red morocco labels, each 5s.

RANKE'S HISTORY of the REFORMATION in GERMANY.

Translated, with the Author's Notes, by SARAH AUSTIN, Edited, with Additional Notes and an Introduction, by R. A. JOHNSON, M.A., and a Copious Index. 516 pp.

BUCKLE'S HISTORY of CIVILIZATION. Edited, with all the Author's Notes and Additional Notes, and an Introduction, by JOHN M. ROBERTSON, Author of 'Buckle and his Critics,' &c., and a Copious Index. 968 pp.

CARLYLE'S HISTORY of the FRENCH REVOLUTION. With 32 Fine Portraits and Plates. 808 pp.

PEPYS' DIARY. With the Notes by Lord Braybrooke. A Verbatim

Reprint of the Edition of 1818-49, with a Copious Index. [Shortly.]

BACON'S COMPLETE PHILOSOPHICAL WORKS. With the

Essays, New Atlantis, &c. Containing all the Original Notes of J. SPEDDING, R. L. ELLIS, and D. D. HEATH. The whole Edited, with Additional Notes and an Introduction, by JOHN M. ROBERTSON, with a Copious Index. [Shortly.]

ROUTLEDGE'S MINIATURE REFERENCE LIBRARY.

A New Series of choice printed Bijou Reference Books on Vellum Paper. 32mo, imitation morocco, each 1s. net.

WHO WROTE THAT? A Dictionary of Familiar Quotations, with their Sources. By W. S. W. ANSON.

WHO SAID THAT? A Dictionary of Famous Sayings, traced to their Sources. By E. LATHAM.

MOTTOES and BADGES, BRITISH and FOREIGN, with Translations. By W. S. W. ANSON.

DICTIONARY of ABBREVIATIONS, CONTRACTIONS, and ABBREVIATIVE SIGNS. By E. LATHAM.

List of others published and in preparation may be had.

THE ENGLISH LIBRARY.

Fcap. 8vo, cloth gilt, gilt tops, 2s. 6d. each.

The FOLK and their WORD-LORE: an Essay on Popular Etymologies. By Rev. Dr. A. SMYTHE PALMER, Author of 'Dictionary of Folk-Etymology,' &c.

"We have not space to dwell on the many merits of Dr. Smythe Palmer's essay, which .....illustrates admirably the fascination exercised by the study of our dialects and their importance in relation to English philology."—Athenæum.

ON the STUDY of WORDS. By Archbishop R. C. Trench. Edited, with Additions, Emendations, and Index, by Dr. A. SMYTHE PALMER.

ENGLISH PAST and PRESENT. By Archbishop R. C. Trench. Edited by Dr. A. SMYTHE PALMER. [Shortly.]

PROVERBS and their LESSONS. By Archbishop R. C. Trench. With Notes, Bibliography, and Index, by Dr. A. SMYTHE PALMER. [Shortly.]

GEORGE ROUTLEDGE & SONS, LIMITED, Broadway House, London, E.C.

THE ATHENÆUM

Journal of English and Foreign Literature, Science, the Fine Arts, Music and the Drama.

No. 4034.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 18, 1905.

PRICE
THREEPENCE
REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER

GRESHAM COLLEGE, BASINGHALL STREET, E.C.

FOUR LECTURES on the 'INFINITESIMAL CALCULUS' will be delivered on TUESDAY, WEDNESDAY, THURSDAY, FRIDAY, February 21-24, by W. H. WAGSTAFF, M.A., Gresham Professor of Geometry, at 6 p.m. They will be Elementary in character, and FREE to the Public.

D. Y. CAMERON, AUSTEN BROWN, and COUTIS MICHIE.—EXHIBITION of PAINTINGS by D. Y. CAMERON, T. AUSTEN BROWN, and J. COUTIS MICHIE.
THE LEICESTER GALLERIES, Leicester Square, W.C.

FRENCH MASTERS.—DURAND-RUEL & SONS, of Paris.—EXHIBITION of 315 PICTURES by BODIN, CÉZANNE, DEGAS, MANET, MONET, MORISOT, PISSARRO, RENOIR, SISLEY.—GRAFTON GALLERIES, Grafton Street, Bond Street, DAILY (till February 25), 10-6. Admission 1s.

ETCHINGS by MAXIME LALANNE, 1827-86.
The late Artist's magnificent Collection.
Now on view at Mr. H. GUTKUNST'S,
10, King Street, St. James's, S.W., 10 to 6 DAILY. Admission 1s.

THE DOWNS SCHOOL, SEAFORD, SUSSEX.
Head Mistress—Miss LUCY ROBINSON, M.A. (late Second Mistress St. Felix School, Southwold). References: The Principal of Bedford College, London; The Master of Peterhouse, Cambridge.

ELTHAM COLLEGE, KENT.

THE ROYAL NAVAL SCHOOL.
EXAMINATION for ENTRANCE and other SCHOLARSHIPS, MARCH 27 and Following Days. Public School Life and Education, with Special Classes for all Navy and Army Examinations. Apply to the Head Master, Rev. A. E. ROME, D.D.

BEDFORD COLLEGE for WOMEN

(University of London).
YORK PLACE, BAKER STREET, W.
The HALF TERM begins on FEBRUARY 23.
The College provides instruction for Students preparing for the University of London Degrees in Arts, Science, and Preliminary Medicine; also in subjects of General Education.
There is a Hygiene Department and an Art School.
Students can reside in the College.
TWO ENTRANCE SCHOLARSHIPS, each one tenable for Three Years at the College, will be offered for COMPETITION in JUNE, 1905.
DEPARTMENT FOR PROFESSIONAL TRAINING IN TEACHING.
STUDENTS are admitted to the TRAINING COURSE in OCTOBER and in JANUARY.
The Course includes full preparation for the Examinations for the Teaching Diplomas granted by the Universities of London and Cambridge, held annually in December.
Full particulars on application to the PRINCIPAL.

TO TRUSTEES and Others.—A LADY of experience and highly recommended can RECEIVE into her own HOME a young WARD in CHANCERY or the CHILDREN of ONE FAMILY for reliable guardianship and capable supervision of Education.—Write, first, BREAM, Box 977, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

PARIS.—Prof. HERBERT, 11, Rue Treillard, near Champs Elysées, is open to ACCOMMODATE ONE PUPIL above 18 to attend any High School. Best London Reference.

EDUCATION.

Parents or Guardians desiring accurate information relative to the CHOICE of SCHOOLS for BOYS or GIRLS or TUTOR in England or Abroad are invited to call upon or send fully detailed particulars to MESSRS. GABBITS, THRING & CO., who for more than thirty years have been closely in touch with the leading Educational Establishments.
Advice, free of charge, is given by Mr. Thring, Nephew of the late Head Master of Uppingham, 36, Sackville Street, London, W.

RHODES UNIVERSITY COLLEGE,

GRAHAMSTOWN, CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.
Established by Act of Parliament, 1904.
Applications are invited for the following Professorships, viz.:—
1. LATIN and CLASSICAL LITERATURE and PHILOLOGY. Salary, 500l. per annum.
2. PHILOSOPHY and HISTORY. Salary, 500l. per annum.
3. APPLIED MATHEMATICS and PHYSICS. Salary, 500l. per annum.
4. GEOLOGY. Salary, 500l. per annum.
5. ZOOLOGY. Salary, 350l. per annum.
The Professors of Geology and Zoology will also hold appointments in connexion with the Albany Museum, for which they will receive an additional salary of 150l. each per annum.
Further particulars may be obtained from the AGENT GENERAL for the CAPE OF GOOD HOPE, 109, Victoria Street, Westminster, London, to whom applications, with copies of Testimonials, should be sent on or before March 15, 1905.
Applicants must be under forty years of age, and must furnish a certificate of good health.
Successful Candidates will be required to enter upon their duties at Grahamstown on July 25, 1905.

TRINITY COLLEGE, DUBLIN.

CHAIR OF ZOOLOGY AND COMPARATIVE ANATOMY.
The COUNCIL will proceed to the nomination for the PROFESSORSHIP on WEDNESDAY, March 1, 1905.
Applications to be sent to the Registrar, who will furnish Candidates with details on application, and will receive whatever Testimonials they may offer.
R. V. TYRRELL, Registrar.
Trinity College, Dublin, February 8, 1905.

TECHNICAL SCHOOL, GUILDHALL, BATH.

A HEAD MASTER is REQUIRED for the SCHOOL of ART. Commencing salary 250l. per annum.
Applications must be received by 10 A.M. on FEBRUARY 27.
For Schedule of Duties apply at once to
A. GODFREY DAY, Director of Studies.

COUNTY BOROUGH of SUNDERLAND.

EDUCATION COMMITTEE. BEDE COLLEGIATE SCHOOL.

Applications are invited for the HEADSHIP of the reorganized BEDE COLLEGIATE SCHOOL, SUNDERLAND, at a commencing salary of 500l. per annum. Candidates must be Graduates of a British or approved Foreign University, and must either have obtained Honours or submit evidence of the possession of a reasonably equivalent standard of attainment. Teaching and administrative experience in a Secondary School is indispensable. For further particulars and for Form of Application, written application should be made to the undersigned, to whom also applications should be sent, reaching the Town Hall not later than MARCH 12, 1905, and endorsed "Bede" in the bottom left-hand corner of the envelope. Applications should contain not more than four Testimonials. Canvassing for the appointment by any Candidate will disqualify for election to the position, but this prohibition will not apply after the first selection of Candidates by the Committee having charge of the appointment.
FRAS. M. BOWEY, Town Clerk.

Town Hall, February 11, 1905.

BOROUGH of LOWESTOFT.

EDUCATION COMMITTEE.

The COMMITTEE invite applications for the Appointment of CHIEF LIBRARIAN for the LOWESTOFT FREE LIBRARY.
Applicants, between 25 and 45 years of age, must give evidence of practical experience in Public Library Work.
Preference to applicants experienced in the Indicator System.
Salary, 100l. per annum.
Applications, marked "Chief Librarian," stating age, qualifications, and experience, with Copies of not more than Three recent Testimonials, should reach the undersigned by FEBRUARY 25.
Canvassing, directly or indirectly, will disqualify.
E. BEATTIE NICHOLSON, Town Clerk.
Town Hall, Lowestoft, February 6, 1905.

CITY of HULL.

EDUCATION COMMITTEE.

The above COMMITTEE require the services of an ASSISTANT ART TEACHER at the MUNICIPAL SCHOOL of ART, who will be required to devote the whole of his time to the service of the Committee. Salary 55l. per annum.
Applications, stating age, qualifications, and experience, accompanied by copies of three recent Testimonials, must be sent to Mr. J. H. PARKYN, A.R.C.A., Head Master, School of Art, Albion Street, Hull, on or before FEBRUARY 28, 1905.
Canvassing will be considered a disqualification.
J. T. RILEY, Secretary of Education.
Education Offices, Albion Street, Hull, January 23, 1905.

RUSSIAN TRANSLATION.—WANTED.

A GRADUATE TRANSLATOR (English preferred) for RUSSIAN HISTORICAL NOVEL. Must command thoroughly good English Literary Style. State Terms, and enclose short Specimen of Work, with stamped envelope.—Address at once RUSS, care of Willing's, 162, Piccadilly, W.

ADVERTISER, who has been in the service of a well-known Literary Man for nineteen years, is anxious to obtain a post as an ASSISTANT in a LIBRARY or BOOKSELLER'S SHOP. Can be highly recommended. Age 30.—Box 982, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

ASSISTANT EDITORSHIP WANTED, in LONDON or the PROVINCES by a UNIVERSITY MAN. Has had great experience as Editor and Leader Writer. Special knowledge of Far East.—Address Box 963, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

ADVERTISER desires post as LITERARY ADVISER to PUBLISHING FIRM. University Classical Honours Man.—Address A. H. S., Box 962, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

UNIVERSITY MAN (27), with knowledge of Anglo-Saxon, &c., and of Oriental Subjects, desires, after Easter, APPOINTMENT as READER, or in other suitable capacity, to Firm publishing Educational or similar Works.—Address N. Y. Z., care of 10, Oat Lane, Wood Street, E.C.

SECRETARY, LIBRARIAN, or COMPANION.—

ADVERTISER seeks APPOINTMENT as above. No objection to travel. Highest references.—Address FINS, care of Mr. Lerner, 28, Paternoster Row, E.C.

TRANSLATION, REVISION, RESEARCH, REVIEWING, INDEXING, and other LITERARY WORK, or non-resident Secretaryship. Classics, French, German, Italian. Special Subjects, Mythology and Literature. Varied experience.—Miss SELBY, 53, Talbot Road, W.

LITERARY RESEARCH undertaken at the British Museum and elsewhere on moderate terms. Excellent Testimonials.—A. B., Box 910, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

BOOKSELLER'S, STATIONER'S, and PUBLISHER'S BUSINESS FOR SALE by PRIVATE TREATY.

The STOCK-IN-TRADE and GOODWILL of a first-class and established BOOKSELLER'S, STATIONER'S, and PUBLISHER'S BUSINESS in an important Town in Scotland is FOR SALE by PRIVATE BARGAIN. The turnover last year amounted to over 3,000l., and is capable of considerable extension.
The Stock will be taken over at mutual valuation.
A Lease of the Shop will be granted at a fair rent.
This is an excellent opportunity for the acquisition of a first-class Business.
Satisfactory reasons will be given for the disposal of the Business.
Apply to Messrs. HENRY & SONS, W.S., 20, St. Andrew Square, Edinburgh.
Edinburgh, February 6, 1905.

OLD ENGRAVINGS of ETON and HARROW.—ADVERTISER desires ENGRAVING by SILVESTER: Eton, with Boys Battling, 1803, and others of Eton or Harrow Schools.—E. A. A., 12, Oxford and Cambridge Mansions, N.W.

Yearly Subscription, free by post, Inland, 15s. 3d.; Foreign, 18s. Entered at the New York Post Office as Second Class matter.

FRANCE.—The ATHENÆUM can be obtained at the following Railway Stations in France:—

AMIENS, ANTIBES, BEAULIEU-SUR-MER, BIARRITZ, BORDEAUX, BOULOGNE-SUR-MER, CALAIS, CANNES, DIJON, DUNKIRK, HAVRE, LILLE, LYONS, MARSEILLES, MENTONE, MONACO, NANTES, NICE, PARIS, PAU, SAINT RAPHAEL, TOURS, TOULON.

PARIS: W. H. SMITH & SON, 248, Rue de Rivoli; and at the GALIGNANI LIBRARY, 224, Rue de Rivoli.

AUTHORS' MSS., NOVELS, SERMONS, PLAYS, REVIEWS TYPE-WRITTEN accurately and promptly, 9d. per 1,000 words. References to well-known Writers.—M. STUART, Thirlbank, Roxborough Road, Harrow.

TYPE-WRITING.—The WEST KENSINGTON OFFICES. Authors' MSS., Translations, &c. Legal and General Copying. Circulars, &c., duplicated. Usual terms. References. Established twelve years.—SHEPES & SONS, 229, Hammersmith Road, W. (Private Address: 13, Wolverton Gardens, Hammersmith.)

TYPE-WRITING in ENGLISH, FRENCH, and ITALIAN executed promptly and accurately, 9d. and 10d. per 1,000 words.—Apply M. MORAY, 23, Carmel Chambers, Duke's Lane, Kensington.

SHORTHAND and TYPE-WRITING.—Authors' MSS., Plays, Sermons, Reports, &c. 9d. per 1,000. Legal and General Copying. Accuracy and Despatch guaranteed.—Miss N. E. ROBINSON, 8, Westover Road, Wadsworth Common, London, S.W.

TYPE-WRITING promptly and accurately done. Ten years' experience. Excellent references. 10d. per 1,000 words. Reduction for quantity.—Miss MISSEN, The Orchard, Cotterill Road, Surbiton, S.W.

TYPE-WRITING undertaken by highly educated Women (Classical Tripos; Cambridge Higher Local; Modern Languages). Research, Revision, Translation.—THE CAMBRIDGE TYPE-WRITING AGENCY, 10, Duke Street, Adelphi, W.C.

AUTHORS' MSS., SERMONS, PLAYS, ENVELOPES, CIRCULARS, and all kinds, TYPED at home (Remington), 9d. per 1,000. Good paper. Orders promptly executed.—M. L., 7, Vernon Road, Clapham.

TYPE-WRITING.—SERMONS, AUTHORS' MSS., &c., carefully and promptly executed. 8d. per 1,000 words, paper included.—Miss A. MASON, Strathairn, Southfleet Avenue, Loughfield, Kent.

THE AUTHOR'S AGENCY.—Established 1879. The interests of Authors capably represented. Agreements for Publishing arranged. MSS. placed with Publishers.—Terms and Testimonials on application to Mr. A. M. BURGESS, 34, Paternoster Row.

Catalogues.

THE INTERNATIONAL BOOK CIRCULAR, No. 129, containing a Special Article, entitled "SOME CONTEMPORARY FOREIGN CHEMISTS," by Dr. M. O. FORSTER, together with an exact Bibliography of their Publications, and a Double Plate of their Portraits. Specimen Copies gratis.—WILLIAMS & NORGATE, Book Importers, 14, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, W.C.

LEIGHTON'S

ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE of EARLY PRINTED and other INTERESTING BOOKS, MANUSCRIPTS, and BINDINGS.

Part VIII. SHE-T, with 150 Illustrations, price 2s. NEARLY READY. Parts I.-VII. containing A-SHA, with 1050 Illustrations in Facsimile, price 17s. the 7 Parts.

J. & J. LEIGHTON, 40, Brewer Street, Golden Square, W.

GLAISHER'S REMAINDER BOOK CATALOGUE.

FEBRUARY SUPPLEMENT NOW READY. Comprising all most Recent Purchases in PUBLISHERS' REMAINDER STOCK. Books in NEW condition, at REDUCED PRICES.

WILLIAM GLAISHER,

Remainder and Discount Bookseller, 265, High Holborn, London

MESSRS. HENRY YOUNG & SONS possess one of the LARGEST STOCKS of OLD and NEW BOOKS in GREAT BRITAIN, and they will be glad to hear from any one in search of Books out of print, as they can in many cases supply them at once.

ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE MONTHLY. Price 6d. 12, South Castle Street, Liverpool.

H. H. PEACH, Antiquarian Bookseller, 57, Belvoir Street, Leicester, issues CATALOGUES of MSS. and OLD BOOKS post free to Book Collectors. No. 2 contains Beaumont and Fletcher, 1679—Homilies, 1547. First Edition—Swift: Items, &c.

CATALOGUE No. 42.—Drawings—Engravings.—Turner's Liber Studiorum—Lucas's Mezzotints after Constable—Engravings. Hogarth, Girtin—Etchings, Palmer, Whistler—Japanese Colour-Prints—Illustrated Books—Works by Bunin. Post free, Sixpence. Wm. Wain, 2, Church Terrace, Richmond, Surrey.

CATALOGUE of FRENCH BOOKS, at greatly reduced prices. I. PHILOSOPHY. II. RELIGION. III. HISTORY. IV. POETRY. DRAMA. MUSIC. V. BEAUX-ARTS. VI. GEOGRAPHY. VII. MILITARY. VIII. FICTION. IX. GENERAL LITERATURE.

DULAU & CO. 37, Soho Square, London, W.

FIRST EDITIONS of MODERN AUTHORS, including Dickens, Thackeray, Lever, Almsworth; Books illustrated by G. and R. Cruikshank, Phiz, Rowlandson, Leech, &c. The largest and choicest Collection offered for Sale in the World. Catalogues issued and sent post free on application. Books Bought.—WALTER T. SPENCER, 27, New Oxford Street, London, W.C.

CRITIC, 4 vols. 1845-1847, well bound, good condition. What offers?—CHAPPLE, 9, Silver Street, Barnstaple, N. Devon.

TO PUBLIC LIBRARIANS and OTHERS.—FOR SALE, REVIEW of REVIEWS, Vols. 1 to 28, clean run, in Publishers' case. STUDIO, Vols. 1 to 25, Publishers' case, gilt top, fine condition, with scarce "Extras" in 10 vols. to match, in all 35 vols. Offers for the above requested.—Address C. S., care of Slatter & Rose, Oxford.

PORTRAIT of GEORGE MEREDITH, after the celebrated Painting by G. F. WATTS, R.A., Engraved by W. BISCOMBE GARDNER. Limited to 600 Artist's Proofs at One Guinea each. Size, 12 in. by 8½ in.—Address W. BISCOMBE GARDNER, Hoathly, Hind Head, Surrey.

NEWSPAPER PROPERTIES BOUGHT, SOLD, VALUED; and supplied with every requisite. Write for The COMPLETE JOURNALIST, sent post free. The Imperial News Agency, London: 2 and 4, Tudor Street, E.C. America: 700-706, Fourteenth Street, N.W., Washington, D.C.

C. MITCHELL & CO., Agents for the Sale and Purchase of Newspaper Properties, undertake Valuations for Probate or Purchase, Investigations, and Audit of Accounts, &c. Card of Terms on application. Mitchell House, 1 and 2, Snow Hill, Holborn Viaduct, E.C.

Sales by Auction.

Old English and Continental Pottery and Porcelain.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on TUESDAY, February 21, at 1 o'clock precisely, OLD ENGLISH and CONTINENTAL POTTERY and PORCELAIN, comprising Chelsea, Worcester, Derby, Bow, Swansea, Sevres, Dresden, &c.; also Salt Glaze, Whieldon, Leeds, Bristol, and Lambeth Delft and the various Staffordshire Factories—Miniatures, Enamels, and Bric-a-Brac.

May be viewed. Catalogues may be had.

Books and Manuscripts.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on THURSDAY, February 23, and Two Following Days, at 1 o'clock precisely, BOOKS and MANUSCRIPTS, including a SELECTION from the COLLECTION of W. B. TEGETMEIER, Esq., comprising an unusual Collection of Books and Papers by and relating to Shelley; the PROPERTY of the late JULIAN MARSHALL, Esq., including the Writings of Charles Dickens, W. M. Thackeray—valuable Musical Collections—and an extensive Collection of Cuttings, referring chiefly to Theatrical and Operatic Entertainments; the LIBRARY of THOMAS HUTCHINSON, Esq., containing a very extensive and interesting COLLECTION of PRESENT-DAY LITERATURE, including many Volumes with Autograph Inscriptions, or Letters from the Authors—the Writings of Robert Bridges, Norman Gale, Richard Le Gallienne, W. E. Henley, Andrew Lang, Stephen Phillips, R. L. Stevenson, &c.; other Properties, comprising Smith's Catalogue Raisonné, 9 vols.—Sporting Books—Elizabethan Dramatic Literature—Playbills—Dictionary of National Biography, a Complete Set—the Kelmscott Press Publications, including the Chaucer—La Fontaine, Contes et Nouvelles en Vers, 1762, with the Rejected Plates—Foreign Literature—Books of Prints—Modern Literature, Art, and Archaeology, &c.

May be viewed two days prior. Catalogues may be had.

Autograph Letters and Historical Documents.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on THURSDAY, March 2, and following Day, at 1 o'clock precisely, AUTOGRAPH LETTERS and HISTORICAL DOCUMENTS, including Specimens of Queen Victoria, Prince Albert, Lord Lovat, Lord Nelson, Edmund Burke, Robert Burns, J. M. W. Turner, Queen Henrietta Maria, W. Wordsworth, Sir Walter Scott, Napoleon, Thomas Carlyle, Robert Browning, Charles Dickens, Sir John Vanbrugh, Dr. William Harvey, Dr. Johnson, Benjamin Disraeli, Rev. John Newton of Olney, Edward Fitzgerald—a very fine Autograph Letter of Philip Melancthon—Two valuable and most interesting Series of Autograph Letters of Gilbert White to his Brother and Niece.

May be viewed two days prior. Catalogues may be had.

The Collection of Autograph Letters and Manuscripts of Composers and Musicians of the late JULIAN MARSHALL, Esq.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on SATURDAY, March 4, at 1 o'clock precisely, the COLLECTION of important LETTERS and MANUSCRIPTS in the AUTOGRAPH of FAMOUS COMPOSERS and MUSICIANS, including Gluck, G. F. Handel, P. Haydn, Paganini, H. Purcell, F. Schubert, R. Schumann, Mendelssohn, and others, the Property of the late JULIAN MARSHALL, Esq., of Bel-ize Avenue, N.W.; also a remarkably fine Manuscript in the Autograph of J. S. Bach.

May be viewed two days prior. Catalogues may be had.

Valuable Law Books, including the Property of the late W. H. BOSANQUET, Esq. (by order of the Executors)—Large Spanish Mahogany Bookcase, 22 feet long—Chippendale Bookcase, and other Library Furniture.

MESSRS. HODGSON & CO. will SELL by AUCTION, at their Rooms, 115, Chancery Lane, W.C., on FRIDAY, February 24, at 1 o'clock, valuable LAW BOOKS, including the Property of the late W. H. BOSANQUET, Esq. (by order of the Executors), comprising a Complete Set of the Law Reports to 1901, in whole calf—The English Reports, 20 vols.—Cases in the House of Lords, including Macquhen's Scotch Appeal Cases, Knapp and Moore's Privy Council Cases and Indian Appeals—Reports in the Vice-Chancellor's and the Rolls Courts—Admiralty Cases, by Swabey, Lushington, Browning, and others—Thornton's Notes of Cases, 7 vols.—Mew's Digest of English Case Law, 16 vols. half-calf—Encyclopædia of the Laws of England, 13 vols.—a selection of Modern Text Books—also a magnificent SPANISH MAHOGANY OPEN BOOKCASE (22 feet long by 10 feet high), eminently suitable for a Large Library or Public Institution—a Chippendale Bookcase, and other Library Furniture—Prints, Engravings, and Book-Plates.

To be viewed, and Catalogues had.

Valuable Books, including a Portion of the Library of Major GORDON, removed from Wimbledon; the Library of the late Mrs. Vincent, removed from Stinfold, Sussex, and other Properties.

MESSRS. PUTTICK & SIMPSON will SELL by AUCTION, at their Galleries, 47, Leicester Square, W.C., on THURSDAY, March 2, and following Day, at ten minutes past 1 o'clock precisely, valuable BOOKS, including Proceedings of the Civil Engineers—Annales de Chemie, 48 vols.—Macaulay's Works, 10 vols.—Burton's History of Scotland, 8 vols.—Shelley's Queen Mab, First Edition, uncut—Morris's British Birds, 6 vols.—Lowe's Ferns—Art Journal, 32 vols.—Shepherd's Vignette Designs, Coloured Plates—Hassell's Original Specimens of Water Colours, Coloured Plates—Pissis d'Avences—The Oriental Album, Coloured Plates—Encyclopædia Britannica, Ninth Edition—Century Dictionary, 8 vols.—Lang's Prince Charles Edward—Skelton's Charles I.—Robson's Grampian Mountains, Coloured Plates—Heppelwhite's Cabinet Maker, 1789—Ciceronis de Officiis, Paris, 1509—Orrery's Plays, 1690—Horticultural Society's Transactions—Chesterfield's Letters, 2 vols.—Humphreys and Westwood's Moths, 2 vols. Coloured Plates—important Collections of Autograph Letters—Book-Plates (Ex-Libris)—Sporting Books—Old Playing Cards—Illuminated MSS. on Vellum, with Miniatures—First Editions of Scott, Dickens, Thackeray, Lever, and other Modern Authors—Civil War Tracts—Original Drawings by "Phiz"—Savonarola, Exposition del Pater Noster, Woodcuts s.d.—Ackermann's Repository, 40 vols.—Shelley's Prometheus Unbound, First Edition, uncut—Lillywhite's Cricket Scores and M.C.C. Cricket Scores, 13 vols.—Curtis's Botanical Magazine, Complete Set—Archæologia, 56 vols.—Works on Philosophy, Science, Travel, and many other rare and important items.

Library of Dr. F. R. LEES, removed from Leeds.

MESSRS. PUTTICK & SIMPSON will SELL by AUCTION, at their Galleries, 47, Leicester Square, W.C., on THURSDAY, March 16, and following Day, at ten minutes past 1 o'clock precisely, the valuable LIBRARY of Dr. F. R. LEES, removed from Leeds, comprising Works on Natural History—Philology—First Editions of Modern Authors, &c.

MESSRS. CONSTABLE'S LIST.

LETTERS AND RECOLLECTIONS OF GENERAL LEE.

By Capt. ROBERT E. LEE.

Illustrated, demy 8vo, 12s. 6d. net.

"The book is wholly charming and gracious.....In General Lee the world saw a commander great alike in victory and defeat, beloved by his own men and honoured by the enemy, sweet and gentle in all the offices of life, public or private, and an assiduous and humble applicant at the throne of God."—Times.

FAR and NEAR. By John Burroughs.

Crown 8vo, 5s. net.

"Since Richard Jefferies died there is nobody writes so well in English about fields and hillsides and the open air and the life of free birds and beasts as does Mr. John Burroughs.....The volume as a whole will have a hearty welcome on both sides of the Atlantic."—Scotsman.

BITS of GOSSIP. By Rebecca

HARDING DAVIS. Reminiscences of the famous "New England" School of Writers. Fcap. 8vo, 5s. net.

"This is most decidedly a book to be read."—Spectator.
"Pleasant to read, and often eminently interesting..... One leaves this book very grateful to the author, for it has many lights on American life and celebrities."—Daily Chronicle.

The CONCEPTION of IMMORTALITY. By JOSIAH ROYCE, Professor of Philosophy at Harvard University. 2s. 6d.

UNIFORM WITH THE ABOVE.

HUMAN IMMORTALITY. By Prof. WILLIAM JAMES. Forty-Second Edition. 2s. 6d.

SCIENCE and IMMORTALITY. By Prof. WILLIAM OSLER. 2s. 6d.

A. CONSTABLE & CO., LTD., 16, James Street, Haymarket.

SOMERSETSHIRE PARISHES.

A Handbook of Historical Reference to all Places in the County.

By ARTHUR L. HUMPHREYS.

This book is being issued in Eight Parts, of about 100 pp. each part, and the price per part, post free, is 5s. 6d. net. The First Part—Abbas Combe to Binegar (including Bath, 44 pp.)—is now ready, and the Second Part will be ready this month. The whole Manuscript of the Work is at the printers', and will be issued without delay. The Work when completed will contain from twenty-five to thirty thousand Historical References to Somersetshire history, arranged Alphabetically under Parishes, Hamlets, Tithings, &c.

100 Copies are being issued in parts.

Separate parts are not supplied. It is necessary to subscribe to the whole Eight Parts.

"A work of infinite importance and value to historians and archaeologists.....This really great work is being issued in eight parts, of about 100 pp. each part, and we have received the first part—Abbas Combe to Binegar (including Bath, 44 pp.). The colossal character of the work will be gathered from the statement that when it is completed it will contain from twenty-five to thirty thousand historical references to Somersetshire history.....No one can look at the first part without astonishment at the amount of labour and investigation the book must have involved. It has clearly been a labour of love, and Mr. Humphreys must be content to know that he has made himself the benefactor of all future historians of Somersetshire, and of any of the parishes in the county."—Western Daily Press.

187, PICCADILLY, LONDON, W.

MESSRS. CHRISTIE, MANSON & WOODS respectfully give Notice that they will hold the following SALES by AUCTION at their Great Rooms, King Street, St. James's Square, the Sales commencing at 1 o'clock precisely:—

On MONDAY, February 20, MODERN PICTURES and DRAWINGS.

On TUESDAY, February 21, ENGRAVINGS of the EARLY ENGLISH SCHOOL.

On WEDNESDAY, February 22, important JEWELS, the Residue of the Stock of Messrs STREETER & CO., Limited, of 18, New Bond Street (sold with permission of Messrs. Streeter's Successors).

On THURSDAY, February 23, SILVER PLATE, OBJECTS of ART, CLOCKS, &c., the Residue of the Stock of Messrs. STREETER & CO., Limited, of 18, New Bond Street (sold with permission of Messrs. Streeter's Successors).

On FRIDAY, February 24, PORCELAIN and FURNITURE of J. G. MENZIES, Esq.—a rare Sixteenth-Century Ewer, the Property of the Most Hon. the MARQUESS of ANGLESEY—rare Military Decorations—Old English Porcelain and Furniture.

On SATURDAY, February 25, PICTURES by OLD MASTERS of the EARLY ENGLISH SCHOOL.

Birds' Eggs.

TUESDAY, February 21, at half-past 12 o'clock.

MR. J. C. STEVENS will OFFER, at his Rooms, 38, King Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C., a fine COLLECTION of BRITISH BIRDS formed by the late W. F. URWICK, Esq., beautifully Mounted and Cased; also interesting Duplicates from the COLLECTION of the late S. E. SHIRLEY, Esq.—Varieties of Grouse, &c.—and about Two Hundred Lots of Eggs and Skins from other Sources.

On view day prior 10 to 4 and morning of Sale. Catalogues on application.

THE RUSSO-JAPANESE CONFLICT.

By K. ASAKAWA,

Professor of Philosophy at Dartmouth College.

Illustrated, demy 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

"This valuable book deserves to be purchased, read with attention, and kept at hand for reference by all those who take an intelligent interest in the origin and issues of the great campaign in the Far East.....The subject is treated with impartiality and a very agreeable spirit of moderation."—Times.

The DIVINE FIRE. By May

SINCLAIR. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"Judged by almost every standard to which a comedy like this should be referred, I find her book the most remarkable that I have read for many years."—O. S. in Punch.

READY IMMEDIATELY.

The SUN and the SERPENT. A

Contribution to the History of Serpent Worship.

By Brigade-Surgeon C. F. OLDHAM. Demy

8vo, with 33 Full-Page Illustrations, 10s. 6d. net.

SEXTI PROPERTI OPERA OMNIA.

With a Commentary by H. E. BUTLER, M.A.,

Fellow of New College, Oxford. Extra crown

8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.

IN SEARCH of the UNKNOWN.

By ROBERT W. CHAMBERS, Author of

'The Maids of Paradise,' 'Cardigan,' &c.

The WEDDING of the LADY of LOVEL. By UNA L. SILBERRAD, Author of 'Petronilla Heroven,' &c.

JOHN FLETCHER'S MADONNA.

By Mrs. COMYNS CARR, Author of 'Cottage

Folk,' &c.

FRIDAY, February 24, at half-past 12 o'clock.

MR. J. C. STEVENS will OFFER, at his Rooms, 38, King Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C., valuable EQUATORIAL TELESCOPE by Horae & Thornthwaite, with Overstall's Clock, complete, ready for use—other fine Telescopes by Steward, Negretti & Zambra—5-in. Theodolite, Troughton & Simms, and other Surveying Instruments—Microscopes and Slides—Binocular and other Field Glasses—Optical Lanterns and Slide—and a large Quantity of valuable Miscellaneous Property.

Catalogues and all particulars on application.

Curiosities.

MR. J. C. STEVENS'S NEXT SALE of CURIOS will take place on TUESDAY, the 28th inst., at half-past 12 o'clock, and will include a CONSIGNMENT of CHINESE and JAPANESE PORCELAIN, LACQUER WARE, BRONZES, &c.—Carved Ivory Boxes—Figures—Satsuma Bowls—Cloisonné and Art Metal Ware; also Old English China—Wood Carvings—Native Weapons—and the usual Miscellaneous Assortment.

Catalogues may be had on application to Mr. J. C. STEVENS, 38, King Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C.

MR. J. C. STEVENS, Auctioneer and Valuer, 38, King Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C., begs to announce that SALES are held at his Rooms regularly for the DISPOSAL OF ANTIQUE FURNITURE, WORKS OF ART, SILVER PLATE, JEWELLERY, BOOKS, COINS, PICTURES and ENGRAVINGS, SCIENTIFIC INSTRUMENTS, and all kinds of MISCELLANEOUS PROPERTY.

Valuations for all purposes.

Terms and all particulars on application.

WILLIS'S ROOMS, KING STREET, ST. JAMES'S SQUARE, S.W.

A Collection of important Garden Ornaments.

MESSRS. ROBINSON & FISHER are instructed to SELL, at their Rooms, as above, on FRIDAY, March 3, at 11 o'clock precisely, important GARDEN ORNAMENTS, comprising a Pair of old Lead Vases—finely Carved Marble Seats—a Set of Five old Stone Busts on Pedestals, the Caesars—a large Pair of old Stone French Vases—an Early Italian Wall Fountain—a Pair of Terra Cotta Sphinxes—a Garden Seat, with Vane and Sundial combined—Marble Tazze—Wrought Iron Gates and Balustrading—Sundials, many exceptionally rare, including a large Armillary Sundial—a Pair of Life-size Marble Lions—a ditto Stone Figure of Sir Walter Scott—a Lead Bust of Sir Joshua Reynolds—a Lead Tank, 1746—a Pair of Marble Warwick Vases—a Pair of ditto Terminal Figures, Pan and Sylvia—Majolica Seats—Pier-heads—Lead Pumps—Figures—and a few interesting Books on Dialing and Gardening.

Catalogues on application.

ARCHITECTURE and COMMERCIALISM; Workmen's Compensation Cases; Church Fittings (Architectural Association); Design for a Lounge and Staircase for a large Hotel (Tite Prize Design); Houses at Wimbledon; School Bath Centre, Amsterdam; Types of Concrete Structures (Student's Column), &c.—See the BUILDER of February 18 (4d. by post, 4½d.)—Through any News-agent; or direct from the Publisher of the Builder, Catherine Street, London, W.C.

THE CLERGY LIST for 1905.

THOROUGHLY REVISED AND CORRECTED TO THE LATEST DATE.

Price 12s. 6d.

[Now ready.]

PRESS OPINIONS.

The Times says:—"Kelly's 'Clergy List' for 1905 is the sixty-second edition of a very useful volume, and its age is no mean advertisement of its worth."

The Standard says:—"The 'Clergy List' for 1905 is an invaluable work of reference. In point of completeness and accuracy it is as perfect as care can make it."

The Morning Post says:—"The 'Clergy List' has always been recognised as trustworthy."

The Daily Mail says:—"The 'Clergy List'... is again a marvel of accuracy and information, and there is nothing of its kind to equal it."

The Daily News says:—"This very complete and reliable work."

The Eastern Morning News says:—"To the clergyman or to the public institution it is a most valuable and, indeed, indispensable book of reference."

The Western Morning News says:—"One of the oldest and one of the best directories for the clergy of the Anglican Communion."

The Guardian says:—"As in the past, every care seems to have been taken to secure accuracy."

The Church Times says:—"Pains have been taken to render the information contained in this clearly printed book trustworthy and accurate."

The Church Family Newspaper says:—"The book appears to us from a fairly careful perusal to have been very well edited. The general arrangement and contents of the book are too well known to our readers to require description. We need only add that it contains all the information that would be accepted in a book of this class, and that this is so arranged as to facilitate reference."

ESTABLISHED OVER SIXTY YEARS.

London: Kelly's Directories, Limited, 182-181, High Holborn.

